Mr. Lippmann pointed out that the Germans want to have their country united again. Of course they do. And of course, also, that would be the surest way to build them back to power. The Germans will talk your ear off about the unfairness of dividing any country into four parts, but they will say nothing of the real reason for this.

France will fight unification of Germany with all its power.

I am not sure what attitude the Russians will take on it. They might figure that a unified Germany would be easier to win to communism than a Germany three-fourths dominated by other powers. On the other hand, they might figure that it would hurt their plans.

When a group of boys start playing marbles in a school yard and all but one is playing for keeps, you can usually tell before the game starts who is going to lose the most marbles.

If America is going to hold up its end in the international game of marbles now going on over in Germany, she will have to adopt the psychology of those who are playing for keeps. because that is in fact what we are doing.

OUR STAKE JUST AS BIG

Although we do not want territory, and although we are not very much worried about the control of natural resources in Europe, aside from the two points of not allowing Germany to rearm, or Russia to get too strong, we are vitally interested in maintaining the peace of the world.

In the larger sense we are playing for keeps as much as the Russians, the British, or the French, and with as great a stake as they.

What I have just been saying about the aims and objectives of the great countries in Europe, and our own aim and objective in the confused situation it seems to me bears heavily on another point, namely, the sharing of the atomic bomb secret.

I may as well confess that I returned from Germany much less disposed to share this secret with all the other Allied powers. I am now in favor of a probation period before letting go of our information. I think that we have a clear enough head start on the other nations of the world in atom bomb manufacture to protect us for a reasonable period of years, say a decade at the minimum. If, at the end of 4 or 5 years, the United Nations is firmly established and effectively operating, we may feel like talking about turning the secret over to the United Nations. But not until we are assured of Russia's pacific intentions.

THE PECULIAR RUSSIANS

Certainly this would be the almost unanimous opinion of our officials in Europe who have had contact with the Soviet officers. If the Russians don't want war ultimately they certainly are acting in a most peculiar manner and one not recommended by Dale Carnegie in his book on how to make friends and influence people.

And now a word about UN. It is my passionate hope that this organization will succeed where the League of Nations failed. And when I talk about America staying in Germany for 25 years as a minimum, which I firmly believe she will have to do, I am not barring out the possibility of the United Nations taking over the whole policing job long before that quarter of a century is ended, but it will take American troops and British troops just the same whether they are under the direct command of their own generals or under the command of the UN. You can't police Germany with a paper organization.

We have got into a dirty business and we have won the first round.

The American temperament does not fit us very well for the long, nasty job of cleaning up. We would rather leave that to someone else.

But times have changed. The art of war has changed. Distances have been eliminated and the question is: "Can the American change with it or will he try the vain, illusory policy of locking himself up behind a barrier?"

I say before God that we shall not. I say that we shall go forward and take our place among the other peace-loving nations of the world and that, having set our hand to the plow, we shall follow it to the end of the furrow.

I say that we shall not again fail the vision of Woodrow Wilson and Newton D. Baker.

God has given us another chance. We must not, we shall not, fumble it.

Ira A. Hirschmann's Report on Displaced Persons

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF

HON. SOL BLOOM

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, August 1, 1946

Mr. BLOOM. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following address delivered by Mr. Ira A. Hirschmann over the network of the Columbia Broadcasting System, Saturday, July 13, 1946, at 10:45 p. m.

I want to bring Mr. Hirschmann's speech to the attention of the House because it is based on his tour of inspection of displaced-persons camps in Germany as the special representative of the Honorable Fiorello LaGuardia, Director General of the United Nations Relief and Rehabilitation Administration. His remarks are timely and informative, and I hope will be read by every Member of the Congress.

I wish that every American could see Germany as I have in the last several months. It is your story. For one can only get a true picture of our postwar world in perspective by seeing it right from the scene of battle. There, the burning lesson of Fascism and the question of who wins a war is thrown into true relief. Germany was the place where the war was hatched; it is also the place from which the peace will have to be built.

A little over a year has passed since the echoes of the last shots died down. And already the rumblings of a new war are heard. They are heard in the highest quarters over there. The British generals speak of it openly—and it is echoed by the press. All this is pretty irresponsible and truly alarming. The German people are sullen, unremorseful and bitter, watching the new game that is being played by the victor nations.

"Who will build us up faster?" is the question they ask. There are countless broken buildings in the big German cities, but I saw no evidence among the Germans of a single broken spirit. It is not the paper directives of the armies that the Germans read, nor our speeches that they listen to, but our daily actions around them which they watch. Why should they feel defeated or disheartened when they see their victims all around them—at least in the British and American zones, which I mostly visited—being treated not as the liberated but as a mass of displaced, shifting, people with no destination or home?

True, Hitler's Nuremberg decrees have been wiped out but the few survivors of those decrees are homeless, without occupation and without visible hope for a future. I saw Justice Jackson at the trials in Nuremberg. Jackson has certainly had ample opportunity to observe the Germans, from the leaders down. He said to me: "The Germans to a man do not feel defeated. They simply think they missed their second chance at military victory by a fluke and only await the day when the victorious powers again will build them up in their game of power politics."

In Germany today there are about 1,000,000 people from other countries being shifted, tossed up and around, who are the stepchildren of the postwar. Among this million, there are roundly about 422,000 Poles, 187,000 Balts, 23,000 Yugoslavs and 104,000 Jews, with small numbers of various other nationalities here and there. The total of the Jewish displaced persons has been increasing recently by the so-called infiltrees pouring in from Poland as a result of the revived persecution there. Hitler sowed his seeds well in Poland and the reactionaries, former feudal barons are desperately trying to pick up where he left off. I know from the reports I heard brought to Berlin from inside Poland that the present Polish Government will be relentless in searching out these criminals and stamping out anti-Semitism in Poland. But they have centuries of rotten roots to dig out.

Meanwhile the refugee stream pours into Germany, where they are termed this time DP's—displaced persons. Their case is not a new one. They are multiplications of the refugees of a past era, the victims of the mismanagement of governments, the residue of war. The convulsion has thrown them up and pushed them out of the homes they had established in their own lands. Here they are, the first victims of fascism, who should be our heroes and heroines. Instead, they are homeless.

Against this confluence of peoples pouring through the wrecked cities is the background of the demoralization of a society after a war. The war wrecked peoples, homes, and institutions, but the aftermath of the war is the total story of war. Are the British, for example, the victors? Conditions as I saw them in Britain were deplorable. Certainly, the British people are less well fed than the Germans.

Viewed from Germany, I could not be sure which nations won the war. Certainly, Great Britain didn't win it; and Germany didn't lose it. The handful of Jews who managed to escape after 6,000,000 were massacred have lost the war a second and third time. As the first victims of fascism they were promised liberation, security, and decent homes by the democratic victorious nations; certainly, they are entitled to this. Instead they suddenly find themselves even in victory with no place to go. The Poles and Balts in Germany, also protected by UNRRA and the military, can eventually be helped to go home or to be thrown on the German population. You cannot say that to the Jew. You can only say to him, "Go on to the next displaced persons camp, or the next forest, or the next street."

What can be done in Germany under the chaotic conditions existing there, Mr. La Guardia and his loyal UNRRA teams have done with heroic design and the most sympathetic understanding.

But if ever there was a bad-neighbor policy it is this, which confines the victimized Jews to Germany. They are living in their own graveyards among the assassins of their families. It may seem a paradox, in the light of the history of the last 15 years, that the Jews would be rushing—of all places—to Germany as a haven of refuge. They seek no philanthropy. It is because of their confidence in the great American tradition of being concerned with the freedom of all peoples that they seek the shelter and protection of the American flag. And we must not break faith with them or with ourselves.

What was incredible to me was the self-restraint of these people; the amazing self-control that they are able to exercise remained a constant source of wonder to me. Here and there one of them in a D. P. camp would point out to me a home which once belonged to his family, now occupied by the Germans who appropriated it and who are now living in it under the protection of the American armies. What would you do in such a case?

General McNarney told me that the United States Army has the most trouble with the Poles, many of whom came down to work for the Germans when they were on top—the least trouble with the Jewish persecutees. At Zellsheim, in the suburbs of Munich, the Displaced Persons Camps consisting of some 2,000 Jewish refugees from concentration camps, was right next to a German prisoner-of-war camp. The German camp was guarded by Polish soldiers. Can you imagine a more inflammable setting for friction among people? Here were the German assassins of their families and loved ones living as their neighbors. Yet the Jews remain silent. Nor is death a stranger to them.

I quote from Unterwegs, The Transient, a pamphlet I picked up which is put out by the liberated Jews of Frankfurt. It is plaintive.

"It is very difficult to describe our sufferings during the past years. Millions of Jews perished in their struggle with the Nazi criminals. Innocent men, women, and children were murdered only because they were Jews.

"Only a few of us survived this slaughter and systematic extermination. We cannot return to those places where we lost our beloved ones under such terrible conditions because our lives there are again threatened.

"We want our own home. We have a right to it because our contribution in blood toward our common victory was great. Our soldiers fought in the ranks of the United Nations armies, in the Jewish Brigade, and as partisans in the forests of Russia and Poland."

This whole question is not only a humanitarian one; it is a question of example to the German population. We fought and destroyed their Nazi regime because it violated all concepts of decency, because it refused to honor obligations and because it employed force and terror to achieve all its nefarious ends. But we, the victor nations, are showing the Germans in their own land that the people they struck down are not necessarily to be lifted up, just as the British in Palestine have taken a leaf from Hitler's book.

I visited that village named Dachau. On windy days the odor of the thousands of burned bodies, more than a year since the actual fires died down, was still in the air. The German townspeople continued to go on their leisurely, unconcerned way just as they did while the crimes of their brother and sister Germans proceeded according to plan. Every American, every civilized person, should witness this scene. It is horrible, horrible and true. A group of American officers were viewing it as I came. We stood in silence, and bowed our heads. It is now a shrine. But a shrine to what purpose—to a cleansed, free world, a warning of fascism's ever-present challenge or a shrine to forget?

I made a note as we ambled out of the death chambers—"Not revenge, but awakening, awareness, vigilance."

Let no one tell you that the little people—that is, the people of the world, not the handful of leaders sitting around the tables—cannot work together. I saw the clearest demonstration of this at the team level of UNRRA operations with the displaced persons right in the UNRRA camps. I witnessed French, Russian, American, Polish, and British men and women working heroically day and night in the interest of human rescue. I saw them nursing babies back to life from death's door, bringing the aged and broken the sparse comforts which would give them a place to lay their heads and tired bodies which they must now call their home. I watched a Polish UNRRA worker from Warsaw and a former British commando colonel giving their strength together as a team helping children and defenseless victims get back on their feet. Both of these men told me with enthusiasm at the repatriation center at Paderborn that nothing could repay them for the exhilarating experience of comradeship and unity which they had learned through helping others.

If ever there were a doubt that geographic and political boundaries will evaporate in the face of need to aid one's fellow man—here was the living proof in these UNRRA workers. Here they were, thrown together by an accident of history, demonstrating, as a challenge to those who have smaller designs of conquest and material aims, that United Nations peoples can and will and do work together as a team. UNRRA, in spite of the complex difficulties in dealing with these shifting populations in a world emergency, is pro-United Nations and works as a team of United Nations representatives, going down to the people, resuscitating and rehabilitating them on political quicksand.

Little Mennie, the French UNRRA nurse, was practically breathing new life into a lost Yugoslavian child gasping for breath when I entered her room at the nursery at Kloster Indersdorf Children's Center near Dachau. Mennie, it seems, had no time to think of differences between top government officials. She was working at life's level, "merely doing her duty," she said. UNRRA has many such stories of heroic team workers. As I left Mennie I told her that part of her medicine was the love she poured into children who had never known this elixir.

Seeing her at work in Germany, I knew that people of the world were not so far apart—that East and West joined hands in a common need—that the so-called iron curtain is but a curtain of fog.

A homeless people has come to look to UNRRA as a symbol of hope, and I believe here democracy is receiving its severest test. The 100,000 living victims of fascism should be our heroes and our heroines. Without guns and planes they fought their way through the Fascist bandits, wandering through various concentration camps. I saw the tatooed numbers on their arms that they will carry to their graves—indelible symbols of fascism, a challenge to us to purge these marks—purple marks on their arms, black marks on our history.

The men and women I saw were very tired; whatever age, they looked very old; they had walked for tortuous miles to find their way to the sanctuary provided by the democratic powers. The powerful nations who won the military victory over fascism must find within their own resources some method of providing a means of building a truly democratic Germany by rooting out the sinister racial theories, the cartels, the diseased tradition of conquest, industrial and international. Then they will have matched the imagination, fortitude, and valor of the survivors I saw who had earned the right to this future security in Germany or elsewhere against a resurgence of fascism.

It is for us to bury it, not under the ruins of the Reichstag building or the bombed-out German cities. For there it smolders, under its embers of hate, ready to be fanned into new flames of devastation by those who blow an ill wind from the Western World to the east.

It is for us, the victors, to keep the air fresh and clear by speaking out for all the people—speaking out our hate of fascism in all its hidden color and odors, whether in Germany, the United States, or elsewhere—hate of war, hate of oppressors, and love for the oppressed, whether Pole or Jew or Yugoslav or British or American.

Terminal Leave Payments

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. T. MILLET HAND
OF NEW JERSEY
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Wednesday, July 31, 1946

Mr. HAND. Mr. Speaker, I shall support the conference report on terminal leave payments with the greatest reluctance. The whole purpose of this legislation was to give to the enlisted men rights equal to the commissioned officer, but in changing these payments to deferred bonds rather than cash, that purpose has been defeated.

I would not support the conference report at all except I am entirely convinced that if the conference report is defeated there will be no legislation on this subject in the Seventy-ninth Congress.

The gentleman from Texas [Mr. THOMASON], who is in charge of this legislation for the administration clearly indicated this in his speech a few moments ago in which he said:

> And I might add that he said this—of course, neither he nor any other person was authorized to speak for the President, but he did make the authorized statement to the committee that this bond proposal had been submitted to the President who approved it with the further statement that he would not approve anything more than that at the present time.

Mr. Speaker, it is a strange commentary on Government when a bill which passed by unanimous vote of the House is stopped by a mere threat of veto from the White House, but that is exactly what we face.

As one of the authors of this cash terminal leave payment, and as one who signed a petition to force this legislation to the floor, I am anxious to see at least some legislation passed, although I am disappointed, and not for the first time, with the attitude of the President.

Billions of dollars of appropriations have been passed by this Congress—many, wholly unnecessary—but we do not hear the bogey word "inflation" unless the administration opposes a particular expenditure. Cash in extravagant quantities is provided for an expanding bureaucracy but denied the veteran.

National Service Officers of Disabled American Veterans

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. PAUL CUNNINGHAM
OF IOWA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Thursday, August 1, 1946

Mr. CUNNINGHAM. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following letter:

WASHINGTON, D. C., August 1, 1946.
The Honorable PAUL CUNNINGHAM,
House Office Building,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR CONGRESSMAN CUNNINGHAM: In my letter to you of June 13, I described the course of study and the on-the-job training given to a national service officer trainee of the Disabled American Veterans.

A question often asked and seldom adequately answered in regard to this work is, "Why the necessity of a national service officer?"

Laws relating to service disabled veterans are not automatically administered without a legal claim presented, and can only be applied on the basis of proven facts, subject to the limitations and restrictions of such laws.

The burden of the proof of this claim lies on the veteran, as the Government cannot prosecute claims against itself.

In determining and establishing a veteran's entitlement to pension, compensation, or other governmental benefits, the Veterans' Administration acts as judge, jury, and prosecutor. It is difficult to reconcile the duties of judge and jury with those of the prosecutor; however, this is the condition of the administration of veterans' laws by the Veterans' Administration.

A national service officer of the Disabled American Veterans is a trained specialist in veterans' legislation. He assists and advises the disabled veteran in securing the paper proclaimed benefits to which he is entitled, and which the Congress wants him to have.

In the establishment of a claim for benefits by the veteran certain procedures must be followed by the claimant. These procedures are sometimes more difficult to interpret than the regulations and requirements of the OPA. The average disabled or nondisabled veteran is not usually adept in following the labryinthian procedures which are necessary to legally establish his claim. A veteran presenting his claim to the Veterans' Administration without the counsel and assistance of a national service officer can be likened to a man appearing before the bar of justice in a civil court without an attornay at law to represent him.

The employment of counsel for the veteran by the Government is not practical, as the first loyalty of the employee is to his employer. Instead of seeing that the veteran received absolute justice, we would find the Government-employed veterans' counsel trying to save Government money.

It is equally obvious that a practicing attorney-at-law could not render the services necessary to obtain the full benefits intended by Congress for the veteran because the compensation for the services rendered would be out of all proportion to the amount of work involved. It is practically impossible for the practicing attorney-at-law to devote the necessary time in the prosecution of the veteran's claim and assist him with the myriad personal problems that may, and too often do, accompany the veteran.

Evidence presented to an employee of the Veterans' Administration in support of a veteran's claim must be accepted by that employee in the form given, and no advice may be given the claimant as to the weight, value, admissibility, or need for additional evidence in support of the claim.

A national service officer, as a full-time paid employee of the Disabled American Veterans, does not and cannot accept any fee or compensation from the veteran, or from his dependents, for any service he renders to any veteran of any war in which this country has been engaged.

A national service officer, in preparing a veteran's claim for presentation to the Veterans' Administration, may advise the veteran as to the weight, value, admissibility, inadequacy, or need for additional factual evidence in support of his claim, since his opinion is not controlled by Government employ. He may assist in obtaining and preparing additional evidence in proper form, and present this evidence as the special advocate of the veteran. He appears before the Veterans' Administration's rating board for the protection of the veteran's legal rights and sees that the decision handed down is a just and equitable one.

The receipt of a pension by a disabled veteran does not, contrary to popular belief, result in complete rehabilitation for the disabled veteran. A pension for an amputation of one leg, or for one arm, is not sufficient to maintain the veteran and his dependents, if any, in the American way of life, and must be augmented with income from another source. The national service officer is charged with the duty of constantly seeking places of employment where the disability of the veteran and the job requirements meet. The task of securing employment for the disabled veteran is a serious one and is becoming an increasingly difficult problem.

Recent surveys by the United States Civil Service Commission, the Bureau of Labor Statistics, and large private industrial corporations show that the disabled employee is more reliable, just as productive or serviceable as the nondisabled employee. Employers are reluctant to employ disabled veterans due to the fact that when a disabled employee is injured on the job it is probable that he will be more disabled as a result of the on-the-job injury than a nondisabled employee. As an illustration, a veteran with only one leg receives an injury which results in amputation of the remaining leg. He then becomes permanently and totally disabled from an injury which would only partially incapacitate a nondisabled employee. This accident would cause a substantial increase in the individual employers' workman's compensaton insurance rate. This is a vicious circle which can be broken by passage of legislation authorizing the Veterans' Administration to reimburse State workman's compensation insurance boards for compensation paid for on-the-job injuries sustained by disabled veterans.

The duties of the national service officer are not confined to prosecuting veterans' claims and assisting him with his employment problems. He must see that the disabled veteran receives proper medical and hospital treatment. He visits Army, Navy, and Veterans' Administration hospitals, there to give his professional or personal services to those who may need them.

The work of a national service officer is filled with many responsibilities. It is a work that can be assumed with a deep pride and an abiding faith in the ideal for which we must ever strive to keep the faith with America's war-torn disabled veterans, and to the dependents of those who so gloriously gave their lives that this Nation of freemen might endure.

Yours very truly,

HENRY J. WHITE,
National Service Officer Trainee, Disabled American Veterans, Class VII.

Terminal Leave Pay

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. B. W. (PAT) KEARNEY

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, July 31, 1946

Mr. KEARNEY. Mr. Speaker, in the presentation of the conference report on H. R. 4051, I, like the rest of the Members of the House, am greatly disappointed at the provisions contained therein which provide that the terminal leave pay for the enlisted personnel of World War II be in bonds instead of cash. When the old statute was resurrected allowing the payment of terminal leave to officers, there was no question about payment of this sum to the individual being made in cash.

The House bill provided for payment of the amounts in cash and the Senate bill provided for payment in bonds. We were also given to understand that unless the Senate bill prevailed and the amounts paid in bonds, the President would veto any other form of payment.

There has been a great deal of hue and cry raised during this debate that if the House bill prevailed and the GI's were paid in cash instead of bonds, immediate inflation would occur. This is a ridiculous statement and it seems rather strange to me that during these many years wherever legislation is advocated for the veteran, there is always the cry of inflation. Strange that this cry is not heard in other legislation wherein appropriations are made. During the war we paid eight billions in subsidies—no one cried "inflation" during those debates.

We have been told that it was either the adoption of the conference report "or else." While I am absolutely opposed to the payment of this terminal leave pay in bonds, I intend to support the conference report for fear the GI's would lose out entirely if it were not accepted, but along with many of my colleagues in the House, I serve notice here and now that upon the convening of the next Congress, I shall support the move announced by our minority leader, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MARTIN] and work and vote to have these nonnegotiable bonds made redeemable in cash at the will of their holders.

The bill which passed the House was an equitable one but, as previously said, we have no choice in the matter but to vote for the conference report.

Veterans and the Democratic Party Program

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. ANDREW J. BIEMILLER

OF WISCONSIN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, August 1, 1946

Mr. BIEMILLER. Mr. Speaker, in July 1942, 7 months after Pearl Harbor, President Franklin D. Roosevelt said:

> The members of the armed forces have been compelled to make greater economic sacrifices than the rest of us, and are entitled to definite action to help take care of their special problems.

The Democratic administration, first under Roosevelt and then under his successor, President Harry S. Truman, has with steadfast purpose acted to insure that the Nation discharge its debt to those who responded in the hour of need with such heroism, devotion, and extraordinary sacrifice.

The so-called GI bill of rights, enacted in June 1944 and liberalized in January 1946, grants the American veteran and his dependents a series of benefits and protections more substantial than those provided to veterans by any other nation in the world.

In order to gear the Veterans' Administration to the efficient handling of the tremendously increased tasks imposed upon it by World War II, the entire organization has been revamped. Under the able leadership of Gen. Omar N. Bradley, the Veterans' Administration has been modernized, its operations have been streamlined, and men of the highest caliber have been put in charge of its various units.

The Democratic Party has worked to achieve these benefits and improvements on the theory that they belong to the veteran as a matter of right rather than of privilege.

The Democratic Party believes that the Nation can never fully recompense veterans for their great contribution, but it is determined to spare no effort to see that the Nation does give adequate attention to make the recompense as complete as possible.

We Democrats know that the present legislation with regard to veterans is inadequate in some respects, and we are resolved that these inadequacies shall be corrected.

We are also firmly resolved that the veterans of this country shall never again be subjected to the kind of callous disregard that culminated in the brutal treatment of the bonus marchers at Anacostia Flats. Those responsible for the incident can never live down the shame of that day in July 1932, when a purblind President sent cavalry, tanks, and machine guns to trample and shoot down peaceful veterans assembled to petition for relief from hunger and destitution.

What, in brief, are the benefits to which veterans are now entitled?

The country's chief obligation is to the survivors of those who made the supreme sacrifice. Today, a widow of a World War I or World War II veteran receives $50 per month if her husband's death was due to a service-connected cause, and $35 per month if it was due to a non-service-connected cause. Additional amounts are allowed for other dependents, including dependent parents.

Pensions to the veteran himself for most types of service-connected disability have been increased until now they range from $11.50 to $115 per month, depending on the degree of disablement. Payments for certain of the more serious types of disability amount to as much as $300 per month.

For total disability not connected with service, unmarried veterans with income of less than $1,000 a year and married veterans with income of less than $2,500 receive $50 a month. After 10 years of such disability, or upon reaching the age of 65, the payment is increased to $60 a month.

Pension payments are now being made each month to about 1,500,000 veterans of World War II.

Complete medical care for all service-connected disabilities is available to veterans in both veterans' hospitals and out-patient clinics. Veterans suffering from sickness or disability not connected with their military service are also given medical treatment in veterans' hospitals if they certify that they are not able to pay a private doctor or hospital.

The only other limitation upon treatment of non-service-connected illness and disability is imposed by the amount of bed space available in veterans' hospitals. In actual fact, the veteran with non-service-connected disability is usually able to secure admission to a veterans' hospital. But preference must, of course, be given to those whose disability is a direct result of their service in the armed forces.

By July 1946, more than 395,000 veterans of World War II had received medical care in veterans' hospitals and other hospitals with which the Veterans' Administration arranges for service. Since World War I, there have been more than 3,494,000 admissions to hospitals operated or utilized by the Veterans' Administration.

In order to increase the number of beds available, and thus help to insure that all veterans—even those with non-service-connected disabilities—may receive care when they need it, the Veterans' Administration has undertaken a huge hospital building program. Congress has authorized construction of facilities for more than 51,000 new beds. At present, about 107,000 beds are available.

At the very outset of this building program, a controversy arose over the location of the new hospitals. Those responsible for the Veterans' Administration medical program insisted that the primary consideration must be the welfare of the veterans. Therefore, they proposed to locate the new hospitals, wherever possible, in or near those cities which were important centers of medical research, training, and practice. In this way—and in this way only—the very best medical authorities and specialists could be used in the veterans' medical program.

Others, however, believed that the Veterans' Administration hospitals should be located where land is cheap or where political expediency dictates. Adherence to such policies in the past resulted in many veterans' hospitals being regarded as medical "backwaters." Under such a system it was difficult or impossible to attract first-rate doctors, and an inferior grade of service was inevitable.

In this controversy over hospital location President Truman firmly upheld General Bradley and his medical advisers who insisted that high-quality care must take precedence over all other considerations. As a result of this change in policy and other improvements, the Veterans' Administration medical program is successfully being directed back into the main current of American medical progress. Top-ranking physicians, surgeons, and specialists are now participating in the medical care of veterans, whereas formerly they were inclined to remain aloof and indifferent. Many prominent medical schools and research institutions have opened their doors to staff doctors of the Veterans' Administration so that they might do postgraduate work in fields related especially to veterans' medical care.

Streamlining of the program and elimination of red tape have not only improved the quality of care considerably, but have greatly increased the number of cases that can be handled. The waiting period for treatment has been substantially reduced. So has the average length of stay in the hospitals.

In addition, provision has been made for vocational training of veterans whose disabilities constitute a handicap in getting a job. Such veterans are taught special skills and work methods which help them to overcome their handicaps and to find useful work at good wages. At the present time more than 92,000 disabled veterans are receiving such training. During the vocational training period, single men's pensions are increased to $105 a month if they are ordinarily less than that, and married men's pensions are increased to $115. Additional payments are made for dependents.

In addition to more adequate pension payments and medical care benefits for those who are disabled, all veterans are now also entitled to a wide variety of economic benefits. These have not only made it easier for veterans to readjust themselves to civilian life, but have also had a salutary effect on the economy of the Nation as a whole.

Mustering-out pay ranging from $100 to $300 has been granted.

Adoption of the National Service Life Insurance Act gave veterans an opportunity to obtain the best and cheapest life insurance ever made available. About 5,900,000 persons now have this type of insurance, involving a total coverage of more than $45,000,000,000. A total of 500,136 insurance claims had been awarded prior to July 1946, resulting in payments to beneficiaries of $3,341,000,000.

Through the Selective Service Act, veterans were given certain priority rights in getting back the jobs they held when they were inducted into the service. Veterans who left Government positions to go to war have been assured of their former jobs if they want them. Extra credit points are given to all veterans in civil-service examinations.

In cooperation with selective service and the United States Employment Service, the Veterans' Administration has established more than 9,000 job-information centers to advise and assist veterans in finding employment. Three thousand additional centers of this kind have been set up in cooperation with community agencies.

Although job opportunities at the present time are relatively plentiful, it is not always possible for a veteran to get a suitable job as soon as he wants one after discharge. This fact has been recognized, and provision has therefore been made for unemployment allowances for all veterans who seek work but do not find it. At any time within 2 years after discharge the unemployed veteran will be paid $20 per week unemployment compensation for a maximum period of 52 weeks.

Veterans who enter business for themselves, and whose earnings do not equal $100 a month, are guaranteed the difference between their actual earnings and that amount for a period up to 52 weeks.

Here again the benefit accrues not only to the veteran but to the community and the Nation as a whole. If jobless veterans did not have the assurance of these payments to tide them over the period of temporary joblessness many of them would be forced to accept charity, and all of them would have to reduce their standard of living. This, in turn, would have an adverse effect upon the income of the storekeeper and the business community in general.

The GI bill of rights also entitles veterans to extensive educational benefits. Any veteran with 90 days of active service and an honorable discharge may enter an approved school for a period of 1 year, or its equivalent in part-time study, in order to take a refresher or brush-up course by means of which he can bring himself up to date in any field in which he may be interested.

In addition, veterans who are qualified by previous education may continue their schooling or training at Government expense for a period up to 4 years, depending upon the length of service. A veteran with 3 years of active service is entitled to a full 4-year course of college training.

During such a refresher course or long-term period of study, the Government pays all school expenses up to a maximum of $500 per school year, plus a living allowance of $65 a month for veterans without dependents and $90 a month for those with dependents.

Those who choose to take a correspondence course rather than attend a regular academic institution may do so. In that case the student veteran is allowed a maximum of $500 towards the expenses of the course.

On July 1, 1946, 930,512 veterans were taking advantage of these educational opportunities.

In order to aid the veteran to get started in business or to buy a home or farm, the Government has undertaken to guarantee loans made for such purposes. Real estate loans will be guaranteed up to $4,000, and business loans up to a maximum of $2,000.

All of the foregoing measures have been put into effect for the direct benefit of veterans as such. But it is impossible to consider the welfare of the veteran without also taking into account the welfare of the American people as a whole.

The veteran is not a veteran first and an American citizen second. In the final analysis, the veteran's prosperity and success depend upon the general level of economic well-being. Regardless of how much legislation is passed to assist the veterans, he will not be well served if the country is plunged into another ruinous depression such as it experienced during the nineteen thirties.

The veteran does not seek a priority position in future bread lines. He wants full opportunity to earn a decent living along with all his fellow citizens. He knows that this opportunity can never be his unless it is also theirs.

For this reason, the veteran is interested not only in what the major political parties have done for him as a veteran, but also in what the respective party programs signify in terms of the future economic status of the Nation.

The only conclusion that can be drawn from a study of the Republican Party program is that a Republican victory in November 1946 and in 1948 would mean a return to the Harding-Coolidge-Hoover philosophy of government in the interest of special privilege.

Under such a Government the living standards of the people would again decline. Monopoly would again be favored over true competitive enterprise. The small businessman, the farmer, the workingman, and the consumer would again find their welfare sacrificed for the benefit of Wall Street and the giant corporations. Before long mass purchasing power would fall off sharply. Then the old familiar cycle would be repeated: Job lay-offs, decreased sales, more lay-offs, bankruptcies running into the thousands, wholesale discharge of workers, still more widespread business stagnation, and, finally, a nation as completely prostrate as it was in 1932.

Does this seem like too drastic a forecast? If anyone thinks so, he need only look at the record.

The way the majority of the Republicans in Congress have voted in recent years gives a good indication of what might be expected if the GOP were to gain control of the Senate and House.

Throughout the Roosevelt recovery period they bitterly opposed most of the measures designed to correct the abuses which brought on the great depression.

They opposed the New Deal measures which gave work to millions, provided new stimulus to industry, and literally saved our free enterprise system.

When the war broke out in Europe and Asia they clung to their habitual isolationism. As the involvement of the United States in the struggle became steadily more certain, they resisted every move to strengthen our defenses or give aid to our beleaguered future allies.

And when the war was finally over, all they could think about was getting back as quickly as possible to the discredited "normalcy" of the 1920's.

They fought and voted against the President's full employment program.

They opposed adequate unemployment compensation benefits and related measures designed to protect veterans and other workers during the uncertainties of the reconversion period.

They opposed the administration's minimum wage bill, and showed not the slighest regard for the plight of the several million workers who still subsist on substandard wages.

They did everything in their power to wreck the price-control program, exhibiting perfect willingness to subject the people to the danger of inflation so that big business might enjoy a brief spree of exorbitant profits.

They even loaded down the veterans' emergency housing bill with a series of crippling amendments. They succeeded in defeating the administration's proposal to put price ceilings on existing homes, preferring to leave the real-estate speculators free to charge veterans and others whatever the already inflated housing market would bear.

Contrast this bankrupt program and this negative record with the Democratic Party's outstanding achievements during the 14 years it has been in power, and with the Democratic Party's program for further consolidation of the gains for the masses of common people made during these years.

We Democrats stand for continued full employment and full production at high wages. We are not willing to leave these things to chance, but say that the Government must look ahead now and be ready to use its powers and resources to ward off economic stagnation whenever it threatens.

We stand for more adequate and more inclusive social-security benefits—for fuller protection against the economic hazards of unemployment and old age.

We propose to enact a comprehensive national health program which will enable all our people to enjoy the benefits of modern, scientific medical care at a price within their means.

We insist on the enactment of a large-scale, long-range program to build decent homes to replace the slums and firetraps in which so many of our people are now forced to live. Had it not been for the war, we would undoubtedly be far along with the accomplishment of such a program by this time. Now that the war is over, there is no good reason for further delay.

We favor more regional-development projects, such as the Tennessee Valley Authority, which will provide not only jobs, but easier living, cheaper electricity, and flood control.

Finally, we Democrats favor effective price control to protect wage earners and consumers until all danger of inflation is past.

Veterans and nonveterans alike, therefore, will have a clear-cut choice when they go to the polls this November. The choice is between a return to the insecurity and turmoil of the early 1930's and continuing prosperity based on the kind of program that saw us victoriously through the depression and through the war.

Confronted with these alternatives, there can be little doubt that the people will return Democratic majorities to Congress, as they have done in every election for the past 14 years.

Payment for Terminal Leave

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. EVAN HOWELL
OF ILLINOIS
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Thursday, August 1, 1946

Mr. HOWELL. Mr. Speaker, as one of the signers of the discharge petition under which H. R. 4151, an act to grant to the enlisted personnel of the armed forces certain benefits in lieu of accumulated leave, came to the House of Representatives for consideration, I was greatly disappointed in the failure of the conferees to insist upon cash payments, accepting instead the proposition that terminal leave be paid in nonnegotiable bonds, payable in 5 years, at 2½ percent interest.

According to the House conferees, they were forced to give in to the Senate's suggestion that the boys be paid in bonds rather than in cash because the President of the United States has indicated, either directly or indirectly, that he would veto any bill calling for cash payments on the grounds that such a measure would be inflationary.

I am amazed at the type of reasoning which would permit the President to authorize the loans and grants to practically every foreign nation in the world with which to buy automobiles, farm machinery, foodstuffs, and other articles, not only creating shortages in this country but the very inflation of which he is so fearful.

Why is it that the first time any effort is made on the part of the Government to freeze its obligations or combat inflation, it begins with the veterans? This is indeed a rank discrimination and gross injustice to the enlisted men since the officers have already received their terminal pay in cash. It is not too late to do something to correct this manifestly unfair situation, for we can yet authorize the Clerk of the House of Representatives in the enrollment of the bill, H. R. 4051, to strike out the language that the enlisted men be paid in bonds and insert the requirement that such compensation be entirely in cash. Accordingly, I have prepared and introduced House Concurrent Resolution 167, which authorizes the Clerk to do this very thing, and as part of my remarks I insert here a copy of said resolution:

House Concurrent Resolution 167

Concurrent resolution to authorize the Clerk of the House of Representatives to correct enrolled bill (H. R. 4051) to provide for cash payment for accumulated leave for enlisted men, instead of payment in bonds

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the Clerk of the House of Representatives, in the enrollment of the bill (H. R. 4051) to grant to enlisted personnel of the armed forces certain benefits in lieu of accumulated leave, is authorized and directed—

(1) To strike out subsection (a) of section 6 and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"(a) Leave by this act provided to be settled and compensated for under this section shall be settled and compensated for entirely in cash. In the event of the death of any holder of any check issued pursuant to this subsection, payment of the check shall be made by the Secretary of the Treasury upon application by such holder's survivors as follows: To such holder's surviving spouse and children, if any, in equal shares; and if such holder leaves no surviving spouse or child or children, then in equal shares to such holder's surviving parents, if any. If there is no such survivor, any such check shall be canceled and the amount of the check covered into the general fund of the Treasury. Payment of any such check to any holder, or any survivor entitled thereto under the provisions of this subsection, between 17 and 21 years of age shall constitute a complete discharge of the obligations of the United States under this act. Where the Secretary of the Treasury is of the opinion that any holder of any such check or any survivor entitled to payment under the provisions of this subsection is, by reason of being either under 17 years of age or under mental disability, incapable of satisfactorily looking after his own interests, payment of such check may be made in the same manner, and with the same effect, as settlement and compensation made under the provisions of subsection (c). All decisions by the Secretary of the Treasury under this subsection with respect to the issuance and payment of checks shall be final and conclusive and shall not be subject to review by any court or by any officer of the United States."

(2) To strike out subsection (d) of section 6.

(3) To strike out section 7 and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"SEC. 7. All amounts paid or payable under section 6 of this act shall not be assignable shall be exempt from taxation, shall be exempt from claims of creditors, including any claim of the United States, and shall not be subject to attachment, levy, or seizure by or under any legal or equitable process whatever."

Mr. Speaker, as this session of Congress draws to a close, this is the only means available to do justice to the enlisted man and I trust that I may find agreement on the part of the entire House of Representatives.

The Present Crucial Situation in Greece

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. ELLIS E. PATTERSON

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, July 31, 1946

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. Speaker, on July 26 I introduced a resolution calling for the United States Government to play a positive role in aiding the Greek people to secure the promised democracy for which they starved and died in their brave struggle against our common enemy. I did so because the plight of Greece is too glaring in its implications to deny our own responsibility to throw our weight on the side of democracy. My awareness of the Greek situation was heightened by a report recently issued by the Greek-American Council and the National Committee to Win the Peace. Under leave to extend my remarks, I include this report in my remarks:

THE PRESENT CRUCIAL SITUATION IN GREECE

(Issued by the Greek-American Council and the National Committee to Win the Peace, July 1946)

REVIEW OF CONDITIONS IN GREECE

The fraudulent elections of March 31 brought to power a monarcho-Fascist government which has already demonstrated its complete inability to solve the internal problems of that country. There is widespread hunger and disease throughout the land. The inflationary spiral rises steadily and the black market is ubiquitous.

There is increasing terrorism directed against everyone suspected of democratic tendencies. A state of virtual fascism exists today in Greece. There are two major reasons for the rule by terror, the failure of the government to solve the internal problems of the country, and the determination of the British and Greek Governments to maintain the monarchy at all costs.

The so-called mopping-up operations, directed by the government, are concentrated mainly in those areas where democratic sentiments are strongest.

Unhindered attacks against and murders of democratic people by armed bands and the gendarmerie and other forces are reported daily—and the culprits remain unpunished.

The government has reinstituted the shameful and notorious practice of the Metaxas dictatorship of exiling political prisoners. Hundreds of Greeks have suffered this fate during the last few months.

The Greek Parliament on June 6 adopted a series of Fascist decrees which abrogated civil liberties. The death penalty is mandatory for those found guilty under the provisions of the law. Special military courts are established to try the cases of those accused of criticizing the government. Police may enter homes at any hours of the day or night without search warrants. Public mass meetings may be outlawed.

Advancing further into Fascist dictatorship, the government introduced a measure to "purge" the civil services. Nullifying the Greek constitution which guarantees tenure to civil-service workers, this measure provides for dismissal of such workers by a decree of the cabinet or decision of the responsibile minister. Unprincipled violation of the Varkiza agreement is expressed in the provision permitting dismissal of those who participated or assisted in the "revolt" from December 3, 1944, to February 12, 1945. Rumor or hearsay will be sufficient cause for dismissal. While the bill ostensibly includes collaborators, it carefully specifies that it means only those who collaborated "voluntarily and consciously." Including still another safeguard for pro-Fascists, the bill exempts from its provisions those employees appointed after March 31, 1946, the date of the fraudulent elections.

Further manifestations of fascism in Greece include the unconcealed attempts to smash the EAM, the KKE, the EPON, and the labor movement. No method is too dirty to use. Terror and force are employed—offices are broken into and smashed and leaders are arrested. A mass of restrictions have been imposed—on meetings, on collection of funds, etc. Frame-ups, slanders and calumnies are lavishly employed. The state council has declared null and void the labor council's elections, an action vigorously protested by the World Federation of Trade Unions which supervised the elections.

As a natural concomitant, there has been a significant failure to arrest and prosecute quislings and collaborators. Pro-Fascists are still in official positions, including the courts.

The recent protest of UNRRA officials in Greece brought to light the reprehensible tactics of the government in the political use of relief supplies, denying them to democrats and their families.

ROLE OF GREAT BRITAIN

Great Britain bears the main responsibility for the present situation in Greece. From the initial stages of the British occupation of Greece, its policies have led inevitably to the present situation.

It maintains a stranglehold on Greek economy. The present Greek government's policies have Great Britain's approval. It was Great Britain who refused to permit the purge from the armed forces of quislings last year.

It was Great Britain who insisted that elections be held on March 31, despite urgent pleas for delay from liberal Greek statesmen. It was Great Britain who underwrote the election results, although ample evidence of fraud existed.

It was Great Britain who broke her promise that the plebiscite on the monarchy would be held in 1948, and who insisted on setting forward the date to September 1 of this year.

And there seems no end in sight. There has been no hint of possible evacuation of British troops. Great Britain does not seem to need the persuasion to remain in Greece offered by Mr. Gonatas, Acting Premier in Mr. Tsaldaris' absence, that the troops will be needed after the plebiscite, because Greece is too weak to stand alone.

ROLE OF THE UNITED STATES

Americans have reason for shame at the part played by our Government in the establishment of fascism in Greece.

It was American lend-lease arms which the British used against the Greek people during the events of December 1944 to February 1945.

When the question of Greece was raised by the Soviet Union at the London meeting of the United Nations Security Council, the United States supported the position of the oppressor, Great Britain.

The United States, too, underwrote the March 31 elections, despite the admission of the electoral mission that the registration lists were inaccurate and misleading and despite the large proportion of eligible voters who abstained from the election.

Not only has the United States failed to protest against present conditions in Greece, it has continued to support British policy.

EVENTS LEADING TO PLEBISCITE CRUCIAL

The EAM and the democratic forces of Greece have announced their determination to participate in the plebiscite under any circumstances. The EAM has repeatedly stated that it desires only the opportunity for the Greek people to have a normal, democratic plebiscite. All the democratic forces of Greece are uniting on the issue of the republic and against the monarchy.

Spreading throughout Greece is the movement for reconciliation of all the people. The program of the reconciliation movement is work, rehabilitation, concord, freedom, and national independence. No party gives up its political beliefs through reconciliation. It is a movement of the people, directed towards an end to strife in their own midst.

However, the ability to create the conditions for an honest plebiscite is not in the power of the democratic forces. The responsibility for the creation of these conditions rests squarely upon the British and the Greek Governments. Through their control of the state apparatus and the armed forces, they, and only they, can restore order and democracy at the present time. This they can do under the provisions of the Greek Constitution and existing laws, and without resorting to Fascist measures.

Nevertheless, the Government has demonstrated its fears of the results of an honest plebiscite, through its repressive measures and through its refusal to state the plebiscite issue clearly.

The Government maintains the plebiscite must be on the question of the return of King George, and not on republic or monarchy.

In addition, to ensure the plebiscite results it desires, the Government has launched a unilateral war against the democratic forces, and particularly in those areas where reconciliation is succeeding in uniting the people.

The prerequisites for an honest plebiscite are:

An end to the terroristic pogroms against the democratic forces.

Amnesty for all political prisoners except collaborators.

Abrogation of fascistic decrees and restoration of civil liberties.

Genuine revision of the electoral lists.

Freedom to register and vote.

If the Greek Government does not change its present course and create the conditions for a democratic plebiscite, the people will, of necessity, be forced to defend themselves and a disastrous civil war may result. Should this calamity strike Greece, it will be the responsibility, first and foremost of the British and Greek Governments, and then of the United States Government.

UNITED STATES RESPONSIBILITY IN COMING PERIOD

Clearly, the United States cannot shrug off its responsibility to the Greek people. It is bound by the decisions of the Crimean Conference to aid in the establishment of free representative government and in the elimination of the last vestige of fascism in Greece.

The whole American people owes a debt of gratitude to our valiant Greek allies who fought heroically against the Italian and German Fascists.

A Fascist Greece is a threat to peace in the Balkans and in the entire world.

By underwriting the fraudulent elections of March 31, the United States Government committed a grave crime against democracy in Greece. The plebiscite mission now in Greece must not be permitted to whitewash the events around the plebiscite.

Americans have the solemn responsibility to demand that our Government insist that the Greek people be given freedom and that the British troops, which have acted only as a repressive and oppressive force and an aid to the monarchists and Fascists, be immediately removed from Greece, irrespective of the outcome of the plebiscite.

Americans, further, have the solemn duty to demand that our State Department and our President insure that the conditions for a democratic plebiscite in Greece are created.

Some Fundamental Reasons Why I Voted Against Citation

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF

HON. CLYDE DOYLE

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, August 1, 1946

Mr. DOYLE. Mr. Speaker, today, after I voted with the minority numerically and against the certification of the report of the House Committee on Un-American Activities in the Marshall case. I was asked to state some of the main reasons guiding such decision. One Member frankly stated he knew very well I was not interested in protecting either subversive or un-American activities or influences and that I had voted previously for the issuance of the other citations as asked of the House by the said committee. I am very glad the Member had recognized that I had no interest in nor would I countenance any subversive or un-American activity nor be a party to or protector of any such activity. For, Mr. Speaker, the life of my only son went out while in the uniform of a lieutenant of the United States Army Air Corps during this war, and I take no second rear seat in my loyalty to the protection of the enduring principles of our United States Government and the freedoms and securities for which they stand under our Constitution.

I do not have time to here repeat my words of May 17, 1946, as printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD at pages 5222 and 5223. But I respectfully refer to them all and now quote therefrom only the following short paragraphs, to wit:

> I will not knowingly tolerate the creation of any propaganda or activity designed to result in the use of force or violence against our form of government as guaranteed by our Constitution. So with me it is not the amount of money which is the determining factor.
> In making these remarks I do not intend to criticize any Member of this House nor any committee of this House. I do criticize the system by which we are presently functioning in this particular.
> I have no sympathy or accord with any person or group of persons who are interested in the overthrow or dissolving of our American form of government as guaranteed by our Constitution. I shall fight to the last ditch any propaganda so designed.

Mr. Speaker, I restate those words of mine of May 17, 1946, as and for my present position—only that I would underscore them each with indelible ink for emphasis.

I would sincerely regret it if any member of the Un-American Activities Committee would feel that there is no room for honest and sincere difference of opinion with anything the committee might do or try to do, or with the methods used. The American way of life is to encourage freedom of sincere speech, and to not be afraid of the difference of opinion which is born also of patriotic devotion to our America. Intolerance with the sincere opinions of our fellow citizens only begets bigotry and destroys the foundations of our democratic way of life. Sincere difference of opinion between patriotic citizens is essential and a great force for good.

If there be any Member of this House who claims that all Members who might vote against this resolution today are therefore disloyal or unpatriotic or in sympathy with any element undertaking to destroy our beloved Government—then I challenge such conclusion and claim as unfounded in the least or at all, as far as my own firm decision is concerned.

So Mr. Speaker, here are some of the fundamental reasons controlling my decision.

First. The House committee does not allow any person or witness before it to have legal counsel present in the committee examination or hearing room. We as a House have appropriated ample money for the committee to have the best legal counsel present and to examine and cross-examine these American citizens who are subpenaed to testify under oath. Besides the committee counsel examining the witness, several members of the committee are themselves able and experienced trial and court lawyers and the record of the committee hearings shows that, on frequent occasions, the citizen before the Un-American Activity Committee has several of these committee members as well as the committee lawyer all questioning him and pressing and urging him to answer their questions. Yet, the witness is not allowed the presence of a legal counsel to protect him in his rights as an American citizen. Nor does the fact that on occasions some witnesses have been allowed to go out of the committee room to see a lawyer, while the committee members sat by and waited until the witness returned having asked his lawyer as to his rights and the security an American citizen is entitled to have under such circumstances. Furthermore, Mr. Speaker, as I read the hearings in some of the cases it appeared most wasteful that several busy Congressmen are voluntarily sitting around waiting until the witness comes back into the hearing room and answers and then gets up in a few minutes and goes out to see his lawyer again about another question a few minutes later.

The established American way is to allow a witness to have his attorney present to defend his rights before the committee. The fact that it would take longer is no answer, Mr. Speaker. No short cut in the saving of time is justified if we deprive a citizen of his inherent, American right to have legal counsel to advise him of his rights in his immediate presence while he is being examined.

The fact that the members of the committee might feel that they are too busy with other congressional duties to put in the time it would require if these American citizens were accorded this clearly established and fundamental right, is no justification for depriving these Americans of their clearly defined rights of legal counsel by their side. Yes, I know the lawyers for these witnesses would "object" and "object," but, Mr. Speaker, the printed record reveals that there are too many occasions when a witness has been put or placed in a prejudiced position by a question—or even worse—when with a lawyer by his side these violations of the witness' rights would not occur. Even a citizen who is claimed to be in a group with a political ideology radically different than mine or yours, is entitled to have his legal counsel with him, by his side, when he is under legal examination. Even a man already found guilty is accorded a fair trial and the benefit and protection of legal counsel. Mr. Speaker, I do not conceive of it as being in accord with the fundamentals of American democracy and its established system in such matters to have these witnesses required to testify under oath, without their having the protection of legal counsel. Yet, that is what our Un-American Committee has again done in this instant case. It is the established practice of this committee of this House of this Congress. It is fundamentally unsound and in contravention of the rights of witnesses under our American processes.

Second. Ever since I became a Member of this Seventy-ninth Congress, I have sought to ascertain by what definition of "subversive activity" or "un-American activity" a person was to be measured as either a loyal or disloyal American citizen. No one seemed to find any high court definition used by the House committee nor could I find any printed or any announced definition which the committee had to either guide or limit its activities.

Finally, in order to be best prepared to make a decision on the issue before us today, I wrote a letter to the House Un-American Activities Committee on July 17, 1946. It is self-explanatory and is as follows:

JULY 17, 1946.

Mr. ERNIE ADAMSON,
Chief Counsel, Un-American Activities Committee, House Office Building, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. ADAMSON: At the valued suggestion of Mr. JOHN RANKIN, I am asking you to forward to me a copy of the definition of "subversive activities" or "un-American activities" as was adopted by the Un-American Activities Committee, and which guides you in your deliberations on that point.

For this, by return mail, I thank you in advance. Also, if there is any Supreme Court decision on this point, I will thank you to direct my attention to it.

Sincerely yours,

CLYDE DOYLE,
Member of Congress.

I received a prompt reply from the committee's chief legal counsel, as follows:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
COMMITTEE ON UN-AMERICAN ACTIVITIES,
Washington, July 18, 1946.

Hon. CLYDE DOYLE,
House Office Building,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR CONGRESSMAN DOYLE: I have your letter of the 17th.

The committee has adopted no definition of subversive or un-American activities. However, Mr. RANKIN has a bill pending in the House, H. R. 3242, which might be helpful in this respect.

Yours very truly,

ERNIE ADAMSON,
Chief Counsel.

I naturally immediately noticed that the answer of the chief counsel neither acknowledged receipt of my request that he direct my attention to any United States Supreme Court decision defining subversive or un-American activities which the committee had to guide it, but he did not cite any such case. So I must presume that he knows of no such case.

But since he volunteered the information that Mr. JOHN RANKIN, of Mississippi, had a bill pending in the House, H. R. 3242, I asked a clerk and was advised that said bill by the distinguished gentleman, a member of the Un-American Activities Committee had never been reported by the committee, although it was filed with the committee in May 1946. And, of course, a bill not enacted into law by Congress and signed by the President of the United States has no effect in law. It does not speak out for the people of America, that a Member merely files a bill in Congress. I read the bill, of course.

This illustrates that there can be at present as many definitions of "subversive and un-American" as there are committee members. In fact, I think I notice that there is some sharp difference of opinion expressed by committee members on this point.

The startling fact is that this important committee has been functioning ever since January 5, 1945, and its predecessor the Dies committee was for some years before it, yet the people of America are not yet told, by the committee, what is or what is not conduct which will make them guilty in the eyes of this House committee. This is a very serious error and omission, I believe.

So, because the committee does not officially have any declaration by which an American citizen can know what is charged to be "subversive or un-American" I could not conscientiously vote to put this citizen up against a criminal case or charge in the Federal court. Our safety before courts and committees having great power, such as our House committee, stems from having the procedures and definitions and procedures established and clearly defined so that the whims, intolerances, passions, and demagogueries of men will not jeopardize or violate the rights of men. The rights of minorities must be kept as sacred and as inviolate as those of the majority. If the civil rights of a single soul in America are deliberately trampled upon, the rights of the mass of the people are thereby placed in peril.

Third. The committee print of the hearings does not contain the full evidence or testimony before the committee. For instance, on page 2 of the committee report it says: "The material parts of his testimony follow." Then there is furnished to us as Members of Congress only portions of selected testimony by way of selected questions and answers to witness Marshall by the legal counsel for the committee and by committee members RANKIN and WOOD.

The very text of the committee print itself shows me that there must have been questions and answers other than those printed for our use, which questions and answers we were entitled to read before we were asked to vote.

We sit as jurymen in an unusual sense in this sort of proceeding. We are furnished testimony by the committee print of but a part of the committee hearing. We are asked to accept someone else's opinion as to what is "material" when we are asked to certify a citizen for criminal prosecution. I am not willing to substitute anyone else's judgment for my own 25 years of law practice under such circumstances. There was plenty of time and of money to give the Members of the House all the evidence.

I will not vote to condemn or put a man up against a criminal case or charge when I believe that "material evidence" which is easily available, is not made available.

The fact that a report favoring this or that prosecution for contempt comes from this particular committee of the House does not of itself constrain me to accept the committee's report. Why should it be so? It is a wise and safe procedure we here have to not blindly accept a committee report—just because it is a report. The fact is that this House has refused to approve dozens of reports of other committees during this session of Congress. That is as it should be. Yet, in this case we are not allowed any opportunity whatsoever to speak out against error or abuse—even if we are under a conscientious conviction that one exists.

By this statement of a fundamental reason is why I must vote "nay." I do not mean to indicate that I feel the committee intended to keep any material evidence from the House Members. But, Mr. Speaker, as one Member of the House, I emphatically state I cannot, and will not, place the freedom of any American citizen in jeopardy as in this case, when I know from the written report that some evidence that would be material in helping me to ascertain all the facts has been kept out of the report—for any reason whatsoever.

These three reasons, then, are basic and fundamental with us. In my words on May 17, 1946, I reasoned that this sort of necessary work to protect our Government should be more efficiently done. I reasoned that the FBI should be doing it on a full-time basis. They are trained to ferret out violators of law. I will only briefly again dwell on the fact that under the present procedure intolerances, petty jealousies, political hate, and personal opinion can have too much chance for play or control. Ours will only stay a democracy where freedom of speech and freedom of worship endure, regardless of race, creed, or color, if we protect it to the maximum by an eternal vigilance. In doing this it is fundamental and basic that wherever the civil rights and liberties of men are involved they be clearly defined and perpetuated by man-made laws, rather than the interpretations of different men who have not the mandate of written law defining their liberties to guide or control them.

Statement by the Honorable Guy M. Gillette, President of the American League for a Free Palestine

OF
HON. GORDON L. McDONOUGH
OF CALIFORNIA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Thursday, August 1, 1946

Mr. McDONOUGH. Mr. Speaker, under unanimous consent, I include in the Appendix of the RECORD the statement of the Honorable Guy M. Gillette, former United States Senator from Iowa, issued on July 23, 1946, just prior to his flight to Palestine on a special mission for the American League for a Free Palestine. Mr. Gillette has courageously exposed the basic causes which have given rise to the current violence in Palestine.

The American people built their Nation on the foundation stones of fundamental human liberties, after 8 years of bitter war, and have traditionally and historically taken a deep and supporting interest in other peoples throughout the world seeking similar essentials of human happiness. This interest applies particularly in the case of the Hebrew people.

In Palestine, our American people see a nation where independence was recognized by a great community of nations more than one-quarter of a century ago. They see an unhappy new nation forced into a straitjacket of political restrictions wholly incompatible in their conception of both human and national rights and in strong contravention of the established authority and international purpose. The unsettled state of affairs in Palestine with the sporadic but frequent outbreaks of violence has its origin in conditions which Americans have a right and an obligation to know.

We read of raids by British authorities on hidden caches of arms throughout Palestine, of the destruction of these arms and the wholesale arrests of thousands of Hebrew Palestine citizens. We recall the days in our own history, when other British troops marched to Lexington and Concord to destroy other military supplies and ammunition, and the shots that got down British soldiers on the retreat to Boston, and which were said to have been heard around the world. We are told that if Palestine were to be reopened to free admission of Hebrew immigrants in any number, that the Arab citizens would precipitate a reign of terror. Therefore we were informed that British military strength must be maintained and increased to insure against such disturbances by disarming not the Arab whom they say would resent the new immigrants, but the Hebrew citizens who are pleading and praying with all their strength for the admission of these additional Hebrews.

We read that no search is made for Arab terrorist groups or Arab caches of arms, but new raids, new curfews, new arrests, and new restrictions are put into effect against the Hebrews. Americans want to know the reasons for these facts. No one can deplore or abhor more than the average American the shedding of one unnecessary drop of human blood or the needless sacrifice of one human life. The death by bombing of British soldiers in Jerusalem, the murder of 6,000,000 Jews in Europe, the slaughter of Polish Jews in Kielce—all these shock our sense of human decency and bring questions as to the thickness of our veneer of human civilization. We have not only the right, but the duty of inquiry into the genesis and causes of these acts.

We know that most Americans from the dawn of history have thought no price too high to be paid for liberty. We know that the citizens of the Hebrew nation are not so fatuous as to seek war with the British Empire. We know that they have not revolted, and are not now revolting against the legal administration of British authority and the advisory and responsible agents under the League of Nations mandate. There must be something deep that impels these free people to acts of violence. There is just ground for conclusion that it is the usurpation or destruction of authority that has touched off the current violence.

The explosion at British headquarters in Jerusalem didn't happen in a vacuum. It is one incident in a long chain of events which began when Britain scrapped her sacred trusteeship and issued the white paper in 1939. It is part of a sequence of events which conclude the slaughter of 6,000,000 innocent Hebrews in Europe, the barring by Great Britain of access to Palestine at a time when Hitler was exterminating the Hebrews of Europe; it is an attempt to blast through to reach the conscience of the world, so that pogroms in Poland can be avoided by the prior transfer of the Hebrew people to Palestine.

The same hand which writes British policy on Palestine is directly responsible for the detonating of a bomb at British headquarters at the King David Hotel. Let us not forget that this is the headquarters of the military occupational forces of Palestine, the nerve center for a regime which uses concentration camps, suppression, terror, and torture, a regime which shoots unarmed civilians, and exiles and imprisons without trial. We deplore the insanity of the Attlee-Bevin Government which has actively promoted a situation of physical violence in Palestine, and has placed innocent British civil servants in the grim role of executors of this policy. It is inhuman for Great Britain to drive the Hebrew people to a point where they have no recourse but arms; and it is equally inhuman of the British Government to take thousands of British Tommies and put them into the position of suppressors.

It has been positively demonstrated that Hebrews and Arabs can and will work together to build a better Palestine. The considered decision of all civilized nations of the world is that the Hebrew nation is entitled to normal restoration in its Palestinian homeland. It has also been established that the forces thwarting this restoration are the forces of anti-Semitism and imperialism. If Mr. Attlee wishes to follow a course of sanity, let him turn to democracy, and recognize the legal and human rights of the Hebrew nation.

Let the colonial office cease intriguing with Arab Fascists and puppet kings, and let Great Britain abide by the sacred trust which was placed in her when the League of Nations invested her with the mandate for Palestine.

It is 1946 in America; it is 1776 in Palestine. Americans who won their own freedom from despotism cannot believe that once more the only course open to the British Government is the course which means inevitable strife. We cannot believe that there is no alternative offered the British Government but the course laid down by Adolf Hitler.

Nobody Checks Government Physical Property

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. ALVIN F. WEICHEL
OF OHIO
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Thursday, August 1, 1946

Mr. WEICHEL. Mr. Speaker, hearings last week before the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries developed the fact that no independent agency or auditor of the Government makes a regular, periodic, or any other check whatsoever as to the physical property purchased by the Government.

After any agency, bureau, or department once secures physical property, no one in the Government, nor in the name of the Government, not even the Comptroller General, is authorized to check, examine, investigate, or otherwise periodically find out if any such agency, bureau, or department of the Government actually has the physical property in its possession, whether it is given away, destroyed, or in control of the Government.

There is no check of the physical property of any kind whatsoever, so that any agency, bureau, or department without fear of detection or exposure, can give away, destroy, or embezzle physical property belonging to the United States Government, no one has authority in law or otherwise to examine into the physical property transactions of any agency, bureau, or department. In other words there is no check, examination or investigation of the physical inventories, if any, of the billions of dollars of physical property purchased with the taxpayers' money.

This probably supports the various statements in the newspapers with reference to the waste and destruction of the physical property of the various departments of the Government. I have heard that the Navy deliberately took to sea a deck load of brand new shoes, had them soaked with water and then ordered them destroyed; that the Army recently destroyed untold thousands of dollars worth of athletic equipment which could have been very well used by the poor youngsters of this country; and that the Ordnance Department gave away hundreds of million of dollars worth of machinery.

I do not believe that the agencies, bureaus, and departments should have the absolute discretion of giving away, destroying, and passing on the embezzling of physical property, for there is no check of its operations.

I believe the people are entitled to a periodic check and inventory of the use of physical property, the same as the money transactions, as to whether the agency has the property, gave it away or permitted it to be embezzled.

I am including herewith a resolution whereby there will be a periodic audit and examination by the Comptroller General of the physical property now in the hands of the agencies, bureaus, and departments of the Government:

A bill to provide for examination and investigation of inventories of Government-owned property

Be it enacted, etc., That the General Accounting Office under the direction of the Comptroller General shall receive and examine inventories of property furnished as of June 30 for each fiscal year beginning in the year 1939 and thereafter, by every department, agency, and independent establishment of the United States, and by every corporation owned or controlled by the United States. Such inventories shall contain the following information: (a) the value of all property acquired or disposed of during the fiscal year; (b) the value of all property on hand as of June 30 with an allowance for depreciation of such property; and (c) such other information as the Comptroller General shall direct.

SEC. 2. The Comptroller General shall investigate (a) any matter relating to the acquisition or disposition of property by any department, agency, or independent establishment of the United States, and by every corporation owned or controlled by the United States, and (b) any other matter required to be stated in an inventory.

SEC. 3. The Comptroller General shall make a report to Congress at the beginning of each regular session relative to matters examined or investigated by him as provided in sections 1 and 2 with such recommendations for legislation as he shall deem advisable.

SEC. 4. The Comptroller General is authorized to use officers and employees under his jurisdiction for the performance of the duties provided in this act and to appoint and fix the compensation of such additional accountants, investigators, attorneys, officers, and employees as may be necessary without regard to the civil service laws or the Classification Act of 1923, as amended.

Federal Health Programs Will Provide More Efficient Federal Government—H. R. 2716 Is Passed by Congress

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. JENNINGS RANDOLPH
OF WEST VIRGINIA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Thursday, August 1, 1946

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, the Congress, in my opinion, made an extremely significant contribution to the efficiency of the Federal Government in enacting H. R. 2716, to provide health programs for Federal employees. This bill, which I first introduced in 1944 and which was also presented in 1945 by my distinguished colleague, Senator DOWNEY, is more than ever needed now, when the accent is on sensible economy. It authorizes Federal agencies to establish programs under which they can gain the values which private corporations have obtained from the greater health and efficiency of employees.

Industry has long since established the fact that on-the-job health programs more than pay for themselves in reduced absenteeism and increased production. The National Association of Manufacturers has reported that the installation of medical and health programs in 234 industrial establishments resulted in a 30-percent reduction in absences due to sickness.

NO MEDICAL OFFICER FOR 50,000 WORKERS

Many private employers, with even 1,000 workers or less, have found that it pays to have a medical officer in the organization. Yet in our own Federal service we have large departments with 10,000 or 50,000 or even more employees without a single medical officer available to plan for the conservation of employee health. Only a few Federal agencies have had legislative authority to set up the type of industrial health programs which the Federal Government has urged on private employers in order to conserve the well-being and productivity of workers.

Health services under the provisions of the legislation will be similar to those in private industry. Employees who become ill on the job will be given emergency treatment, including emergency dental care. The health unit will give a complete physical examination to all new workers before employment, and to permanent employees on request. The health unit will also refer employees to private physicians and dentists for the correction of physical defects and diseases. Preventive medicine will cover such services as chest X-rays for the early detection of tuberculosis. The program would include education on nutrition.

The building of adequate health programs will take time. A Federal agency setting out to provide health services under the act will first plan its work in consultation with the Public Health Service. The program must meet certain standards. Funds must then be obtained from the Congress and high-caliber personnel secured. It is likely that a number of programs will begin modestly and gradually be extended in scope and coverage. Results may not be evident at once, but they will be cumulative. This is the manner in which the health services in industry have developed.

SICK LEAVE SHOULD BE REDUCED

Proper health programs should net the same returns in Government as in private industry. The Congress has recognized the needs of the employees for sick leave and for disability payments, but so far it has done little to conserve the amount of sick leave used. Employees on the average now take at least 7 days a year in sick leave. This compares favorably with illness records of business and industrial concerns which do not have health programs. But I repeat that adequate medical programs have reduced absence because of illness by nearly one-third. If the average of 7 days' sick leave were reduced to 6 days, it is estimated that there would be a saving on the basis of the present pay roll of 2,325,000 man-days per year, or the equivalent of about 9,000 full-time workers. If the average were further cut to 5 days, the saving would amount to approximately 4,650,000 man-days, or the equivalent of about 18,000 full-time employees.

This reduction in absences because of sickness is accomplished by: First, preventing the spread of contagious diseases; second, preventing major illness by spotting conditions which, if uncorrected, may cause serious trouble later; and, third, reducing the duration of illness through early medical care or shortening the time spent on the treatment of minor illnesses through providing attention at the place of work. Every day of sick leave saved is a day of production gained for the Government.

The Government can also save on another expense caused by employee illness and accident. Disability payments have risen greatly. The Federal retirement system includes payments to those who become disabled during their Federal employment. This splendid provision is an investment in employee security, but so far little has been done to conserve this investment by preventing avoidable disability. There are now more than 23,000 employees on the disability rolls at a total cost of more than $18,000,000 a year. Of these, 3,923 individuals were added in the fiscal year 1945. The average length of service in the Federal Government of these disability annuitants is 20.9, while the average service of all annuitants on the annuity rolls is 27 years. The average age of all annuitants on the rolls is 68.1, but the average of disability annuitants is 60.2. We have an example of the Government setting up a splendid retirement program for its workers, but failing to protect the fund through reasonable medical-care arrangements.

DISABILITY PAYMENT SAVINGS TO RESULT

We know that cars last longer when they are regularly inspected and repaired. It is the same with human beings. Impairments which may become chronic can be taken care of when normal industrial-health facilities are available. A reduction of 10 percent in disability payments would save the Government, and thus the taxpayers, almost $2,000,000 a year.

Adequate health and medical services within the various agencies will also contribute to the effective placement and utilization of the physically handicapped, including disabled veterans. The Federal Government is employing such persons in increasing numbers. In recent months, thousands of disabled veterans have been employed. Both in initial placement and in promotions, intelligent professional advice is needed regarding the kind of job which can be effectively performed by a person with a given handicap.

I have cited some of the ways in which health programs will aid Federal agencies in getting their jobs done. On-the-job health services will also curtail the waste due to loss of efficiency when workers are ailing or under par. It is not enough for workers to be physically present—they must be fit to do their jobs. The most productive worker normally abounds in health and energy. If employees are ill and cannot work, we pay them sick leave. If they are half sick, half on the job, the amount of productive work suffers. Certainly one of the best ways to cut expense is to increase the effectiveness of workers.

In addition to the economic gains to be expected from on-the-job-health programs, there will be heightened morale among workers who see that their employer is providing for their health and well-being. An enlightened employer will count as a large gain the avoidance of needless suffering to the individuals in its service.

BUSINESS LEADERS SUPPORT BILL

I speak confidently of the results to be expected because they have been thoroughly examined and explored in the hearings, in the debate, and in the studies on which the legislation has been based. The new act is no sudden happening. I introduced the measure on June 1, 1944, and was privileged to chair the subcommittee of the House Civil Service Committee which went thoroughly into the subject. At the hearings in August 1944, outstanding leaders in the industrial medical field testified in favor of the bill, including representatives of the American Medical Association, the National Association of Manufacturers, the National Safety Council, and individual private companies such as the Metropolitan Life Insurance Co., General Motors Corp., and Eastman Kodak Corp. The executive branch presented testimony which revealed the careful analysis which had been made of the existing need and of the steps required to provide and maintain modern industrial health services. The proposal had the full support of the employee unions and the veterans' groups. The Civil Service Committees of both the Senate and of the House gave careful consideration to the need and to the provisions of the bill. Finally, both Houses of Congress have approved this constructive measure. It is another foundation stone in building an effective and economical civil service.

SAFETY LEGISLATION IS NEEDED

A further foundation stone needs to be laid by the next Congress. It is my intention, if reelected to the Eightieth Congress, to introduce legislation on safety in the Federal Government. In the course of their official duties, during 1945, 373 Federal employees were killed, and 63,005 suffered lost-time accidents. Nearly 4,000,000 man-days of work were lost, and $13,686,109 was paid out in direct claims. Counting indirect expense, accidents in the Federal service cost at least $30,000,000 in 1945—and they are continuing right now at the rate of $26 a minute. Most of these accidents are preventable. The Federal frequency rate is 9.8, in contrast to 3.3 for the Bell Telephone System, 3.9 for the steel-producing operations of United States Steel, 4.1 for General Motors, and 1.4 for Du Pont. The Federal Government can and should do much better on safety. The executive branch has renewed its efforts to reduce accidents. I am convinced, however, that legislative action is necessary and should be taken promptly. This waste of human lives and funds must stop.

Congressional Reorganization Bill

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. EVERETT M. DIRKSEN
OF ILLINOIS
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Thursday, August 1, 1946

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following articles and editorials on the subject of the legislative reorganization bill:

[From the Baltimore, (Md.) Sun of July 29, 1946]

THE CONGRESS ROLLS UP ITS SLEEVES FOR STERNER TRIALS

The congressional reorganization bill which the Houses have now sent to the White House is a good one. It does not go as far as perfectionists could ask, but it goes far. It is important for the immediate cures which it prescribes and it is important in a larger way as it sharpens Congress for new trials of representative Government.

Take the immediate improvements first. Congress has maintained a multiplicity of chaotic and overlapping committee assignments. The new bill cuts the Senate committees from 33 to 15 and the House committees from 48 to 19.

This step involves the partition of Congress' work into rationalized and organic fields. It means that each Member of both Houses will receive committee assignments of importance. Work done by one of these committees will be done for good, not duplicated elsewhere. The plan should ease the distribution of Members among the committees according to their powers and interests. In addition to the conservation of energies thus secured, the Members are to have more office help.

Having in these ways reorganized and conserved their energies for maximum effectiveness, the two Houses also reassert historic authorities. Representative government grew up in the Anglo-American past because men feared exclusive executive control of the purse. Under the reorganization plan, Congress reaches out for a firmer and more informed control of the national expenditures. Provision is made for close collaboration between the appropriation and the revenue-raising committees of the two Houses. Deficit financing is brought more firmly under legislative control.

The proliferation of Government activities has resulted in a great rash of administrative agencies. These agencies have escaped further and further from congressional control. One of the main purposes of the new committee organization is to facilitate a continuous supervision by the committees of the administrative agencies which operate in the several committee fields.

But all these details merge in one overriding purpose: The Members of Congress have seen the older constitutionalism enter a "highly deliquescent state," to use Professor Corwin's phrase. They know that in this new concept of government Congress becomes more than ever the single place where the nuanced and composite view of the whole people in all its manifold phases and segments is most faithfully mirrored and represented. To continue this kind of representation against the formidable obstacles that rise alway higher against it will be an exacting job. In reorganizing itself to meet that task Congress has, so to speak, taken off its coat and rolled up its sleeves.

CONGRESS REORGANIZES ITSELF

The important congressional reorganization bill, which is was feared might be lost in the shuffle in the closing days of this session, came through to adoption in very good shape. Passed by the Senate on June 11, it floundered around in the House for weeks; but the lower branch approved it on Thursday, with some changes, and the Senate's acceptance of the amended version yesterday sent the legislation to President Truman for his signature.

This bill, the product of careful study for more than a year by a joint congressional committee headed by Senator LA FOLLETTE, of Wisconsin, and Representative MONRONEY, of Oklahoma, overhauls the antiquated organization, procedure and rules of Congress. It provides for the long-sought streamlining of the legislative machinery.

As finally passed, the bill is not so good in some respects as the original Senate measure. But the most important provisions were retained. The most significant reform is the reduction of the number of standing committees from 33 to 15 in the Senate and from 48 to 19 in the House. The unwieldy committee structure has been one of the chief draw-backs to efficient procedure.

Another important provision will tighten congressional fiscal controls by requiring open hearings on all appropriation bills, affording fuller opportunity for study of committee hearings and reports, and requiring estimates of receipts and expenditures for the ensuing year, with the stipulation that appropriations could not exceed estimated revenues unless a concurrent resolution authorizing the deficit was adopted.

The measure increases congressional salaries, which is justified in view of the fact that the pay of the Members has remained unchanged for 21 years, while living costs and their special expenses have increased. The Senate version provided an increase from $10,000 to $15,000 a year, but the House reduced it to $12,500, plus a $2,500 expense allowance previously authorized by that body. The difference is largely a quibble, since the two versions add up to the same thing—except that the $2,500 expense allowance is tax-free, whereas it would not be if it were counted as salary. We preferred a flat figure of $12,500 for Members of both branches, but the higher salary has now been adopted, and the bill as a whole is too good to quibble over this.

It is regrettable that the House eliminated the proposed $8,000-a-year administrative assistant for each Member, to help look after requests from constituents, and the like, something which would have enabled Senators and Representatives to devote their time more fully to legislation.

On the whole, however, Congress has done a good job of reorganizing itself. This is far-reaching legislation.

[From the Christian Science Monitor, Boston, Mass., of July 27, 1946]

REFORM BEGETS REFORM

The House did not do as well with the congressional reorganization bill as did the Senate—although better than many realistic Washington observers had expected. Still, the Senate, eager to adjourn, accepted the House bill in toto. Just how far short of doing the job the bill falls is best seen by recalling what has needed to be done.

First and foremost, Congress and the Executive very much need to be drawn closer together, both in the making of policy and in sharing responsibility for its implementation. Congress itself needs to make sure that more of its acts represent party reponsibility and a national approach, and that fewer of them are product of vote-trading between local and special interests.

Second, and by no means unrelated, Congress has needed to bring its antique organization and procedures up to the demands of present-day legislative loads.

To achieve the first pair of objectives, the La Follette-Monroney bill provided for a majority party "legislative cabinet," with which the President would take counsel. and within Congress standing policy committees of each party to replace the old caucuses. These the House rejected.

The House did, however, go along in approving the set-up designed to hold appropriations in balance with revenue. And it also went the Senate one better in salary raising, which, despite the temptation to cynical comment, we believe will in the long run bring more able men to Congress.

Toward the second objective—legislative efficiency—the House made the significant contribution of cutting its standing committees from 48 to 19. But even the authors of the bill had felt it futile to include sections which would have abolished three of the worst among congressional institutions, the filibuster, the seniority rule, and the autocratic power of the House Rules Committee.

However, it should not be forgotten that reform begets reform. To whatever degree these changes break old shackles and lift its average of ability, to that degree Congress will be better able to remedy the defects remaining.

[From the Washington (D. C.) Times-Herald of July 27, 1946]

THE LABORER AND HIS HIRE

We think it is a fine idea that the boys in Congress have voted themselves a raise. Of course, they had to insert a little trick into it. Instead of the straight $15,000 a year the Senate favored, the joint conference agreed on $12,500 with a $2,500 nonaccountable, tax-free expense account.

THEY DO HAVE SOME LEGITIMATE EXPENSES

Although the final version gives an added pay boost in view of the tax saving, it doesn't make much difference, and we will go along with the axiom that the laborer is worthy of his hire. After all, the Congressman does have some legitimate expenses, what with keeping up two homes and taking constituents sightseeing and all that sort of stuff.

This is the first time since 1925 that our Congress has brought itself up to the point of actually voting itself a raise. (The pay was boosted then from $7,500 to $10,000.) Presumably, the Members felt that the voters might think poorly of them for attempting to get another foot into the public trough. But things are bad all over, now, what with the OPA confusion and strikes and unrest among the hired help. Lots of other people have had raises.

President Truman months ago urged Congress to hoist itself up to $20,000 a year. The Senate skirted skittishly around this and made several embarrassed sallies before it got its courage up to $15,000 worth.

SOME OF THOSE WHO VOTED WILL NOT BENEFIT

Previous attempts to boost the pay of Congress had always been quickly shushed. Somebody might be listening and start raising the old ned about greedy public servants. Oddly enough, or perhaps naturally enough, there have been no loud screams over the boldness of the lawmakers this time. The public is either numb or thinks they deserve what they have voted themselves.

The House and Senate bills differed in so many respects they had to go to a joint committee for fittings and alterations. Both Houses yesterday adopted the committee's compromises. Many of the boys who voted for the raises will not benefit by them themselves. Their successors will be the lucky ones. This makes the outgoing Members look even more honest and deserving.

Along with the pay raises the House approved the Senate's plan for fixing things up so Congressmen can qualify for entry into the Federal retirement and pension system. We have long felt that this was a desirable move.

The pay raise, coupled with a possibility of a pension, will attract a better type of character in public service. This applies not only to Congress but to the higher echelons of most Government departments. Mr. Truman has been complaining that he can't get good men to help him because the pay is too low. That feeling runs through the whole Government structure.

And if the pay raise will get better men into Congress, the pension should also encourage the retirement of others who have outlived their usefulness.

STANDING COMMITTEES WILL BE REDUCED

Congress in the same reorganization bill will be doing some streamlining. The House has agreed to cut down its standing committees from 48 to 19, while the Senate is reducing its corresponding little bands from 33 to 15. This is going to cause some suffering among veteran Congressmen who depend heavily on the seniority system to put them into important committee chairs, but it will make a vast improvement in the legislative branch. The physical machinery and the procedure of the Congress will be much more efficient, and their weakness in these days of continuous crises has been only too evident.

Feeling fairly good about their generosity to themselves, and still a little surprised that no citizens had appeared on the steps of the Capitol demanding a lynching, Members of both Houses yesterday acted with unusual speed in voting on the measure and sending it to the President, who is expected to approve it. The salary and other changes which it embodies will go into effect with the Eightieth Congress, meeting in January.

We are pleased to be able to approve the action, since we believe that anything is commendable which will modernize congressional procedure and bring into Congress the highest type of representation for the people.

[From the Washington (D. C.) News of July 26, 1946]

LA FOLLETTE-MONRONEY TRIUMPH

When history is written a few hundred years hence, of the rise and decline of the American Republic, the outstanding event of the Seventy-ninth Congress, in our opinion, will be passage of the La Follette-Monroney bill.

This is the first legislation in our generation designed to recapture for the legislative branch of government the power and responsibility outlined for it in the Constitution, which is our original charter of Government.

Over the decades the authority and prestige of the law-making branch have been whittled away by the relentless encroachments of the ever-expanding executive department, so much so that even the power of the purse has been reduced to a figment of tradition.

The La Follette-Monroney bill, by stipulating for Members of Congress salaries and retirement more in line with what a free market offers for such talent, by setting up a more efficient committee system and providing more expert research and counsel for our lawmakers, and more effective budgetary controls, will prolong our years of self-government.

And the small additional costs should be saved many times over in reducing the billions wasted in the executive branch.

BOB LA FOLLETTE, of Wisconsin, and MIKE MONRONEY, of Oklahoma, have earned a great place in American history.

Housing for Veterans

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. CHARLES W. VURSELL

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, August 1, 1946

Mr. VURSELL. Mr. Speaker, with leave to extend my remarks in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, I am including a copy of a letter received by me from the director, national legislative service, Veterans of Foreign Wars of the United States, asking that the Congress, through a concurrent resolution, set up at once a committee to investigate the lack of housing for veterans.

I have this day introduced such a resolution.

VETERANS OF FOREIGN WARS OF THE UNITED STATES,
NATIONAL LEGISLATIVE SERVICE,
Washington, D. C., July 29, 1946.

The Honorable SAM RAYBURN,
Speaker, House of Representatives,
United States Capitol Building,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. SPEAKER: Based on complaints received, reports and surveys made by individuals and units of our organization, there is much evidence to the effect that the veterans' emergency housing program, implemented by Federal legislation, has bogged down and failed utterly in its objective to produce homes for veterans. The reasons for the failure of the program are highly conflicting and should be flushed out into the open and determined by competent authority.

The national legislative committee of the Veterans of Foreign Wars, after giving consideration to the failure of the veterans' housing program and the conflicting reasons, has asked this office to petition the Congress to create a bipartisan joint committee to make an exhaustive investigation into and a report on the reasons for the failure of veterans' emergency housing program, and its implementing legislation, the Patman bill, to launch an adequate construction program of housing for veterans.

I am, therefore, requesting that immediate consideration prior to adjournment be given by the Senate and House of Representatives to the creation of a bipartisan joint committee of Congress, with adequate funds and authority, to conduct a complete and searching investigation into the reasons for the failure of the veterans' emergency housing program to provide homes for veterans.

Respectfully yours,

OMAR B. KETCHUM,
Director, National Legislative Service.

A Descriptive Analysis of the Wheeler-Reed Railroad Reorganization Bill

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. MARTIN GORSKI

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, August 1, 1946

Mr. GORSKI. Mr. Speaker, under unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include a descriptive analysis of the Wheeler-Reed bill—conference report No. 2691—which appeared in the Wall Street Journal of Monday, July 29, 1946:

CONFEREES AGREE ON NEW BANKRUPTCY BILL BASED ON WHEELER-REED PROPOSALS—HOUSE MAY VOTE TODAY

WASHINGTON.—Legislation to authorize voluntary reorganization of major railroads currently involved in bankruptcy proceedings awaits final action by Congress this week.

Dissimilarities in versions of this legislation as passed by the Senate and by the House were ironed out during hastly negotiations Saturday. A conference report on a bill substituted for both measures was dropped in the hopper of the House Saturday night.

All that stands in the way of approval by Congress is the possibility that a quorum of the House will be unavailable this week. Opposition to the legislation, considering the wide margin by which the House bill, written by Representative CHAUNCEY REED (Republican, Illinois) was passed, is not believed strong enough to block passage of the compromise bill.

However, with Congress slated to adjourn at the end of this week, many House Members left for home. If the House leaders are unable to muster a quorum, any vote passing the reorganization legislation could be invalidated on a point that a quorum of the House was not present.

For this reason, backers of the legislation will call the measure up for action today, since the likelihood of obtaining a quorum will lessen each day this week.

SENATE APPROVAL EXPECTED

Once House approval is obtained, it is expected that Senate passage will follow as a matter of course. Principal opponent of the legislation in the Senate had been Senator JOHNSON, Democrat, Colorado, who based his objection on the inclusion in the bills of the Denver & Rio Grande Western Railroad. This road has been excluded from the compromise bill, and Senator JOHNSON's support is expected.

Compromise of difference between the Wheeler bill and the Reed bill actually began Friday night, when an unofficial conference committee met to work out an unofficial draft of a compromise bill. The five House conferees, led by Representative HOBBS, Democrat, Alabama, and Representative REED, met with Senator REED, Republican, Kansas, coauthor of the Wheeler bill, and Senator TUNNELL, Democrat, Delaware, and a tentative conference report was drafted.

On Saturday there were no regular sessions of the conferees, but the House proposal was submitted to the five Senate conferees and the disagreements noted. Individuals met off and on through the day after that with Representative REED providing the principal impetus. Early Saturday night, a conference report had been agreed upon by the 10 conferees.

Representative FRANCIS WALTER, Democrat, Pennsylvania, a member of the House Judiciary Committee and an opponent of reorganization legislation, made a point of order against the conference report, on the ground that conferees had been selected without regard to the conflicting opinions in the House. Representative WALTER asserted that he outranks two of the three Judiciary Committee members who were named as conferees.

Speaker RAYBURN, Democrat, Texas, ruled, however, that whatever merit the point of order had, it came too late. The Speaker said it should have been made when the conferees were appointed.

NEW, SEPARATE LAW PROPOSED

The form of the compromise bill differs from both the Wheeler and Reed bills in that it would be a new, separate law. The Wheeler bill would have amended the Interstate Commerce Act and the Reed bill would have amended the Bankruptcy Act.

As in both the Reed and Wheeler bills, the new bill does two things: First, it sets up a new procedure for financial readjustment of railroads, separate from section 77 of the Bankruptcy Act; second, it allows railroads which meet certain conditions to avail themselves of the new procedure even if they are already in receivership. Section 77 sets up full procedure for handling railroad reorganization plans in Federal courts.

The new procedure adopted in the compromise bill is most like that in the Wheeler bill, which in turn was basically a proposal of the Interstate Commerce Commission.

This procedure is a variation of the old McLaughlin Act which expired last year and which the Reed bill would have reenacted. The principal difference is that the Wheeler bill substituted the Interstate Commerce Commission for a three-judge district court as the principal arbiter in framing a reorganization plan. The compromise bill retains the ICC as arbiter, but provides for judicial review and for appeal to higher courts from decisions of the Commission or from the circuit court of appeals.

TO AID IN MEETING FIXED CHARGES

This procedure is aimed at enabling railroads to postpone or scale down fixed charges which are about to mature and which a railroad knows in advance it will be unable to meet.

The application of the new procedure to roads already in bankruptcy is made in the compromise bill by applying both the Reed and Wheeler standards. Thus, a railroad to come under the provisions of the proposed law must show both earnings equal to fixed charges for the 7-year period from 1937 to 1945 inclusive and gross operating revenues in excess of $50,000,000 for any of the calendar years 1942 to 1944.

This double standard, it is anticipated, will rule out smaller roads which might accidentally have come under the 7-year standard. The major roads, however, would fit either standard. Principal of these are the Missouri Pacific, New Haven, Frisco, Cotton Belt and Rock Island.

FOLLOWS ICC PROPOSALS

The conference report declared that the Interstate Commerce Commission variation of the old McLaughlin Act provided means "of altering carriers' obligations with fairness to the owners of those obligations, and in order to avoid the drains, wastes and losses consequent upon drastic reorganizations. This underlying principle was in effect reaffirmed by the House when it passed the amendment. The conference substitute adheres to this plan."

The difference between the method of the McLaughlin Act and that of the Commission variation is primarily one of lodging greater power in the ICC. Under the McLaughlin Act, chapter XV of the Bankruptcy Act, the Commission was not expressly charged with the duty of considering proposed alterations or modifications as in substance a reorganization or readjustment plan. Under the Commission proposal as adopted substantially in the compromise bill the Commission is charged with such duties.

Under chapter XV the principal proceeding was conducted in court. Under the compromise bill the principal proceeding is before the Commission. The court is called on only for purposes of review.

The conference report states that this method of financial readjustment "had had the support of leaders of life insurance companies, banks, and the railroad industry, as well as of the Commission and also of representatives of railroad labor organizations."

With respect to the application of the standards to roads now in proceedings under section 77 of the Bankruptcy Act, the 7-year earnings standard of the House bill has been changed so as to recognize actual earnings and not limit the standard merely to the reported earnings.

ACTUAL, REPORTED EARNINGS MAY DIFFER

Under the tax laws there were large bookkeeping deductions from earnings in order to effect tax savings, according to the conference report, with such bookkeeping authorized by statute and used by corporations in both the industrial and railroad fields. The Interstate Commerce Commission has on a number of occasions called attention to the fact that there is a difference between reported earnings and actual earnings, the conference report states.

The conference substitute bill has recognized the circumstance thus pointed out by the Commission. In this and other respects the earnings figures included in the 7-year standard are stated somewhat differently in the conference amendment from the form of their statement in the Reed bill, the report adds.

The substitute bill also adds the requirement that a road must have recorded gross operating revenues in excess of $50,000,000 for any one of the calendar years 1942–44.

A subsidiary or an affiliated road which made less than the $50,000,000 required could apply provisions of the bill if the parent company is covered by terms of the bill and has made $50,000,000 in gross operating revenues during the period.

During an 18-month period provided for effecting voluntary reorganization and at the end of which the carrier would file a plan of adjustment with the Commission, the properties would be retained in the custody of the court and subject to its supervision.

ALLOWS SURPLUS LIQUID RESOURCES USE

The substitute bill also would allow railroads in the hands of courts under section 77 to use surplus liquid resources for the retirement of debt through purchase, discount, and otherwise. Provision is also made for the proposal of alteration or modification of obligations of carriers by the Commission itself in the event that the plan proposed by the carrier has not gone into effect.

Independent reexamination and review by the courts of any plans which might be issued by the Commission also is provided by the compromise bill.

Also included in the conference measure is a provision protecting reorganizations against certain taxes. The report declares that this is customary practice since no true profit is realized on the exchange of securities, and yet without such a protective provision, taxes might be assessable because it might be held that there is an apparent though not an actual profit.

The section known as the Johnson amendment to the Wheeler bill, to exempt the Denver & Rio Grande Western Railroad from the legislation, was changed in the conference substitute to provide exemption for any road that is more than 95 percent of the voting stock owned or controlled by another railroad corporation not a debtor in the same proceeding or by a corporation owning or controlling more than 95 percent of the outstanding voting stock of the corporation.

The conference substitute also provides for the right of appeal to the Supreme Court from the circuit court of appeals on plans issued by the Commission under the bill.

Finally, carriers still in the jurisdiction of the United States courts in whose cases reorganization securities already have been issued under a reorganization plan are taken care of by providing that the carrier, with the approval of the Commission, can amend the plan to the extent of issuing options or warrants to take care of those security holders who would otherwise be wiped out.

Voting Record of Representative Jennings Randolph, of West Virginia, on Measures Pertaining to Servicemen, Servicewomen, Veterans and Their Families

OF

HON. JENNINGS RANDOLPH

OF WEST VIRGINIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, August 1, 1946

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, in order that the constituents I represent in the Second District of West Virginia, especially veterans and their families, may have complete and factual information as to my 100-percent cooperation on legislation affecting them, I have compiled my voting record on every measure since 1940. It follows:

VOTING RECORD OF JENNINGS RANDOLPH ON MEASURES PERTAINING TO VETERANS AND THEIR DEPENDENTS

(77th Cong., 2d sess. (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, vol. 88))

S. 2025. Pay Readjustment Act, 1942:

On amendment to raise the pay of enlisted men of the sixth grade from $48 to $54 and those in the seventh grade from $42 to $50, page 4145 (May 13, 1942); vote, yea.

On passage, page 4146 (May 13, 1942); vote, yea.

On motion to recommit with instructions that House insist on base pay of $50 a month, page 4670 (May 27, 1942); vote, yea.

On motion to recommit conference report with instructions as to the provisions for certain retired Army officers, page 5098 (June 10, 1942); vote, nay.

On agreeing to conference report, page 5099 (June 10, 1942); vote, yea.

(78th Cong., 1st sess. (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, vol. 89))

House Joint Resolution 159. Emergency maternity and infant care for wives of enlisted men in the armed forces: On passage, page 7770 (September 22, 1943); vote, yea.

S. 1279. Liberalizes family allowances for servicemen's dependents: On passage, page 8466 (October 18, 1943); vote, yea.

H. R. 3377. Increases rate of pension of World War veterans: On passage, page 9638 (November 17, 1943); vote, yea.

(78th Cong., 2d sess. (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, vol. 90))

S. 1543. Mustering-out payment bill, 1944:

On passage, page 427 (January 19, 1944); vote, yea.

On agreeing to conference report, page 750 (January 26, 1944); vote, yea.

H. R. 4115. Veterans' preference in Federal civil service: On motion to suspend rules and pass the bill, page 3506 (April 17, 1944); vote, yea.

S. 1767. GI bill of rights:

On passage, page 4677 (May 18, 1944); vote, yea.

On agreeing to conference report, page 5853 (June 13, 1944); vote, yea.

(79th Cong., 2d sess. (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD))

March 7, 1946:

H. R. 4761. Housing stabilization:

On motion to recommit, page 2000; vote, pair against.

On passage, page 2001; vote, general pair.

March 14, 1946:

H. R. 5455. Authorizes $250,000,000 for additional housing units for veterans: On passage, page 2282; vote, general pair.

March 26, 1946:

House Joint Resolution 328. Makes an additional appropriation of $253,727,000 for veterans' housing: On passage, page 2634; vote, yea.

May 9, 1946:

H. R. 4761. Veterans' Emergency Housing Act, 1946: On motion to instruct the conferees to agree to the Senate amendment with an amendment providing $400,000,000 instead of $600,000,000 for subsidy payments in the production of housing materials, page 4765; vote, yea.

May 13, 1946:

H. R. 4761. Veterans' Emergency Housing Act of 1946: On agreeing to conference report, page 4939; vote, yea.

June 11, 1946:

H. R. 4051. Accumulated leave for enlisted personnel: On passage, page 6665; vote, yea.

Mr. Speaker, the two votes in March, on which I am not recorded, were taken when I was absent from Washington on official governmental business, and a necessary assignment. I favored the passage of this meritorious legislation, to provide Federal housing aid to veterans, as shown by my vote May 13, 1946, in favor of H. R. 4761, Veterans' Emergency Housing Act.

Mrs. Luce for Senator

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. LEON H. GAVIN
OF PENNSYLVANIA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Thursday, August 1, 1946

Mr. GAVIN. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following editorial from the Bridgeport Post of July 30, 1946:

MRS. LUCE FOR SENATOR

Virtually all well-informed people in the State now accept Governor Baldwin's decision to retire as final. The Governor has gone forward with plans for his future life as an insurance executive despite all of the "draft Baldwin" movements which have sprung up in various parts of the State.

If the Governor would run, he could have the next nomination for United States Senator for the taking. But since he will not run, the Republican Party must act promptly to secure a winning candidate.

Since most Republicans, including both the topflight leadership and the rank and file know who the candidate should be, there would seem to be little difficulty in this respect.

But the real difficulty lies in the fact that those who by word of mouth are busily engaged in nominating CLARE BOOTHE LUCE for Senator have not asked the lady herself.

Six months ago Mrs. LUCE announced her decision to retire from public life at the conclusion of her present term as Representative from the Fourth Congressional District. In the elapsed time, perhaps because her announced retirement brought the issue clearly before people's minds, there has been a sudden growth in public appreciation of the nature and extent of her services.

While there is a many-sided scramble for the Republican nomination for governor the senatorial nomination seems to be conceded to Mrs. LUCE by acclamation. In the senatorial field her proven qualities both as a campaigner and a seasoned Member of Congress have made it a case of, "Mrs. LUCE first and the rest nowhere."

But the fact remains that the lady from Fairfield County has given no indication of a change of mind on the question of her retirement. Mrs. LUCE has not been seeking senatorial honors. She must be drafted. If the Republicans fail to take the necessary moves to this end or to make their arguments sufficiently convincing, they will lose the chance of a lifetime.

As Mrs. LUCE nears the end of her congressional service, she can think with some satisfaction that her speech on the atomic control law, delivered a few days ago, is now regarded in Congress as the definitive discussion of that subject.

Those who know her working habits will hardly be surprised at this. Her speech represented weeks of preparation during which she had consulted the recognized experts on atomic energy, studied all the available scientific reports, and digested the voluminous testimony before the House Military Affairs Committee of which she is a member.

Those who consider her fortunate in having a clear and logical mind and a happy faculty of expressing her thoughts in crisp, understandable language, should not overlook the hard preparatory work which she habitually gives to her discussion of public affairs.

At the moment when Congress and the Nation were ringing with praises of her last important speech as a House Member, she achieved the somewhat paradoxical triumph of getting recognition for her first speech as well. Four years ago she took the floor of the House to point out the folly and danger of the "freedom of the air policy" which was then proposed for this country. That speech was attacked and derided at the time it was made, by those who, unlike Mrs. LUCE, did not take the trouble to inform themselves of the facts before they jumped to a conclusion. Today the State Department has confirmed every point in Mrs. LUCE's speech of 4 years ago, has abrogated the agreements which were originally made on the basis of the mistaken policy which Mrs. LUCE condemned, and has proclaimed that the policy which she advocated in 1942 is the only safe policy for this Nation to pursue.

In brief, she was 4 years ahead of the policy makers in this respect, another characteristic not surprising to those who follow her work closely.

The brilliant Representative from the Fourth Congressional District has been too busy in Congress to have any time for playing politics in Connecticut. The Republican Party needs her candidacy and both State and Nation need her services. She should be persuaded to take the nomination and we hope that the persuasion will be effective.

Time To Get Our Troops Out of China for Sake of Peace and a United Democratic Government

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. HUGH DE LACY
OF WASHINGTON
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Thursday, August 1, 1946

Mr. DE LACY. Mr. Speaker, under the leave granted me, I should like to call the attention of the House to the statements of two great world figures on the present civil war in China, which, I am sorry to state, we seem to be playing a major role.

One of these, Madame Sun Yat-sen, the revered widow of the founder of the Chinese Republic, enjoys a public status and position in the hearts of the Chinese people unequalled by anyone. The other, an American, is Brig. Gen. Evans F. Carlson, of the United States Marine Corps, recently retired from active duty as a result of wounds suffered in the invasion of Saipan. A veteran of many years service with the Marine Corps in China and one of America's greatest experts on that country, he served as an official Marine Corps observer with the Chinese Communist armies and then borrowing their slogan of "Gung-ho" went on to form the famous Marine Raider Battalions which under the name of Carlson's Raiders served so heroically against our enemies in the Pacific. General Carlson with Paul Robeson is now serving as cochairman of the National Committee to Win the Peace of which I and other Members of the House have the honor of being sponsors.

[From the New York Times of July 23, 1946]

MADAME SUN ASKS BAN ON OUR AID TO CHINA—WIDOW OF REPUBLIC'S FOUNDER SEES PLOT FOR WAR BETWEEN US AND SOVIET UNION

SHANGHAI, July 22.—Madame Sun Yat-sen, widow of the man who founded the Chinese Republic, said today that American and Chinese reactionaries were fanning the flames of civil war in China, hoping to bring the United States and Russia into armed conflict.

Madame Sun, who is the sister-in-law of Generalissimo Chiang Kai-shek, President of the Chinese Republic, broke a 2-year political silence to ask the United States to withdraw its forces from China and to make no loans to a government that is not reorganized and truly representative.

Her statement evidently was designed to stress a plea to the American people by 56 Chinese educators, liberals, industrialists, and professional leaders that no more aid be given to the Central Government, which, they said, was permeated with the forces of reaction.

This plea was addressed to the American people through Secretary of States James F. Byrnes, the chairman of congressional foreign relations committees, and labor leaders, and publishers of the United States. It said the shooting already had started and that whether China had a devastating civil war was almost entirely up to the United States.

CIVIL WAR STARTED

Madame Sun said that civil war "though undeclared, already had begun."

"Why do reactionaries inflame a war which they cannot win?" she said. "Because they hope civil conflict in China will incite war between America and the USSR, and thus, at last, crush the Chinese Communists.

"The American people, who are our allies and have long been our friends, must be told that this is the road to disaster. They must be told that American reactionaries are teaming up with Chinese reactionaries, each encouraging the other.

"They must be told that the presence of United States armed forces on Chinese soil is not strengthening peace and order among the Chinese people. They must be warned that loans should be given only to a reorganized and truly representative government.

"They must be told that if America makes it plain she will not supply munitions or military equipment there will be no spreading Chinese war.

"I appeal to our American friends. I appeal to the major parties, to all other parties and groups, to form a coalition government at once."

MADAME SUN'S WARNING

Madame Sun said she had come out of political obscurity because she felt that this calamity must be stopped at the beginning.

"Every person with human feeling must speak out," she said. "The present crisis is not a question of who wins, the Kuomintang or the Communists. It is a question of the Chinese people, their unity, and livelihood.

"It cannot be settled by balancing armies or bargaining for this city and that territory. Not party rights, but human rights, hang in the balance."

She pointed out that the people continued to hope for results from the Central Government-Communist negotiations, with Gen. George C. Marshall as mediator, at Nanking.

"But after every patched up truce, the war flares out anew," she said. "Negotiations between the Kuomintang and the Communists cannot give the final answer. The answer must be given by the Chinese people."

She declared that the Kuomintang's tutelage is over and urged an immediate coalition government and the election of representatives by every party and political group in China.

The statement to the people of the United States by the 56 prominent Chinese said:

"The American people can decide whether China will suffer a devastating civil war. The shooting has already started. Whether it continues depends almost entirely upon you. If it does, you will be a participant."

It charged that Gen. George C. Marshall's attempts to obtain peace for the last 6 months have been "deliberately and systematically sabotaged by the forces of reaction * * * which hold positions of prominence in the leadership of the National Government."

"They have abandoned Sun Yat-sen's three principles and favor Fascist activities," the Chinese charged. Today they ban newspapers and arrest students.

"The United States apparently intends to issue her aid and assistance to the Chinese through the Nationalist Government, which is permeated with the forces of reaction. Under such circumstances we can hardly welcome this aid and assistance for we know it will be used to enlarge the civil war.

"Your lend-lease loans, surplus property, marines and military mission will lead China into a prolonged state of civil war, for the Chinese people will fight relentlessly for a termination of fascism in their country.

"We therefore ask you to prohibit your Government from destroying our chances for peace and democracy and for maintaining useful diplomatic, economic, and cultural relations with you."

Brig. Gen. Evans F. Carlson, USMC, retired, leader of the Marine Corps' famed Carlson's Raiders in the war against the Japanese, today, July 24, declared that "an all out civil war in China with the United States providing direct or indirect support to the Central Government can only constitute a powder keg for the precipitation of a third world war.

In commenting on a recent statement issued by Mme. Sun Yat-sen, General Carlson, a veteran of many years service in China where he served as an observer with Chinese guerrilla forces in the northwest for the Marine Corps, added that "so long as American armed forces remain on Chinese soil, and so long as we continue to provide the Nanking government with money and military supplies, the reactionaries who dominate that government will take no decisive action to form a bona fide coalition government which alone can assure peace and the establishment of democratic reform."

The Marine Corps' raider battalions, which General Carlson organized and which were known as Carlson's Raiders, won renown in their daring invasions of Makin and other Pacific strongholds of the Japanese with their famous slogan "Gung-ho." General Carlson was retired from active duty on July 1 as the result of wounds suffered in the invasion of Saipan. He is now cochairman with Paul Robeson of the National Committee To Win the Peace which is opposing present American intervention in China and has placed itself on record for the defeat of the China military assistance bill now pending before the House and the Senate.

The full text of General Carlson's statement follows:

"Madam Sun Yat-sen, by her prophetic statement, 'the first flame of the world conflagration is burning in our land,' has focused attention on the acute situation in China that contains the ingredients of the third world war. Only at times of great crisis has Madam Sun allowed herself the luxury of public statement during the 21 years which have elapsed since the death of her distinguished husband. More than any human being, she has the right to speak for the Chinese people, for she has never betrayed them or exploited them, and she has devoted her life at great personal sacrifice to the task of translating into action the three principles of nationalism, democracy, and the people's livelihood enunciated by Dr. Sun as a working philosophy for China.

"The great tragedy in this situation is that we, the people of the United States, have become the key factor in encouraging a willful group of reactionaries in the Kuomintang Government of China to resume a civil war for destruction of the only organized group in that country which has provided justice for the people and the opportunities to enjoy the fundamental rights of life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness.

"So long as American armed forces remain on Chinese soil, and so long as we continue to provide the Nanking government with money and military supplies, the reactionaries who dominate that government will take no decisive action to form a bona fide coalition government, which alone can assure peace and establishment of democratic reforms. Moreover, an all-out civil war in China with the United States providing direct or indirect support to the Central Government can only constitute a powder keg for precipitation of a third world war.

"Left alone by other nations of the world, the Chinese people will win a representative government of themselves and become a great democratic factor for world peace.

"I urge the American people to read Madam Sun's statement carefully, because I know from long experience that she speaks from intimate and accurate knowledge of the facts and I know that her unselfish concern for the welfare of her people is unassailable."

The Public Responsibilities of an Educated Citizen

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. CLAUDE PEPPER

OF FLORIDA

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES

Thursday, August 1 (legislative day of Monday, July 29), 1946

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the Appendix of the RECORD a very able address entitled "The Public Responsibilities of an Educated Citizen," delivered by Angus McKenzie Laird, associate professor of political science at the University of Florida, to the graduating class of the summer session of the University of Florida on August 27, 1943, in which he paid high and deserved tribute to my predecessor in the United States Senate, the beloved late Senator Duncan U. Fletcher.

I may say, Mr. President, that I have been advised by the Government Printing Office that the manuscript of Professor Laird's address will require space in the RECORD exceeding by three-fourths of a page the two pages allowed under the rule, and that the cost will be $165.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

President Tigert, members of the graduating class, and friends, one thing, at least, seems to be true of America's present position in the world. It is that there are hundreds of millions of people in Europe, throughout the Near East and the Far East, and in all other parts of the world, who are looking to America with hope in their hearts. It is something we have not sought; it is a greatness—and greatness it is—that has been thrust upon us. It is a condition which I doubt if even the most extreme internationalists in our midst have desired. Any reasonable American must know that we cannot begin to satisfy, to fulfill, or to justify all the hopes held by countless millions of people elsewhere in the world. Most of them are tired and hungry and without clothes, and they want us to feed and clothe them, and to help rebuild their ruined and devastated ccuntries. Despite the cynicism of some Americans, I know that we shall give liberally and generously as no other nation has ever given before. But this will not go on long, for we Americans do not take to "almsgiving." If, among ourselves I may be permitted to admit it, we are like the Lord in at least one respect, "We help those who help themselves." We cannot be expected to fulfill any long continued "hopes" of this nature.

There is another hope that we shall assume military leadership, and establish by our own force, an international system of law and order. However desirable this might be in the long run—and I do not argue the point—this is a role we shall reject. Another hope with a better chance of fulfillment, I trust, is that we shall play a part, a major part, in helping to establish a workable system of law and order in the world. We cannot fail in this respect, for failure would be at our own peril.

But, I am of a mind to believe that in the long run it will perhaps be found that our greatest contribution to the world will be the example of how free people should and can conduct themselves in a democratic society. That is the reason why I should like to speak to you of a few of your basic duties and responsibilities as American citizens.

Twenty-three centuries ago, the philosopher Plato, an unfriendly critic, held that in a democracy the people did not recognize that their duties were equal to their rights. By insistence upon their rights, and by neglecting their duties, they paved the way for the overthrow of democracy and the establishment of tyranny. One need not accept Plato's views as to the inevitability of this process from democracy to tyranny, in order to agree that we must meet our duties and responsibilities as well as enjoy our rights and liberties if our democratic society is to survive. This great truth has been recognized in a number of constitutions of national states. The French Constitution of 1793 not only contained the famous "Declaration of the Rights of Man," but had a list of the duties of man as well. The most recent Constitution of the Soviet Union not only has a bill of rights but has a bill of duties as well. Our constitutional forefathers were fully cognizant of the truth that every right implied a duty. However, our Constitution was based upon somewhat different principles from those of the French Constitution of 1793 and the Russian Constitution of 1935. Our Bill of Rights was added, not in order that the people might know their rights, but that the Government might not infringe upon them. It was assumed that the people would know their duties as they knew their rights. Yet, I fear this has not always been realized, and unfortunately "duty" appears almost to have become an outworn term. One should not be surprised if in the next edition of Webster, he finds after the definition of the term the word "archaic." In almost all the textbooks on civics and political science, and in all the texts in social science without exception, which you have used in high school and college, you will find at least one chapter on our rights, but never one on our duties. Consequently, I think it not improper that in your final college lecture, you should hear something of your public responsibilities as an educated citizen.

An American biologist and philosopher, Edwin Grant Conklin, has defined democracy as "a system which, ideally at least, attempts to equalize the opportunities and responsibilities of individuals in society." I would add that an individual's opportunities and responsibilities should be—ideally again—proportionate to merit. Your opportunities have been greater than the average; your family and the state have spent more upon you than the family and state of the average person of your age have spent upon them. Your responsibilities are likewise greater.

It is unnecessary for me to remind Florida men of their duty to their country in time of war. The record of our graduates on every front of our present conflict is indicative of the fact that Florida men have recognized the highest call of duty for their country. Rather would I remind you of your political or public responsibilities in time of peace as well as in time of war.

First, it is the responsibility of the educated citizen to vote. I do not mean the kind of voting an elderly Negress of perhaps 65 or 70 years of age had in mind on an occasion at which I was present some years ago. She entered a polling place in Chicago, where I was a watcher for a nonpartisan voters' league. The Republican committeeman met her at the door, placed his arm around her shoulder, and led her to the clerk's desk. Unfortunately, or fortunately, as you prefer, however, she had failed to register. When entreaties of the committeeman failed to restore her name to the voters' list, she turned and walked out of the door with the remark, "It don't make no difference, nohow." I am afraid many educated people cast "It don't make no difference, nohow" votes, but they ought to be ashamed of it.

I do not think much more of the slogan that greets me occasionally of "We don't care how you vote, but vote." We should care how our fellow citizens vote and frankly I think those who sponsor the slogan do care how you vote. Even more reprehensive than blind and ignorant voting is voting that is bought and paid for. I was astounded to learn not long ago of an attempt by a member of a professional group of educated citizens in our State who tried to buy his election as president of the association. He sent out boxes of oranges to key members of the association with the announcement that he was a candidate for the presidency. He was defeated, but I think he got more votes than he deserved for his attempt to prostitute an honored profession. One of my students a few years back informed me with evident pride and a feeling of importance that on his week-end trip home just before the election he had been entrusted with the mission of transferring several thousand dollars from a candidate for high office to a political boss in another city for the purpose of buying votes. That is not a thing to be proud of; it was something a responsible American citizen should have been ashamed of. For your information I might say that the candidate was defeated.

Block-voting and voting a straight ticket is almost as bad. I know that a voter must sometimes not only choose as between individuals, but as between organizations, their platforms, their policies, and their practices, as well. But voting a straight ticket to help the fraternity, or the machine, or the union, or the company, or the boss, instead of for what we conceive to be the common good, is a betrayal of democratic government. Loyalty to the party, or to the organization or machine, has its values; one's influence in public affairs is weakened if he switches about without good reason from support of one individual to another, or one party to another. On the other hand, a blind loyalty that binds one to an individual, machine, or party at all times and under all circumstances is likely to result in the loss of all opportunity for constructive leadership. If it is true that a man without party is lost politically, it is equally true that a man of one party does not help to make as much history as the independent voter who chooses between parties and helps to determine election results.

I realize it is difficult to cast an intelligent vote in every case. There will always be names on the ballot that you will not know and cannot find out anything about, but it is your duty to try to find out something about candidates for important positions. It is certainly as important as mowing the lawn or listening to Fibber McGee, and doesn't take any more time. It will require more intellectual stimulus and exertion, but it is our duty.

Do not be discouraged if your candidates do not always win. Many times your vote will encourage the kind of men you want to see in office, and you owe it to your candidates to support them even when their chances of election are hopeless. It is your duty to vote, but you are under no obligation to have a seat on the band wagon.

A second responsibility is to run for and serve in public office when you are asked to do so in the public interest by some of your fellow citizens who have no selfish personal end or ignoble purpose in asking you. If you are the kind of citizen you ought to be, you will have opportunities. Now I am not advising you to become professional politicians, though that is a great calling. It is an ancient occupation, you know, as illustrated by a story of an argument between a doctor, an engineer, and a politician as to the oldest of their respective professions. The doctor spoke first, "Did not Jehovah cut a rib from Adam's side and create Eve from it? That was a surgical operation and therefore surgery is the oldest profession." "You're wrong," said the engineer. "In the beginning, all was chaos, and in 6 days the Lord built the earth—that was a great engineering feat and the first professional accomplishment." "Hold on," said the politician, "didn't you say that in the beginning all was chaos—where do you think all that chaos came from?" Seriously, however, I think the politicians are more sinned against than sinners, and I wish to defend them. We consider it our right to inquire into everything a politician does—we watch him more critically than we do any one else—even a minister's son these days. And there are very few of us who can stand in the public searchlight without having some faults cast their shadows. When I hear someone wish we did not have politicians running the country, I remind myself that Hitler is not a politician, and that Mussolini is or was not one. I also remember that Mr. Chamberlain's friends and supporters acclaimed him on the ground that he was not a politician. I could mention some American examples, but I shall stay safely on foreign shores. Any informal and impartial observer will agree, I think, that the politicians know how to run the country better than any other group, even including the college professors.

I have no patience with those good people who say that a man cannot live an honest, sincere, and upright life and be a successful politician. We need not leave our own State for examples to prove such contentions false. I wish to mention in particular the career of one man whose life could well be emulated by any high-minded young person who aspires to a political career. For 49 years this man was intimately associated with the political life of our State. In my boyhood he was held up to me at home and in school as a model of integrity, sincerity, and probity in public life. He was no demagog who espoused one cause in north Florida and opposed it in south Florida; he did not fear to make known his stand upon public issues, even when it ran counter to popular opinion or the interests of powerful groups. There were those who opposed him, but to my knowledge—and I have made some effort to verify this—there was never a hint or suggestion in all the half century of his career that he had made money out of politics, that he had entered into a shady deal, or that he was insincere in his beliefs. This man was United States Senator from Florida from 1909 to 1936 and his name was Duncan U. Fletcher. The politicians can defy any profession in the State to furnish the name of a man of greater honesty, ability, or integrity. There are others in our own State, both living and dead, whose names I could mention with Senator Fletcher's. One need not have to go to Virginia, or Wisconsin, or Nebraska, to be a successful politician and maintain one's integrity. Politics is an honorable profession in Florida, and a political career does not have to be a dishonorable or discreditable one unless you make it so.

But I am not urging you to become professional politicians. One need not be a professional politician in order to serve in public office. There are numerous part-time elective and appointive offices where you can serve and still follow your chosen profession or occupation. The city council, the board of county commissioners, the school board, the recreation board, and the planning board; the selective service and rationing boards; the State board of control, the State welfare board, the State planning board, the State forestry board, the citrus commission, and similar necessary and useful agencies furnish numerous opportunities for fulfilling the kind of responsibility to which I refer. These offices will not attract you from the standpoint of compensation, except in the case of a few city councils and county boards. The only reward for service is likely to be the feeling that comes to one who has responded to the call of duty.

Sometimes, I fear that we may develop a ruling class in America by default. We may have the right to run for office taken away from us without a struggle because we do not care to assert it, or to accept our responsibility to exercise it. The process has already begun. Strangely enough, most of the people deprived of this right think it a blessing. University professors cannot run for office without first resigning their jobs, and we think it is a good thing. The Hatch Act prevents Federal employees and State employees paid in whole or in part with Federal funds—a very large number—from running for office or holding public office. Yet the act is almost universally applauded. No leaves of absences are granted by public agencies to candidates, and defeated candidates cannot always be expected to be "taken care of." In fact, employment in certain positions is denied by law to persons who have run for office within a specified length of time—and we think it is a good thing.

While the Government is restricting the right to run for office on the one hand, business is doing the same on the other. My chief, if not the only objection, to chain organizations is that they are driving out of business the kind of merchant, druggist, and banker who, 20 years ago, served on the city commission, the county board, the school board, and other elective agencies, and who took the lead in the discussion of public issues and policies. The chain store manager of today, even if he stays in a community long enough to register as a voter, is almost always prevented from taking an active part in politics on his own initiative and responsibility. His employers think it would be bad for the business. I am not at all sure that it would. As a rule, the American people buy where they think they can get the best goods at the lowest price, regardless of the politics of the proprietor or manager. The number of customers gained by politics will usually balance the number lost. If the vigor and vitality of our local institutions are not to suffer, then local employees of outside corporations must be allowed to participate freely and on their own account in the political life of their communities. This will be particularly true if the trend toward outside ownership of local enterprises continues.

Part-time service in public office takes time and energy, it has many headaches and disappointments, but an educated person, indebted to society for the greater opportunities afforded to him, will not shirk this responsibility on that account.

A third responsibility of the educated person is jury service. Long before our forefathers developed popular legislative and executive agencies, they had developed fair and equitable judicial processes in which they participated. There is no more sacred right in all the Anglo-Saxon world than the right to be tried by a jury of our peers, or equals. A few years ago there was much criticism of the jury system, and considerable agitation in favor of abolishing it and substituting other procedures for determining the guilt or innocence of accused persons. Most of the criticism has died a natural death; much of it was unjustified, while improvements in our judicial processes, removal of technicalities in procedure, limiting appeals and expediting trials in other ways, have eliminated many of the things for which the jury system was criticized, not always justifiably.

However, the chief objection to the jury system still remains. The fault lies not with the jury system itself, but with the type of jurors who serve. Our jury lists, from which venires are drawn and juries impanelled are theoretically made up of our best and most responsible citizens. Yet, court officials declare that it is extremely difficult to get a jury from those whose names are drawn for service, especially in the lower State courts where most of our jury trials are held. "Our best and most responsible citizens" are too busy and have good excuses. Court attachés then go out and pick up the first idle citizens they encounter who would like to make $3 per day.

For 15 years I have been teaching political science and describing or trying to describe our jury system—but until 10 days ago I had never been asked to serve on a jury. A few months back, I investigated to find out why I had never been called for jury service. My query brought this answer: "We don't call teachers any more. They always beg off of jury service and so we leave their names off the jury list and save the court the trouble of calling them." I have wondered since then how many other groups and individuals have so forfeited this right and this duty—for jury service is both. We have no right to criticize the jury system, or any part of the processes of justice, if we have failed to do our duty on the jury if called upon. Our jury system is perhaps the greatest safeguard we have against the injustice and the arbitrary imprisonment and treatment that accompanies tyranny. If the day should ever come when we are not able to receive justice in our courts, we shall have only ourselves to blame for the neglect of our court duties.

The emphasis we have had placed upon economic rights in recent years justifies the inclusion, I believe, of a consideration of some of our economic duties. Some of our citizens have been so impressed with their rights in recent years that they are having difficulty—at the country's expense—in recognizing that they also have duties. If we have the right to strike in time of peace, we at least should have the duty to serve our country by working in time of war. The worker in Detroit, in Johnsville or Bridgeport is no less a citizen of America than the Marine in the Solomons, the sailor in the Mediterranean, or the pilot of a Flying Fortress over Europe; why should his duties to his country be any less? The right of collective bargaining, the right to join a union and the right to a minimum wage must be balanced by certain duties to the society that grants them if they are to have any ethical or moral basis for their existence. A clause in the new Russian Constitution reads: "He who does not work shall not eat." This may help to explain how our Russian allies stopped Hitler and saved their country. I wonder if any society has any ethical or moral obligation to allow any normal, able-bodied person to enjoy its privileges and opportunities without making some useful contribution to its life. And I do not think we ought to apply one rule to the poor and another to the rich. Capital has its duties no less important than labor; property owners no less than laborers. We have no place for a leisure class either at the top or the bottom of the social and economic scale.

It has been my observation that perhaps the most unfortunate thing that parents can do for a young man is to leave him a little property, with the understanding that he has only to take care of it in order to be a happy, prosperous and respected citizen. I say "little property" advisedly. It might be different in case of one who inherits more than a million dollars—I have not had an opportunity to observe the effect of that much money upon a young man. But I could mention quite a few examples of young men who thought they were relieved of all responsibility to prepare for a profession or a dignified occupation because they were going to receive enough property to take care of them through life. Some of the most miserable and unhappy people I know have been such individuals trying to hold on to their property and worrying themselves almost to death because they feared the tax-eaters, the New Dealers, the Townsendites, the Technocrats, or even the Reds, were going to take it all away from them. Had they learned and practiced a profession or occupation they would have lived much happier and useful lives. No one can take away a man's ability to practice a useful profession, but it is unsafe to rely upon a fortune—a small one at least—in these turbulent, unstable, and uncertain times.

Some time before the war, I read an article by a European princess in one of our popular magazines in which she unwittingly paid a great compliment to American men. She was explaining why she liked European men better than American—the latter were always interested in business, in economics, in industry, and in the opinion of the princess did not have the finer graces of life, or know how to court in the European way. I am glad she found this to be true. I hope she, and other people of her kind from across the seas, will continue to find it true of Americans.

In certain circles, mainly of the intelligentsia, there has been much cynicism toward this side of American life. The "builder spirit" is scoffed at, the "bigger and better" things are ridiculed, and the mouse-trap story is discredited. Yet it seems to me that these are truly expressive of the America of achievement and accomplishment, of strong, vigorous, and busy men and women who have helped to make our country the hope of the world. These hard-working forefathers of ours established higher institutions of learning, not that some future American leisure class might learn the higher graces of life but that our young men and women of ability and promise might prepare themselves to lead lives more useful to our society and therefore more happy to themselves. If you have not already prepared yourself for a useful profession or occupation, it is your responsibility to do so without further delay.

Finally an educated citizen has the responsibility to obey and respect the law. I do not mean that you should take a "pollyanna" view of the law, that all laws are good and fair and just, and that we should obey all of them at all times and under all circumstances. Some laws are unfair, some are unwise, some are impractical; other are in conflict, and still others, while considered fair and equitable at one time, have become archaic and inapplicable to modern conditions. But law is the basis of our social order and no great society in which the people enjoyed a good life has yet existed which did not have a legal foundation and a respect for law.

I recognize that there have been times in the past in which a man was morally and ethically justified in violating the law. If there had never been men who dared to violate the law for high principle and great ends, we might still have the divine right of kings, we might be subjects of the British Crown, and we would probably have slavery. The men who overthrew divine right monarchs and those who gained independence for America did so at the risk of their lives. There may be instances today and there will probably be instances in the future in which lawbreaking may be morally and ethically justified.

"But," one is likely to say, "how can one obey all the laws, the rules and regulations, when it is not possible for one person to know them all?" That is a reasonable question. There must be many cases where this is true. There are many respectable citizens in certain professions or lines of business who cannot possibly find the time to learn and understand all the laws that apply to them. Although ignorance of the law does not excuse them legally, one cannot hold such persons ethically and morally guilty. This is true if their ignorance of the law is not used as an excuse rather than as an explanation for failure to comply with the law. We have the responsibility to respect the law even though we may not always know what the law is and be able to comply with it.

There are some in high position who believe that the importance of their work justifies their disregard for a law which the common run of people ought to obey. The 35 miles per hour traffic law is a necessary one, they think, but their own time is so valuable and their mission so important to society that they have no hesitation in making 70.

I wonder how many small-time chiselers and antisocial or disloyal persons justify their actions not on moral or ethical grounds, but by the example furnished by some one in authority who believes himself to be above the law.

I am no admirer of the monarchial system of government even as practiced in some of our allied countries. I have no high regard for inherited titles and social rank. But I do think that King George and Queen Elizabeth of Great Britain have set a fine example of sacrifice, of strict adherence to rationing and other rules to conserve the food, materials, and strength of their country. If we could have had a few more examples of this kind in our own country the OPA might have been able to get along without as many inspectors and we would have had fewer chiselers and less grumbling.

Unfortunately, in our society—and in every society for that matter—we have not yet been successful in eliminating persons of antisocial and criminal tendencies. We also have some people whose intelligence and sensitivity do not permit them to draw distinctions between good and bad laws. These people obey the law either through fear or because of the example set by others. A citizen who believes a law to be unfair, unwise, or iniquitous has every right to work for its repeal or amendment. If the constitutionality of a law is questionable or the validity of an act is otherwise in doubt, he is justified in testing its legality. We may even respect a man who violates a law for sake of conscience if he goes to prison for it. But no citizen is worthy of our respect if he encourages criminals and simple-minded persons by violating the law for personal ends and gets away with it.

One thing the study of the past certainly teaches us, is that the people who have the greatest opportunities in society are usually the first to suffer when law and order break down. Therefore it is to your own interest, as well as in the interest of our society, that an educated citizen should meet the responsibility to obey and respect the law.

In the ancient world, during the days of the Roman republic, the most respected and responsible persons were those who bore the title of "Roman citizen." It was a proud title; those who bore it shared in the rule of the civilized world of that day. They represented Roman power, and Roman justice, and Roman law. But essentially the prestige of the title was based upon force and military might, and was limited to a few. When the great test of the empire came, the mass of Roman subjects did not feel the duty of defending it since they had not shared fully in the rights and privileges of Roman citizenship.

I dare say that the proudest title a person may have in our day is that of an American citizen. Some of you will bear that title to foreign lands; others of you will remain at home. Let us remember that the prestige of this title is not based upon military strength, though that is great; it will be based upon the example we have furnished to the world of a 130,000,000 people, representing all the races of mankind, where all share more equitably in the opportunities and responsibilities of a great society than men have ever shared before. It was of this greatness and of this day that Walt Whitman was thinking when he wrote about a century ago:

Sail, sail thy best, ship of Democracy
Of value is thy freight, 'tis not the Present only,
The Past is also stored in thee,
Thou holdest not the venture of thyself alone, not of the Western Continent alone,
* * * * *
With thee Time voyages in trust, the antecedent nations sink or swim with thee.
* * * * *
Theirs, theirs as much as thine, the destination-port triumphant.

Public Opinion Polls in Thirtieth Congressional District, Pennsylvania

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. ROBERT J. CORBETT
OF PENNSYLVANIA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Friday, August 2, 1946

Mr. CORBETT. Mr. Speaker, during the past few months I have conducted three extensive polls of public opinion in my district on a number of vital legislative issues.

The results of two of these polls were previously reported to the Congress, but they are reincluded here for purposes of comparative study.

I represent the Thirtieth Pennsylvania District, which includes four wards of the city of Pittsburgh and all of the boroughs and townships of northern Allegheny County. The district contains an important number of mills and coal mines, numerous farms, and many residential districts. Economically it varies all the way from areas of extreme wealth to areas of extreme poverty. The voters in the district are almost evenly divided between Republicans and Democrats. How definitely it is a marginal district is illustrated by the fact that only one Congressman from the district has been reelected to a second successive term since 1930. These facts indicate that the Thirtieth District of Pennsylvania may be regarded as being as much an average district as it is possible to find.

In determining the prevailing opinion of the people there we selected from the lists of registered voters an equal number of Republicans and Democrats in each voting precinct. To them we mailed a questionnaire containing 10 questions. We attempted to so word the questions that they would in no way influence the answers. The first poll resulted in more than 2,500 signed replies. The results are here listed without comment:

	For	Against
	Percent	Percent
1. Do you favor peacetime compulsory military training?	69	31
2. Do you favor unemployment compensation of $25 per week for 26 weeks?	40	60
3. Should the Federal Government assume responsibility for full employment?	33	67
4. Should the Federal tax on oleomargarine be abolished?	88	12
5. Should incomes under $1,500 be tax-exempt?	74	26
6. Should the Presidency be limited to 2 terms?	83	17
7. Do you favor socialized medicine?	38	62
8. Do you favor Federal aid to education?	68	32
9. Do you favor President Truman's suggestion to raise judicial and congressional salaries? (There were 53 more votes for the proposal than against	50	50
10. Should the Speaker of the House supplant the Secretary of State in the order of Presidential succession?	60	40

The second poll resulted in more than 8,000 signed replies. A greater number of questionnaires were sent out and excellent newspaper and radio publicity resulted in greater public interest. Again we found some composite public viewpoints that were startling. Here are the final percentages:

	For	Against
	Percent	Percent
1. Do you favor the continuation of price controls for another year?	83.0	17.0
2. Do you favor a national minimum wage of 65 cents per hour?	74.0	26.0
3. Do you favor Truman's prepaid (health insurance) medical care program?	56.0	44.0
4. Should a 30-day cooling-off period be required before a strike?	88.0	12.0
5. Should fact-finding bodies be given free access to company records?	50.7	49.3
6. Should unemployment compensation be paid at a maximum of $25 a week for 26 weeks?	59.0	41.0
7. Do you believe the Selective Service Act should be renewed after May 15?	61.0	39.0
8. Do you favor compulsory peacetime military training?	68.0	32.0
9. Do you favor the proposed loan to Great Britain?	24.0	76.0
10. Do you think demobilization has been fast enough?	82.0	18.0

A third poll has just recently been completed. It was conducted on a smaller scale than the previous two, but greater care in handling the project and increased experience in evaluating the returns makes us equally confident of the correctness of the percentages. This final poll resulted in 1,800 signed replies.

	For	Against
	Percent	Percent
1. Do you favor the proposed loan to Great Britain?	21.6	78.4
2. Are you reasonably satisfied with the new Selective Service Act?	71.0	29.0
3. Do you favor public health insurance as embodied in the Wagner-Murray-Dingell bill?	40.0	60.0
4. Would you vote today for the reelection of Harry S. Truman?	19.0	81.0
5. Should further attempts be made to pass the Case bill or similar legislation?	70.0	30.0
6. Do you favor the La Follette-Monroney plan to reorganize Congress?	74.0	26.0
7. Do you believe that a future war with Russia is probable?	66.0	34.0
8. If your answer to question 1 was "no," would you vote "yes" if Great Britain gave us bases or some other valuable consideration in return?	68.0	32.0
9. Do you favor turning over the secrets of the atomic bomb to the United Nations?	14.0	86.0

I have here presented these findings to my colleagues without any unnecessary comment in order that they may study them for what they are worth and draw their own conclusions. I am compelled, however, to recommend the procedure to all Members of Congress.

Obviously many of the pictures of public opinion on given issues which I had believed to be true were found to be very false. I had been judging opinion on the basis of unsolicited letters and telephone calls from constituents. Like many others I tended to believe on a majority of questions that those who wrote, wired or telephoned reflected typical opinion. They simply did not do so in most cases. Rather, they generally represented vocal minorities. Organized pressure groups and individuals have long since learned all the tricks on how to give Members of Congress a false picture of public sentiment. There is one easy corrective—solicit opinion on a scale large enough to eliminate the possibility of error.

Finally, I desire to thank all those good citizens who cooperated to make these polls possible. With not more than two or three exceptions the questions were carefully answered, and the comments of those who chose to state detailed opinions were serious and well considered in almost every instance. It is my belief that because so many thousands took the time and trouble to participate in these polls that I was perfectly informed as to the majority opinion of the people of my district on most major issues. Likewise, I am sure that our findings in these polls were extremely helpful to other Members of Congress.

Homesteads for War Veterans

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. BEN F. JENSEN

OF IOWA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, August 2, 1946

Mr. JENSEN. Mr. Speaker, due to the fact that a considerable amount of public land is being opened for homesteads to veterans, I feel it right and proper that they should be informed through the medium of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD as to the location of such land and to whom they must apply for the needed information regarding same.

A few days ago I asked the Bureau of Reclamation to furnish me these facts which I am sure will prove beneficial to a number of veterans.

The Bureau was most cooperative, and I am here inserting a letter from Mr. Straus, the Commissioner, along with the list of projects I requested.

UNITED STATES DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, BUREAU OF RECLAMATION,
Washington, D. C., July 31, 1946.

Hon. BEN F. JENSEN,
House of Representatives.

MY DEAR MR. JENSEN: I am pleased to supply you with information concerning the homestead settlement program of the Bureau of Reclamation, as you requested in your telephone conversation with Mr. Markwell, Tuesday.

A public notice to be issued this week of the opening of public lands on the Tule Lake division of the Klamath reclamation project will inaugurate an extensive program to provide settlement opportunities for war veterans on irrigated public lands in the Western States. Approximately 7,527 acres of land, comprising 86 family-size irrigated farms, will be opened September 15 in the Tule Lake section of northern California.

Other openings will follow in succeeding months until 20,619 acres, comprising 244 farms, are made available to homesteading settlers by the end of this year. In 1947, approximately 63,076 acres, comprising 748 farms, will be opened to settlement, and by 1950–51, if funds permit us to maintain our present schedule, more than 2,500 farms, occupying 216,052 acres of public land, will have been opened to homestead entry.

Interest in settlement on irrigated farms is high, the Bureau having received more than 12,000 inquiries concerning land openings. A copy of the public notice announcing the opening of the Klamath project lands is being sent to everyone who has made inquiry, together with a complete list of other openings to be held this year. Veterans of World War II receive a 90-day preference in filing on public lands on reclamation projects.

Each public land opening will be announced in a public notice 45 days prior to the opening. It is important that prospective entrymen apply immediately thereafter, since all applications received up to the date of opening to entry are considered simultaneously, while those received after that time are considered in the order received. Copies of the public notices may be obtained as issued from the project, the appropriate regional office, or the Washington office of the Bureau of Reclamation.

I am attaching a summary of land openings scheduled this year, in 1947, and through 1950–51, together with addresses of the regional and project offices of the Bureau of Reclamation. If I can be of further assistance, please call upon me.

Sincerely yours,

MICHAEL W. STRAUS,
Commissioner.

[1] In addition to the public land openings listed here, approximately 50,000 acres of public land on the Columbia Basin project will be available for settlement. This land will not be homesteaded, however, but will be offered for sale at the dry-land appraised value on the same basis as privately owned lands which the Government is now acquiring. 6,000 acres of Columbia Basin project land will be irrigated in 1947. The goal for 1950–51 is 400,000 acres, comprising 5,000 farm units.

Repudiation of National Debt by Monetary Manipulation

REMARKS

HON. FREDERICK C. SMITH

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, July 30, 1946

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, for some time we have been hearing in increasing volume ominous rumblings from the Federal Reserve and other Government sources. It would seem the New Deal is brewing a scheme to control prices and repudiate the national debt by monetary manipulation. That idea is written into the recently enacted price-control bill.

The proposal before us to pay the soldiers for leave in nonnegotiable Federal securities is an attempt to put into execution this device. At last the New Deal may be coming to the end of the road of printing press money. The President is reported to have stated that the purpose of paying the soldiers in nonspendable funds is to prevent a further increase of printed dollars and heighten inflationary pressure.

Inner New Deal circles have long been aware that price control by itself cannot be made effective, that monetary measures would be required to bring this about. That is, some way must be found to freeze or inactivitate the hundreds of billions of actual and potential printing press money now in existence. Under the New Deal nothing less than permanent inactivation, that is, outright repudiation, can possibly avail.

It now has no other out except that of repudiation. This it hopes to do by making Government securities nonnegotiable and by rationing money.

To the extent that the New Deal succeeds in locking up and making nonspendable Government obligations, whether in the form of circulating currency or securities, such debt instruments remain in a state of repudiation. Of course, the colossal volume of Government printing press money is causing the currency depreciation and, concurrently repudiation of debt obligation.

It is not strange that the New Deal should begin its work of repudiation with the soldiers. We have not forgotten what it did to them by the so-called Economy Act that was passed when it first took over.

The fight which I have made in Congress during my 8 years of service has centered against Government printing press money. If repudiation must come, I want my record to show that I not only did what I could to end the underlying forces which operated to produce inflation and consequent repudiation, but that I vehemently protested against the New Deal formally beginning the process with our soldiers.

Pacific Northwest Development

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. HUGH B. MITCHELL

OF WASHINGTON

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES

Friday, August 2 (legislative day of Monday, July 29), 1946

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the Appendix of the RECORD a letter I have written to Mr. Henry P. Carstenson, master of the Washington State Grange.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

AUGUST 2, 1946.

Mr. HENRY P. CARSTENSON,
Master, the Washington
State Grange, Seattle, Wash.

DEAR HENRY: Because of your interest in Pacific Northwest development I thought that perhaps you would like a current report on the "bureaucratic battle of Washington," upon which we depend for action.

Two incidents stand out in any report of recent efforts and I know you will be interested.

My position on regional development is clear. I am for the CVA method, but am willing to be convinced on another method which is as good or better.

The Federal agencies say they have evolved the proper cooperative method for doing our Pacific Northwest job. Let's look at the record.

When we were successful in breaking the aluminum monopoly control of the Pacific Northwest aluminum plants and thus assured their peacetime operation, we knew the Pacific Northwest faced a shortage of hydroelectric power in a very few years. With this an admitted fact, it was still a nip-and-tuck battle to secure authorization of the Foster Creek Dam.

The record shows the part played by the Army engineers and the Bureau of Reclamation in this bureaucratic byplay. The questioning in the House hearings is instructive on the point of integration.

"Congressman DONDERO. Colonel, why has not Grand Coulee been fully developed up to this time?

"Colonel FERINGA. I do not know."

And shortly after this statement Colonel Feringa placed in the record a letter from the Secretary of the Interior which in part read:

"I do not agree with your statement that the value of the Foster Creek project for irrigation is 'small' * * *

"In the plan for the development of the resources of the Columbia River Basin the economic feasibility of the works of which the plan is composed would be aided materially by financial coordination * * *

"Coordination of the physical operation of the works comprised in the plan is also a highly desirable objective * * *

"It is essential in order to safeguard the development of the Northwest, that Foster Creek project be not excluded from the financial plan for the development of the entire area. * * * It is essential that this project be considered as one unit in a complete plan. * * *

"In my opinion, the Foster Creek Dam project should be authorized at the present time, but it should be authorized for construction by the Bureau of Reclamation, Department of the Interior."

And then later, the hearing continues:

"Congressman PITTENGER. Where is there any element of irrigation or reclamation in the Foster Creek Dam, Colonel?

"Colonel FERINGA. In my opinion, Mr. Pittenger, this is a power project."

But later Leland Olds of the Federal Power Commission said:

"Foster Creek has long been considered as a proper unit in any plan for the comprehensive development of the water resources of the Columbia River Basin."

Would your Grange members think that "comprehensive" refers only to a single purpose dam.

But Congressman PITTENGER asked the real question:

"Congressman PITTENGER. I was wondering if the departments were fighting among themselves and getting nowhere.

"Mr. GARDNER. We have slight interdepartmental differences * * * I hope, however, we will not slow up in any way the construction of this project. I approach our desire that the Department of the Interior build his project with the most sincere hope that the committee will realize that I am not trying to plunge into a sort of jurisdictional squabble with which this committee and all Washington is only too familiar."

Later when the project came up for Senate Commerce Committee consideration, the problem of committee jurisdiction as affecting the Pacific Northwest was clearly outlined. Excerpts from the hearing follow to indicate this situation:

"Senator OVERTON. We should not have irrigation and power projects. Strike it out, and let it go over to the Interior Department.

"Mr. WARNE. We are not suggesting it be stricken from the bill.

"Senator OVERTON. I do not think we are authorized in a rivers and harbors bill that has no flood control, no navigation, to do that.

"Mr. WARNE. We propose that you simply let the Department of the Interior have it.

"Senator OVERTON. It is the Irrigation and Reclamation Committee that should attend to it. So far I agree with you, but this is not the committee to pass on it.

* * * * *

"Mr. WARNE. On the question of authority—of legal or constitutional authority—might it be solved by the inclusion of the authorization under the reclamation laws?

"Senator OVERTON. But this is not the committee to do it. The committee to do that is the Committee on Reclamation."

So it might be easy to understand why, after this discussion, the Commerce Committee voted to strike the authorization of the Foster Creek Dam from the rivers and harbors bill. Senator MAGNUSON and I were fortunate, indeed, to get the item put back into the bill when it was considered by the full Senate.

And now let's turn to the Bureau of Reclamation to see how expeditiously it handles our developmental irrigation projects. When final responsibility rests 3,000 miles from the job there is too much danger from "red tape" and too little chance of expedition.

Last October Frank A. Banks, regional director, and William Warne, assistant director, Bureau of Reclamation, informed me that the Bureau would have ready for transmission to Congress in early December the feasibility report on the Kennewick Highlands division of the Yakima irrigation project.

The reclamation law requires a feasibility report as the basis for appropriation. When a quick report was assured, I introduced an appropriation request.

Now, let's look at the record. Let's see how accurate the regional director and assistant commissioner had been in their timing.

When I appeared before the Appropriations Committee, December 12, 1945, the Bureau's failure to live up to its own timetable forced me to state:

"Originally, when I put that amendment in, I was informed by the Bureau of Reclamation that a feasibility report could be filed by the Bureau in time for consideration by this committee. At the present time the Bureau informs me that a feasibility report cannot be gotten out until March on the Kennewick division project, and not until some time later in the year on the greater Wenatchee project."

The following are excerpts from letters dated as follows:

October 11, 1945 (letter signed by Commissioner H. W. Bashore): "As you suggested, I am referring the matter to Regional Director F. A. Banks. I will write as soon as I have received his report."

March 5, 1946 (letter signed by Commissioner Straus): "The report is still scheduled to be completed in April."

November 16, 1945 (letter signed by Acting Commissioner Kenneth Markwell): "The regional director has been requested to make every effort to have the preliminary draft of the report completed early in December."

December 6, 1945 (letter signed by Acting Commissioner Warne): "For your information and in reply to your several letters and telephone calls since that date, I am pleased to summarize the actual situations with regard to each of these reports, and wish to express my sincere regret that it appears that the Kennewick division (sometimes referred to as Kennewith Highlands) report cannot be drafted as early as you were informed."

May 22, 1946 (preliminary report letter signed by Commissioner Straus): "You appreciate, of course, that while the above information is taken from the now almost completed report in the Bureau of Reclamation, the proposed report has not been reviewed, in final form, by the Bureau of Reclamation, nor by the Department of the Interior. * * * We are not in a position to recommend that the project be authorized until clearances required within the Department and pursuant to the law have been fulfilled."

June 18, 1946, Commissioner Straus and Regional Director Newell in my presence informed a Kennewick committee that the regional report had been completed and was now pending before the Department in Washington.

And then on July 12, 1946, Regional Director R. J. Newell writes: "Commissioner Straus and myself went into the meeting at Spokane without an opportunity to check on the exact status of the Kennewick Report. A brief preliminary report had been submitted from this office to the Commissioner previously, but the possible alternative plan of a larger power installation had not been completely explored.

"After the meeting I met one or two of the men from Kennewick and told them that immediately on returning to Boise I would check up on the exact status of progress and advise them in detail. This was done on June 19. Inquiry disclosed that the alternative plan was showing up more favorably than previous plans and that the complete study would be well worthwhile. This is being actively carried on.

"It is regretted that we did not have all the details in mind to advise you and the Kennewick committee at the Spokane meeting."

And so we are still awaiting a final report which was promised last December. I hope we will have it soon.

Sincerely yours,

HUGH B. MITCHELL,
United States Senator.

The U. S. S. "Arkansas" Ended a Great Career at Bikini

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. BROOKS HAYS
OF ARKANSAS
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Friday, August 2, 1946

Mr. HAYS. Mr. Speaker, when the proposal to use the U. S. S. Arkansas in the atom-bomb tests at Bikini was first made, the people of our State offered a mild protest. They had hoped the great vessel might be towed into a port in one of our cities as a sort of museum piece. Naval authorities decreed otherwise, and a few days ago the historic old ship went to the bottom of the Bikini lagoon. It was an honorable death for the beloved ship "Arky," one of the Nation's favorites.

The officers and men who served on the ship and the people of Arkansas who had great pride in its contribution to naval history can claim new honors for the Arkansas in the dramatic ending at Bikini and all may take further pride in the vessel's part in the event.

Under leave to extend my remarks, I include the following story of the Arkansas which appeared recently in the Arkansas Democrat:

Taps sounded yesterday for the battleship Arkansas, glorious veteran of two world wars and a survivor of the Normandy beachhead, Leyte, Guam, Iwo Jima, and Okinawa.

Spared by fate from a hero's death in combat with the enemy, the glorious old battleship, which has proudly carried Arkansas' name to the far corners of the world during a 34-year career, nevertheless died honorably—victim of the atomic blast as Uncle Sam tested his newest and most powerful instrument of war in the lagoon at Bikini Island.

The 26,100-ton battleship, closest vessel to the submerged bomb, up-ended and sank in the quiet lagoon just 10 minutes after the explosion. Her wreath was a black oil slick on the green clear waters.

Commissioned into service in September 1912, the Arky saw service in two wars and in the Second World War her gray-painted bow poked into ports and areas on both sides of the globe.

The oldest battlewagon afloat in the United States Navy, she took President Taft to the Panama Canal the year she put to sea. She was a unit of the Allied grand fleet in the First World War, and a decisive factor in many peacetime maneuvers and mock battles.

"ARKY" GAINS DISTINCTION

The Arky gained distinction in the Second World War when she participated in the Normandy and southern France invasions where her ancient rifles hurled tons of explosives into German shore defenses in support of Allied landings.

Under the command of Rear Adm. (then Captain) Carleton F. Bryant, Searsport, Maine, the Arkansas was on patrol duty from December 7, 1941, until in November 1942, when she sailed to north Africa in support of the invasion there.

In 1943 she changed commanders, with Capt. Frederick G. Richards, Newcastle, Maine, taking the helm. Her new commander guided her through long convoy duty until her first taste of action came in the bleak gray dawn of June 6, 1944.

In company with other units of a bombardment group, she sailed under full steam off the French coast at Baie de las Saine and opened her powerful batteries, machine guns, and other armament on the Nazi shore defenses. She dealt destruction and havoc to the defending Germans along the entire Norman coast. Her last channel service was aiding in the bombardment of the Cherbourg port.

Hauling anchor late in July, she sailed for the Mediterranean to join the invasion fleet in preparation for the invasion in southern France. Her long rifles were trained on the Nazi defenses at Draumont in the early hours of August 15. She continued breaking up German resistance until August 17, when she sailed to Boston Navy Yard for an overhaul.

FIGHTS IN PACIFIC

Her new commander, Capt. G. M. O'Rear, received orders to sail "the queen" to the Pacific, where she saw many campaigns until the end of World War II came in September.

During her Pacific battles, the Arkansas participated in bombardment of Iwo Jima, supporting the landing of the marines. Following this engagement, she proceeded to Kerama Retto and Okinawa, supporting the United States landings there. A new type of warfare came on April 12, 1945, when she withstood the heaviest Jap air attack on the United States Fleet anchored in Okinawa harbors.

After fighting off hundreds of kamikaze attacks, the battlewagon rode out the typhoon that hit Buckner Bay.

With the surrender of the Japs, she sailed for Seattle, Wash., under the command of Capt. Wade de Weese, where she remained until "operation crossroads" got under way.

Sailing for Bikini, the "Arky" was used as one of the target ships in the first test of the atom bomb, but her armor withstood the impact and she remained afloat.

In yesterday's test she was used as the "bull's-eye," and the full broadside impact from the blast was too much. Observers flying over the lagoon at the time of the detonation said there was a momentary rift in the lethal smoke and the Arkansas could be seen going under, stern first.

United States Treasury Silver Transactions

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. COMPTON I. WHITE
OF IDAHO
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Friday, August 2, 1946

Mr. WHITE. Mr. Speaker, in response to a request made by the House Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures to the Treasury for a report on H. R. 694, as chairman of that committee, I have received a letter transmitting a recapitulation of the Treasury's transactions in silver. This resolution with the letter and recapitulation is inserted herewith for the information of my colleagues:

House Resolution 694

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury is directed to transmit to the House the following information:

(a) Facts in the possession of the Department of the Treasury showing all silver, other than silver used for monetary purposes, on hand on July 1, 1940, and all silver acquired by the Department of the Treasury from July 1, 1940, to the date of the adoption of this resolution, both dates inclusive.

(b) Facts in the possession of the Department of the Treasury showing all silver disposed of or loaned by the Department of the Treasury for industrial purposes within the United States between July 1, 1940, to the date of the adoption of this resolution, both dates inclusive.

(c) Facts in the possession of the Department of the Treasury showing all silver which has been recovered from silver disposed of or loaned for industrial purposes by the Department of the Treasury within the United States between July 1, 1940, to the date of the adoption of this resolution, both dates inclusive.

(d) Facts in the possession of the Department of the Treasury showing all silver acquired by the Department of the Treasury from sources outside of the United States under the act to promote the defense of the United States, approved March 11, 1941, as amended (U. S. C., 1940 ed., Supp. V., title 22, secs. 411–419).

(e) Facts in the possession of the Department of the Treasury showing all silver disposed of by the Department of the Treasury under such act of March 11, 1941.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
Washington, July 31, 1946.

Hon. COMPTON I. WHITE,
Chairman, Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures, House Office Building.

MY DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: Further reference is made to your letter of July 6, 1946, enclosing two copies of House Resolution 694, "Directing the Secretary of the Treasury to transmit certain information to the House," and requesting a statement of this Department's views on the proposed legislation.

The Treasury Department is prepared at all times to supply members of the Congress with information as to the holding, acquisition, and disposition of silver by the Treasury Department. The enclosed statement sets forth the information requested by House Resolution 694.

Inasmuch as there is no necessity for House Resolution 694, the Treasury Department recommends that it be not favorably considered.

In view of your request for expedition, it has not been feasible to clear this report with the Bureau of the Budget.

Sincerely yours,
JOSEPH J. O'CONNELL, Jr.,
Acting Secretary of the Treasury.

Speech by John Carson, Director of the Washington Office of the Cooperative League, United States of America, and National Cooperatives, Inc., Before the Cooperative Congress of Nova Scotia, at Antigonish, Nova Scotia, July 3, 1946

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. JERRY VOORHIS
OF CALIFORNIA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Thursday, August 1, 1946

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks, I am proud to include the following truly great speech by Mr. John Carson recently delivered to the Cooperative Congress of Nova Scotia:

COOPERATIVES AND THE COMMON GOOD

(By John Carson)

Mr. Chairman and my good cooperative friends, I plead with you for only one consideration tonight. The hour is very late in the halls of democracy. Whether men shall be free, or shall have the opportunity to be free men, will depend upon what we shall do on this continent, this hemisphere—in Canada and the United States and the countries of South America—in the next 3 or 5 or 7 years.

Our democratic way of life is on trial, the test grows hour by hour. Democracy is a living thing. Its health is measured by the health of all of its members. It is a form of society which depends entirely on self control or self government, and therefore it is dependent for its existence upon the spiritual influences. The yearning for freedom, and for a democratic society will not perish. It cannot. That yearning is a part of the soul or spirit of man. But it can be blacked out by tyranny of one kind or another, as it was in Germany and Italy and much of Europe.

The hour is late, and the opportunity for labor to reach a right conclusion is passing. We cannot avoid that conclusion. We must not. Men, very powerful groups of men, dominating large societies of men, have declared their faith in statism, in the philosophy that man exists for the welfare of the state. Many men, great groups of men in our countries, victims of frustration and despair, are tempted by the positive offering in this philosophy. They are tempted by the easiest way out, by the way of all flesh. And democracy is a hard way.

So please let me emphasize that these are not just words. These are expressions of my profound convictions. The hour is too late for me, or for any of us, to waste time in uttering words to please our ears. Oh, it would be a great consolation to discover facts which would convince me that my fears were groundless, and if I am in error I challenge you and any other man to help me and to show me wherein I am in error. I plead with you for that assistance, if you or any other person can give me assistance to relieve me of my concern that the hour is very late in the halls of democracy.

Some men were so incompetent as to believe, in 1939, that when we accomplished what was in fact only the first job, that of wiping out the statism in Germany and Italy, we might relax. That was an utterly absurd belief. Men were, and are, on the march. Statism, call it what you will—nazism, or fascism, or communism, or the monopolism of cartels or of Wall Street, is a philosophy of life which is tempting men who have despaired of the efficacy of democracy and who wish for an easier way out—that of letting someone else assume the labor of thinking.

It is very kind of you good people to invite me to be with you in Antigonish and to participate in your cooperative congress. I appreciate, particularly, the opportunity to talk with you about the subject, Cooperatives and the Common Good, because that subject will permit me to attempt to draw a contrast between the bankrupt and dying economic world in which we must live temporarily, the world of finance capitalism; and the cooperative world we are building to express the common good and the dignity of man.

I have long looked forward to this day when I could be with you good people of the maritime provinces, when I could put my feet on this bit of solid ground you have established, and when I could catch a bit of the inspiration of your wings which are described in the lines by your great poet and great leader, Dr. M. M. Coady, of St. Francis Xavier University:

"The homely rugged tasks we do today,
As jostled by the crowds that buy and sell,
Are not our goal;
Are but the solid ground to hold our feet,
The while we build our wings."

You have built the solid ground to hold your feet through organizing and developing your cooperatives. But you are already building wings which are reaching out across the seas, and reaching out much more rapidly than you would assume, I suspect.

Just before I left Washington I had a letter from Jamaica in which tribute was paid to the maritime provinces and particularly to your great university, St. Francis Xavier. I hear now and then from Central America where your wings are also carrying a message of hope. A few weeks ago I heard your names mentioned on three or four occasions in Minnesota and Wisconsin. In Ohio, some 1,400 study-action groups are meeting every fortnight, as they have now for several years. They are meeting to study and to attack common problems as you taught them how to meet and study and act. Your wings are spreading.

These are remarkable facts, I think. Here in these provinces, removed somewhat from a busy world, and in this little town of Antigonish, some leaders arose to tell of their vision and of their plans to have men know they could become the masters of their own destiny. They lighted a little torch and soon that light began to reach out to a world diseased by a materialistic economic philosophy. And soon hundreds of thousands of people turned their faces to that light. They turned to the maritime provinces and to Antigonish, and not to London, or Paris, or Moscow, or Wall Street.

Our thoughts will have to reach back into history for a parallel to this story. They must reach back to that day when eyes and thoughts and hopes were turned, not to the pagan civilization which expressed itself in the Rome of that day, but to the little town of Bethlehem. We might recall that story of a bankrupt and corrupt civilization, corrupted by its gross materialism and its philosophy of might makes right, how it began to die and then died. But men were inspired to live by the light which came from a stable in Bethlehem. Incidentally, we might also recall how the rulers of that bankrupt civilization began to persecute those who sought that Light, and we may be comforted today as the beneficiaries of a corrupt materialism in this day begin to persecute our cooperative organizations.

I am grateful to you also for this opportunity to escape from Washington, for just this little while. Washington has become the stage upon which much of this world is acting its part. Only those who have had the misfortune to live in that vortex can appreciate just how insane this world is. Men and women and children are whirled around is a giddy circle, and without any hope of knowing what the morrow will bring. There is no solid ground. Decimal points and ciphers and millions and billions and adding machines and reports and memoranda make up the background for the stage. The actors—the statesmen and the lawyers and the economists—talk, but most often their words remind me of the young Negro who operates an elevator in our apartment house and who likes to discourse to a friendly and less fortunate Negro. One day, as I passed by, I heard him say, "Now, you take that word 'fatal'—well fatal means—well, I don't know what the dictionary says fatal means, but we're all going to be fatal some day."

I know my Washington after some 30 years of rather intimate association with that which we know as Washington. Men are not thinking in Washington these days. They do not have the time to think. The forces of finance capitalism, those forces which are inherent in finance capitalism and from which there can be no escape, have compelled such concentration of finance and concentration of industry and concentration of governing power—or government—have put such terrific burdens on men in official life that they do not have time to think.

I am often reminded of the story of Alice in Wonderland. You will recall the scene in which the White Queen grasps Alice by the hand and starts to run. They run for several minutes and then Alice has to call a halt and recover. They then run again and again Alice has to halt. Then they run again and Alice notices they have been running up and down and making no progress.

"This is a strange world," she tells the White Queen. "In our country if we ran that hard and that long, we would go a great distance."

"It's not that way here," the White Queen replies. "Here you have to run so fast to keep up with where you are at."

In our business or economic life, in our social life, in our official life of government, in Washington and elsewhere, we are so busy running to keep up with where we are at.

It would be a wholesome and very helpful contribution today if some of our dramatists would take that theme and produce for us a comedy which might make us think, if it ir duced us to halt long enough to laugh.

Think for a moment about that story. Men build great cities and then other men who must work in those cities have to live miles from their employment and have to spend one-fourth of their waking hours getting to and from their jobs—running up and down. Men build great houses or castles and then have to employ many servants to occupy the houses. The masters then put in a considerable part of every waking hour to capture wealth so they can hire the servants and so they can maintain the houses. Men build great machines, in which great sums of capital are invested. That capital has to be fed constantly because the moment that maw is empty, bankruptcy knocks. So the men who build the great machines with the great capital must keep the machines running up and down. Eventually they adopt a plan or philosophy to produce goods which will wear away or be destroyed quickly, so the consumer will have to buy more articles and so the machines may be kept in motion, running up and down.

Eventually we reach the thing called government and the story there is much like the story of my friend who drank too much at his club in Washington and on a dark and foggy night began to stagger across Lafayette Square. Eventually, he pitched into that high picket fence which encircles the monument to a former President. He grasped one picket and then held on as he tried to shake the fog from his brain. Then he clutched at another picket and then another and then another and on the third time around, he leaned back, laid down in the grass, shook his head and said, "Damn it, I'm locked in."

That is the world or society we have produced through an economic system we know as finance capitalism.

Now, let me attempt to draw the contrast with the cooperative world we are building. And risking all the dangers there are in any attempt at over-simplification, let me first draw the rough lines of contrast.

What are the marks of finance capitalism. It is a system which has its primary objective in serving the welfare of the dollar or of gold or capital. Unless it serves that objective, the machine stops, the business of producing fails. I know it will be contended, and perhaps justly so, that the objective is to serve the welfare of dollars so that the dollars may then be used for the welfare of mankind. But the first objective is that of acquiring more wealth, expressed in dollars.

The consumer cooperative philosophy is a philosophy of production of wealth in the form of goods. Dollars, or capital, merely become a tool, and are useful only as a tool.

In finance capitalism, dollars hire men and men must therefore become the servants of dollars. Dollars are dignified and sometimes deified. In our consumer cooperatives, men hire dollars and men are dignified.

In finance capitalism, the highest possible wage for dollars is sought, and the system compels that the highest possible wage for dollars must be sought by the men who own or control the dollars.

In our consumer cooperatives, the wages paid to dollars is limited to the lowest sound economic amount. Thus, the greatest part of the wealth produced is available to men—they and their welfare come first, and the welfare of capital is considered thereafter.

In finance capitalism, if dollars or capital are denied, by any economic condition, a profitable wage, the business halts.

In our consumer cooperatives, the business of producing will not be stopped as long as there is use for the goods produced and regardless of whether there is any wage for dollars invested.

In finance capitalism, men labor to produce goods or services so they may be sold or exchanged for dollars in excess of the cost of the goods or services produced. Obviously, every force inherent in that system tends to make the goods and services scarce, so they may be exchanged for more and more dollars. There is no escape from that force. It is the system itself.

Thus, in finance capitalism, we compel scarcity of production and thus we compel unemployment or lack of opportunity to work.

In finance capitalism, to provide for scarcity of production we induce and compel control of production by the owners of dollars, and thus we compel concentration of finance and concentration of industry and monopoly and cartels. If there is any escape from those forces, other than the escape of wishful thinking, I'd like to know what it is. The inevitable end of all that force is concentration of power in government, or stateism. It is an economic philosophy of force, force, force.

Through consumer cooperatives we turn loose the will to produce more goods and services—that is the objective of the system. The consumer cooperative is effective then in influencing and even compelling decentralization. The consumer cooperative is accomplishing just that result wherever it is tried.

Then, as finance capitalism produces scarcity, consumer cooperatives compel plenty. As finance capitalism compels reduced production and lack of opportunity to work and unemployment, consumer cooperatives produce plenty and almost unlimited opportunity to work and opportunity for employment. As finance capitalism bears its inevitable fruit of widespread poverty and concentration of controlling wealth in the form of dollars, consumer cooperatives bear their fruit in plenty, and the gradual elimination of want and poverty.

By their fruits you shall know them. The fruit of finance capitalism is the problem of unemployment, is widespread poverty, is a society poorly housed and poorly clothed and poorly fed and poorly provided with medical care. The fruit is in the lack of opportunity for men, and resulting despair and frustration. All of that is with us today, and no man can say otherwise.

The outstanding mark of the system of finance capitalism is found in that the great masses of mankind have been deprived of ownership of means of production. We have created the proletariat. Why, in one of our States where God gave to us the finest of soil, the result of all the labor applied to that soil by men throughout all the years has been that, today, only about 25 percent of the value of that land is occupied by owners. Fewer and fewer men own their farms. It has become almost impossible for the wage earner to own his home. The wage earner does not own the small tools of production. He does not own the large machines and factories, of course. Now and then, he even rents the clothes he wears.

Without ownership, man has no opportunity to develop that characteristic we describe by the phrase, "a sense of responsibility" and without that characteristic, we destroy the possibility of men being free men and destroy the possibility of sustaining our will to democracy in society. Society becomes bankrupt and insane and eventually the state becomes the receiver to operate the insane asylum we are experiencing in the thing we call government.

There is one other result, and the most important of all results. Man was endowed with a personality, with certain talents, and he was ordered to labor and to express his personality. That desire is inherent in all men. All men desire to labor and to produce and if man is thwarted in that respect, the dignity of man is destroyed.

I know that apologists for the dying order will point to the thousands of shares of stock owned by thousands of men, the shares of stock in General Motors and General Electric and United States Steel. But that is not ownership, not ownership in morals. Ownership, in morals at least, can only exist where the owners assume the responsibility, and have the opportunity to assume the responsibility, which goes with ownership. The owners of shares of stock in General Electric must, if they be "owners in fact" and if they wish to take any fruit from their ownership in the way of dividends, assume the responsibility for how their capital is used. They must assume their responsibility to the wage earners employed by that capital. But no man will contend today that the so-called owners of a share of stock in General Electric have any opportunity to assume their responsibility to the wage earners of General Electric. The condition is entirely unmoral.

Some of my friends counter with the argument and question as to whether I think cooperatives are going to eliminate the selfishness of mankind. The question is an absurd one. No economic system or plan will eliminate the inherent sense of obligation man has to preserve life in his body. That must remain. In fact, it is a moral obligation that it shall be respected. But through cooperatives and the natural forces which compel the production of plenty there is the opportunity at least for sane men to tame the brutish selfishness which expresses itself in lack of regard for neighbor.

For example, there will be and there is now conflict between the directors of cooperative organizations and employees of the cooperatives. But it is noticeable in all cooperative enterprise that as the employees become owners also of the cooperative, the managers and employees begin to understand there is a common bond which leads to understanding of service to the common good. It would be false to contend that perfection, or complete reformation is accomplished overnight. But the important fact is that understanding and reason and hope begin to pervade the relationships, and to displace the sense of irreconcilable interests which prevail in the conflicts which are part of the system of competitive finance capitalism.

When progress may seem slow, as it often does, we should not be discouraged. I hope you will not be impatient with us who have not been blest with your vision. You must remember that early in our history of the United States, we became the land where everyone could get rich. We may have begun as a people interested in freedom, but soon we became the land of Midas. The beckoning light we held out to the oppressed was the light of two automobiles in every garage, two chickens in every pot. We cannot be expected to shake off the heavy crust of the flesh overnight. We are just beginning to be a little interested in real education and real education must be the road, perhaps the hard road, over which we must travel to freedom.

But in the hearts of the people in the United States there is an ever-insisting cry for what we have to offer through the consumer cooperative movement. The soul is not yet dead in our people, and, please God, it will not die. As long as it lives, there will be that yearning for what we have to offer.

I should like you to bear with me a moment as I tell you of two men, two businessmen, who I think are examples of hundreds of fine men in profit business who instinctively yearn for what we have discovered.

Just outside Washington, a florist gained ownership of hundreds of acres of ground. He had been in the German merchant marine. But when opportunity offered, he ran away from that to which his parents had committed him. He ran away to the United States and determined that he would do what he always wanted to do, he would raise flowers. He had to feed his body and he thus had to raise flowers to sell, and he did raise flowers to sell and he became rather wealthy. Thus, he built the solid ground. But throughout those years he was conscious of the wings he wished to build. Throughout the years, he reserved a small tract of soil which he cultivated patiently. No artificial fertilizing agents were permitted to enter there. No tractors were used there. On his hands and knees he labored.

The flowers which eventually sprang from that soil were the most beautiful of flowers, but he never sold a flower from that soil. He gave them to his friends, when he was satisfied the friends loved flowers. Those flowers were his children—he could not sell them. They were the children of his soul, his wings.

The other man of whom I now think was one of the finest men I have known, a man with a fine scholastic training. He also had to build the solid ground and he built it to gain ownership of one of the finest distributing businesses in Washington. But always his love of his fellowmen was master of the gold he won, and always his soul cried out for freedom from the bitterness of the competitive business system. A few years ago, he became ill. He knew he was going to die, but he could face the decision bravely as his soul was free.

One night, I sat with him in the darkness of a room in his house as his daughter, one he loved most dearly, began to sing. She sang a war song. I know not what it was, but through it ran the prayer to God to teach us to wish to be not safe, not safe, but free. I confess I was crying as I knew that he was crying. Suddenly, he leaned over and said: "Listen, Johnny, that's it; teach us to wish to be free, not safe, but free."

There are thousands of businessmen, I am confident, who are yearning to know what these two friends knew. We must only do our part, to keep the lights burning. We must, through education, help men to know that the good society is the society which expresses the common good, that there can be no unity in society and hence no society when the objective is the selfish interest of the individual. We must do our part to help them to realize that individualism expresses itself in the philosophy that might makes right, in envy, jealousy, anger, hate, and war. We must help them to know that the good society is one in which the goods—or the good things—of this world are used to serve a higher order for mankind, that they are but the solid ground we must build so that men can then build wings.

You will appreciate why I am so grateful to you for your kindness in helping me to escape for a little while from Washington and that stage upon which an insane world is acting its part. You should be proud of your accomplishment, be proud as the lights of Antogonish flash out to a world which is sick unto death, to a bankrupt and mad and insane world. You must be proud as those lights flash out to the United States, to South America, to Jamaica, to Puerto Rico, and to Central America, and as men turn their faces toward this bit of country and begin to march toward your light.

You have an obligation. Do you not sometimes stop to think, in wonder, just why it was that a Dr. Nelson MacDonald, and a Dr. James Tompkins, and a Dr. M. M. Coady, and a Dr. A. B. MacDonald, and a Dr. MacPherson, a Dr. MacCormack, a Dr. Nicholson were put here, in this bit of country and in association with this university? We know not why. But the good Lord knows why. There was a purpose, there must have been a purpose. But as these blessings have been given to you, you must assume the obligation of sharing those blessings with those of us who are less fortunate. You must labor at cultivating the soils from which their successors must spring.

God give to us an understanding of "wings," so that:

"The homely rugged tasks we do today,
As jostled by the crowds that buy and sell
(Shall not) be our goal,
(Shall be) but the solid ground to hold our feet,
The while we build our wings."

Activities of Power Companies in Washington

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. HUGH B. MITCHELL
OF WASHINGTON
IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES

Friday, August 2 (legislative day of Monday, July 29), 1946

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the Appendix of the Record a letter I have sent to the Chairman of the Federal Power Commission.

I ask, too, that a telegram sent to me and signed by several recognized Washington State organizations be printed in the Appendix of the RECORD.

There being no objection, the matters were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

AUGUST 2, 1946.

Hon. LELAND OLDS,
Chairman, Federal Power Commission, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. OLDS: By Commission order of October 4, 1940, an investigation was undertaken which disclosed that five private power companies expended more than $1,000,000 during the period 1935-40 "to further their political and legislative interests and to influence public opinion." The quoted words are from the Federal Power Commission report.

The Commission found further that the companies disregarded the fundamentals of good accounting and violated the uniform system of accounts prescribed by the Federal Power Commission.

A statement issued by nine large organizations in the State of Washington has this to say about private power company political expenditures: "The 1940 campaign was one of the most corrupt this State has seen. The private power companies are continuing this campaign in 1946. The only difference is that they have a new citizens committee to promote initiative 166."

In view of this statement of the Washington State Grange, the Washington State Federation of Labor, the Washington State Industrial Union Council, the Washington Public Utility District Commissioners Association, Washington State Farmers Union, Washington State Public Ownership League, Progressive Citizens of Washington, Washington Old Age Pension Union, and the Washington State Machinists Council, it is urgently recommended that the Federal Power Commission immediately dispatch accountants to Washington State to ascertain whether the five private utility companies in the Pacific Northwest have scrupulously adhered to the Commission order of February 4, 1941, requiring them to maintain special accounts with respect to special political and propaganda accounts. The people of Washington State are entitled to know at the very least whether a proper accounting is made of that part of their electric bills which goes to pay for political propaganda.

Sincerely yours,

HUGH B. MITCHELL.

SEATTLE, WASH., August 2, 1946.

Senator HUGH B. MITCHELL,
Senate Office Building,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR HUGH: Following is text of argument against No. 166 filed with Secretary of State for Voters Manuel:

Argument against initiative No. 166.

The power company initiative.

Power Trust rehash.

Vote against "166."

"166" is simply a revision of initiative 139. Private power companies sponsored this at the 1940 general election. They were beaten almost 2 to 1.

In 1939 they tried unsuccessfully to get such a bill passed in the legislature (substitute S. B. 200), before that they tried to impose the same kind of a law on our city light systems.

Don't be fooled.

Vote against "166."

The Federal Power Commission, in a special investigation, found that the power companies were the real backers of "139" (the old "166") and the other similar proposals. They spent over a million dollars in the 5 years, 1935–40 (see opinion No. 59). The 1940 campaign was one of the most corrupt this State has seen.

The private power companies are continuing this campaign in 1946. The only difference is that they have a new "citizens committee" to promote initiative "166."

A Coulee-Bonneville steal.

Vote against "166."

At stake in this campaign is Coulee-Bonneville power. Will you permit the private companies to monopolize it for themselves and distribute it at the highest rates the traffic will bear?

The Power Trust sponsored "166" to block the public utilities districts because it knows the public utilities districts are the most effective means the people have for preventing this "steal." The public utilities districts have brought low-power rates, which the Power Trust has been forced to meet in order to stay in business.

Vote against "166."

"166" requires that public utilities district commissioners submit a "plan and system" resolution to election before they are in a position to negotiate effectively for privately owned power properties, or condemn them. The estimated cost of the acquisition must be stated.

In practice, this means that the commissioners must allow for the highest possible price for the properties in the resolution in order to have sufficient leeway if the election carries.

What booty this provides for the Power Trust. Instead of starting with the lowest price in negotiations or condemnation, the commissioners are forced to publish the highest one. They are placed in the worst possible position to acquire the properties at a fair price.

Don't underrate the danger. Large eastern holding companies are out to get the public utilities districts. Electric Bond & Share uses Washington water power and Pacific Power & Light companies as its tools to corner Coulee-Bonneville power and impede the development of Northwest resources.

Help make jobs for all.

Vote against "166."

With the war over, what program do we have for development of Northwest industries and agriculture for providing jobs and opportunities for all?

Grand Coulee and Bonneville power sold at cost through locally owned and controlled public power districts. City light systems and cooperatives is the answer.

Our public-power program benefits all: farmer, businessman, workingman, veteran, you and me.

Joker stops service.

Vote against "166."

Under "166" a proposal to acquire properties serving even a small part of a county must be submitted to a vote of the entire county. In each case of this kind the PUD commissioners would have to incur election expense and face a well-financed, deceptive campaign before they could proceed with their business. The public loses in curtailed service.

Joker makes election unworkable.

Vote against "166."

Under present law a PUD can have a court and jury fix a fair price at which it can acquire privately owned electric properties. Then when it knows the price, the district decides whether or not it should acquire them. Under initiative 166 the election on the acquisition would have to be held before the price is known.

If any requirement for an election were desired, it should be so drawn that the election is held after the proposed price is fixed. Otherwise, the people cannot possibly know what they are voting on.

Delay and confusion.

Vote against "166."

The above and many other ramifications of "166" add up to delay and confusion. This is exactly what the power trust desires, and intends to accomplish by this measure.

Vote against "166."

The PUD commissioners have made a fine record to date. In every case where they have acquired any sizable properties they have reduced rates, extended and improved service, and developed community assets. They have been pioneers among all public agencies in making contracts with labor unions, providing higher wages and better working conditions.

Bear in mind, too, that all of such electric properties acquired to date are being paid for entirely out of the revenues which otherwise would go to private companies.

Remember also that PUD's pay taxes to State and local government agencies. A gross earnings tax law written in cooperation with the State tax commission applies to distribution properties and yields at least the equivalent in taxes for State and local agencies that the private companies would pay on these properties.

In effect "166" says: Go on with this fine record but we will correct defects in existing law by tying your hands. This is not fair to people who are doing a fine job.

Voters, this is a power battle where the help of everyone is needed. Let us unite, fight, vote against "166."

The following is only a partial list of prominent individuals and organizations who are fighting this vicious bill: Henry P. Carstensen, master, Washington State Grange; E. M. Weston, president, Washington State Federation of Labor; Max Wedekind, president, Washington State Industrial Union Council; A. L. King, president, Washington Public Utility District Commissioners Association; Jesse Vetter, president, Washington State Farmers Union; Carl Ericson, president, Washington State Public Ownership League; Jack R. Cluck, president, Progressive Citizens of Washington; William J. Pennock, president, Washington Old-age Pension Union; Wesley McDonnell, president, Washington State Machinists' Council.

Editorial Tributes to Hon. Burton K. Wheeler, of Montana

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. EDWIN C. JOHNSON

OF COLORADO

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES

Friday, August 2 (legislative day of Monday, July 29), 1946

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Mr. President, one of the finest editorials of the many which have appeared regarding Senator BURTON K. WHEELER was written by Roy A. Roberts, managing editor of the Kansas City Star, and published in the Kansas City Times in its July 19, 1946, issue. I ask unanimous consent that it be printed in the RECORD, together with an editorial from the Hartford Courant.

There being no objection, the editorials were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Kansas City Times of July 19, 1946]

WHEELER WON RESPECT OF HIS ENEMIES WITH HIS HARD-HITTING INDEPENDENCE—SOON AFTER HIS ARRIVAL IN WASHINGTON, THE MONTANAN TURNED HIS FIRE ON ATTORNEY GENERAL HARRY DAUGHERTY IN THE HARDING ADMINISTRATION AND DROVE HIM FROM OFFICE—CLOSE FRIENDSHIP FOR PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT TURNED TO HOSTILITY, RESULTING FROM DIFFERENCES OVER FOREIGN POLICY

(By Roy A. Roberts)

The Senate loses one of its most colorful and sturdiest Members in the defeat of BURTON K. WHEELER in the Montana primaries this week. WHEELER had "innards." He voted the way he saw fit. Sometimes he would be on one side of the fence, sometimes on the other. But no one ever accused him of voting just for politics, for the Montana Senator, erratic and unpredictable, possessed plenty of convictions.

To one who first knew BURT WHEELER when he came to the Senate almost a quarter of a century ago, it seems ironical that his defeat should have been encompassed by a labor-radical combination, for when WHEELER first hit Washington he came with an advance reputation of being a firebrand, a radical and about everything wild, and for a good many years he did nothing to pull down his advance notices. Yet colleagues, even some of the most conservative, who looked upon his political views askance, began to recognize in the fiery Senator a sturdy independence and courage which commanded their respect and affection. Few Senators possessed the esteem of his colleagues that BURT WHEELER earned and kept.

WHEELER had hardly begun to find his way around Washington when the scandals of the Harding administration drew attention.

The new Senator started to probe into the activities of the then attorney general, Harry Daugherty, and the Harding managers struck back by letting loose Bill Burns and a flood of detectives upon WHEELER'S record in Montana. Upon the flimsiest sort of technicalities, Daugherty obtained an indictment of WHEELER in a Federal court. It was supposed to crush the Senator. Instead it only aroused him.

SEEN AS A FRAME-UP

WHEELER went back home and ran his accusers out of court. The whole thing was so flimsy almost the entire Senate, regardless of politics, felt the youthful Senator had been framed. It was a sorry day for Harry Daugherty when he decided upon such tactics with WHEELER. The latter began a crusade against the Department of Justice that resulted in Daugherty being driven from office, Gaston B. Means, one of his henchmen, being sent to prison, and an all-around clean-up. All this made WHEELER in Washington.

When the senior Senator Robert M. La Follette ran as an independent for President in 1924, he asked WHEELER to become his running mate on the Progressive ticket. WHEELER did so and many thought he had encompassed his own political ruin. Coolidge swept the Nation. The La Follette-Wheeler ticket ran a poor third. But when he came up for reelection, WHEELER was returned to his seat in the Senate as a Democrat.

For years WHEELER was a close friend and associate of Senator George Norris, of Nebraska. He was regarded as an extreme liberal or Progressive, to put it mildly. His influence was widely felt in the Senate. As a member of the Interstate Commerce Committee, and later its chairman, WHEELER became a specialist on railroad law. Later he was responsible for all the radio legislation that was written. He was regarded as one of the strong men of the Senate. He made a lot of enemies but even his worst foe respected his integrity and ability.

MODEST LIFE IN WASHINGTON

The Wheelers lived modestly in Washington. The Senator had a sizable family to educate and he lived within his income, occasionally going out on the lecture platform to augment it. Mrs. Wheeler was his closest companion. She took a deep interest in public affairs, rather than society, and frequently could be seen in the Senate gallery when debates were on, or attending committee hearings. It was a privilege to be invited to the Wheeler home, where the dinner table conservation always was interesting and instructive.

Wheeler was one of the most severe critics President Herbert Hoover had. When the late Franklin D. Roosevelt got in the fight for the Democratic nomination in 1932, WHEELER was one of his earliest supporters. During the dramatic convention in Chicago, WHEELER was floor manager of the Roosevelt forces and was regarded as one of the closest friends and advisers the new President had. Everyone looked upon WHEELER as the Roosevelt spokesman in the Senate and many thought he would wind up as Chief Justice. The Montanan was at the pinnacle of his power in the early days of the New Deal, helping run the legislation through Congress.

But this close friendship was not to last. F. D. R. wanted followers, not associates. He brought his own intimate New Deal circle about him. WHEELER, temperamentally, was not fitted to be a subservient lieutenant of anybody. He had views of his own, and he clung to them. Washington began to notice that WHEELER was being left out of the White House inner group. It was natural that sharp differences of opinion should arise and they did. F. D. R. took for granted that WHEELER would just go along, but the Senator wasn't that type. Soon friction grew to coolness. WHEELER was bitterly opposed to a third term. He was bitterly opposed to the Supreme Court packing. He furnished much of the strategy that led to the defeat of the court measure.

But it was over foreign affairs that the White House and WHEELER eventually came to an impasse. WHEELER was bitterly opposed to this Nation entering World War II. While he was not an outright America Firster, he did join the group that stumped the Nation trying to rouse sentiment against going into war. He steadfastly opposed most of the prewar measures, which he felt inevitably led to war. WHEELER was an extreme nationalist. While some thought his antipathy toward Roosevelt colored his views and influenced his position, those who knew the Senator intimately recognized the genuineness of his convictions and the depth of his feeling. Even if it meant political ruin, he felt he could not do otherwise.

Through all these years, WHEELER, for the most part, remained progressive or liberal on domestic issues. Sometimes he felt the New Deal proposals went too far and he did not hesitate to say so. He could not be pushed around by the CIO or PAC. So the latter group began to mark him down as antiadministration and anti-New Deal and a traitor to the labor cause when most of his votes were friendly to liberal legislation. When Harry S. Truman came to the Senate an unknown, he was assigned to the Interstate Commerce Committee. WHEELER liked him and took him under his wing. He probably did more for Truman than any other Senator and a genuine and lasting friendship grew between the two. It was noticeable that after Truman replaced F. D. R. in the White House, WHEELER wasn't nearly as stiff on international matters as he had been before. He did his level best to go along with Truman and the President went out of his way to endorse WHEELER for renomination, even though the issue was known to be very doubtful.

Whether WHEELER'S defeat for nomination will end his career or he will accept a Federal appointment from his friend, the President, remains to be seen. It's a cinch President Truman would like to give him almost anything he wants. But WHEELER is such an independent cuss, many of his friends doubt if the officeholder routine will appeal to him.

[From the Hartford Courant of July 19, 1946]

A FEARLESS SENATOR

To what extent Senator BURTON K. WHEELER'S isolationism entered into his defeat by Leif Erickson for the Montana Democratic senatorial nomination is problematical in view of the other factors that characterized a heated campaign. To conclude that his attitude on the foreign policies of the Roosevelt and Truman administrations was responsible for his undoing, as in the case of Senator SHIPSTEAD, of Minnesota, is to ignore the success in the primaries of Senator HUGH A. BUTLER, of Nebraska, and WILLIAM LANGER, of North Dakota, both of whom as Republicans took much the same position on this issue as Senator WHEELER.

In any primary or election contest it is always difficult to ascribe the result to any one cause. Close observers of this Montana primary are in general agreement that despite the tacit endorsement of Senator WHEELER by President Truman, the Senator was the victim of a choice assortment of political enemies, some of whom stopped at nothing to bring about his defeat. It was all in all a pretty dirty campaign, although in his more radical days the Senator himself was by no means genteel in the political methods he employed.

But whatever satisfaction may be taken in the fact that Senator WHEELER'S isolationism was not without consequence in his overthrow, dispassionate judges of his senatorial career, covering nearly a quarter of a century, must give him credit for ability, independence and courage of a high order. It was he who in his first term took the lead in demanding a thorough investigation of the Teapot Dome affair. Scarcely any matter came up in the Senate on which he did not express himself with utter fearlessness, even though he antagonized his own party in so doing. Particularly was this true of the battle he waged against President Roosevelt's proposal to reorganize the judicial branch of the Government, which involved packing the Supreme Court to insure approval of the administration's policies.

The country owes a deep debt of gratitude to Senator WHEELER for the vigor and determination with which he attacked this measure. His arguments had not a little to do with the report of the Senate Judiciary Committee, which declared that the proposal "should be so emphatically rejected that its parallel will never again be presented to the free representatives of the free people of America."

Investigation of Wall Street Banks

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. JAMES E. MURRAY
OF MONTANA
IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES

Friday, August 2 (legislative day of Monday, July 29), 1946

Mr. MURRAY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the Appendix of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD a very interesting article appearing in the weekly newsletter, In Fact, in the issue of August 5, 1946, a publication devoted to the exposure of economic concentration and the spread of monopoly in America.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

SECRET UNITED STATES INVESTIGATION OF WALL STREET BANKS SEEKS TO BREAK MONOPOLY HOLD ON NATION'S COMMERCE—DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE INDICTS 100 BIG FIRMS—"TOOL UNION" EXPOSED

Special agents of the Department of Justice have been investigating alleged illegal activities of the Nation's largest investment banks for more than a year and expect to present an antitrust case to a Federal grand jury sometime this fall.

Involved in the investigation are the real economic barons of the country—men who manipulate gigantic corporations, railroads, utilities, and banks like so many puppets on a string, as well as their powerful Wall Street empires.

Should the Government succeed in cracking this financial fortress, it would mean a smashing victory for democratic groups which seek to prevent the Nation from falling under the complete domination of big business which, in Germany and Italy, imposed fascism on the people.

MORGAN, MELLON, OTHER EMPIRES INVOLVED

Under scrutiny are the six most powerful private banks in the Nation. They are Morgan, Stanley & Co.; First Boston Corp; Dillon, Read & Co.; Kuhn, Loeb & Co.; Smith, Barney & Co., and Blyth & Co., Inc. Also involved are the smaller but equally powerful firms of Mellon Securities Corp.; Lazard Freres; Lehman Bros.; Kidder, Peabody & Co.; Halsey, Stuart & Co.; Goldman, Sachs & Co.; Stone & Webster Securities Corp.; and scores of others.

The amount of money controlled by these firms is computed in the multibillions. Very imcomplete returns for the first 6 months of this year, ending June 30, showed that the investment banks handled more than $4,465,800,000. The last accurate, published official figure (TNEC Monograph 24) showed they handled a total of $36,100,000,000 in the 5-year period from 1934 to 1939.

BARONS CONTROL COMMERCE, FIX PRICES

With these huge sums of money, the Department of Justice agents allege, the banks maintain a stranglehold on the Nation's commerce. They decide which industries shall be expanded, regulate areas of competition and monopoly, fix prices, decide which technological improvements shall be made available to the public and which shall be suppressed.

Within the investment banking field itself, the Government seeks to prove, there is an agreement that no bank shall encroach on another's preserve. There is little or no competition as a result of this agreement, and banks large and small try to curry favor with the giants in the field, particularly with the House of Morgan.

Example of kowtowing is found in a statement by the president of Blyth & Co., itself one of the largest, that his firm maintains a large account with J. P. Morgan in order to "try to get under the tent in that way." That admission was uncovered by Washington investigators during the monopoly hearings.

PROBERS FEAR POLITICAL PRESSURE

Although the agents charged with the inquiry are proceeding on the assumption that they will be able to present their case to a grand jury for either criminal or civil action, there is an undercurrent of fear that political pressure from Washington may result in the abandonment of the investigation.

Basis for this fear is the recent intervention by a member of President Truman's cabinet in quashing, perhaps permanently, an indictment charging 37 New York City banks, insurance companies, and mortgage and trust firms with a conspiracy to control the mortgage money market in the Nation's largest city. Involved in this action were 3 Morgan-controlled banks. The Cabinet member who reportedly intervened was John Snyder, Secretary of the Treasury, and Truman's bosom pal. He is alleged to have induced Attorney General Tom Clark to call off his sleuths after they had prepared an airtight case showing that the bank conspiracy blocked construction of new buildings and apartment dwellings, particularly in middle and low-income group areas.

The investment banking probe strikes nearer the Cabinet. Navy Secretary James Forrestal was a leading member of the Dillon, Read firm, which is now being investigated. Several other men who came to Washington from Wall Street during the war and still hold important Federal positions are also identified with the investment banks under investigation. One of these men is Ferdinand Eberstadt, a member of Bernard Baruch's Atomic Energy Commission, whose firm is also on the Justice Department's list.

"UNHOLY ALLIANCES" MOCK FREE ENTERPRISE

The classical function of an investment bank is to buy stocks and bonds from corporations and sell them to savers and savings institutions, thus providing industry with capital and investors with securities. In practice, however, the banks go far beyond that. According to complaints being investigated by the Federal agents, the banks, in numerous instances, control entire industries, do not wait for a corporation to initiate a stock or bond issue but propose it themselves.

Corporations which seek to break away from the tentacles of a particular bank find that no other investment house will touch them, and will actually reject new business. As a reward for its loyalty, the smaller investment house may be included in new syndicates being formed, is cut in on new deals, becomes part of the family.

This absence of competition has resulted in higher interest rates, all, of course, at the ultimate expense of the consumer.

A Federal law passed a decade ago to curb abuses has required competitive bidding for Federal, State, and municipal securities and for railway equipment trust certificates. Shortly after the law was passed, competition brought interest rates down from almost $2 per $100 to 43 cents. Inasmuch as these issues total millions of dollars, this interest reduction is staggering. There is no competitive bidding, however, for stocks and bonds.

ARMSTRONG CORK CO. VICTIM OF COMBINE

One of the cases being studied by the Federal probers, it was learned, concerns Armstrong Cork Co. After years of dealing with the Guaranty Co., the Armstrong corporation sought to float a new issue through the firm of Kuhn, Loeb. The overture was rejected, Kuhn, Loeb declaring that the Guaranty Co. had been succeeded by E. B. Smith & Co. and it "did not wish to poach on their preserves."

Another indication that the major investment banks divide up the field and do not try to underbid each other concerns Goldman, Sachs & Co. and Lehman Bros. The monopoly investigation received proof (TNEC Monograph 24) that these two firms had entered into a written agreement sharing specific firms between them. This agreement, drawn up by Herbert Lehman, former Governor of New York, provided that "our joint relation to all companies previously financed by the two houses shall remain exactly as it had been in the past." It stipulated that Goldman, Sachs was to handle 41 specific corporations, Lehman Bros. 19, 60 others were to be shared equally, and no agreement was reached on the financing of National Dairy Products Corp., named last month in the suppressed monopoly report as the largest cheese producer in the Nation.

TELEPHONE COMPANY CONTROLLED BY MORGAN

As proof of collaboration among the investment banks, the probers are also studying records of the financing of American Telephone & Telegraph Co. and its affiliates. Records since 1910 reveal, that of at least 25 separate stock and bond issues, the Morgan Co. handled every transaction, allowing a few favored banks to join with it in the syndicate but always retaining the same degree of participation for each. Official figures from the Securities and Exchange Commission records show that the Morgan Co. reserved for itself 20 percent of all transactions, and allocated the balance as follows:

First National Bank, 10 percent; National City Co., 10 percent; Kuhn, Loeb, 10.75 percent; Kidder, Peabody Co., 29.75 percent; Harris, Forbes Co., 5 percent; Lee Higginson Corp., 5 percent; Guaranty Co., 4.75 percent; Bankers Trust, 4.75 percent.

This allocation is known in the trade as a "historical relationship" and the Federal agents are amassing evidence proving that this relationship is an "unholy combination" in restraint of free trade, removes competition, sends stock and bond prices up, is a violation of existing antitrust laws.

Similar documentation exists in Morgan's control of several dozen United States industries, including United States Steel, General Electric, Kennecott Copper, Phelps Dodge, and numerous railroads and utilities.

Commenting on the tight combination of controlling banks, the monopoly report said:

"Apparently, the power to make these decisions is in the hands of a small inner circle of large firms and presumably the members of this circle grant recognition to those bankers whose cooperation is assured."

HOW BIG SHOTS DIVIDE THE FIELD

Best official example of the manner in which the investment field is dominated is gleaned from these official figures:

Of 730 members of the Investment Bankers Association, 38 of them managed 91 percent of the Nation's business. Of these 38 firms, 6 Wall Street banks did 57 percent of the total. Fourteen other New York firms accounted for 21 percent of the total and 18 firms outside of New York but with Wall Street ties accounted for 12 percent. The remaining 692 companies did a total of 9 percent of the business.

The "Big Six" and the extent of their participation is listed as follows:

Morgan Stanley & Co., $2,142,000,000, 23.2 percent of total.

First Boston Corp., $986,000,000, 10 percent of total.

Dillon, Read & Co., $680,000,000, 7.4 percent of total.

Kuhn, Loeb & Co., $618,000,000, 6.7 percent of total.

Smith, Barney & Co., $472,000,000, 5.1 percent of total.

Blyth & Co., $388,000,000, 4.2 percent of total.

These figures, incidentally, are only a fraction of the total handled, the amount of money representing the $9,600,000,000 in securities registered with the SEC. An additional $26,500,000,000 was not required to be registered with SEC, therefore the extent of these firms' participation in those securities is not known officially. However, Federal investigators allege that the Big Six accounted for more than 75 percent of that total.

HERE IS WHAT GOVERNMENT CHARGES

When the Department of Justice presents its case to the grand jury—providing the whole investigation is not quashed—it will charge that:

Each investment house has its own territory where others do not intrude.

Investment banks do not solicit business from a corporation dealing with another firm.

They do not bid on securities that have been offered to another firm.

Same groups, syndicates, and combinations underwrite the same corporations.

The result of all of this is to stifle competition, not only in the banking field, but in the development of industry.

In one case, a drug company, wishing to expand and issue a new product, consulted with the banking syndicate handling its account. Before agreeing to supply the required capital, the syndicate investigated to see whether this expansion would harm other drug companies it was financing, finally decided that the firm could expand but that it could not sell its new product in specified areas because it would compete with the other drug firms. This allocation of markets prevented competition, kept prices up, was another victory for monopoly at the expense of the public.

Agents preparing this antitrust case are convinced that its successful prosecution can strike at the root of the entire monopoly problem, remove artificial barriers to free competition, result in lower prices to consumers for thousands of products, save billions of dollars for the public.

Should political pressure succeed in quashing the case, the money lenders will be more firmly entrenched than ever, will continue to ride roughshod over the general welfare of the people.

ONE HUNDRED LEADING FIRMS INDICTED AS MONOPOLIES

The congressional errand boys of big business are cooperating with the Nation's monopolists to keep the Department of Justice's Antitrust Division from breaking their grip on the country's economy.

Despite repeated pleas from responsible Federal officials, Congress originally voted to cut $200,000 from the already modest budget request of the Division. By a narrow margin, it later voted to restore the amount.

This was done in the face of official facts proving that "never before in the 55-year history of antitrust enforcement has the danger of concentration of economic controls assumed such vital significance and such grave proportions."

"FRIENDS" KILLING "FREE ENTERPRISE"

The men who did most to cut the antitrust appropriation were the ones who bleat loudest about preserving free enterprise. Actually, they do not wish free enterprise, nor is there free enterprise in the United States. The recent monopoly report, suppressed by virtually every large paper in the Nation but published by In Fact (July 15, 22) offered official proof that industry-imposed collectivism is upon us. The secret investigation of investment banks exposed in this issue is further proof of the danger to the so-called "American way of life" from big business.

Standing between the people and economic royalists are the 327 employees of the antitrust division. Of these, only 150 are lawyers and 29 are specialists in various fields. The rest are clerks, typists, other office help. Like a David going out to battle a Goliath, these men are seeking to restore a degree of competition in the Nation's economic life and give its citizens a small measure of the "free enterprise" they are told they enjoy but actually do not possess.

EVERY CITIZEN VICTIMIZED BY TRUSTS

There are now pending more than 100 antitrust cases brought by the Government against big business. Every person who eats, drinks, smokes, uses electricity, or electrical appliances, rides a train or a bus, wears glasses, goes to the movies, owns an automobile, uses pots or pans is a victim of monopoly. This can be proved. The pending antitrust cases cover all of those fields—and many more. Not one day passes without every citizen paying some kind of tribute to one of the many trusts now under indictment by the Government.

During the war, big business refused to produce war goods unless the antitrust actions against them were laid aside or dropped. The result was that monopolists became even more entrenched during the years of struggle.

Today, when the Government is ready to proceed against them, their puppets in Congress try to cut the antitrust appropriation, their helpers in Government exert pressure to prevent indictments, their strengh is sufficient to evade any kind of punishment.

BIG BUSINESS IS BRAZEN—ATTORNEY GENERAL

Convinced that their own power is greater than the Government and that they are above the law, big business has come to regard the antitrust department as nothing more than a gadfly. This is so because the existing law is written to favor monopolists—they rarely are punished with jail sentences, more often are let off with a reprimand and a promise, rarely kept, not to do it again. Commenting on the apparent brazenness of big business in paying little attention to antitrust actions, Attorney General Tom Clark told a Senate Subcommittee on Appropriations (May 31) that "the payment of fines in a criminal suit is considered by many corporations as part of the fixed expenses of doing business."

"In other words, they consider the fine a license fee to continue the illegal practices, the public, as usual, footing the bill," he said.

Not generally known is the record number of major corporations whose activities the Government contends are illegal. This weekly asked the Attorney General's office for a complete list of all pending antitrust cases. The reply read like a who's who of American business.

HERE IS LIST OF ACCUSED FIRMS

Among the more than 100 companies awaiting trial or other action, but already indicted for illegal activities, are:

Allegheny Ludlum Steel Corp., Aluminum Co. of America, American Locomotive Co., American Optical Co., American Meat Institute, American Petroleum Institute, Armour & Co., Chrysler Corp., Cudahy Packing Co., Dow Chemical Co., General Aniline & Film Corp., General Electric Co., Great Atlantic & Pacific Co., Hartford-Empire Co., Monsanto Chemical Co., Pacific Greyhound Lines, Swift & Co., United States Gypsum, National Association of Retail Druggists, Association of American Railroads, Allied Chemical & Dye Corp., American Brass Co., American Magnesium Corp., American Tobacco Co., Bausch & Lomb Optical Co., Columbia Gas & Electric Co., Diamond Match Co., Ford Motor Co., General Dyestuff Corp., General Motors Corp., Hamilton Watch Corp., Libbey-Owens-Ford Glass Co., National Lead Co., Paramount Pictures, Inc., Timken-Detroit Axle Co., Westinghouse Electric Co., Cement Institute.

The indictments of the above firms and the other lesser known ones charge one or more of the following:

Restraining trade and distribution, suppressing competition, forming illegal combinations, conspiring to fix retail prices, engaging in price discrimination, monopolizing manufacturing or trade, dividing and allocating territories among members of the group, fixing prices through basing-point systems, creating patent pools, and forming restrictive licensing agreements.

ATOMIC ENERGY INVOLVED IN NEW SUIT

A new suit filed in July charged that monopolists had secured a stranglehold on vanadium, one of the ores essential in the development of atomic energy. Indicted by a Federal grand jury in Denver on a charge of throttling all competition by a price-fixing monopoly were the Vanadium Corp. and Union Carbon & Carbide Corp., four of their subsidiaries, and five executives. The jury charged that these two firms and their allies conspired to apportion all business between themselves and to sell vanadium products to the public at arbitrary and uniform prices. The two companies control 95 percent of United States vanadium ore deposits, 99 percent of all vanadium oxide sold, and 100 percent of ferrovanadium.

The Union Carbon & Carbide Corp. was one of the key firms in the development of the atomic bomb. The Vanadium Corp., the indictment charged, utilized its wartime position as agent for the Federal Metal Reserves Corporation to eliminate competition from small mills.

TRUSTS AND CARTELS HURT WAR EFFORT

This weekly often charged, during the war, that the trusts and cartels had done much harm to the Nation's war effort. They delayed all-out production of war goods, their international agreements with the Nazis and Japanese made a mockery of all wartime secrets, their elimination of all competition made the Nation and its Allies dependent upon the productive capacity of individual corporations. As a result, the Government had to spend billions to build new plants, the speed and haste resulted in such scandals as the current Garsson-May case being publicized by the Mead committee in Washington.

During the debate on the Antitrust Division appropriation, Senator ROBERT LA FOLLETTE, Jr., corroborated most of In Fact's wartime exposures. He said (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, p. 7296):

"The full story of the war and cartels remains to be told. * * * This much is certain. For all our vaunted technological genius and bountiful supply of raw materials, we were nearly impotent early in the war because of shortages directly attributable to monopolies and international cartels.

"Aluminum, magnesium, rubber, optical goods, drugs, and medicines were especially critical. Others were: Explosives, paints, nylons, plastics, matches, diamonds, storage batteries, tanning extracts, chemicals, photographic supplies, and petroleum products. It is probable that further cartel-controlled products will be discovered in the examination of confiscated industrial records in Germany and Japan."

"TOOL OWNERS UNION" EXPOSED AS BIG BUSINESS "FRONT"

The leaders of the National Association of Manufacturers have long coveted a mass organization whose members could be enlisted in a "crusade" to preserve "free enterprise" and also counteract the work of the Political Action Committee. After experimenting with several organizations, among them the pro-Fascist American Action Committee exposed by this weekly (January 28), they have found a group which seems to suit their purposes.

It is called the Tool Owners Union. It was founded early this year in Lexington, Mass., as a purely local group. Since obtaining NAM and big business approval, it has begun a national advertising campaign throughout the country to recruit millions of members. Its advantage to the NAM is that its directors are little known and are not identified with any pro-Fascist groups, thereby making them less vulnerable to attack and criticism. It also can be passed off as a "grass roots" movement. Present plans call for the big business manipulators to remain hidden in the background while the active organizers front for them.

WAGNER ACT, LIBERAL CONGRESSMEN TARGETS

Its aims are similar to those announced by the American Action Committee before it was exposed as a haven for pro-Fascists like Merwin K. Hart and Upton Close. Its two principal aims are to curb organized labor by amending the Wagner Act and to defeat at the polls any Congressman who does not respond to the organization's wishes.

More subtle than most antilabor groups, the Tool Owners are trying to recruit everyone who owns property, is in business, has a savings account or an insurance policy, or, particularly, is in a position to influence others, singling out for special membership anyone who is "a church pastor or officer of a college or school." Exempted from membership are any Federal, State, and city officials and "any officer and employee of organizations hostile to our purpose."

FREE ENTERPRISE SHOULD BE A RELIGION

The big business campaign to form a new mass organization was broached to NAM and United States Chamber of Commerce leaders shortly after President Roosevelt died. In letters to Walter D. Fuller, president of Curtis Publishing Co. (Saturday Evening Post), and Eric Johnston, then president of the United States Chamber of Commerce, Hector Lazo, public relations director for the Loose-Wiles Biscuit Co., suggested that such an organization "might probably unite millions of people" who would be taught "what free enterprise is, what it has done, and what it can do and the conditions under which it can do this." The name Lazo suggested for the group was "American Educational Committee."

In one of his letters, a copy of which is in this weekly's possession, Lazo wrote:

"I am completely and thoroughly convinced that this job cannot be done by either the United States Chamber of Commerce or the NAM, or by either of these two organizations working with their individual identities. It must be done through a new organization, of course, backed by business. * * * It must be adequately staffed and adequately financed to do an educational job. CIO, through its PAC, has so far outstripped us. * * * We must boldly step into the picture or we will be responsible for the failure of private enterprise to live in America where it should, above all things, be * * * a religion with us."

This weekly called Lazo and asked what had become of his project for big business. His reply was:

"The tool owners union is doing the job I suggested."

FOUNDER SPONSORED DENNIS BROADCASTS

Self-appointed president of tool owners union is Allen W. Rucker, a Massachusetts industrial consultant for New England corporations. The idea for the tool owners union was inspired, he alleges, from an economic primer, How We Live, written by two members of the American Economic Foundation, one of whom, Richard S. Rimanoczy, is now on the board of founders of tool owners "to see that the idea is not misused in any way." The foundation sponsors the Wake Up America forum which has featured Rucker and also Lawrence Dennis, the proponent of American fascism now awaiting trial for alleged sedition and recently accused at the Nuremberg trial in Germany of receiving $15,000 from the Nazis to propagandize for them in this country.

Since obtaining the approval of big business, the organization has advertised for members in various papers in New York, Chicago, Boston, Philadelphia, and Baltimore. It contemplates extending its campaign to the Pacific Coast in the fall, as well as renewing it in other large cities.

TOOL OWNER CONCEPT BASED ON FRAUD

The entire concept that organized labor constitutes a threat to free enterprise, as advanced by the tool owners, is a fraud. This was proved by the recent Senate report on monopoly control printed by this weekly (July 15, 22) showing that the real danger to the American way of life came from big business which was increasing its grip upon the Nation's economic life. Example, 63 corporations had sufficient liquid assets to buy up 71,700 corporations, 94 percent of the total in the land. Further proof of fraud is in the preceding story on the 100 anti-trust indictments of big business.

Despite this fact, the tool owners speak of restoring the balance, helping property owners regain their rights, attack bureaucrats and labor leaders, pretend that big business is innocent of any encroachment on free enterprise and that the Government must cease fettering the rugged individualist.

In his Call to Action, Rucker blames strikes for breeding ruinous inflation, completely ignoring the role of NAM in weakening OPA, speaks of bond and stockholders as forgotten men and women, promises all tool owners, i. e., property owners, that with their organized strength they can compel Congressmen to obey their wishes.

Strategy of the tool owners is divided into two main parts. First, the organizing drive, secondly, the political pressure campaign. The first is now in progress. The announced goal is millions of men and women throughout the country, at a membership of $1 to $5 annually. Each newspaper ad contains several coupons for applications for membership. The organization will make no effort to participate in the 1946 congressional elections but does expect, by 1948, to be a recognized force in the Nation.

It promises its members it will represent them at congressional hearings, will inform them of their Representatives attitude toward their problems, will oppose for reelection any Congressman whose record they regard as unsatisfactory.

Although the organization refuses to divulge its membership or a list of its backers, it claims that its paid ads have elicited wide response, is confident that the organization will grow.

If it does grow, then big business will have built its mass organization and will have succeeded in its campaign to have the people work against their own best interests.

A Federal Germany

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. WILLIAM LANGER

OF NORTH DAKOTA

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES

Friday, August 2 (legislative day of Monday, July 29), 1946

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the Appendix of the RECORD a statement entitled "A Federal Germany?" by Alexander Boeker, published in the July 10, 1946, issue of Human Events.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

A FEDERAL GERMANY?

(By Alexander Boeker)

A series of inspired stories has recently indicated that the Governments of the United States and Great Britain are contemplating the creation of a loosely federalized Germany, in contrast with the universal trend toward greater centralization of governmental powers. Details of these plans have not yet been revealed officially, but enough has leaked out to permit preliminary evaluation.

The chorus of approval emanating from American commentators and columnists—British comments have been more guarded—indicates that "decentralization" of Germany may become the latest fad and cure-all, rivaling last year's "de-industrialization."

This tendency has been particularly noticeable since Walter Lippmann, the Pontifex Maximus of American journalism, returned from Europe and stated that Russia and Britain, in anticipation of another war, were developing their zones in Germany into bulwarks against each other. Mr. Lippmann concluded—inspired, it is said, by General de Gaulle—that the only way to prevent a third world war is to turn Germany into a federation of states, sufficiently loose to be useless as an outpost for either Russian or British power.

The suggestion of a tenuous federation of some 10 to 15 German States has been welcomed by many as an escape from the impasse of inter-Allied rivalry over the control of Germany. It is argued that this solution might help eventually to bridge the gap now rapidly developing between the democratized western zones of occupation and the Sovietized Russian zone. At worst, it is said, it could be made to work without Russia. This argument in itself is an admission of the total failure of Allied statesmanship in the treatment of Germany. The complete elimination of Germany as a power factor, through unconditional surrender, has finally resulted in the head-on clash of the victorious nations, which many had foreseen. It is at least doubtful whether the federalization proposal will mitigate this clash.

If disappointment, similar to that which so quickly followed the Morgenthau de-industrialization plan, is to be avoided, the federalization program should be examined critically while there is still time.

In the first place, decentralization implies the existence of government whose structure is to be loosened. In fact, however, the German state is today an entity only on paper. Politically and economically it has reached a stage of dissolution exceeding even that of the Germanic Confederation, which followed the Napoleonic Wars. The problem, therefore, is not how this body should be further dismembered but whether, to what extent, and in what form it should be reintegrated.

II

The creation of a federal Germany is advocated on a variety of grounds. Some, fearing Soviet control, centrally exercised from Berlin, see in it a device to keep Soviet influences out of the western half of the country. Others, desirous of speeding the formation of a western bloc, view federalization as a compromise formula between French desire to detach the Rhineland and the Ruhr and British opposition to that dismemberment. Those who are still in a state of Prussophobia, rather than Russophobia, regard federalization as a safeguard against the unlikely contingency of future German aggression.

Thinking on this subject would be much clearer if we distinguished sharply between interim device and long-range objective.

As a transitional solution, the federal plan would permit the early establishment of interzonal administrative and policy-making organs. It would speed the transfer of intricate administrative mechanisms from an inevitably clumsy military machine to more competent civilian hands. It would perhaps temporarily check the growth of Communist influence in the West. It might—and this could be its most beneficial feature—reconcile all but the most intransigent French opinion to the retention of the Rhine and Ruhr within the body politic of Germany, thus eliminating the danger of a hopeless split within western Europe.

Russia has already unmistakably indicated through its press and radio that it is opposed to the federal organization of Germany. Russian opposition, stripped of camouflage, is based on the supposition that a federal structure will impede the westward spread of communism and might lead to the incorporation of the industrial heart of Germany into a western bloc.

It is clear, therefore, that the federal proposal, far from healing the breech between Russia and the Western Powers, is likely to accentuate that calamity. The decentralization plan will almost certainly heighten Moscow's determination to integrate the eastern half of Germany into its sphere, and to use the German desire for national unity as leverage to combat Anglo-American influence in the western zones.

III

As a long-range objective, the value of a federal reorganization of Germany depends wholly on the distribution of power between central governments and federal states.

Much ill-informed comment has lately appeared concerning the supposedly overcentralized character of the Bismarck and Weimar constitutions. As a matter of fact, the Bismarckian Reich started out by severely limiting the central government's powers, and became more centralized only as a result of democratic pressures. The Reichstag championed national unity; the princes were the defenders of states' rights. In the Weimar Republic, every State had its separate parliament and its separate police power, as in the American Union. Germany had, except for Switzerland, the least centralized of all European national governments. Extreme centralization set in only under Hitler.

We need not, therefor, go too far back in history to find guidance for the reconstruction of Germany. The Weimar Republic itself intended to destroy the preponderance of the Prussian State and to reconstitute its component parts as separate provinces within the Reich. American policy framers could do worse than to study these proposals of 1928 and 1929.

A German customs union as the only link between a dozen German states, suggested recently by Mr. Sumner Welles, would inevitably tend back toward a unitary government, as did the Zollverein in the early nineteenth century, which paved the way for the political unification of 1871. A successful customs union would require wide powers of legislation in the fields of industry, agriculture, and labor. It would have to control fiscal policies internally as well as externally. Economic and political policies cannot be permanently divorced.

Through defeat and dissolution Germany salvaged a unified legal system, the work of generations of its best minds. A central judicial power will be required to maintain this unity. The alternative is Balkanization. A uniform denazification policy can be carried out only if certain police powers reside with the central government.

Emphasis on integration, as well as on decentralization, is demanded by common sense and good statesmanship. The test case is location of the control of foreign policy.

IV

The cataclysmic events of the last few years have made certain that Germany's political structure will never again be what it was.

For six centuries two eastern German states, Austria and Prussia, successfully maintained German unity by using their superior strength to keep the smaller states in line. Now Austria has been excluded once more from the German community by the verdict of the victors. The annihilation of Prussia is without parallel in modern history. Its most historic provinces have been divided up between Soviet Russia and Soviet-Poland, the inhabitants expelled from their homes. Their state is comparable only to that of the Armenians under the Turks, or the Jews under Hitler. The haters of Prussia have truly had their day of revenge. Those who continue to bait Prussia are beating a corpse.

The western provinces of Prussia, more recently acquired—the Rhineland, Westphalia, Hanover, etc.—are likely to reemerge from the catastrophe as separate units, under a central German Government. There will no longer be one dominating German state within the Reich. The new Germany, unless reorganized under Soviet totalitarian auspices, will therefore be an association of equals. France, freed from fear of Prussia, may well modify its policies toward Germany.

Most Germans will welcome this development. But most Germans will also be passionately opposed to the destruction of national unity and the detachment of historic provinces. Generations of German school children have learned that for centuries the development of their country was gravely hampered by the lack of a sufficiently strong central government. No Allied textbooks can eradicate this lesson of history.

In the long run, no plan for the future of Germany will be workable unless it has the free consent of the German people. The Soviet leaders have shown keen appreciation of this. With notable political foresight they have instructed the German Communist Party to make "national unity" one of its principal rallying cries.

On June 18, the Russian press prominently featured an article on the plans for a federal Germany in which it was said:

"Do they [Britain and the United States] intend to give any attention to the opinion of the German people, or do they intend to impose upon Germany an alien will in this most fundamental question of her national existence?"

No German can have read this sentence without a quickening of the heart. And no American nor British statesman can afford to overlook the portent which it carries.

Stockholdings in Domestic Air Carriers

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. RICHARD F. HARLESS

OF ARIZONA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, August 2, 1946

Mr. HARLESS of Arizona. Mr. Speaker, for some time it has been my privilege to serve on the Aviation Subcommittee of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce of the House of Representatives. Among other things, this committee has been concerned with the promotion and development of domestic air transportation by trunk lines together with the certification of new feeder lines by the Civil Aeronautics Board throughout the Nation. Our subcommittee has made various studies of air transportation in connection with this work and as a part of those studies, I have had compiled from the records of the Securities and Exchange Commission, data concerning large stockholdings in domestic air carriers. Inasmuch as this is a matter of widespread interest, I ask consent to have this data printed in the Appendix of the RECORD.

Approximate market value and stockholdings of large stockholders in air lines

Use of Surplus Property Credits Abroad for the Exchange of Students

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. J. WILLIAM FULBRIGHT
OF ARKANSAS
IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES
Friday, August 2 (legislative day of Monday, July 29), 1946

Mr. FULBRIGHT. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the Appendix of the RECORD a statement which I made yesterday regarding Senate bill 1636, which the President signed yesterday, and I also include a statement by Assistant Secretary of State William Benton on the same subject.

There being no objection, the statements were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATEMENT OF SENATOR J. W. FULBRIGHT, OF ARKANSAS, REGARDING S. 1636

WASHINGTON, D. C., August 1, 1946.—The purpose of this act is to provide a means by which the returns from the sale of surplus materials abroad might accrue to the best interest of America. After World War I, war debts incurred by foreign nations became a source of irritation and brought about ill-feeling and a disruption in the reestablishment of trade and commerce and affected adversely our political relations with these nations. The program contemplated under this act will be helpful in avoiding a recurrence of these conditions.

It is my firm belief, a belief based on personal experience, that the interchange of students between countries can play a major role in helping to break down mutual misunderstandings and in furthering the kind of knowledge that leads to mutual confidence. No visitor or traveler can gain as much appreciation of the way and thought of living of foreigners as students can who actually live in the foreign country while they learn. We all now know that no country is far away in the age of airplanes. The necessity for increasing our understanding of others and their understanding of us has a meaning that it has never had in the past. The adoption of this program by the Congress and its approval by the President is a vital counterpart of the steps we are taking to increase our participation in and our understanding of world affairs.

An excellent precedent for this measure is our experience with the educational foundation set up with the indemnities from the Boxer Rebellion. There is no question about the great benefits of mutual understanding that have accrued to this country and to China through the use of those funds for the financing of Chinese students in American educational institutions. It is my own belief that that gesture, and the actual associations that grew out of it, are to a great extent responsible for the friendly feelings and cooperation that has existed during the recent war.

Another principal and very valuable precedent is the experience of the Belgian-American Educational Foundation, which was organized right after the last war. Mr. Herbert Hoover had a great deal to do with that foundation which took the money that was left from the relief commission, principally in Belgium, and devoted it to educational purposes. He pointed out at the hearings that at the outbreak of World War II nearly one-quarter of the teaching and research faculty of the Belgian universities had been graduate students in American colleges, and one prime minister and six cabinet members had likewise done graduate work in American universities. A number of American and Belgian professors and specialists have been exchanged between our American and Belgian universities under this foundation. Mr. Hoover stated that he doubted whether there is a country in Europe where the ideals and purposes of the American people are so well understood and so respected as they are in Belgium, and, although Belgium is a small country there is a much greater understanding of it and respect for it in the United States than for some larger and more powerful states.

I am sure that the provisions of this act will prove sufficiently beneficial, as these other experiences have, that it will become a major activity for the promotion of understanding and good will among these nations, which is the major objective of our Government in international affairs.

STATEMENT BY ASSISTANT SECRETARY WILLIAM BENTON ON THE FULBRIGHT BILL

A step of great long-range significance for the advancement of international understanding was taken today when the President signed an act of Congress, introduced by Senator FULBRIGHT, of Arkansas, which authorizes the Department of State to use some of the proceeds from surplus-property sales abroad for exchanges of students and other educational activities.

The bill provides that up to $20,000,000 can be earmarked for educational exchanges with any country which buys surplus property, and up to $1,000,000 can be spent each year in each country where such an agreement is made. Thus tens of millions of dollars should become available under this bill, over a period of years.

The exchange of students and scholars is, in my judgment, the surest single method, over the decades, for promoting understanding among peoples. The activities of the press, radio, and films are indispensable in the exchange of current information among countries; but the effect of current developments is often ephemeral, and news is often misunderstood for lack of background and context. The solid background acquired by those who study outside of their own countries can provide the basis for truer understanding of other peoples. The beneficent results of the Boxer indemnity scholarships, in the relationship between the United States and China, provides one of the best examples of this.

The Department of State has already completed an agreement with Great Britain, which will provide $20,000,000 from the sale of surplus property for educational exchanges with the United Kingdom and the British colonies. Similar agreements are now being negotiated for amounts ranging from $3,000,000 to $20,000,000 in the following countries, among others: Australia, New Zealand, China, the Philippines, Burma, India, Iran, Iraq, Saudi Arabia, Turkey, Egypt, Greece, Italy, Austria, France, Holland, Belgium, and the Scandinavian countries.

The Fulbright bill authorizes the following types of educational activities:

(1) American students can be given grants of foreign currencies to be used to pay the cost of higher education or research in foreign countries.

(2) American professors can be given grants to give lectures in foreign institutions of higher learning.

(3) Foreign students can be given scholarships to study at American nondenominational institutions abroad such as the American University at Beirut, Syria, and Robert College at Istanbul, Turkey.

(4) Foreign students can be given funds to pay for their transportation to the United States to attend American institutions of higher learning.

It is implicit in the bill that all of these activities must be financed with foreign currencies. The bill therefore cannot authorize expenses of foreign students within the United States. The bill is designed to utilize foreign credits in many countries in lieu of American dollars for American surplus property.

The students who will benefit by this bill will be selected by a 10-man Board of Foreign Scholarships, which the bill authorizes the President to establish. The bill provides that this Board shall include representatives of the United States Office of Education, the United States Veterans' Administration, State educational institutions and privately endowed institutions. If funds are negotiated to the limit of the bill's potential, and if facilities abroad develop capable of handling the students, it is possible that 100,000 or more American students would be sent abroad under this bill in the next 2 or 3 decades.

Veterans of World War I and II will be given preference. The bill requires that "due consideration shall be given to applicants from all geographical areas of the United States." It is expected that some type of regional selection method will be devised to ensure that all parts of the United States are suitably represented.

It is unlikely that any scholarships will be awarded under the authority of this act for the 1946-47 academic year. After the President has appointed the Scholarship Board, and the Board has determined the qualifications for awards, ample publicity and time should be permitted for all suitably qualified people to make application. It is hoped that the grants will be made in the spring of 1947 for the school year beginning in the autumn of 1947.

While the major effect of the Fulbright bill will be to permit thousands of American students to study abroad, we should be prepared to welcome thousands of foreign students to our shores. I look forward to the day when we shall have as many as 50,000 foreign students in this country. Senator FULBRIGHT, the author of the bill which was signed today, has seen at first hand the importance of such student exchanges as a result of his own studies abroad, and during his tenure as president of the University of Arkansas. It is due to his understanding and his leadership that this bill has been enacted by Congress.

Putting Principles Into Action

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. WILLIAM F. KNOWLAND
OF CALIFORNIA
IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES
Friday, August 2 (legislative day of Monday, July 29), 1946

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the Appendix of the RECORD an article entitled "Putting Principles Into Action," by Jack W. Hardy, national commander of Amvets, published in the August 1946, issue of the National Amvets magazine.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

PUTTING PRINCIPLES INTO ACTION

(By Jack W. Hardy, National Commander of Amvets)

An Amvet milestone was passed last October when the delegates to the first national convention adopted unanimously our now well-known and established "declaration of principles." These provide a sound foundation for the building of an enduring and progressive organization of and for veterans of World War II.

It was realized then as now that the road ahead would not be an easy or smooth one—few long roads are. However, Amvets are building for the trying years ahead, and we do not seek to court current popularity or pander to expediency in the all-veteran membership derby.

TWO OBJECTIVES

Amvets are concerned primarily with two general objectives: To assist the veteran of World War II in all reasonable and legitimate programs leading to his rehabilitation and necessary care, and the safeguarding of the rights granted him under law. Secondly: To serve the welfare and best interests of our Nation and all of its citizens.

Amvets is not and will not become merely another veterans pressure group for veterans. Were we to become a pressure group in the accepted use of that term, we shall be a pressure group in the sincere best interests of all the American people as against any lesser group seeking fulfillment of its aims at the expense of the general welfare. If lobbyists we must be, we shall be lobbyists for America—for all Americans.

Amvets are dedicated to the same motives and sincerity as declared by the great Lincoln, when he said in New York in 1859: "Let us have faith that right makes might, and in that faith let us to the end dare to do our duty as we understand it."

COMMON PROBLEM

In these days of disillusionment, cynicism, fear, confusion, and conflict, we Americans, as do the people of other friendly nations, need desperately to reestablish our faith to find something in which we can believe—to which we can hew a way, develop a plan and program which will bring sanity and order out of the current chaos and confusion, and thus restore our faith in the America for which we, our comrades in arms, and our forebearers fought and died.

Rather than rest on the shifting sands of expediency or follow the popular trend of the moment, Amvets rely on the solid rocks of some changeless and timeless values—honesty, integrity, faith, and intelligence in all phases of our individual and national life. These are not spectacular, the catch phrases of the moment, but they are the very foundations upon which permanence, stability, and true greatness, both in individuals and nations, must ultimately rest.

Amvets believe that our Nation is badly in need of a reappraisal in the light of these eternal values, and that only by such critical examination can the mistakes and blindness which followed the first World War and led to the tragedy of the past decade be avoided and made an impossibility. These mistakes must not be repeated, or the very foundations of civilization may well come apart.

LONG-RANGE PROGRAM

Today's problems cannot be met or solved by any individual. Their recognition, evaluation, and solution can be achieved only by the joint and cooperative action of all the American people. Amvets accept the challenge of leadership to that goal.

As a possible aid to the attainment of that objective, and as author of our Declaration of principles, your national commander respectfully suggests to all Amvets the following immediate and long-range program to implement and make effective our principles.

1. That Amvets disavow for all time all foreign political, economic, and social ideologies, regardless of what names they go by or in what guise they are presented—whether called communism, fascism, or any other ism. That we declare our resistance to all efforts by the advocates of such ideologies to confuse or undermine the American democratic principles upon which this great Nation was founded, and for which countless thousands of Americans of all races and creeds have died to defend and preserve. To do less is to betray the ideals and causes for which they died. Keep this trust.

COURAGE IN AMERICANISM

Strangely, today, advocacy of Americanism requires courage. We have permitted ourselves to be jockeyed into the position of being termed "fascist" if we oppose the party line, irrespective of our sincerity in insisting upon being pro-American rather than leftist or rightist politically. The Marxian line holds that one is either with or against the teachings and practices of that philosophy and way of life. If one is against it, he is in too many quarters termed "fascist" or "reactionary"—not pretty names. This line does not admit the existence of the right answer or solution. However, it is only that answer in which Amvets are interested—the best interests of all the American people and the preservation for ourselves and posterity of the truly representative form of democratic government which has permitted Americans, for more than 170 years, to know and enjoy freedom, opportunity and justice under law, and to become the greatest nation on earth, with a standard of living and achievement second to none. Shall we abandon this for a foreign ideology? Amvets say "No."

Amvets dedicate themselves not alone to the preservation, but also to the fullest development of the American democratic form of government and to the teaching of its precepts and practices to all Americans.

BALLOTS FOR ALL

2. Amvets should participate actively in the political life of the community, State, and Nation. We govern ourselves through representatives elected by orderly political processes. The quality of our Government is dependent directly upon the degree of participation and enlightenment of those ligible to vote. It has been said truly that our Nation receives only the quality of government it demands. Criticism of elected public officials is futile and pointless unless those who have the right to vote participate actively in the selection of public officials and pass upon public issues. The right to vote—to choose our representatives freely—is one of the great privileges of American citizenship—one seldom appreciated until lost forever, and voting becomes a mockery of dropping a premarked ballot into a carefully watched official box.

In every community Amvets should stress constantly the value of the free ballot, the importance of registration and dissemination of accurate information regarding issues and candidates, so that the recorded vote shall reflect an informed public opinion.

STAKES FOR PEACE

3. The three subjects, Russia, the atomic bomb, and international peace, are so closely related, a program relative to any one of them leads inevitably to the other two. Hence, in proposing an Amvet program, consideration must be accorded all three.

No group in America has a greater stake in the peace and future of this Nation, than the 13,500,000 men and women, living and dead, who fought this war for all Americans, and to keep us from being a "subject people" under a freedomless foreign power. The half million American lives were sacrificed futilely if the blindness, selfishness and greed preceding World War II are repeated. Their sacrifice need not, but will be in vain unless we, the American people, have the courage, intelligence and determination to see that the causes of World War II are not repeated, or other factors, which inevitably lead to war, are permitted to exist.

We must avoid by direct action a repetition of the folly of 1919, where after the young men had won the war, the old men lost the peace. Amvets, on behalf of all veterans of World War II, demand that bona fide World War II veterans shall be represented at the peace table, and be part of this Nation's representation in the United Nation's Organization. We demand the same courage of our "peacemakers" as we demanded of ourselves in the fighting planes, mountain passes, jungles, fox holes, and on the seas in fighting ships!

WORLD GOVERNMENT

The shape of the peace-to-be must recognize that, in a practice sense, time, space, and distance no longer exist in a world of radar, guided missiles and the atomic bomb. We must live at peace in "one world" or all perish. World security cannot be left to the whim, caprice or ambitions of any individual or nation. The maintenance of world peace will require an effective form of world government possessing both the authority and power to enforce the peace against any aggressor, be it large or small. This will require on the part of all nations the yielding of their independent right to act, irrespective of the welfare of the other nations. This is a paltry price for a peace that must be maintained. The only alternative is an ultimate war in which all humanity will be destroyed.

FORCE, FEAR, OPPRESSION

Unfortunately for the world, and for herself, Russia, under the Communist regime, has demonstrated a present unwillingness to become a bona-fide member of the family of nations, or to follow agreed rules for the amicable settlement of international disputes. Soviet Russia is ruled by a relative handful who perpetuate their regime by force, fear, and oppression. Unfortunately, the present government and the Russian people are different entities, the will of the people is what the Kremlin says it is. Let us face the cold fact that the present Soviet government—not the Russian people, for they have no voice—is dedicated irrevocably to a policy of spreading communism throughout the world—of creating a world Soviet. This ideology necessitates the destruction of all other forms of government by whatever varied means may be required, and is utterly inconsistent with a free world in which the people of each nation may choose their own form of government without external interference.

ONE WORLD OR NONE

The American attitude and relationship with Soviet Russia must accept and recognize these facts. Cooperation, like friendship, cannot exist in a vacuum. It involves good faith and mutuality. There cannot be two sets of rules—one for the Kremlin and one for the rest of the world. The rules for the maintenance of international peace must be applied to and be observed by all nations—not excluding Russia. In today's world, no nation can be a law unto itself. As has been so aptly said, there must be one world, or there will be no world, and all nations must be prepared sincerely to go all the way to achieve and maintain it or world peace is an impossibility—an idler's dream. Until Russia indicates a sincere willingness to abide by agreed rules—without subterfuge or diplomatic double-talk, this Nation must be prepared to meet Russia on her own ground diplomatically, economically, and militarily, and let us frankly so state to the Soviet government. Amvets want and advocate peace and friendship with Russia, but on mutual, not Russian, terms; on no other basis can a permanent peace be secured and maintained. The atom bomb, with all its implications, is but one, though very important, phase of our present relations with Russia. Were a secure American-Soviet friendship established on mutual grounds, the atom bomb could and would be an instrument for preserving peace, and not a threat to it.

America is eager and ready for such an understanding. Is Russia?

FUTURE PLANNING

4. Next to the personal tragedy of war, the waste of lives and economic resources is the greatest tragedy of all. Had a small percentage of the cost of World War II been devoted to human betterment and the elimination of the causes of war, the benefit to all mankind would have been incalculable. Perhaps such tragic diseases as cancer, leprosy, infantile paralysis, and others could have been purged from mankind. Millions who now live in ignorance and fill our jails and institutions could be contributors to the welfare of society instead of being the objects of its pity or charity. To the end that all America may share a fuller and happier life, Amvets advocate and will support in the community, State and Nation:

(a) Adequate salaries for teachers, so that those most competent to do so will be attracted to and remain in the teaching profession, thus bringing light, learning, and new opportunity for self-advancement to millions who now live and die in poverty and ignorance.

(b) The expenditure of such public funds as may be reasonably necessary to promote medical and scientific research into the causes and possible cures of the principal mental and physical diseases which beset mankind.

(c) The elimination of blighted areas in our Nation, by the construction, under the American free enterprise system, of low-cost housing, so that all Americans may have available a place to live consistent with American standards and the individual's ability to produce.

(d) The construction of adequate schools, libraries, and playgrounds so that the principal causes of juvenile delinquency may be eradicated.

(e) The restriction of all general immigration until such time as this Nation has had opportunity to house, clothe, and provide adequate employment for those already here.

Report of Sanitary Conditions in the District of Arnswalde-Neumark, South Pomerania

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. WILLIAM LANGER
OF NORTH DAKOTA
IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES

Friday, August 2 (legislative day of Monday, July 29), 1946

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the Appendix of the RECORD a report of sanitary conditions in the district of Arnswalde-Neumark, South Pomerania, made by Gertrude Tinnmann, certified nurse.

There being no objection, the report was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

REPORT OF SANITARY CONDITIONS IN THE DISTRICT OF ARNSWALDE-NEUMARK, SOUTH POMERANIA

By far the greatest portion of the German population of the open country—estimated at between 15,000 and 20,000—live in their villages. Refugees, who had obeyed the evacuation order earlier in the war, have mostly returned. In addition, refugees and evacuees, mostly from the Warthegau, are staying in the district. A forcible evacuation of the Germans has not taken place. All the same there is a continual affiux of Poles who seem to be coming of their own accord, i. e., without official instructions. They are provided with billets by the Polish mayor, who procures the necessary space by crowding the Germans into single houses in a more or less brutal manner. As a considerable number of houses were burned down by the Russians immediately after the occupation, housing conditions are unfavorable. The same applies to the food situation. Only insufficient quantities of bread and meat are distributed, and this solely to laborers of the agricultural workers' union. Edible fats, sugar, and other foodstuffs are not distributed. In most villages milk supplies are not available, as the cattle were driven away by the Russians. Scattered cows and goats—and chickens—concealed by the Germans are now stolen by the Poles. The rate of cultivation has remained below 50 percent. Of the wheat crop, the Russians leave us 40 percent. This quantity must serve also for the feeding of the Polish newcomers who, incidentally, are not required to work. Fruit and vegetables have already been plundered entirely. Thus, the food situation is critical and will deteriorate further.

The health of the Germans is bad. Most of the babies have died, particularly in the villages, where milk was unobtainable after the removal of the cattle by the Russians. Typhus and typhoid fever are ravaging on an increasing scale. The mortality rate is high, especially among gonorrhea-infected women. About 80 percent of women and girls above the age of 13 are infected by gonorrhea through having been raped by Russian soldiers. Many of these women have been made pregnant by Russians. Apart from typhus and venereal disease, diphtheria and angina as well as skin diseases are prevalent.

Since the middle of August there has been no physician in the villages of the district of Arnswalde. Up to that time a French-Alsatian doctor practiced at Marienwalde as a wartime stand-in. In the middle of August the Polish district doctor at Arnswalde closed his medical practice, as well as the primitively improvised small hospital. At the same time the doctor's instruments were confiscated. The reasons for these measures are said to be of a personal nature (demands for fees in gold by the Polish doctor). According to the French physician, Dr. Anderhuber, the only doctor in the district is a Russian general practitioner at Arnswalde, who is now the head of the former district hospital and takes good care also of the German patients. However, Germans are accepted only as far as there is room after the Russians and Polish patients have been admitted. Furthermore, transfer of the patients is practically impossible owing to the removal of all horses by the Russians. The situation is similar as regards the field hospital for infectious diseases created by the Russians at Sophienhof. No medical supplies are available in the villages, no disinfectants, no nursing instruments and apparatus. Concerning nursing personnel in the district, there is one parish nurse at Regenthin and one at Althütte. The undersigned practices at Marienwalde, functioning as the parish nurse without regard to the nationality of the patients. She is given no assistance by the Poles. The voyage of the undersigned nurse to Berlin, which is to serve for the procurement of medical supplies and disinfectants and to obtain the appointment of a doctor, is made with the approval and with the traveling authorization of the Russian kommandantura at Arnswalde, which made available also laundering materials for the essential disinfection process. The Polish starost and the Polish district physician refused to issue the traveling permit. Vaccination against typhus was carried out in the district on Poles, but not on Germans.

In Berlin, the undersigned nurse has negotiated with the sanitary division of the Russian military kommandantura only about the dispatch of a doctor and the procurement of disinfectants and medicants. However, the military kommandantura declared to be not competent and referred me to the central health office. The latter stated that no competent German authority exists at this time. I am submitting my report to the central health office with the request to take appropriate steps concerning our case. At the same time I shall make representations to the Roman Catholic Church administration in Berlin, asking them to endeavor that the Polish immigrants and the Polish Militia stop their looting and their threatening of the German inhabitants of the district of Arnswalde, and to make efforts to counter the misery which is menacing us all.

GERTRUDE TINNMANN,
Certified Nurse, Berlin, Germany.

The Palestine Question

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. WILLIAM LANGER
OF NORTH DAKOTA
IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES

Friday, August 2 (legislative day of Monday, July 29), 1946

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the Appendix of the RECORD a letter written by William B. Ziff to President Truman under date of July 25, 1946, dealing with the Palestine question.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

NEW YORK, N. Y., July 25, 1946.

Hon. HARRY S. TRUMAN,
White House, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. PRESIDENT: I was greatly shocked to read your statement of yesterday which appeared to lend the authority of your high office to a condemnation of the Hebrew resistance movement in Palestine.

Those of us who know you are aware of the deep humanitarianism which has always guided your judgments. In this case, I cannot help but believe that you have been imposed upon by a distorted pattern of information which has prevented both you and other Americans from receiving an honest picture of recent events in Palestine.

Along with other Americans, I share your horror for violence. I do not believe that the use of violence is a proper solution for any question: But I cannot find myself in the position of condoning the violence of the persecutor while, at the same time, condemning the retaliatory violence of the victim.

Let me give you the other side of the Palestine picture:

In addition to the cruelty of diplomatic power maneuvers, the British have been using violence and force in an effort to crush the endeavors of the Jewish people to secure the legal rights vouchsafed them in Palestine. They have introduced an anti-Semitic regime into that country which, in many of its aspects, is comparable to the early days of the Hitler terrorism itself.

In addition to the blatant anti-Semitic laws which disgrace the statute books of that country, His Brittanic Majesty's Government has raised for service in Palestine a group of the worst Fascist followers of Oswald Moseley. They have brought there the same Black and Tans who once operated in Ireland, and are now conducting in Palestine a terrorism infinitely more intensified than any against which the Irish rebelled.

Every concept of Anglo-Saxon law has been vacated in Palestine, where any soldier or policeman may arrest a Hebrew on sight without reason and, if he feels like it, beat him to a pulp. To the underground Hebrew soldiers the same type of deadly anti-Semitic provocation which has left 7,000,000 dead in the crematoriums in Europe is now guiding British policy. Beneath the pious words uttered by British statesmen they see a bitter and active anti-Semitism which to the fighting young Hebrews of Palestine makes Beven fully as dangerous as Hitler.

It is under the desperation engendered by this situation that the so-called outrages in Palestine have been taking place. The Hebrew underground army regards itself as being at war with the British Empire and as fighting for its own territory against the armed minions of a hated invader. The King David Hotel was military headquarters of the enemy and the very site of British anti-Semitic action in Palestine. With a gallantry rarely employed by combatants anywhere, the Hebrew soldiers warned the British of their intention to destroy this military headquarters, and gave ample time for its evacuation—a consideration which the British authorities have never shown in their own swift and unilateral actions against the Hebrews.

The so-called terrorists in Palestine are honest and sincere young people who have seen their families butchered in the crematoriums of Europe because of the British determination to keep Jews from their inheritance in the Holy Land.

The people whom your statement condemns are decent, high-minded, young Hebrew boys and girls, many of them originating from the finest cultural backgrounds in Europe. In many respects they are similar to our own Revolutionary heroes.

These young men and women are fighting only for freedom and for the right to survive in decency and dignity. It is a right which they have determined can only be taken from them by death. They are determined to answer force with force. They see the Palestine Hebrew community suffering under a vicious anti-Semitic oppression, openly aimed at smashing the entire Hebrew community. They have gone through four Arab pogroms, in each of which the Hebrews were disarmed by the authorities, and in which the rioters stormed through the streets shouting, "The Government is with us." There is today a deliberate effort to disarm them again. They see in these actions renewed evidence that the authorities are preparing a now pogrom on a massive scale in which irresponsible Arab elements will be given both arms and encouragement.

It is well to state here, Mr. President, that in this campaign, the decent Arab elements themselves have been intimidated. In their fight against British oppression, the underground Hebrew army has the total sympathy of the best Arab elements of Palestine as well as neighboring countries. These countries are all occupied by British troops and run by British advisors. They, too, groan under a yoke which is not reflected in the quisling statements of their present spokesmen.

The underground Hebrew soldiers are not desperadoes or terrorists in the sense that the British authorities would like to have us believe. There are two main Hebrew underground resistance forces, the Irgun and the Hagana. Each differs in its concept of the nature of the resistance which must be offered to British oppression; but both are determined that slavery will not be imposed on them cheaply.

Though they may be misguided in the determination to answer terror with terror, these young Hebrews are as admirable as any other patriotic group in history. Their boldness, courage, and spirit of sacrifice as a badly armed minority operating against an overwhelming enemy military establishment, has not its like anywhere. They have endured a regime in which British troops have invaded whole colonies, smashing, looting, killing, and maiming. Their leaders are rounded up in concentration camps. Some, like the school teacher, Abraham Stern, were shot out of hand without the semblance of a trial.

The Hebrew underground army has never had its day in court, nor any forum where an explanation could be made for the desperate actions which they regard as having been forced upon them.

I want to point out to you, Mr. President, that on August 31 a year ago, you asked for the admission of 100,000 displaced persons into Palestine in accordance with the law of the nations as explicitly written in the mandate. At the time you made your proposal, Mr. Attlee's Government informed you that it would require the presence of 500,000 American troops to protect the entry of these immigrants to Palestine. Now the British have taken a contrary view, and inform us that it will be necessary to have 500,000 American troops in Palestine to reinforce the 100,000 British now there, in order to disarm the powerful Hebrew underground armies.

Frankly, Mr. President, what response has been given to your earnest efforts at settlement? Have they not been flouted, and has not the findings of the Anglo-American committee of inquiry been cynically ignored by the British Government?

The kind of power action and cruel doubletalk which has been supplied by Messrs. Attlee and Bevin will not be accepted by the Hebrew people in their present terrible situation any more than it was accepted by the Irish or by the American Revolutionary troops who fought to free themselves from an earlier tyranny.

According to historic British definition, George Washington was a terrorist. So was Patrick Henry. So was Eamon De Valera. Today there are rumors that Great Britain will seek to create a small Hebrew ghetto in Palestine, locked in tight under the overlordship of the present anti-Semitic colonial officials. Mr. Attlee himself has made an amazing statement that collective punishment must be made upon the entire Jewish people for the acts of a few. Whether these acts are right or wrong, it is impossible to concede that the 100,000 displaced Hebrews of Europe, or the many hundreds of thousands of others who are waiting to enter Palestine should be made to suffer for a single act committed by individuals whose very names they have never heard-of. This constitutes a total abandonment of any concept of law or justice hitherto held by decent men everywhere. It finds its counterpart only in the German action at Lidice. To the desperate underground troops of Palestine such statements are proof positive of the nature of British intentions.

The question before America is this: Are we to stand with truth, justice, and decency, or with the right of armed privilege to do what it please as the sole judge of its own actions? If there is to be any justice anywhere and if a general collapse of morality throughout the world is not to lead to a collapse of all human values, this entire situation must be resisted. If there is to be no respect for the commitments of law or human justice, then all of humanity will find itself plunging headlong into disaster.

In Palestine, the British must be held accountable for their actions as well as the Hebrews and Arabs. There will have to be other considerations weighed besides the cold sinister business of imperial profit.

I respectfully submit, Mr. President, that it is proper that the so-called terrorists be tried before some world tribunal called for that purpose. In my personal judgment, they will be more than willing to appear and to stake their lives against the reply which will be given by the world conscience. However, the British authorities who are conducting the present official reign of terror in Palestine must also appear to answer, in the same court, for the crimes of which they themselves stand accused. A very real precedent exists in the case of the Nuremberg trials.

If we are to lend our authority and financial support to such cynical power actions as those of which His Brittanic Majesty's Government stands accused, we shall lose our moral authority throughout the world. The explosion at the King David Hotel has taken this entire affair out of the hands of the British courts of inquiry. It is now an international question of critical importance to all of us.

I am convinced that a proper settlement of this matter, though resisted by the present Fascistic-minded British authorities, would be applauded by the British people. They today are poorly informed as to what is taking place behind the iron curtain of official British power action. Whether this be true or not, the interests of the United States demand an honest, honorable, and humane settlement.

I am, my dear Mr. President,

Respectfully yours,

WILLIAM B. ZIFF.

Ten-Point Proposal for Improvement of the Federal Government Service

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. GLEN H. TAYLOR

OF IDAHO

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES

Friday, August 2 (legislative day of Monday, July 29), 1946

Mr. TAYLOR. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD a copy of a 10-point proposal for the improvement of the governmental service. This proposal was prepared by the Government Employees Council of the American Federation of Labor, a group which serves as a clearinghouse for the various A. F. of L. unions which have members in the Federal service. There are 20 participating unions. I call this 10-point proposal to the attention of the Senate because it represents some very constructive thinking on problems of management and labor relations within the Federal civil service. It is not surprising to me that this constructive thought finds its way up from the bottom. One of the great advantages of unions within the Government is the fact that they increase the efficiency of the Federal establishment by making it possible for the man on the bottom of the ladder, who actually sees how personnel policies are working out, to offer constructive suggestions.

There being no objection, the proposal was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

TEN-POINT PROPOSAL FOR IMPROVEMENT OF THE FEDERAL GOVERNMENT SERVICE

1. Placement work which continues to be one of the most necessary personnel office functions should have full opportunity to prove its worth.

2. A combination of the best tenets of Organized Labor should have greater outlet in the Government service. Labor has much to offer. There needs to be a willingness on the receiving end of suggestions from labor to maintain open minds at all times. There are no "bosses" in Government service. Management and labor equally are responsible to all the citizens who are the "bosses".

3. No administrator can discharge his duties better than those who perform the "house-keeping" duties down the line. Therefore, an "open door" policy to hear from employees should be any administrator's rule.

4. There needs to be an aggressiveness on the part of the President constantly to guard the good name of Government personnel against thoughtless attacks from the vociferous few in Congress or in so-called "economy" groups. After all, if every man and woman on the Federal rolls were fired today there still would not be any difference in the Nation's Federal tax load.

5. Today there are 258 separate establishments and agencies, each a little kingdom unto itself. Often what is sound procedure in one such branch is unacceptable in another. Agencies are left with too much permissive discretion and too little mandatory or directory instructions toward uniformity. One still can count his total government service for retirement purposes but years of Government seniority is without value in any single agency upon transfer from any other agency.

6. Civil service, competitively administered, forms a reasonably sound four walls to the governmental administrative structure. But the roof of that structure is best provided by sound labor principles.

7. There can be no true merit system until it is demonstrated that the avenue from the lowliest to the highest Government job can reasonably be expected to be open for advancement from within the service. Too long have promotions gone to those who desire to enter the service at the top in order to get the experience which will help command high pay outside the Government.

8. Free and easy discussions across the table with labor and management exchanging open-faced and honest viewpoints can provide the best approach to any merit system.

9. When the President urges agencies to adopt and pursue a merit system, the full weight of his high office should provide that urge. Suggestions by themselves are the handmaidens to mere happenstance.

10. There should be a prompt declaration of policy toward the Civil Service Commission—whether this Commission is to be superseded by one-man domination. If the Commission is to remain, there is intense need for revitalizing it to modern usages and with adequate authority in line with the responsibilities Members of Congress assume it now possesses.

Investigation of War Profits

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. HUGH B. MITCHELL

OF WASHINGTON

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES

Friday, August 2 (legislative day of Monday, July 29), 1946

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, on Wednesday, July 31, I made certain observations in the Senate with regard to the current investigation of war profits by the Special Committee Investigating the National Defense Program. It was my intention to evaluate the committee's findings in the broader context of wartime developments which point an ominous sign toward the future. In the few remaining hours of this session I do not wish to take up any more time, and accordingly, I ask unanimous consent to have additional remarks on the same subject printed in the Appendix of the RECORD.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Mr. President, for the past several weeks the American people have heard and read the fantastic story of the Erie Basin case as developed in the hearings of the Special Committee Investigating the National Defense Program.

The committee's investigation has laid bare in detail the efforts of persons associated with this munitions combine to secure special favors from the Government and to extract unusual and illegitimate gains from the war. The responses of certain military and other Government officials to these solicitations indicate callous disregard or shocking ignorance of the standards of conduct implicit in public office.

WITNESSES DISAPPEAR

The committee has pursued the facts in this complex case despite difficulties and instances of noncooperation. Some witnesses have rendered themselves inaccessible or unwilling to give testimony. Prior to the hearings, shameful attempts at bribery were made in the vain hope that the committee would be dissuaded from continuing its investigation.

The present inquiry with regard to war profiteering is not unique in the committee's work. Its hearings and reports contain other cases, some less sensational and less involved, but no less indicative of the committee's purpose to insure the honest and efficient disbursement of public funds in behalf of the war effort and to promote the maximum of war production.

Throughout its many and varied investigations into the defense and war programs, the committee has shown a persistent and scrupulous desire to get at the facts. It has never indulged in witch hunts, indiscriminate criticism, and character assassination. It has held itself aloof from partisan considerations and has refused absolutely to lend itself to devious political pursuits. The committee's reports to the Senate record the unanimous judgment of its members.

UNDERLYING SIGNIFICANCE

Mr. President, speaking for myself, I wish to point out the underlying significance of the Erie Basin investigation which may have been obscured by the intense interest in the particulars of the case. Certain persons associated with this dubious enterprise were lacking in tact and judgment, others were downright dishonest. But the startling thing about their combined efforts to obtain special favors from the Government is the success which attended these efforts. To my way of thinking, the facts disclosed in this case cannot be cut loose from the environment in which they transpired. They are but small ugly symptoms of a process of moral degeneration in the dealings of business and government.

Mr. President, the exertion of undue and improper business influence upon government is not something new in American history. There have been many times past when the existence of free, democratic government was threatened by the attempts of influential persons, backed up by the power of associated wealth, to subvert government to the purpose of a privileged few. And always at a critical stage, when political democracy was endangered by economic oligarchy, the people rose up in their wrath and repudiated the agents of special privilege.

SELF-SEEKING LOBBYISTS

America is in grave danger today. Greedy, self-seeking interests hold sway in the land. They send their agents to penetrate high places in Government and to haunt the Halls of Congress. We cannot legislate price control for a few short months without slacking their thirst for large and inordinate profits. We cannot promote housing for veterans and others desperately needing shelter without making special concessions to speculators and profiteers. We cannot legislate for the promotion of scientific research and the control of atomic energy while the fate of the world hangs in the balance, unless we defer to the wishes of giant corporations. Other legislation vital to the health and security and happiness of the American people dies aborning, because it does not fit into the program of the higher echelons in the business community. And while the hopes and aspirations of the American people for a better life in the aftermath of a terrible war lie still-born, the assorted lobbyists and representatives of greed howl gleefully.

Is it any wonder, Mr. President, that the line between private interest and public duty has become so jagged and confused? Shall we hold up our hands in horror when we find public officials trading small favors with outside business interests and yielding to their blandishments, without recognizing that the great principle of democratic government is at stake? The strivings of the Erie Basin interests for special treatment pale into significance beside the efforts of vested business interests to exploit the instrument of government and gain a stranglehold on the economic resources of this country.

TOO MUCH MONOPOLY POWER

The monopoly power of great corporations has been increased and extended during the war. Available studies show that economic concentration has been hastened by wartime production and the addition of the tremendous wartime plant capacity. Billions upon billions of public funds were channeled into the hands of a few giant corporations by the military procurement officers, and the war agencies directed the flow of manpower and materials to service these colossal procurement contracts.

Mr. President, the corporations that were favored in contract award did not come knocking on the doors of the war agencies to cultivate "contacts" and gain special favors with gifts and bribes. The representatives of these corporations were themselves on the "inside"; they sat high in the councils of the war agencies and marshalled the economic resources of this country for war in accordance with the business preferences of their employers.

TRUMAN DOLLAR-YEAR MAN REPORT

I call the attention of the Senate to the Committee's Report No. 480, part 5, which was submitted under Mr. Truman's direction in the second session of the Seventy-seventh Congress. It is stated therein:

"The principal positions of the Office of Production Management were assigned to persons holding important positions with large companies who were willing and anxious to serve on a dollar per year, or without compensation (woc) basis. They usually did not sever their business connections, but instead obtained leave of absence. Their companies continued to pay their salaries. In some cases their compensation was even increased."

Of course, these men did not pass immediately upon contracts to their companies, but the advantages that accrued were substantial. The committee report continues:

"Although the contracts obtained by the companies loaning the services of dollar-a-year and w. o. c. men are not passed upon by the men so loaned, such companies do obtain very substantial benefits from the practice. The dollar-a-year and w. o. c. men so loaned spend a considerable portion of their time during office hours in familiarizing themselves with the defense program. They are, therefore, in a much better position than the ordinary man in the street to know what type of contracts the Government is about to let and how their companies may best proceed to obtain consideration. They also are in an excellent position to know what shortages are imminent and to advise their companies on how best to proceed, either to build up inventories against future shortages, or to apply for early consideration for priorities. They can even advise them as to how to phrase their requests for priorities. In addition, such men are frequently close personal friends and social intimates of the dollar-a-year and w. o. c. men who do pass upon the contracts in which their companies are interested.

"These are only a few of the advantages which large companies have obtained from the practice and it should be especially noted that they are the very same ones which the small and intermediate businessmen attempt to obtain by hiring people who they believe have inside information and friends on the inside who could assist them in obtaining favorable consideration for contracts. Therefore, in a very real sense the dollar-a-year and w. o. c. men can be termed lobbyists. This does not mean that either they or their companies are engaged in any illegal conduct, for lobbying as such is not illegal, but it does mean that human nature being what it is, there is a very real opportunity for the favoritism and other abuses which has led the public to condemn lobbying and the Congress to consider corrective legislation."

Other less tangible but perhaps more important benefits accruing to companies that sent dollar-a-year men into Government were implicit in the fact that—

"All important procurement contracts must be approved by these dollar-a-year and w. o. c. men, which means that contracts must conform to their theories of business. Since they represent the largest companies, this means that the defense program in all its ramifications must obtain the approval of the large companies."

The type of business thinking which directed the war program was described by the committee as follows:

"It is only natural that such men should believe that only companies of the size and type with which they were associated have the ability to perform defense contracts; that small and intermediate companies ought not to be given prime contracts; that the urgencies of the defense program are such that they have no time to consider small companies for defense contracts; that the large companies ought not to be required to subcontract items which they could profitably manufacture and as to which they express lack of confidence in the productive facilities of smaller concerns; that the producers of strategic materials should not be expected or required to increase their capacities, even at Government expense, where that might result in excess capacity after the war and adversely affect their postwar profits; and that large companies should not be expected or required to convert their facilities into defense plants where they prefer to use their plants to make the profits from their civilian business and, at the same time, to have additional plants directly or indirectly paid for by the Government, which they can operate profitably on terms dictated by themselves. The dollar-a-year and w. o. c. men subconsciously reflect the opinions and conclusions which they formerly reached as managers of large interests with respect to Government competition, with respect to taxation and amortization, with respect to the financing of new plant expansion and with respect to the margin of profit which should be allowed on war contracts."

FAVORITISM COST BILLIONS

The Comptroller General of the United States recently appeared before the Mead committee and described how the huge war contracts were renegotiated and terminated. He testified that untold millions, if not billions, of dollars were irretrievably lost to the Government through inefficiency, ineptitude, and favoritism displayed by contracting officers. Many of these officers were socially intimate with executives of interested companies, and in some cases landed high-paying jobs as a reward for their generous settlement of contracts. The chairman of the committee referred to this simultaneous process of terminating contracts and terminating Government employment as a "sort of reconversion back to private industry of these so-called dollar-a-year men and others." Most of the procurement officers wore military uniforms and drew the compensation of their rank, but the conduct described by the Comptrolled General is not different in principle from that of dollar-a-year men.

Mr. President, the favoritism and preferential treatment accorded big business in the war do not make exciting news stories and do not make the persons responsible therefor subject to criminal indictment, but such activities shape the economic future of the United States. They determine what factories will produce and what will stand idle, what persons will work and what will be unemployed, what economic areas will live and what will die. The ability of the American people to determine their own destiny has slipped out of their hands because of this intermingling of private interest and public function by those who would hand over billions of public dollars as well as control of the Nation's resources to a privileged group in the name of the public.

Wartime business conduct has bred in the people a dangerous cynicism. I recall reading about a public-opinion poll which found 71 percent of the American people believing that the war had benefited special groups. Such cynicism can be fatal to free, democratic government unless the conditions which breed it are remedied forthwith.

SLOW IN REACHING HIGH GEAR

It is not enough to say that the representatives of the great corporations who sat in the war agencies and doled out billions with a lavish hand, saw this country successfully through the war and chalked up a major production victory. Before America's tremendous production machine went into high gear, these big business-minded individuals brought us to the brink of disaster. They seemed to fear the prospects of future competition more than the current threat of the enemy. Who does not recall the ceaseless and heart-breaking efforts of men with vision to set the war production sights high, and to meet the goals so set? These men of vision were not the spokesmen for the monopolies in aluminum and steel and other basic components of the war effort.

ALUMINUM MONOPOLY'S ADVANCE PAYMENT

We have been appalled at the effrontery of the Erie Basin interests in building up a munitions combine from a letterhead corporation by obtaining advance payments on war orders. I need not remind the Members of the Senate that the biggest hydroelectric-power and aluminum-production facility in the world was built across the Canadian border by the advance payment of sixty-eight and one-half million United States dollars in war orders. This facility is controlled by the same small group of wealthy stockholders who own the Aluminum Co. of America. The representatives of the aluminum monopoly who had a hand in negotiating this deal have denied their participation, but the evidence in the files of the war agencies indicates otherwise. These were the self-same men who assured the Nation at the beginning of the war program that there would be aluminum enough for military purposes and to spare.

When the committee under the distinguished leadership of Mr. Truman held hearings on the aluminum shortage in May of 1941, no steps had yet been taken to arrange for the construction of additional Government plants in the United States. But a contract already had been entered into with Aluminum Ltd. of Canada calling for aluminum deliveries over a 3-year period at a price of 17 cents per pound, with an escalator clause covering labor and transportation costs which brought the price to 20 or 21 cents per pound. As a result, extra millions were paid to a foreign producer. Advance payments for these orders enabled the company to construct the power and aluminum-production facilities necessary to fill them. No security was demanded, no interest was charged on these loans.

The details of the Canadian aluminum contract were not disclosed until a later hearing of the Truman committee, pursuant to which certain changes beneficial to the Government were made. When the domestic expansion of aluinum production was finally undertaken, operation of practically all the Government-owned plants was vested in the aluminum monopoly, and the one other American producer who constructed facilities with the help of a Government loan, denied the terms accorded the Canadian company, was compelled to pay interest and pledge his entire properties as security for the loan.

GRAND COULEE SLOWED DOWN

Mr. President, Members of the Senate and House who had greater foresight than the war production officials had urged an expansion of aluminum production as early as the summer of 1940. By the time this advice was heeded, the Canadian aluminum deal had been consummated, and further construction of hydroelectric facilities in the United States including Grand Coulee, was halted while essential materials went into turbines and generators under top priority for the Canadian development. Toward the end of the war, when aluminum production in the United States had been cut back, and some plats shut down or dismantled, the Canadian company was given additional orders to meet a resurgence of demand.

Today the Government is engaged in selling or leasing vast industrial plants. For the most part these plants were built and operated by industrial giants according to specifications that tend to discourage postwar competitors. New producers who might be interested in acquiring Government facilities are met with obstacles such as excessive size, poor location, lack of an essential component facility, patent restrictions, and the like. The reports to Congress by the Surplus Property Board and War Assets Administration are replete with reasons why plant disposal to small, independent, and competing producers will be difficult if not unlikely. The giant plants built with public funds which appear capable of economic peacetime operation will go to the giant companies, despite the intent of the Surplus Property Act to promote free, independent enterprise and small business, and to discourage monopoly. The dollar-a-year men have served their masters well, and their work is not yet done. Aluminum plant disposal stands out as a possible exception to the trend only because there were men in the Congress and the Administration who, with the help of a court decision, put up an aggressive fight against the aluminum monopoly.

WHO GETS SURPLUS WAR PLANTS?

Mr. President, ownership of these public plant properties was vested in the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. Many of the difficulties in surplus plant disposal can be traced to the faulty and indifferent supervision of the properties by the RFC. An appraisal of the administrative shortcomings of that agency has been laid before the Congress in the report of the General Accounting Office, printed as House Document

No. 674. The RFC affords us another instructive example of what follows when no clear line is drawn between private interest and public duty. Some members of the Senate may be surprised to learn that RFC directors are not required by law to devote full time to their official duties. The statute governing the RFC is at variance with other basic statutes which require that members of Government boards and commissions give full time to their official duties and refrain from pursuing outside interests.

One would suppose that, with $10,000,000,000 worth of assets under their supervision, embracing financial and business activities of every description and vitally important to the economic state of the Nation, the RFC directors would be busy enough in their Government work without at the same time acting as directors or officers of private corporations. One would be led to this supposition particularly in view of the fact that the RFC directors, besides acting as such for the parent RFC body, are simultaneously interlocked as directors or officers of its subsidiary corporations and constituent organizations. While the jurisdiction of the RFC has spread out to cover so great a profusion of activities that the agency has difficulty in accounting for them, at the same time, as the General Accounting Office states, it is "* * * the general policy of the Board of Directors not to make broad delegations of functionalized responsibility and authority * * *" (House Doc. No. 674, p. 16). That the directors can insist on keeping authority so closely held while doing only a part-time job for the Government is a clue to the maladministration of the RFC and the disposal difficulties inherited by its successor disposal agency.

WHAT IS RFC POSITION?

Of course, the RFC directors are not permitted to participate, any more than were the dollar-a-year men, in matters directly affecting their personal interest. But the fact that some of these directors, like the dollar-a-year men, retain their private connections with large corporations provides them with strategic opportunities to conform governmental functions to private ends. We must conclude that these directors either spend time in rendering private services which should properly be spent in rendering public service or else their public positions made them valuable to their private employers. Both of these alternates are repugnant to standards of public service implicit in an office of the United States Government.

The meager information available on the private business interests of RFC directors does not clearly distinguish between corporate stockholdings and corporate employment. I am informed that one RFC director is financially interested in 22 of the largest corporations in the country; another is a director of or financially interested in 15 large corporations; a third is a director of 3 companies and financially interested in 9; a fourth has business connections with 5 large corporations. I do not have information on the private business interests of principal executive officers other than the directors.

Mr. President, in what I have said here today I am contending for a principle that must be maintained inviolate if we are to be worthy of our democratic heritage. Government must be run by public servants who serve no private masters. I am not attempting to specify what are the appropriate spheres of Government and private enterprise. The American system is made of free government and free enterprise. They are mutually supporting and each deserves the protection of the other. But both can be destroyed by the private supergovernment of big business.

CONGRESS HAS LEGISLATIVE JOB

Congress in the coming session should address itself to legislative matters which will redefine the working relationships of business and Government and promote free enterprise by an effective antimonopoly program.

During the recess I hope the Members will give careful study to S. 2482, the antimonopoly bill, in the sponsorship of which I am privileged to participate.

Extracts From Report on the Refugee Problem in the District of Y, Neumark

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. WILLIAM LANGER
OF NORTH DAKOTA
IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES

Friday, August 2 (legislative day of Monday, July 29), 1946

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the Appendix of the RECORD extracts from the report on the refugee problem in the district of Y, Neumark.

There being no objection, the extracts were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[Extracts from report on the refugee problem in the district of Y, Neumark]

The misery of the refugees began about the end of January and beginning of February this year. All the houses in my parish, my own house included, were suddenly overcrowded with refugees. Part of them had tried to escape from the Russians, others who had originally intended to stay in their native places, afterwards found themselves also compelled to leave their homes. On their way they were exposed to the most brutal tortures. They were beaten and wounded by shots, many were murdered; a large number of women, girls, children, and even very old women of 70 and 80 years of age were raped, the latter sometimes 30 times or more. Refugees who used the Oder bridges at K have all reported the same or similar things happening. The refugees succeeded in bringing only a very small part of their belongings across the Oder.

After the armistice, the Russians of the other side of the Oder called the German population back, thus causing a countermovement of the previous wave of refugees. After a couple of weeks, however, they returned, as they were then driven out by the Poles. This time there were only totally exhausted and ragged old men, women, and children. The Poles had kept those who were able to work and had quartered them in labor camps. This time the refugees had hardly any of their belongings with them. Even clothes and shoes which they were wearing were stolen by the Poles. They looked indescribably worn out, ragged and starved. They dragged themselves forward on sticks, and most of them seemed to be seriously ill.

The Germans on the other side of the river in the district of K, have suffered even more. A young girl told me that she was raped 62 times; her mother was also raped several times. Even 8-year-old children were not spared this procedure, and all these atrocities were committed in public.

The stream of refugees has not yet ended. They come along begging for lodgings, bread and potatoes. Since the villages are already overcrowded, they live in barns, stables, and barracks, most of which were damaged by artillery fire and are therefore useless as shelters. The refugees go from house to house, begging for something to eat. When they move on, they often leave dead persons behind in emergency shelters or on the roadsides.

Once when I went to K for business reasons I was asked to tell the authorities that a decree should be issued to the effect that refugees going in the direction of F, were to bring their dead with them to the refugee camp, instead of leaving them on the roads. The refugees, however, did not obey this order for fear that in that case they would not get rid of them. A most primitive so-called corpses-cellar has therefore been prepared in F, to which about 10 dead persons are brought every day.

Thus the refugees lack even the privacy in life and death which the most primitive animals have. They have, of course, adopted the viewpoint that their life is not worth living, and the thought of death has become familiar with them. We who see them trekking through our district are unfortunately not in a position to help them, because we ourselves are in need of assistance.

Violation of Civil Liberties

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. HELEN GAHAGAN DOUGLAS
OF CALIFORNIA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, August 2, 1946

Mrs. DOUGLAS of California. Mr. Speaker, under permission to revise and extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include a release from the Department of Justice, dated July 30, 1946, protesting the recent mass murder in Monroe, Ga.:

Attorney General Tom C. Clark disclosed today that the Department of Justice has received hundreds of telegrams and letters from public-spirited citizens and civic, religious, labor, and veterans' organizations from all sections of the Nation deploring and protesting the recent mass murder in Monroe, Ga.

Mr. Clark stated: "These communications are too numerous to be answered at once by my office. I am, therefore, making public, through the press, the progress of the immediate and complete Federal investigation which began, at my direction, last Friday, July 26, as soon as the news of the crime reached Washington.

"The Federal Bureau of Investigation has a sufficient force of agents on hand to provide a thorough probe and the Civil Rights Section of the Department of Justice is examining the legal and jurisdictional aspects of the case. The probe is being carried on in the tradition of the FBI—with dispatch, efficiency, and determination. The full facilities of the Department of Justice are behind this investigation.

"We hope for an early solution of these shocking murders. The entire record of our investigation will be made available to the Governor of Georgia, if necessary, for proper action of Georgia civil authorities.

"This crime is an affront to decent Americanism. Only due process of law sustains our claim to orderly self-government. I call upon all our citizens to repudiate mob rule and to assist the authorities to bring these criminals to justice. The lives and liberties of none of us are safe when forces of terror operate outside the laws of God and man.

"I have talked with the President regarding this case and he has expressed to me his horror at the crime, and his sympathy for the families of the victims. He has asked that the Department report its progress in the investigation and proceed with all its resources to investigate this and any other crimes of oppression to ascertain if any Federal statute can be applied to the apprehension and prosecution of the criminals."

Reconstruction Finance Corporation—Extension of Loans to Kaiser Interests

REMARKS
OF

HON. RICHARD B. WIGGLESWORTH

OF MASSACHUSETTS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Saturday, July 27, 1946

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. Mr. Speaker, I am not opposed to the extension of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation in accordance with the action just taken by the House. I favor it.

Nevertheless, I desire to call to the attention of the House and of the country certain information which I have recently received in connection particularly with loans by the RFC to the Kaiser interests.

In recent years we have seen instance after instance of the lavish use of the taxpayer's money in respect to administration favorites who have handled Government funds on a basis without precedent in history.

The Members of the House will recall a statement by our able colleague, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WOODRUFF], appearing in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of February 21, 1945—page A756—based on a report by the Comptroller General of the United States to the effect that on an original cash investment of $100,000 two Kaiser companies alone had earned net profits after renegotiation amounting to $27,274,487.24.

This was amazing enough, but a tabulation dated June 17, 1946, recently furnished me by the United States Maritime Commission indicates that in addition to the $100,000 cash investment, the Kaiser Ship Construction Cos. received the use of facilities costing the Government $234,180,547 and fees, bonuses, and other allowances between April 25, 1938, and May 31, 1946, amounting to $120,560,575.

Now comes the Reconstruction Finance Corporation.

Recent correspondence with the RFC indicates loans to the Kaiser interests between March 4, 1942, and December 22, 1944, amounting to $111,805,000.

Of this total, there appears to have been outstanding on June 30, 1945, the sum of $102,788,198.13, or almost 10 percent of the total outstanding loans of the agency. Only $9,016,800.37 had apparently been repaid on account of principal.

What happened then?

The loans appear to have been technically in default, permitting foreclosure if advisable from a business standpoint. The action taken was a refunding operation. To the amount outstanding, $102,788,189.13, there was added over $11,500,000 understood to be for postwar civilian production purposes and the total amounting to $114,328,380.23 was refunded or reloaned to the Kaiser interests.

What was the basis of the extended loans?

Well, about $34,510,000 out of the total was made payable on July 1, 1970, 25 years hence, and, note this, without 1 cent of interest payable at any time throughout that period.

The balance of the loan was made payable on July 1, 1960, or 15 years hence, with no interest payable for a period of over 2 years.

What security has the RFC had for these loans?

I assume that it has had a lien on the fixed assets of the Kaiser companies. It appears from the correspondence that it is also supposed to have been secured by profits of the companies as follows:

All net earnings except 15 percent after depreciation and amortization for tax purposes over the fixed amounts payable during the preceding year on account of principal from operations other than ship construction; and

One hundred percent of all net earnings derived from ship construction.

The data furnished by the RFC appears to indicate that fixed assets are carried at $95,155,000, with apparently no allowance for depreciation. The House will have in mind the recent testimony by the War Assets Administration indicating a hope to realize about 18 percent of original cost on war assets generally and a much smaller percentage on war plants and shipyards.

The correspondence referred to with the RFC indicates that the Kaiser companies apparently turned over to RFC up to June 28, 1946 net earnings to the extent of $17,241,104.83. Yet, Mr. Speaker, as I have already stated, a tabulation based on data recently received from the Maritime Commission indicates fees, bonuses, and other allowances, or partial net earnings, between April 25, 1938, and May 31, 1946, amounting to $120,560,575.

Under leave to extend my remarks, I include at this point in the record a table including figures received from the Maritime Commission and from the RFC in this connection:

NOTE.—Net earnings clause effective with fiscal year ended Nov. 30, 1942. Payments due under said clause are each in the amount by which all of borrower's net earnings resulting from its operations other than the construction of vessels, less 15 percent of said net earnings so resulting, after depreciation or amortization for tax purposes, exceeds the aggregate fixed amounts payable during preceding fiscal year on principal.

Borrower's agreement to pay RFC 100 percent of its net profits derived from contracts for construction of vessels.

One-half of amounts due under net-earnings clause and one-half of the amount due under the foregoing agreement are to be credited to reserve fund until it amounts to $2,500,000.

The foregoing net-earnings payments are applicable to all loans and are to be applied on all loans in order of their authorization.

The reserve fund was permitted to be set up in the amount of $2,500,000, to be held by the RFC. The primary purpose of the fund was to provide a cushion for interest, taxes, and insurance if borrower's income was insufficient to meet such charges.

KAISER CO., INC., OAKLAND, CALIF.

Below are listed amounts, dates collected, and method of application of all funds remitted by subject borrower to RFC from net fees, bonuses, and profits received by borrower for the performance of contracts for the construction and repair of shipyards and vessels entered into prior to July 1, 1945:

Effective date	Total amount received	Applied on principal	Credited to reserve fund

Apr. 3, 1946	1,753,582.33	[4] 1,753,582.33
June 28, 1946	1,535,902.73	[4] 1,535,902.73
Total	17,241,104.83	12,241,104.83	5,000,000.00

[1] Applied on loans Nos. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, and 8.

[2] RFC agreed with borrower to deposit in "reserve fund" one-half of net ship profits received from borrower until fund amounted to $2,500,000. The primary purpose of the fund was to provide a cushion for interest, taxes, and insurance if borrower's income from its iron and steel division was insufficient to meet such charges. On Dec. 7, 1944, in lieu of making an additional loan, the RFC authorized borrower to withdraw from time to time not to exceed $1,500,000, to meet expenses in connection with construction authorized up to that date for the iron and steel division. Authority was also given to permit withdrawals from time to time of not to exceed $1,000,000 for borrower's operating requirements in its iron and steel division. The full amount was withdrawn.

[3] On Apr. 6 and June 21, 1945, the fund was restored to its authorized amount of $2,500,000, which amount borrower was subsequently authorized to use for operating requirements in its iron and steel division.

[4] Applied on note No. 2 of loan No. 9 and loan No. 10.

Mr. Speaker, these figures, if properly interpreted, call for explanation, particularly in view of the enormous financial assistance in other ways to the Kaiser empire with the people's money.

It seems to me that the Reconstruction Finance Corporation should explain to the Congress and the people why so large a percent of all its outstanding loans has been made to the Kaiser interests; why in refunding over $114,000,000 worth of indebtedness, the repayment of over $34,500,000 was postponed for 25 years without one cent of interest payable at any time; and why at least $120,560,575, partial net profits earned by the Kaiser companies, has not been paid to the RFC in liquidation of the outstanding loans of the people's money.

Extracts From a Letter of Herrn B. P. From Bayreuth to Frau J. Sch. in Weimar

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. WILLIAM LANGER

OF NORTH DAKOTA

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES

Friday, August 2 (legislative day of Monday, July 29), 1946

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the Appendix of the RECORD extracts from a letter from Herrn B. P. from Bayreuth to Frau J. Sch. in Weimar, dated January 15, 1946.

There being no objection, the extracts were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[Extracts from a letter of Herrn B. P. Bayreuth to Frau J. Sch. in Weimar, dated January 15, 1946]

It will interest you to learn of present conditions in our old home in East Prussia. From my godfather in Saxony who has many connections with the one-time middle-class people there, I have learned many things that I would not withhold from you.

First, there is an article in one of our local papers which quotes the Swiss Weltwoche. In this article it says: "Behind the Oder-Neisse line there lies a land without security, a land without law, a land of the outlawed, a land of death. Whoever has managed to leave the Polish zone and come into Russian-occupied territory begins to breathe somewhat easier. Behind him lie empty and plundered towns, pestilence-ridden villages, concentration camps, and untilled fields, streets littered with corpses and lined with wayfarers and fugitives who rob the houses of the last remaining possessions of the owner."

The other day a former woman apothecary from Sensburg visited us here and reported to us in great detail, and with names, about the fates which numerous East Prussians had met in being evacuated to Siberia. One tailor who became ill there brought the names with him. A Koenigsberg lawyer, Samlowski, died there, likewise two veterinarians from S.; another lawyer went insane before he died. Married couples were separated and under conditions only too well known, work on the land. A schoolmate of the daughter of the woman who visited us was able to return after she became sick in the Ural Mountains.

A Koenigsberg wholesaler also told us about the last days of our home town. District Leader Wagner was hung. The Volks-sturm fought to the last drop of blood—even after the situation was hopeless. Eighty percent fell, among them the mayor, Dr. Will, the Harbor Supervisor Behrends, Construction Chief Mueller, and Councilman Eberhard. A part of the Volks-sturm, under the substitute leadership of Gauleiter Gross herr took refuge in the police headquarters and were blown up. Koenigsberg endured a 30-hour artillery bombardment which resulted in the complete destruction of the remaining suburbs. After that the mob plundered for 9 days. More than 20,000 Germans remained in Koenigsberg; of these, 300 die daily. For the people who are employed, 400 grams of bread and some salt are provided. All hospitals were merged in the Krankenhaus der Barmherzigkeit. The nurses had to carry some of the sick on their backs from the Rossgarten to the Alten Pillauer Landstrasse. Professor Dr. Boettner became the director and the doctors were Frick, Hoffman, Kunze, and Francke. Professor Joachim shot himself. Professor Unterberger took poison. The doctors Grauert, Teichert, and Kunckel likewise committed suicide.

Pastor R. remained in Koenigsberg until June and brought with him a factual report. The dead had to be buried by the pastor himself. Further suicides were: Professor Sonn, lawyer Kaschade, and state attorney Kudicke—just a few out of a great many. Also capitalist Feyerabend-Palmnicken, the dentist Grammatzki and Frau Dr. Kunckel went the same way.

The owner of the apothecary at the "Rossgarten Markt" spoke with my godfather. He was employed in an ambulatorium in Kalthof, and he, therefore, knows some exact figures. Among other things he had to apportion the sick among the hospitals. He calculates that the number of deaths daily is from 500 to 600 At the last distribution of food tickets, there were still 30,000 people; at the preceding distribution there were 45,000. There is no light, no water, and no gas. He also had dealings with Dr. Kecker and Dr. Piontek whom he left in Koenigsberg when he succeeded in getting away in a fantastic manner in November. This project cost him 1,500 reichsmarks and a number of shirts. Water was secured from the stagnant castle-pool. I myself saw the wooden bridge burned down to the posts. Thirty to forty people pulled requisitioned water-wagons through the streets. In Koenigsberg everything is reported destroyed, only a few scattered houses remain here and there as for instance on Koenigseck. Loll, of the board of health and his wife are dead, also the physician Dr. Abernetty and family, Dr. Sett, Dr. Gauer-Steindamm and Frau Dr. Hensel. Merchant Schellcng reported that his parents, Councillor Dr. Shellong and wife took their own lives.

Merchant Schmall reported to my godfather that in October his cousin, a daughter of the deceased Professor Hilbert, made an escape after an adventurous trip from Rauschen-Georgenswalde. The aged mother, widow of the professor, was evicted and the house completely emptied. The old lady then died of hunger-typhus in a little shack, and had to be buried by her daughter in the Rauschener cemetery.

Finally, a woman reported to R., a schoolfriend of mine (she is now with four little children on the Weser), that she was forcibly detained in Roessel on her journey from Sensburg. There she had to do the commonest and dirtiest work for which she received 200 grams of bread a day. Grain cannot be harvested because no machines or scythes are available. Lacking horses, the Polish Communists hitch German women to the plows. There is a tremendous number of suicides. In a village of 700 people there were 400 suicides.

These reports are sent to me by very critical people whom I myself know.

Mr. Bellamy's Talk to City Club, May 11, 1946

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. GEORGE H. BENDER
OF OHIO
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Friday, August 2, 1946

Mr. BENDER. Mr. Speaker, the following is the last in a series of articles by Mr. Paul Bellamy, editor of the Cleveland Plain Dealer. This series is called A Trip Through Hell, and depicts Mr. Bellamy's impressions of Europe as it appeared early in the spring of the year.

Mr. President, members of my first and favorite club, ladies and gentlemen of the radio audience:

When I returned a few days ago, after a month spent mostly in Germany and Austria, I felt like a prisoner recently released from a dark and noisome dungeon in the bowels of the earth, where there was no sun, no light, no hope. I can never tell you how good it seemed again to stand, a freeman, in a free country, under God's blue sky and bright sun. Truly did I feel as if I had made a trip through the nether regions.

I hardly know where to begin to tell you about what I saw, because I saw so much, and of course, my heart and mind are full of the subject.

At the outset, I want to make clear that I do not consider myself an expert on conditions in Germany. All my life I have discounted those who spend a month in a foreign country and then write a book about it. Neither have I at my finger tips a great quantity of statistics, although I brought back a tremendous amount of statistical matter.

I shall, therefore, restrict myself to telling you what I actually saw, and what people on the ground told me. If I draw conclusions, I ask you to remember they are only my conclusions, and I don't want you to accept them unless you think them reasonable on the showing of facts.

The opportunity to make the trip came through an invitation from Secretary of War Robert P. Patterson. There had been a great deal of criticism of our performance in Germany, and so far as I can get at Secretary Patterson's motive, it was to expose a group of experienced newspapermen and magazine people to the facts, in the hope they might come back and advise him, in the first instance, and the American people, in the second, as to what they saw.

No effort was made to control our investigation or to feed us the Army's preconceived ideas. All our questions were answered freely. It was made clear that some of the answers were off the record for security reasons, but we all felt that we had had a square deal from the Army and that, if we came to the wrong conclusions it was our own fault, because all of us had had enough training in sorting out the false from the true not to be taken in.

I say that the Army treated us fairly. That would be a very ungenerous way to put it. The Army took us to its heart and spared no effort or expense to make our hard trip as comfortable as possible. They housed us in the best quarters they had throughout Europe, fed us the best food they could lay their hands on, and treated us always as VIP, which, in the Army vernacular, means Very Important People. I hope it did not turn any of our heads. The trip was exceedingly strenuous, particularly for those of us of riper years, because any of you who have been in the Army know that if there is anything in the world an Army man hates, it is idle time, and our schedule was so full from morn to dewy eve, and from dewy eve until midnight, that Satan found very little for idle hands to do.

We traveled on a C-54, one of those magnificent transport planes used in the latter part of the war for transatlantic travel.

We left Washington on April 9, a party of 14 newspaper and magazine editors, with a plane crew of 9 and 3 public-relations officers from the Army as guides, mentors, and friends. The crew's performance was most impressive. The plane flew without a hitch, and the extreme skill of the pilots extricated us from at least one dangerous situation, when we had to land in a pea soup fog.

Likewise, the public-relations officers throughout the trip were most helpful. If there ever were 14 sheep who were in danger of being lost, strayed, or stolen, we were those sheep, and we kept our shepherds busy all the time.

The route to Europe took us to Newfoundland, the Azores, and Paris, whereas on our return voyage we started from London and proceeded via the Azores, Bermuda, to Washington. About 20 hours of actual flying time was the schedule both ways, with two 3-hour stops at the intermediate points for breakfast, lunch, or dinner, as the occasion might be. The average altitude maintained over the ocean was 9,000 feet.

In Europe we used the plane for the long hops, such as Paris to Frankfort, Frankfort to Berlin, Berlin to Munich, Frankfort to Vienna and Rome to London. Automobiles were put at our disposal for the shorter hops in Germany, and we enjoyed one overnight train trip from Vienna to Salzburg in a private train, variously described to have been Himmler's or Von Ribbentrop's, a streamliner which compared very favorably in appointments with the latest de luxe trains here.

I have tried to figure out what you would be most interested in, and have decided to treat the subject under the following headings: What was the amount of damage done to Germany by the war? What are the actual living conditions in Germany today? What kind of a job is the American occupation force doing? What kind of a job are the three other allies doing in their zones of Germany? How long a job are we in for in Germany? Are we adequately prepared for this job? How about the Army's morale and behavior?

First, then, as to the damage in Germany. It is colossal. It baffles description. All the main cities of Germany are destroyed. It is as if Milwaukee, Kansas City, Buffalo and places of similar size, were the largest cities remaining in America.

Take Berlin, for example. All the central portion of Berlin has been wiped out completely. One feels as if he were walking through the anteroom of hell. The power and might of the allied air attack was almost unbelievable. Their great buildings have been completely flattened out, leaving the resultant pile of debris two or three stories high. In other cases part of the walls of buildings are standing, but all the interior is caved in from the roof down.

And Berlin, as all of you will remember who were there in the old days, was a spectacle of magnificence. Unter den Linden is a shambles. Sieges Alle and the houses of Parliament are completely ruined. The Reichschancellory, where Hitler is supposed to have shot himself and Eva Braun, is a living memorial to the mutability of human affairs and the certain fate of any man who thinks himself God.

It has been estimated that it would take 10 trains a day, of 50 cars each, or 500 cars a day, for 365 days a year, for 16 years, to clear out the rubble in Berlin before serious reconstruction could start. Thousands of bodies are still in the ruins, and the sickish odor compounded of wet plaster, pulverized brick and stone and rotting bodies, hangs over it all. I shall never be able to get that stench out of my mind. I will venture to say that, as far as Berlin is concerned, the city will never reconstruct the devastated central portion. Rather it will build around this ruin and allow it to be gradually covered by the debris of time. Possibly a thousand years from now somebody will excavate those portions of the city, as the Roman Forum was excavated centuries after Caesar Augustus had fallen into clay.

Like destruction was visited on many other German cities we visited, particularly Nuremberg, Munich, Frankfort, and Stuttgart. We did not get into the Russian zone at all, but the ruins there, they told us, were even more terrible, particularly in Dresden. Nor did we visit the British or French zones, but all reliable authority agree that the Germans, who asked for it, got it.

In wandering through these awful scenes, my mind reverted constantly to those terrible nights when the rain of death came incessantly from the sky, and to the terrified inhabitants it must have seemed as if God had deserted them. Great cornices of buildings came crashing down, sweeping everything before them. Block busters, entered crowded tenement houses through the roof and exploded, killing everyone in the building and burying their bodies under the mass of brick, stone, and mortar. All in all, the first preconception with which I had gone to Germany which I had to change, was the one as to how long it would be before Germany could ever again threaten the peace of the world. It is my opinion that, even if all the occupying forces were pulled out and the Nazis put back in control, it would be 25 years before Germany could ever again wage aggressive warfare. I know that I am on debatable ground here, but that is my opinion.

But we are not going to pull out, at least I hope.

I came back to the United States, firmly resolved on one thing, and that is that I would never cease to raise my voice against those foolish people would would pull our Army out of Europe and for the second time render America the laughing stock of the world. Rather I shall, so far as in me lies, be a flaming evangel for trying to make the United Nations Organization work and not spare American money, brains, and manpower in the effort.

I have always thought that the most tragic mistake made by a great nation in the history of the world was when America took the wrong fork of the road in 1919–20 and deserted the League of Nations. God grant that we shall not do it again.

The Germans that I talked to, and they were very numerous, exhibited with few exceptions very little regret over their course of action. They are all sorry about the outcome of the war, of course, but as far as I could see, most of them did not have much regret at having started the war. Many of them believe that, except for a little bad luck here and there, Hitler would have won, and this leads to a sullen rancor that will not be plowed out of the hearts of the present generation of Germans.

Living conditions in German cities, and I continue to speak about the cities because the German power and economy were particularly built about the cities, are very difficult. Public transportation has been restored only in spots. For the most part, the Germans walk to and from work or use bicycles. To transport personal possessions in any amount they have fallen to the use of push carts. One sees many, many push carts in every German city, many of them being dragged by old men and women or by children.

The food ration is very severe. In the American zone we are now trying to maintain a ration of 1,255 calories a day, and at one of our stops the American commander served our crowd for lunch a German ration for the entire day. It was most unpalatable food—black bread, a sort of soybean mash, bits of fat that looked like lard, and ersatz coffee.

Doubtless one could stay alive on this, but one would not enjoy living.

In most hotels of southern Germany there is a sign over every water tap saying, "Do not drink this water because it is contaminated." That item in itself must add considerably to the unhappiness of life in Germany today, and it is due only to the rigorous enforcement of inoculation regulations that typhus and typhoid have been kept down.

The food situation in zones occupied by the French and British is worse than in the American zone. The fact is that we do not know very much about the condition in the Russian zone.

In the division of Germany into four parts, Russia took the bread basket, which was the northeast portion of Germany, including Prussia and the Brandenburg marshes. Our section of southern Germany, broken down into three major states—Bavaria, Württemberg-Baden, and Greater Hesse—contain a good many manufacturing industries of one sort and another, but very little food-producing areas of consequence. The British zone, which takes in the Ruhr, and the French zone, which takes in western Germany, are doing very poorly in the matter of food, because neither the British nor French have a surplus of food, Britain having had for many years to import a large part of her own.

What the calorie intake in the British and French zones actually is cannot be determined accurately, because it varies so much from month to month, but it has often been down to the actual starvation point and will be again.

People ask me if I saw anybody starving. How does anybody know whether a person is starving unless he drops over on the pavement or hunts a hole to die? I know this: There is a great deal of human suffering, short of actual death, between 3,600 calories a day, the average American consumption, and 1,255, the present ration in the American zone of Germany.

In considering the food situation of Germany, it is necessary to remember that there is a political as well as human aspect to it. Even if one has no pity for Germans, either individually or collectively, there remains the question of what happens to Germany if it passes a certain stage of desperation. A great many people think that the Russian Soviet Republics would be very glad to welcome such sufferers into its large and capacious bosom, and I take it that most Americans do not want that. Therefore, when the President appeals for food to feed Europe, including our former enemies, we must remember it is not wholly charity, but good politics also not to create an industrial and economic debacle in central Europe which would hurl untold thousands of men into the hands of the Soviets.

I think every American who has had a chance to study Germany has come out in agreement on one point, namely, that under the quadripartite control of Germany we shall never get very far. General McNarney, the commander of all American troops in Europe, sits on the four-way control council in Berlin, with representatives of the British, French, and Soviets. No action can be taken, under the conditions of the set-up, without unanimous consent, which means, practically speaking, that no action of importance is ever taken on anything, because the Russians are not cooperative, and that is flat.

Exactly what the Russians are driving at in Germany no one knows, except that one is entitled to suspect that Russia would like to make Communists out of as many Germans as possible. The Russian behavior is an enigma. They fire freely on American planes which venture a few yards over the international boundary, or which the Soviet gunners think have done so. A C–47 preceding us into the Vienna airport was thus fired on. The Lord knows whether the plane was actually over the boundary or not, because when one is flying a mile or more in the air it is rather hard to be sure within a yard or two just where the line is. When called to task for these unfriendly acts, the Russians shrug their shoulders and laugh. They take such complaints in high good humor. They say their army is not very well disciplined and that boys will be boys and that soldiers like to shoot at flying objects.

After being in Germany for a month, one is inclined to believe that the American general was right when he said that the average Russian general knew only three English words, "Bottoms up" and "no."

The paralyzing effect of quadripartite control is nowhere better illustrated than in the realm of industry. Germany had a more delicately specialized industrial system than any other nation in the world. We in America are accustomed to manufacturing parts for an airplane or an automobile in many far-separated spots, finally bringing them to the point of assembly, but the specialization was even greater in Germany.

An example of this might be the Daimler-Benz automobile works at Stuttgart, which we visited. The plant got a terrific blasting from the British and American Air Forces, but a good deal of the rubble has now been removed and a manful attempt is being made to get started again manufacturing trucks. Although the French removed everything not too hot or too heavy to carry during their presence in Stuttgart, and this accounted for most of the new machines, the old machines have been largely repaired, and operations are ready to start.

But how do you start when all the coal comes from the Ruhr, and the British can't seem to get the coal production started in the Ruhr? This is probably due to two or three reasons, one being that the Germans naturally do not want to mine any more coal than they have to for their conquerors, and, second, because of the fact that the food allowed the German miner in the Ruhr is so limited they simply can't perform the hard labor of mining effectively on such empty bellies.

Furthermore, various parts for the Daimler truck which our people want to start manufacturing at Stuttgart, came from zones of Germany occupied by other nations. I can't list these parts accurately, but say the spark plugs come from Saxony, which is in the Russian zone. You might just as well talk to a stone wall as to talk to the Russians about spark plugs. Other portions of the truck came from the French zone, and the French are almost as tough as the Russians. Between the British and American forces there is much more give and take, but by no means enough.

It is not too much to say that German industry has not got off dead center. In fact, one could almost maintain the thesis that there is no German industry worthy of the name at the time. That is why it is so silly for some correspondents to send out stories, as has been done, that Germany is now in the full flood of production. The next time you read statements like that don't pay any attention to them, because they just aren't true.

To return for a moment to the quadripartite agreement, it must be remembered that regulations defining the relations of the Allies in Germany and dividing up the country are to be found in the Potsdam declaration and refinements of it worked out since.

In consequence, the present state of affairs as regards over-all control of Germany can't be altered until there is a a peace treaty, and Secretary Byrnes and the other foreign ministers do not seem to be getting ahead very fast in bringing this about. Personally, I think it is a matter for a higher authority than Byrnes. I thing that Truman, Attlee, and Stalin are the only people on earth who can really settle some of these questions, and they do not seem to be operating on the problem right now. In the meantime, the German problem marks time. We are making far greater progress in the denazification of Germany and in rendering her impotent to wage war than we are in putting Germany on the way to attain self-support, which the Potsdam Declaration piously set up as an objective.

Careful categories have been worked out as to the proposed steel production that will be allowed in Germany, and the number of chemicals, etc., which can be manufactured. Certain products are ruled out entirely, these being those essential for war, and certain others will be strictly limited as to quantity. Make no mistake, the policing of this job is complete and thorough. At the present time, German factories which have been declared surplus are being blown up every day or dismantled, and their machinery moved to the nations which, under the Potsdam Agreement, are entitled to reparations. This means primarily Russia.

But denazification, while vitally necessary to preserve the peace of the world, has had a very paralyzing effect on German civil and industrial life. To put the matter bluntly, most of the efficient people in Germany who had the drive and the imagination and the ability to run things, were Nazis. While it is true that the American occupation force has gone much further in the denazification process, so far as we can get information, than have the British, French or the Russians, each of the victorious nations has been doing denazification work along its own lines. One suspects that the Russian method is more direct and that they will not have on their hands, when they have finished, great areas of stockades filled with storm troopers.

I was not able to get any accurate figures as to the number of active Nazis in stockades under guard. They range all the way from 100,000 in our own zone to 400,000 for Germany as a whole, but the latter figure is pure guess work. Suffice it to say, however, that the screening process is being carried on rigorously.

After the flare-up which accompanied General Patton's remark that he thought denazification could be carried too far, General Eisenhower put into effect a very drastic order for denazification. No one who had held a position of honor or trust in the public service or an important position in industry, can retain it, if it can be proven that he is a Nazi. The result is that there is nobody left to run the industries of Germany except old men, cripples, and boys. The same thing applies to the efforts which our military authorities have been making to set up a civil government in the American occupation zone.

We sat in a number of cabinet meetings with the newly constituted German civil authorities. One could not help but be struck with the advanced age of most of the German administrators. Many of them possessed records of the most astounding heroism in resisting tyranny. Many of them had been in concentration camps. Many were awaiting execution when the Nazis collapsed. All honor indeed to Germans like this, but I repeat that the leadership which will ultimately make Germany a self-supporting nation and turn her into a democracy, will not come from these men. In fact, it won't come from anyone for a generation, as I look at it.

I walked through a German stockade at Dachau, the horror camp, where there were 20,000 young Nazi storm troopers, Hitler youth, and so on, incarcerated. If I ever saw a bunch of ornery, tough, unreconstructed rattlesnakes, those young men were it. If anyone thinks you can reform this particular group by kind treatment, he is a lot more naive than I. I would as soon try to reform a boa constrictor by feeding him a bowl of warm milk. In my opinion, these young killers, in whom the bloodlust was encouraged to such an extent that it dominated all their thinking, will have to be incarcerated all the rest of their lives, and if the Americans do not do it, someone else will have to, unless the world wants another war within a generation.

If released, these determined assassins of mankind would seize control of Germany in a twinkling, and although, as I have said, it would take a generation, in my opinion, even if left to their own devices, before they could rebuild the German might so as to challenge the peace of the world, there would never be any doubt as to their objective or their ability to reach it.

One of the most interesting episodes of our entire trip was the day we spent in Nuremberg, in attendance on the trial of the war criminals.

You are all familiar with the four-way telephone system which has been developed there for the convenience of spectators. After your credentials have been validated, and believe me, nobody gets into that trial without a careful scrutiny, you take your seat and adjust one of the head telephone sets. You may get the trial in English, French, Russian, or German, no matter what language is being used in the case that day, and a translator of each of the four tongues will repeat word for word what the witnesses have said, what the prosecutor has said, and what the court has said.

The day we were there Dr. Alfred Rosenberg was testifying in his own behalf. He, you will remember, was the so-called idea man for the Nazis, and the greatest international art thief ever left unhung, outside of Hitler and Goering. He set up the Rosenberg task forces, whose job was to ferret out priceless works of art from all the conquered countries in Europe.

Of course, the defendants in their dock were the cynosure of every eye. Headed by fat Goering, they made a horrible sight. One could not help wondering how these men ever could have turned the world upside down. They looked, most of them, like second rate German burghers, struck through with a degenerate streak.

To one who has heard a good many American lawsuits in his time, it seemed that the court allowed the witnesses to stray pretty far from the point at times. And that evening at a dinner given us by Mr. Justice Robert H. Jackson, Chief American prosecutor, we asked him why. He said he agreed that the court did allow too much latitude and that he and the other prosecutors had made many appeals to the court to shorten up the process, but that he himself agreed with the court that it was necessary in this case to set up a perfect record, and hence his criticism was only one of degree.

Mr. Jackson made the point very clear that the United Nations were trying, after this war, to set up a new principle of law, namely, that a whole class of citizens and not just a king or a Napoleon Bonaparte, can be held guilty of prosecuting an aggressive war, in defiance of treaties solemnly entered into. How big this class might be depends on the decision of the court, expected shortly, as to whether membership in certain specified organizations like the storm troopers, was criminal per se. If the court decides that it was, then there will be several hundred thousand defendants brought to the bar of justice.

I remarked to the Justice that this indicated to me pretty clearly that America had better win all the wars she was in from now on. He smiled and said that was one way of looking at it, but that he thought, if the record of German atrocity was complete enough, it could be proved that this was indeed a different war than ever before waged in the history of war. That is, it was the most terrible conspiracy against the decency of man and that it was more widely participated in than any other conspiracy. He could envision in the future a war which would not be an aggressive war but which would be a clean war or almost an honorable war, by comparison.

Mr. Jackson asserted that this was the most completely documented case in all history, owing to the German's habit of methodical record keeping. At the end, the Allied armies moved in so fast on the beaten Germans that our forces were able to seize almost complete records of the Nazi Party's activities. Some of them were buried in salt mines. Some were found in freight cars, and others in warehouses and other hiding places. But the net result of it was that a complete record of Nazi Party members was got, with a complete account of the activities of each member, too. So that when a man was accused of a specific crime the prosecutor had the evidence to prove it.

Mr. Jackson said he knew that some of the dramatic effect had gone out of the trial by reason of its prolongation. He thought, however, that this was a far lesser evil than it would have been to hurry the trial and not make the record.

I hope I have made it clear by what I have said up to this point, that problem of handling Germany over the next few years is one fraught with infinite complication and difficulty. And I want to return now to a theme which I have already mentioned, namely: What is America's will with regard to its promise to participate as a full partner in the guaranteeing of a durable peace?

For, if we are not going to do exactly that, we ought to pull our Army out of Germany immediately and let the chips fall where they may. Personally, I think this would be a horrible thing to do and stamp us as poltroons and slackers before all the world.

This great country of ours can develop, under the goad, the most tremendous military power of any nation on earth. We have proved this twice within 25 years, but conversely, we have the shortest memory of any great nation on earth. As soon as the shooting is over, we are prone to believe the war is over, too. The British know better than that. They have seen wars come and go, and have stood by, both during the war and peace. They are used to maintaining armies of occupation in all the four corners of the earth. We seem to get bored with it. There comes all too soon a point where as the result of minor vexations and irritations, we say, "To the devil with it, we are going home."

But there is no secure haven from atom bombs or even from rocket bombs. There is no safe asylum left in the world for a man who is not willing to fight for his asylum. I wish that all within sound of my voice would preach this to all his neighbors.

Although I am not at liberty to mention the detailed disposition of our troops in Europe, I can and will say that I believe we have spread our Army too thin for safety, not possibly too thin for governance of a docile, beaten enemy, but too thin in case of any international involvement.

Now I am no alarmist about Russia. I think the Russians have very bad manners, internationally speaking, but I do not think they want war, and I do not think the United States wants war. In fact, a war between the Russians and the Americans would be the most terrific thing in history, because neither could get at the other without a tremendous expenditure for maintaining lines of communication before either side could hope to strike a decisive blow. In the meantime, however, such a war might be prolonged indefinitely by air power and atom bombs, with a frightful loss of life. But if anyone thinks he could conquer Russia, which is sprawled all over two continents, with atom bombs, he ought to have his head examined. Try bombing Siberia in your mind some time and see how many bombs it would take.

But while convinced there is no immediate danger of war with Russia, provided we are firm without being provocative, which we have not been up to date, I am forced to say this also, that if Marshal Stalin were inimically disposed toward America, he could not have hoped, in his wildest dream, that that would have happened to our armed might which has happened since VE-day. An Army of over 8,000,000 men, on land and sea, will have been whittled down by January 1 to 1,500,000, and according to Mr. Truman's own idea of adequacy, it will be further reduced to 1,070,000 by July 1, 1947.

If you get out the map of the world and spot the points which we have to garrison, you will see what I mean when I say the Army is spread out too thin.

Furthermore, owing to the clamor of Mom and Pop, Sister Sue, and Sweetheart Mary, to get Johnny home, the morale of the men abroad was for a time badly shot. This is not entirely their fault, because they, like their fellow Americans at home, did not have any proper idea as to what America was getting into in this war and what we inevitably would have to commit ourselves to in the after-war period.

But when you consider the plight of an officer commanding an important American post in Germany, the business is not less than tragic. Not only have his enlisted men been depleted in numbers, but he has lost his most seasoned combat troops and they have been replaced by youngsters who have had only a few months' basic training. The result of the demobilization on the officer personnel has been even more devastating, because, say what you will about the great and decisive contribution of GI Joe in winning the war, it has been the officer corps which has done the thinking and planning for GI Joe. You could not have a victory without both. And it does take longer to train an officer than a private. Furthermore, the officer capable of taking executive responsibility is harder to find than a good private.

In America we make an idol out of GI Joe, and properly so, and after war it becomes open season to take pot shots at generals, but this, after all, is a very short-sighted policy. What was the contribution of Gen. Dwight Eisenhower, expressed in terms of GI Joes? Was it 1,000, 500,000, 1,000,000, or what was it? At any rate, it was a very disproportionate figure.

We trained thousands of men for American military government, and then let nearly all of them go home.

The commanding officer of such an American outpost in Germany as I have just referred to, has been at his wit's end the last 6 months, because of changes in his officer personnel. He never knew from day to day whether his executive officer would be with him or on the way home. He had tried to break in new assistants constantly, and the new assistants were generally not as good as the men who had quit.

We stand at the parting of the ways in this matter right now. Unless the selective-service law is extended for another year, I think we might as well give up and admit that we are licked and come home, because without it we shall not be able to maintain an army even of the inadequate size recommended by President Truman.

I wish you could all see that Army of ours in Germany. Despite the excessive rate of demobilization, you would be proud of it. You would be proud of the competence of the enlisted men and you would be proud of the generals. You would not believe it possible for first lieutenants and captains, youngsters like your boy or mine, who started out oftentimes as enlisted men and worked up, to do the job they are doing in running German communities and often German counties. You would not believe that they could possibly show so much poise, judgment, and executive ability, with so little experience. You expect this sort of thing from a general, but when you find it in a first lieutenant or captain, then you know that the man must be an American, because those things don't happen to a similar degree, in other armies.

There is another group contributing to the management of the American occupation of Germany to which special praise should be given, and that is the group of political advisers, of whom Col. W. W. Dawson, of Western Reserve Law School, was a conspicuous example. And others whom I met in Germany were Dr. James K. Pollock of the Württemberg-Baden outfit, and Dr. Walter Dorn, special political adviser to General Clay. These men mostly came from the colleges of America. Some of them taught modern European history and others taught law. Under their skillful guidance, men who were merely soldiers a year or so ago are fast learning the intricacies of European politics and, believe me, they are intricate. Some of the loyalties and conflicting pressure groups in the older countries of Europe go back for a thousand years.

Politics in a city like Cleveland, which sometimes seems intricate to the uninitiate, is an open book compared to the devious currents and cross currents in one of the older European capitals. Because in those cities one not only expects to find, and does find, the prejudices indigenous to those regions, but one has to count always on the active interference in domestic affairs of various outside interested powers. The whole thing constitutes a jigsaw puzzle.

No; I shall not join the ranks of those gunning for the officer personnel of the United States Army. There have been some ineffective officers, undoubtedly, and some unduly harsh officers, but on the whole they measure up to constitute about the finest group of Americans I know anywhere. They are loyal, devoted, and true. If the Americans at home had half the gumption, half the courage, half the guts, half the know-how, it would be a better country.

And while we are talking about the Army, let's consider the behavior of GI Joe in Europe.

I firmly believe that Joe is all right. He got a little out of hand at the end of the war, as did the troops of every nation in Europe. He drank a little too much, ran around a little too much with the wrong kind of girls, but Joe had been trained for several years in the fine art of killing, and one doesn't reconcile red-blooded young men, so indoctrinated, to an endless succession of evenings punctuated by marshmallow roasts.

I cannot imagine what has motivated some writers and publishers to traduce the American Army as they have done. Truly have I read articles in America which were for more deadly in their effect on our Army than anything the Germans had done since the surrender. By selecting individual cases of drunkenness and playing them up with photographs, these writers have created a false view of the situation. Joe is not drunk every night. He does not desire to be drunk every night. That and women are not his sole end and aim. Joe was told that he could come home as soon as the shooting was over, and that was our mistake. We have got to go through with that now and bring home the Joes who were told that, but the Joes we shall get by reenlistment and, one hopes, by the extension of the draft, will go to Europe knowing very well that the shooting war is over and that they are there for the specific job of guaranteeing the peace.

I wandered around a dozen German cities at night, as well as being in Austria, Italy, and England, without seeing any evidence whatever of wholesale drunkenness or immorality.

When I pick up the printed page and read some of the articles I have referred to I wonder where these men have been living in Europe. Because certainly they did not see what I saw. I do not see what on earth would be their motive in tarring the whole Army with such a stick.

Being somewhat old-fashioned in my ideas about armies, I incline to think that our command in Germany and elsewhere in the world made a mistake in allowing mass protests by enlisted men against demobilization programs, etc. I know very well that America is a democracy, but an Army is not a democracy. The Russians found that out. They started out the war with the generals fraternizing with the common soldier and slapping them on the back. As they got deeper into the war, however, they found this did not work, and when the war ended the Russian Army was the strictest army in the world. When a Russian general marched down the line of his troops he was a sight to see, according to all those who witnessed it. His person was almost as sacred as that of an oriental despot. Fraternization was out.

In my own short experience in the Army in the First World War I discovered that, by and large, the soldiers who got into trouble with their officers were the poor soldiers, the loafers, the insubordinate, and the cowardly. Generally speaking, good soldiers do not get into trouble with their officers.

In other words, I think that the command of the armies was too soft for a period after the war. The Stars and Stripes, for example, carried squawks from soldiers which in any other war would inevitably have led to guardhouse sentences or court martials. But the policy this time was to encourage this sort of thing, and insubordination grows by what it feeds on.

Lest anyone think that what I am advocating is an infringement on freedom of the press, may I hasten to add that I don't think that an Army paper has anything to do with the freedom of the press, and it should not have. It is an organ of the Army. The free press exists outside the orbit of the Army and can safely be trusted to guard against undue hardship visited on enlisted men or undue arrogance assumed by the officer class. If this be heresy, make the most of it.

I am tremendously in favor of our Army.

I want it to be the largest and best organized army in the world and to stay that way until, in God's good time, we reach a much better, more settled state of affairs on this troubled planet.

As I said in the beginning, I don't ask you to accept any of these conclusions which do not seem reasonable to you. They are the result of my own observation and a great deal of thought.

I came away greatly puzzled by the enigma of the Germans. They had everything this world could offer. They had magnificent cities and a smiling, beautiful countryside. They had great preeminence in the art and philosophy of the world. They were second only to one country, the United States, in technological progress, and yet between 1870 and 1939 they went utterly berserk, conceived of themselves as godmen, and had to be put down by the united efforts of all freedom-loving people. It was a tragedy of tragedies, especially to one who knew and loved the old Germany of song and story.

Possibly some day a greater Freud will come along and tell us what the answer was, but to me it is incomprehensible.

But there is no doubt about the effect. We got into a dirty business and we have won the first round. The American temperament does not fit us very well for the long, nasty job of cleaning up. We would rather leave that to someone else. But times have changed. The art of war has changed. Distance has been eliminated and the question is, "Can the American change with it or will he try the vain, illusory policy of locking himself up in an ivory tower?"

I say before God that we shall not. I say that we shall go forward and take our place among the other peace-loving nations of the world, and that, having set our hand to the plow, we shall follow it to the end of the furrow. I say that we shall not again fail the vision of Woodrow Wilson and Newton D. Baker.

For God has given us another chance. We must not, we shall not, fumble it.

Evacuation and Concentration Camps in Silesia

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF

HON. WILLIAM LANGER

OF NORTH DAKOTA

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES

Friday, August 2 (legislative day of Monday, July 29), 1946

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the Appendix of the RECORD extracts from reports on Silesia, dealing with evacuation and concentration camps.

There being no objection, the extracts were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

EVACUATION CAMPS

REPORT OF AUGUST 28, 1945

In Y, Upper Silesia, an evacuation camp has been prepared which holds at present (August 28, 1945) 1,000 people. About 400 of them, men, women, and children, have come from the surrounding villages. About 700 of them were brought to B as civilian workers, who are now at the mercy of the Poles.

A great part of the people are suffering from symptoms of starvation; there are cases of tuberculosis, and always new cases of typhoid.

"If we could not get hold of potatoes and staples here and there in the surrounding villages, the situation of the camp inmates would be still worse. It is, however, bad enough as it is, for there is at least one death every day.

"Two people seriously ill with syphilis have been dealt with in a very simple way; they were shot and buried in shallow graves. Yesterday a woman from K was shot, and a child wounded."

EXTRACTS FROM REPORT ON SILESIA—CONTINUATION OF CONCENTRATION CAMP

One would well expect that after the uncovering of the horrors, which took place in the Nazi concentration camps, nothing like that could happen again; unfortunately that does not seem to be the case. Reliable eyewitness sources say that in Y, near A, there is a Polish concentration camp in which German prisoners are undergoing corresponding cruelties. An inmate who had annoyed the Polish Militia was terribly beaten and for the rest of the night was put in a cellar up to his neck in water. As he was still alive the next morning, he was struck on the head so violently that his brains splashed on the ceiling. A Polish doctor then showed compassion on this miserable man and opened his arteries with a razor.

As was the case with the Nazis in their concentration camps, silence is imposed; eyewitnesses can talk about the frightful things they have seen only at the risk of their lives.

But besides this camp, for example, there is a prison cellar of the Polish Militia in B where the prisoners are so terribly beaten that the inhabitants of the surrounding houses want to move out as they can no longer stand the screams of the victims.

HUNGER AND EVACUATION

After the inhuman forced evacuation of the Germans in Silesia was checked in accordance with the Potsdam three-power agreement, more refined methods are being used.

Hunger is the most critical. They say it may be impossible to feed the present German population of B, and through pressure of fear of famine try to make the people leave voluntarily. Anyone who knows the misery of refugees on the borders of Silesia knows what new troubles they are facing. Infant mortality has risen 20 percent over the normal in B. Old people are dying in the streets and more and more people are becoming radical because they have nothing. There are no food-ration cards and there is only partly distribution of very scare food supplies to workers and their helpers who need more. No food can be bought for German currency and German money cannot be changed into zlotys. But in the black market bread, butter, bacon, and eggs are obtainable in any quantity at exorbitant prices. The completely plundered people are therefore forced to squander their last clothes or some valuables saved from the wreck to get bread to stave off starvation.

An example of food allowance for civil servants (the distribution is not always regular) is as follows: 100 grams of bread per day, 16.4 grams of flour per day, 16.4 grams of barley per day, 6.7 grams of salt per day. Nevertheless, in general it is difficult to get the allotted rations; it often happens that a worker can only be given half of the ration.

In this way and with the help of the fear of hunger, conditions are being created whereby Silesia in a short time will be completely cleared of Germans. It is to be remarked that this has to do with the best people in Silesia, estimated still at three to four millions, who believed that they could remain there, with a good conscience, as they had promised themselves that occupation by the enemy would be an improvement over the Nazi terror.

Now there is famine at the door and it is already claiming its victims. Certainly those in state working settlements or those working as we are get provisions from the Polish administration, but this is still too small for an existence minimum (at present for 10 days 1,000 grams bread, 67 grams flour, 67 grams barley, 7 grams salt). Within a period of 3 months meat was given three times, no fat was given at all, and only a very small amount of marmalade. Infant mortality has risen 20 percent, the adult mortality rate probably four times. At five Evangelic cemeteries, there are 10 to 20 church burials a day (fifty to a hundred deaths to 100,000 Evangelic population ratio). For September even smaller rations are in prospect. There are almost no potatoes and new potatoes can be expected only in decreasing quantity due to the lack of delivery. A famine of the greatest proportion is already drawing near for September. It is true, eggs, fats, and bread can be bought in the black market, but only for zlotys which the Germans seldom have. All efforts of the Polish and Russian authorities have led to no improvement in the food situation; only in Z have they succeeded in getting a village regulation to bring babies milk from the nearest estate; otherwise the babies die from lack of milk. As to the question of how to meet the famine, not only the transport, but also resources are lacking. One must go through the authorities to bring in food from the rest of Germany or to call for inter-allied help. Only in this way could last-minute help be obtained.

Letter From Mrs. Emma Guffey Miller to Senator Barkley

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. JOSEPH F. GUFFEY

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES

Friday, August 2 (legislative day of Monday, July 29), 1946

Mr. GUFFEY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have inserted in the Appendix of the RECORD a letter addressed to the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY] by Mrs. Emma Guffey Miller, national committeewoman, having to do with the equal-rights amendment.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

DEMOCRATIC NATIONAL COMMITTEE,
July 29, 1946.

Hon. ALBEN W. BARKLEY,
Majority Leader, United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR BARKLEY: I have long been proud of Democratic leadership but never more proud than during the discussion of the equal-rights amendment in the Senate last week.

With true integrity you, as our party leader, acted and voted according to the party platform of 1944. You made it clear that the Democratic Party believes that party platforms are not merely collections of words to influence the voters but are endorsements of measures which the party believes should be enacted for the benefit of the people.

Such a measure is the equal-rights amendment which was unanimously recommended in a plank in our 1944 platform and your splendid support of this plank again proves that Democratic leadership is true to party pledges and such an attitude brings much pride and gratification to the women of our party.

What a contrast to Republican leadership.

From what occurred in the Senate on June 19, it is evident that Republican leaders believe that their platform recommendations involve no support on the part of the leaders and can be flouted at will.

This proves what many of us have long suspected—that Republican leaders cannot be trusted to carry out the will of their party members.

Senator WHITE, Republican leader of the Senate, stated he was not bound by his party platform and would not vote for the equal rights amendment because his party had been defeated by favoring an equal rights plank in its platform.

Strange reasoning: The Democratic Party also recommended this amendment and won!

According to Senator WHITE'S reasoning, he only votes for measures recommended by his party when his party wins elections and not because these measures are right and just. This is the most outstanding sophistry I have ever heard from the floor of the United States Senate and will go a long way to enlighten the electorate as to the little faith that can be placed in Republican leadership.

The Republican Senator from Ohio, Senator TAFT, who also opposed the amendment, was chairman of the Republican platform committee of 1944 and was elected on that platform and thus the two Republican Senate leaders proved they could not be trusted or depended on to advance and carry forward their party promises.

Judging from the many reports reaching me in the last few days, Republican women are immeasurably shocked over the actions and votes of their leaders regarding the equal rights amendment and will long remember this betrayal of the cause of justice to women.

Appreciating your wise leadership which accepts Democratic Party responsibility and respects Democratic Party pledges,

I remain,

Sincerely yours,

EMMA GUFFEY MILLER.

H. R. 6043

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. FRANK A. BARRETT

OF WYOMING

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, August 2, 1946

Mr. BARRETT of Wyoming. Mr. Speaker, it seems incredible to me that this House will adjourn without giving consideration to H. R. 6043. That bill was considered by the Committee on Agriculture of the House and reported out unanimously with certain amendments. As the bill came to the Speaker's desk, it merely provided that wool should be treated in the same manner as some 30 other commodities under the so-called Steagall amendment. Under the bill the Commodity Credit Corporation is directed to support the price of wool at not less than 90 percent of the comparable price which that agency was authorized to determine. It was further authorized to sell the wool in competition with foreign wools at such price as the market would warrant. The bill specifically provided that the authority could extend for a period of 2 years from the 1st day of January after the termination of the war, either by the Congress or by the President. In other words, the bill did not grant any special treatment to wool but merely accorded to wool the same equitable provisions as are presently applicable to the basic commodities and numerous others included under the Steagall amendment.

Now, Mr. Speaker, many people will want to know why this legislation was blocked. The plain truth is that a small segment of that great industry had the power to keep the legislation from coming up for consideration. The dealers and handlers of wool render a useful service both to the growers and to the consumers of raw wool. But, after all, their interests are not paramount. It is true that if the wool producer is forced to sell his wool at less than the cost of production in competition with the complete control presently exercised by Great Britain that the dealers can no doubt speculate on the growers' wool and make a great deal more money than they do at present. But where does that leave the grower? Under those conditions he cannot survive. He cannot produce in competition to the foreign producer. It amounts in the long run to the enrichment of a few to the eventual impoverishment of many. The day will come, Mr. Speaker, when the middlemen of this great industry will regret their attitude in opposing the reasonable request of the wool growers that they be accorded the same treatment as many other commodities are under the law.

Conditions at Hilden, Germany

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. JOSEPH P. O'HARA

OF MINNESOTA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, August 1, 1946

Mr. O'HARA. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following release from the American organization known as the Central European Rehabilitation Association, Inc., of Minneapolis, Minn., being a letter from Reverend Schult, Evangelical (Lutheran) pastor at Hilden, Germany, as to conditions existing in that community, together with a statement on the Central European Rehabilitation Association:

[Mixed Commission for General Information, Relief Agency of the Evangelical Church in Germany. Central Bureau Report on Evangelical Church. Community: Hilden]

HILDEN, April 10, 1946.

With reference to the visit which I paid you in the past week with the mayor of our city, I wish to once more present or describe the following:

Our trip resulted from an extremely needy situation. The mayor had summoned me to him with the greatest urgency during the second half of March, and had revealed to me that our city had no outlook to the further issuance of food and as a consequence—the card-like rationing on bread and nourishment would no longer be able to be distributed in 8 to 14 days.

Our city of Hilden is a small country town between Dusseldorf and Wuppertal in the district of Mettmann. Up unto the end of the war we had approximately 19,000 inhabitants, and we have increased to about 26,000 in the meanwhile, through the influx of bombed-out residents of big cities and through eastern fugitives Hilden is hardly touched, has much industry, and in the vicinity many farms. The picture in our rural district is similar. The existing circumstances do not lead one to suspect that we have critical difficulties in the supply of food for the populace. Therefore, from a professional and responsible standpoint this fact cannot be stressed enough.

About half of the population had received a hundred-weight of potatoes per person in the fall of 1945 to be put in the cellar. The other half of the people went without anything and only occasionally received a weekly ration. However, even the potatoes stored away in the cellars were used up by Christmas. By far the majority of the families have not had available any potatoes since that time. And oblivious of a few—who on the basis of connections can obtain a few pounds of potatoes—all households lack in this basic means of nourishment. Our bread ration in recent months has been limited to 2½ pounds per person per week; this makes for 3½ slices a day. And the creation of the present bread ration was often difficult enough. He who can obtain Swedish turnips considers himself lucky; in many families these are no longer available. I am not exaggerating, when I say that our populace—yes, that we all have been starving for weeks and months. We cannot fulfill the pleadings of our children for a piece of dry bread. We must turn away the starving individual who raps at our door. All classes are hit by this despair. Our workers, artisans, employees, and officials can no longer perform their work. Fainting (due to weakness) in meetings, church services, schools, and on the streets is the order of the day. I hardly know of anyone who does not suffer from the dizziness of starvation.

In the senior class (oberprima) of the high school, of eight pupils in my Evangelical religious group—three fainted away within a week; one girl lay unconscious for 1½ hours. In four classes of another school, in which I impart religious instruction, I ascertained that 70 percent of the children do not receive a regular warm meal at home, and simply because there is nothing to be had there. The mortality rate in our community has increased in the last 6 weeks to more than four-fold that of former times with the same community figure; all age brackets are hit by this death epidemic. The mortality of the infants (newly born) is unimaginable. In my supervisory section, a physician friend of mine has had to observe a mortality of 30 percent of newly born infants in the first 7 days after birth. When I witness—as I did the other day—how several children seriously fought each other for a half-rotted Swedish turnip, and then swallowed it raw—peeling and all; then I realized how it stands with us.

I would like to—no, I must—shout this need to the world. I wish to beg from those who call themselves Christians, for my suffering and starving brethren—and especially for the women and children. I can no longer plead: "Help, before it is too late," rather I can only plead with: "Help, before everything is lost." Starvation (the hunger death) is closing in on us.

SCHULT,

Evangelical (Lutheran) Pastor.

This report was recently received by an American organization known as the Central European Rehabilitation Association, Inc., of Minneapolis, Minn. CERA is an American organization organized in 1945 to help bring relief to the people of central Europe, Luxembourg, Austria, Germany, Hungary, Alsace-Lorraine, Norway, and several other countries. Many prominent Americans have associated themselves with this group which has followed a policy of trying to bring adequate rehabilitory aid to the many people not reached by other facilities. They have worked in cooperation with the American Society of Friends (Quakers) and are official American representative of the German Catholic charities, and also represent several of the German Protestant charities. They further represent in the United States internationally known relief organizations which exist in France, Switzerland, Luxembourg, Belgium, and Holland. They have maintained a policy that relief must be administered on a nonpartisan and nonsectarian basis; and, with their limited means, to date they have accomplished much good. Organizations of this type, which represent the American community spirit on a Nation-wide basis, are worthy and deserve the support of all people who are interested in helping suffering humankind irrespective of their religious or political background.

German Catholic Caritas Center

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. WILLIAM LANGER

OF NORTH DAKOTA

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES

Friday, August 2 (legislative day of Monday, July 29), 1946

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the Appendix of the RECORD a statement of the German Catholic Caritas Center, dealing with the German eastern provinces.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

GERMAN CATHOLIC CARITAS CENTER—SOME FIGURES ABOUT THE IMPORTANCE OF THE CESSION OF THE GERMAN EASTERN PROVINCES AND THE EVACUATION OF THESE TERRITORIES

On September 1, 1939, Germany had a territory of 585,786 square kilometers. And, without Austria, 497,636 square kilometers.

As a consequence of the surrender and the resolutions of the Potsdam Conference, the following territories were lost:

	Square kilometers
Under Polish rule	102,000
Under Czech rule	96,000
Under East Prussian territory, under Russian rule	16,000
Total	214,000

This means about 23 percent of the total territory of Germany without Austria.

On May 17, 1939, Germany had 79,529,975 residents, or 72,713,797 without Austria.

The territory separated from Germany, permanently or temporarily, under the Potsdam resolutions, have the following population: Prussian provinces, including Danzig, now under Polish rule, 10,100,000; Sudeten Germany, now under Czech rule, 2,900,000.

These 13,000,000 Germans, plus 2,000,000 from Czechoslovakia proper, Hungary, and Austria come under the evacuation rulings.

As one of the reasons for the transfer of German territory and the evacuation of Germany is the alleged fact that Poland has to return to Russia the territory east of the Curzon line, we wish to quote the following figures: The territory in question consists of about 150,000 square kilometers with 7,000,000 inhabitants, of which only about 1,000,000 are Poles that will have to be evacuated.

The evacuation orders for the German East are subdivided into decrees laid down by the Allied Control Commission for Germany, and in the decrees and measures adopted by Poland, Czechoslovakia, Hungary, and Austria, respectively.

The evacuation plan of the Allied Control Commission provides for the following evacuations: 2,000,000 Germans from Poland, into the Soviet Zone; 750,000 Germans from Czechoslovakia into the Soviet Zone; 1,500,000 Germans from Poland into the British Zone; 1,750,000 Germans from Czechoslovakia into the American Zone; 500,000 Germans from Hungary into the American Zone; 150,000 Germans from Austria into the French Zone.

Under this plan the evacuation of these 6,650,000 Germans should have taken place within 8 months, that is in the period beginning December 1, 1945, and ending July 31, 1946. Because of measures taken by the respective countries it is to be assumed that the total figure of evacuees will be exceeded by 100 percent. Even prior to December 1, 1945, some four to five millions of Germans had left the respective territories, partly under terrific pressure, partly because of express orders.

The territory, dwarfed under the Potsdam resolution, will have to count with an increase of population from twelve to fourteen million evacuees, which will need homes, food, clothing, and work. That is, a territory cut by 29 percent will have to nourish a population increase by 28 percent, or, in other words, there is one evacuee to every 3 to 4 residents of the truncated German territory. This is the largest mass migration the world has seen so far.

The territory ceded to Poland, 102,000 square kilometers consists mostly of agricultural soil, the mainstay of German agriculture, which produced about 25 percent of the total German agricultural production. Moreover, it includes Germany's second largest coal fields. As a consequence of this cession, the Germans will have to import foodstuff and coal on a much bigger scale than before and will, consequently, be more dependent upon the securing of foreign money.

No figures are available on the loss of property, buildings, means of production, transportation, assets of all sorts, livestock, food reserves, clothing and other personal belongings in the eastern territory. It will amount to several 100 milliards of Reichsmarks. The expropriation of the Germans was done without any reimbursement. They were allowed to take small suitcases only, provided they still had anything left.

The accommodation in addition of about 15,000,000 evacuees is going on in a territory where large- and middle-size cities are destroyed from 50 to 90 percent and where available housing in the country and in small villages is overcrowded because of the overflow from the cities.

Let's take one example each from the American zone and the British zone:

Population in Bavaria:

September 1939	6,900,000
February 1946	7,900,000

The 1,000,000 increase consists mainly (80 percent) of evacuees from the east, who had to leave the eastern provinces prior to the date set by the Allied evacuation plan. The balance are German evacuees from other zones and foreigners who do not want to return to their own country.

On the basis of the Allied plans, which provides two and one-half millions for the American zone, the population in Bavaria is likely to go up another two millions to ten millions, that is an increase of population of 30 percent, no change in territory, in a zone that is already densely populated.

In the district of Hildesheim, Province of Hannover, the status of resident population was as follows:

May 17, 1939	619,163
June 1, 1945	870,163
Dec. 1, 1945	888,166
Eastern evacuees	210,037

which means an increase of 30 percent. As evacuees cannot be housed in the large cities and middle-size cities, which are destroyed, more or less, the rate between former residents and additional population in the country districts is 2 to 1.

If we consider the high percentage of buildings required by the Allied occupation forces, needed by the bombed-out population and the foreigners (in Bavaria 160,000 foreigners who refuse to go back to their own countries, are using living quarters) the ratio in the country districts becomes even higher. The problem is as follows: How to feed all these people, in view of the decreased soil surface for cultivation; how to provide work for them, in view of the fact that means of production have been destroyed or requisitioned by the Allies; how are they to live in dwellings fit for human beings, since so many buildings are destroyed. The danger of political radicalism and bolshevism looms large.

Gives Record of Accomplishments

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. JAMES H. MORRISON
OF LOUISIANA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Friday, August 2, 1946

Mr. MORRISON. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks, I wish to include the following two letters which I am sending to a number of people in my district. The letters are as follows:

MY DEAR FRIEND: I received a letter from J. A. Rockhold, of Baton Rouge, a World War II veteran who served many months overseas. I am enclosing a copy of this letter which was printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD because I feel that you should be informed as to some of the things I have accomplished here in Washington as your Congressman in aid of our deserving veterans.

Much veterans' legislation that I introduced was incorporated in the recent GI bill and other veterans' laws. I have consistently voted for all veterans' legislation. I have tried to work diligently to help all the people of my district, regardless of political affiliations and regardless of whether their request was large or small, difficult or easy, and I shall continue those efforts.

By checking my record you will find that I have aided all those farmers who are engaged in raising sweetpotatoes, Irish potatoes, strawberries, beans, cucumbers, cotton, sugarcane, and rice, as well as the dairymen of the Sixth District. My aid in removing the ceiling price on strawberries and increasing the ceilings on cucumbers and beans was of tremendous value to the farmers. Also, my efforts in getting UNRRA to take over the Army sweetpotato contracts practically saved the day for all sweetpotato growers. I have consistently fought for higher prices and subsidies for all milk producers and shall continue to do so.

Naturally, I am proud of my record. My office here in Washington has gained the reputation of being one of the most efficient congressional offices in the Nation's Capitol.

Even my political opponents praise my work as Congressman and admit that I have been of real service to the people of my district.

If I can be of any assistance to you in my capacity as your Congressman, please feel free to call on me at any time.

Sincerely yours,

JAMES H. MORRISON,
Member of Congress.

DEAR FRIEND: It has been my privilege and honor to be your Congressman for the past 4 years, representing and serving you in the Nation's Capital. You placed your faith and confidence in me when you sent me here, and I feel that I have kept that faith and confidence. My record of hard work, efficiency, and accomplishments speaks for itself.

While it is physically impossible for me to explain my accomplishments in this letter, I want you to know that I have performed thousands of tedious tasks for the people of the Sixth District of Louisiana in straightening out and untangling thousands of allotments, aiding veterans, helping to secure all types of priorities and a hundred and one other things of a similar nature. Not one request went unheeded and I did my best to perform every task that was requested of me.

Your Congress has faced a multitude of difficult problems during the course of the war and during this reconversion period. Careful legislation has thus far evaded the disaster of inflation. Restrictions have, quite naturally, caused some complaint, but I want to congratulate you people on your perseverance and patience in confronting these obstacles that have appeared during the reconversion period.

May I stress the importance of what I believe to be the greatest problem that faces us all—the establishment of a lasting and permanent peace. As you know, I supported the United Nations organization and all other peace organizations and the bill for the control of atomic energy. I shall continue to devote the full measure of my ability, energy, and experience in working and supporting all legislation affecting future world peace.

Due to the fact that I will not be able to see each of you personally, I am taking this means of asking you for your vote and support in my reelection on Tuesday, September 10. You have elected me for two terms and by voting for and electing me in the first primary over my opponents this time you will give me added prestige and power and I will be able to do even more for you in the future than I have in the past.

Sincerely yours,

JAMES H. MORRISON,
Member of Congress.

P. S.—If I can ever help you in my capacity as Congressman here in Washington please do not hesitate to call on me.

Governor Kerr and the OPA—The Sad Saga of What Happens When One Preaches Abroad What Is Not Practiced at Home

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. KARL E. MUNDT
OF SOUTH DAKOTA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Friday, August 2, 1946

Mr. MUNDT. Mr. Speaker, Oklahoma's tall and talkative New Deal Governor came carpet-bagging up into Republican South Dakota the other day to tell our State Democratic convention all about the New Deal and its much-promised, long-delayed millennium.

Unfortunately for Governor Kerr, however, in his enthusiasm and exuberance he failed to keep in mind that what he said in South Dakota might also be read in Oklahoma nor did he seem aware of the fact that what is done by Oklahomans is observed at times by the alert citizenry of highly literate South Dakota.

Unwittingly, perhaps, but unconvincingly, for certain, the loquacious Oklahoman consequently endeavored to persuade South Dakotans that Republicans were courting and creating inflation and that the three wise men of the New Deal—presuming there are that many—were fighting like valiant gladiators to slay the demon of inflation and to continue—"again, and again, and again," maybe—to "defend the common people against the Republican monsters of greed." To all of which most students of public affairs would simply say "ho hum," and so would I except that Governor Kerr became so intoxicated with his own rhetoric that he climaxed his sermon on the mounting prices by saying "anybody voting against the OPA legislation recently passed by Congress was committing political suicide."

"Political suicide" must be a popular pastime in Oklahoma, it would appear from the following editorial, inasmuch as both Oklahoma Senators voted against the OPA bill which Governor Kerr so adjectiverously and adroitly eulogized. Two Oklahoma Members of the House voted "aye," two voted "no," and four were conveniently absent and recorded as "not voting." The South Dakota editor was right when he said "campaigning and consistency, like charity, should begin at home." It seems that Governor Kerr's gratuitous advice carries but little weight with Oklahoma's Senators and Representatives.

All of us in Congress sometimes find ourselves speaking in the other fellow's district or the other fellow's State. As a moral to us all I am, therefore, inserting an interesting editorial on Governor Kerr from the Sioux Falls Daily Argus Leader, South Dakota's leading newspaper, and the largest paper in a five-State area. The moral of the editorial seems to be, "If you don't practice what you preach, be careful where you preach what you don't practice."

GOVERNOR KERR AND THE OPA

A large majority of South Dakota people, Democrats and Republicans alike, will recall the recent appearance of Governor Kerr, of Oklahoma, at the Democrats' State convention held at Mitchell.

The Democrats well remember the Governor and his keynote speech because he championed their cause.

The Republicans remember him for another reason. This very able speaker took some pot shots at the GOP party activities.

He declared loudly, and to the delight of the assembled South Dakota Democrats, that the Republican fight against the OPA was political suicide.

But it would have been proper for the Oklahoma Governor, if he really believes OPA is a national blessing, to have stayed home in Oklahoma and remember that campaigning and consistency, like charity, should begin at home.

The reason is that both of the United States Senators from Oklahoma, one a Democrat and the other a former Democrat who ran as a Republican, voted against the OPA on the Senate roll-call vote.

It is scarcely consistent for Governor Kerr to castigate the Republicans for what he termed their fight against OPA when the Senators from Democratic Oklahoma vote against the price agency themselves.

Equal-Rights Amendment

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. BRIEN McMAHON
OF CONNECTICUT

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES

Friday, August 2 (legislative day of Monday, July 29), 1946

Mr. McMAHON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a radio address entitled "Is the Equal-Rights Amendment Equitable to Women" delivered by Mrs. Florence L. C. Kitchelt, chairman of Connecticut Committee for the Equal-Rights Amendment, on July 15, 1946.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

The word "women" does not occur in the equal rights amendment, "equality of rights under the law shall not be denied or abridged on account of sex." It is a goal for fairness and just dealing for all of us, both men and women. But the public interprets it as a measure of equity for women. The public conscience is troubled knowing that the law too often treats women as inferiors.

Take my city of New Haven, in a State, Connecticut, where most laws are fair and women are even invited to sit on juries. They are forbidden next door in Massachusetts. Until recently, New Haven paid men teachers $500 more a year than women in the same job. There were similar discriminations all over the State. What could these women teachers do? Persuasion had failed. The Constitution does not protect them, except in the right to vote. That ancient document written in 1787 was framed in the understanding of the old common law, under which women had no legal rights. And as for a married woman, legally she did not even exist.

While these Connecticut women teachers, supported indeed by many men, were carrying on a campaign of blood, sweat, and tears and thousands of dollars, down South other teachers were winning a fight for equal pay, because they are protected by the Constitution—protected against injustice because of race. You can get the information right here in the Willkie Memorial Building. Negro teachers, with the same training as white, are often paid about half as much. Now, in Federal courts, Negro teachers are appealing for equal pay, under the fourteenth amendment, and practically always winning. There have been 40 such victories recently.

Now what happened to the women teachers in Connecticut, who cannot ask justice from the Constitution because they do not belong to an underprivileged race but to an underprivileged sex? They finished a campaign, costly in health and wealth, and won a bill in our State legislature forbidding discrimination in salaries because of sex. But there are loopholes. The State attorney general has ruled that school principals are not school teachers. This leaves the women principals paid less than men as a living example of legal discrimination against persons because of sex.

There is not a State in the Union in which women do not suffer some legal disadvantage, often an indignity. When a woman was elected Governor of Texas, she could not take office until she had gone to court to have her legal disabilities as a married woman set aside so that she could make contracts. Right here in New York, in the absence of a written contract otherwise, the earnings of the wife in the home belong to the husband. A young friend in Florida, a mother with two children, tried to buy a house with her own money. It was impossible without her husband's signature. But he was 6,000 miles away in the Pacific.

People who oppose the Equal Rights Amendment ask "Why not work State by State to root out laws that are unfair? Shifting sands! What one legislature giveth the next taketh away! State law is never a substitute for a constitutional principle.

These unfair laws are woven into the very warp and woof of our legal systems. Women should not be condemned (and they will never consent) to this endless digging in the past. It would be an appalling social waste. Men and women are needed to work together to rebuild a devastated world, to construct a better civilization for all of us.

When we speak of equal treatment under the law for women, some people rise to oppose because they confuse the word "identical" with the word "equal." This is not correct grammar, nor is it good law. "Equal" refers to values, not to identities. Also the amendment is not a piece of special legislation, a State law. It sets forth a principle, a measure of goodness, for our American Bill of Rights. Other constitutional principles provide for freedom of speech, the press, and religion.

Anything new is apt to be misunderstood, and by the best of people. Did not Elihu Root, a great statesman, oppose giving women the right to vote? He said that he could protect his own wife and daughters. The point he missed is that women are not adolescents and they are not a subdivision of the human race. And there was Prof. Munro Smith, a great teacher of law at Columbia University. He used the lawbooks to prove that women should not vote.

In this amendment we are dealing with a problem as old as history, one of an ancient and hoary trinity, injustice because of race, creed, or sex. Our Constitution has made declarations against the first two, race and creed, but not against injustice because of sex. Witness to the importance of this is the preamble to the Charter of the United Nations, which, in its second paragraph, calls for the "equal rights of men and women"—those very words. The Government of the United States can honor its signature to that Charter by adopting this amendment. It is now before Congress, reported favorably by the Judiciary Committees of both House and Senate. The director of the American Law Institute says the amendment will give women full legal recognition as human beings. The amendment means full citizenship for women, with rights and duties (two sides of the same medal) and the civic dignity expected in a democracy.

Ireland Back in the News

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. JAMES M. MEAD
OF NEW YORK

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES

Friday, August 2 (legislative day of Monday, July 29), 1946

Mr. MEAD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD an article entitled "Ireland Back in the News," written by William

A. Millen, and published in the Washington Star of June 23, 1946.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

IRELAND BACK IN THE NEWS

(By William A. Millen)

Ireland, turbulent a generation back, has dropped out of the news, but Col. Timothy A. McInerny, big, brawny director of the Division of Public Information at the Department of Justice, who was in intelligence work for the United States Army there during the recent war, challenges those who believe that the Irish were neutral or favored Germany. He contends that the Irish were of real help to the Allies

Colonel McInerny, about whose Irish extraction there is no doubt, Harvard and Boston College graduate and practical newspaperman, who once worked on the Boston Post, declares that Britain was glad to have a neutral Eire at her back, supplying her with much-needed food and recruits, particularly flyers While the Government of Eire was officially neutral, the people were most certainly not, in Colonel McInerny's opinion.

At his big office in the Department of Justice, Colonel McInerny chatted about the Ireland of wartime and the Irish. The colonel was not only in Ireland for a goodly portion of the war, but recently returned there to renew friendships—from the quality to the humble pub keepers Now he is back in Washington, advising Attorney General Tom Clark on public relations, but he thinks often of Eire and believes the Americans have a distorted view of that nation's part in war.

"The Republic of Eire was never, even slightly, neutral in the last war," the colonel stoutly maintains.

The colonel served not only in Ireland, but north Africa, Italy, Russia, the Middle East, and France and was on duty in the Pacific.

Here is Colonel McInerny's slant on wartime Eire:

Very little knowledge of what went on inside Eire in 1942 ever came out of that country. When the American troops landed in Belfast, Northern Ireland, on January 26 of that year, Maj. Gen. Russell P. Hartle, United States Army, was in command of the American forces in Northern Ireland. He was extremely alert, as were all his troops, to the possibility that the Germans might land in neutral and virtually unprotected Eire. Thus every means was used to make certain that American units would dash south over the border to meet a German invasion. In fact, these units, the First Armored and Thirty-fourth Infantry Divisions, were to lead the vanguard of an Allied Army to help drive the Germans out of Ireland if and when they staged an invasion.

Colonel McInerny was assigned to the G–2 section of General Hartle's headquarters, and his mission was to visit Southern Ireland regularly to set up a liaison with the military attaché in Dublin and with the United States Minister, David Gray.

COLONEL M'INERNY SAYS IRISH HEARTS WERE TRUE TO ALLIES

At that time it was surmised that Eire was neutral because of a hatred for Britain, but Colonel McInerny holds an opposite view. He says that in no part of Eire were the people interested in any other outcome of the war other than a complete defeat of Germany. Officers of the Irish Army, with whom the colonel consorted, referred to the Allies as "We" and the Germans as "the Jerries." In fact, their conversation would lead anyone to believe the Irish were actually in the war, he said.

No matter how strictly Mr. De Valera and his government interpreted the laws of neutrality, the people, on the other hand, paid little or no attention to them. To begin with, full permission of the Irish Government was accorded this officer to travel to and from his post in the north, the only requirement being that he dress in civilian clothes. The Irish had been looking on foreign uniforms for hundreds of years and had decided the only uniform that could be legally worn at that time in their country was their own.

THE IRISH WERE READY TO AID THE ALLIES

There were a few firebrands, either in the IRA (Irish Republican Army) or on its fringes, who declared they would like to see Germany win the war. But the majority of the Irish not only wished to see the Allies win, but would have taken an active part, provided it did not jeopardize their position of neutrality which they considered to be their great declaration of independence. They appeared to be in a historical position similar to the people of the United States during the Napoleonic wars. No one in the United States at that time had any sympathy for Napoleon, but the memories of the British rule were too close to permit the American people to join with the British in fighting Napoleon. The declaration of neutrality in 1935 by the Irish was to them a symbol of national independence and they did not ever intend to jeopardize their stand.

However, in many ways they displayed their sympathy for the Allied cause. One way was for the young men and women to join the British armed forces. They filtered over the border into Ulster in large numbers and joined various branches of the service. Most young Irishmen appeared to favor the RAF and many of them were decorated for bravery in this branch. There were many enlistments in the British regiments because of family or regional tradition. For example, the Irish Guards had no trouble getting recruits, and other regiments, including Scottish regiments, had a goodly share of Irish boys. That these troops really meant business is vouched for by the fact that seven Victoria Crosses were awarded to these "neutrals." There was a higher percentage of recruits from Eire in proportion to the population than there was from Ulster, which is still a part of Great Britain.

American soldiers, upon arrival in Ulster, found a great many young men of military age still in civilian clothes and there were two reasons for that. One was the need of workers in the war industries, notably the airplane factories and shipyards; and the other is that about 50 percent of the population of Ulster is composed of individuals whose racial, religious, and nationalistic feeling are tied to Dublin rather than the Ulster government. Young men in this class did not feel as much like volunteering as did the independent youths south of the border.

While Colonel McInerny was given free access to and from southern counties in Ireland, it was not believed practical by the military authorities that he should be too obvious in his movements and, oftentimes, instead of boarding a train in Belfast to proceed directly to Dublin, he used little frequented and isolated border roads to make these crossings. One very convenient place for crossing was in Caledon on an estate owned by the Earl of Caledon, the older brother of Gen. Sir Harold Alexander, now Governor General of Canada. General Alexander at that time was leading his troops in the desert, along with his Irish-born subordinate, Gen. Sir Bernard Montgomery.

BORDER ESTATE WAS STOCKED WITH AMERICAN BEARS, DEER

This estate is one of the most unusual in Ireland. It is situated in the county of Armagh, right on the county line of Monaghan, which lies in neutral Eire. The estate has beautiful lawns and hillsides and a herd of Wyoming deer, brought to Ireland by an Earl of Caledon who was a great admirer of our wild West a century ago. In addition to this herd of deer, which ran wild in a heavily wooded park, was a huge bear pit where grizzly bears, also from the American West, were on display.

In the stables and in the main house of this estate American troops were quartered. A Battalion of the Thirty-fourth Division, which was afterward to render such stellar service in North Africa and Italy, was stationed there during most of 1942. On the southern border of this estate is a country road which formed the frontier between the two countries. On the Eire side of the road was the estate of Glaslough, where lived Winston Churchill's aunt, Lady John Leslie; her son, now Sir Randolph Churchill Shane Leslie, and his wife, now Lady Shane Leslie, who in her girlhood was Miss Marjorie Ide, well known in Washington society during the administration of President Theodore Roosevelt.

Colonel McInerny would change into civilian attire in the great house at Caledon and would then make his way across the border to the estate of Glaslough where, after tea with two American hostesses, he would continue his journey southward to Dublin.

At that time, in Dublin, the German Legation was still in operation and its presence in Dublin was regarded, especially by journalists, as a horrible example of Ireland's "perfidity" in not jumping into the war with both feet.

However, it did not bother the British intelligence officers in neutral Eire. They worked hand in glove with the Irish civilian and military police and very little transpired in the German Legation that was not known quickly at the British Intelligence headquarters in Lisburn, Northern Ireland, and in London. While the Germans were free to come and go they were under a surveillance as strict as any prisoner could be. The Irish police are well versed in the ways of intrigue and espionage, having an inheritance of this sort of thing from centuries of British rule. In addition the average Irish citizen was keenly observant of any stranger in the neighborhood. It is said in the small villages of Ireland that even a strange cat is spied out by keen Irish eyes as soon as he enters the village precincts.

Colonel McInerny wore a suit of Irish tweed made by an Irish tailor, and prided himself because of his Irish ancestry to look quite a lot like a native-born Irishman, but this belief was shattered on many an occasion because he could hardly set foot in an Irish town or village without being spotted as a "Yank." He did not have to open his mouth in conversation because word of his presence spread ahead of him from overseas, regardless of whether or not he introduced himself.

THOUGH INCOGNITO, HOSPITALITY ALWAYS MET COLONEL M'INERNY

Once, at dusk in a resort town called Salt Hill in Galway, his automobile ran out of gasoline and he walked into the village and turned in at the nearest inn. He was halfway up the drive when the inn door opened and the publican's wife called out to him that he was welcome and that supper was on the table. He asked the good woman, as he was eating, how she knew he was approaching. She said that news of the American officer had preceded him and that as the afternoon wore on she figured he would probably spend the night there. She was right.

Everywhere Colonel McInerny went the young men crowded around him asking how it was possible to join the American Army. If at that time the American forces could have thrown their ranks open to physically fit Irishmen, it would have received an amazing flood of recruits.

The Irish were always eager to help the Americans in any way they could. Occasionally, our bombers and other planes were forced down in neutral Eire and the people of the countryside turned out to greet the stranded military personnel and to offer them hospitality. One of the greatest stories of female heroism heard by Colonel McInerny during his 4 years of Army service, was that of the Irish woman physician in Sligo who crawled on her hands and knees 3 miles up a steep mountainside at midnight in pouring rain to administer first-aid to seven surviving members of the crew of a crashed B–17.

The entire countryside was aroused that night and the Irish farmers formed a human chain and, after tying the injured American boys to stretchers, passed them from hand to hand down the mountainside to safety. But for the emergency treatment given by the courageous little Sligo woman, at least a half dozen American boys would have lost their lives, the colonel says.

Time and again, members of crews forced down, and airplanes were returned over the border by the Irish Government, although no mention was ever made of the fact.

IRISH WERE GOOD SAMARITANS TO MANY AMERICAN FLYERS

Colonel McInerny had an opportunity to return to Ireland early this year. He found that he had not been forgotten since 1942 by the many hundreds of Irish who knew him in the dark years of the war as an American officer engaged in a mission for his country. Train stewards, doormen at hotels, and publicans all greeted him like fellow sharers in the victory.

One reason why the American people got such an unfair picture of Ireland's benevolence during the war, says Colonel McInerny, was that very little of the news was covered. American journalists were concentrated mostly in London, and people who wrote authoritatively about what was going on in Ireland sometimes only spent 2 or 3 days there. It was the popular pastime to draw a glowing picture of good food and good fellowship with the Germans in Ireland, but it did not give her government the benefit of the whole truth. The British attitude was invariably to let Ireland alone and to obtain from her recruits and food. Both objectives were achieved, and today traditional distrust of the British has largely disappeared from Irish thoughts and conversations. Ireland believes Britain treated her fairly and has no complaint.

The only cause for disaffection between the Irish and the British now is the partition question, said Colonel McInerny. The Irish believe that the six lost counties of Ireland were set apart as a British beachhead to keep Ireland in line.

Conditions in the Ruhr Valley

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. JOSEPH P. O'HARA

OF MINNESOTA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, August 1, 1946

Mr. O'HARA. Mr. Speaker, the problem of the conditions of rehabilitation of the peoples of Central Europe, and particularly the responsibility of our Government and our people to that part of the territory occupied by the United States, is of concern to all humane and thoughtful Americans—not only as to matters of policy of our Government but as to actual conditions of the people.

The Central European Rehabilitation Association, Inc., of Minneapolis, Minn., has furnished me with the following release of a letter written by one who has observed conditions in the Ruhr Valley. Under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following release:

Recently an American organization, The Central European Rehabilitation Association, Inc., of Minneapolis, Minn., a group concerned with the rehabilitation of the peoples of central Europe received a letter from the director of the Swiss Charities (Swiss Caritas), of Lucerne, Switzerland, dated May 29, 1946. This letter, written by Rev. Father G. Crivelli, states in part as follows:

"I returned a few days ago from a trip to the Ruhr Valley and must admit that I never returned from a trip abroad so depressed as this time. The situation is more terrible than I thought, although destruction and misery are not new to me for I had already seen France, Austria, Luxembourg, Italy, and part of southern Germany. The situation gets literally worse from day to day on account of the large number of refugees from the east. What is tragic is that of these refugees 2 percent on the average are fit to work, whereas all others, women, children, sick, and aged people must be maintained in bed. It seems that those who are capable of working are held back (in Soviet controlled territory).

"The calories in the British zone amount to about a thousand a day and in the American zone about 1,200 a day, while in the French zone they amount to less than a thousand each day. One must further state that the food allocated on the ration card is not available. In Berlin it has been found that 50 percent of the children suffer from rickets. The helplessness of the situation is especially evident through the fact that 68,000,000 people will have to live in the remaining dismembered Germany while, according to exact statistical calculations, the production of food is only sufficient for 34,000,000 people. The number of deaths increases rapidly, especially where small children and old people are concerned. In fact, help for Germany is nothing else than the saving of human beings from starvation, especially in the cities, because it is simply impossible to exist on the rations which are given out. In the country it is slightly better, but the number of refugees who are streaming in and have to be distributed on the land and who cannot work make the situation even there constantly worse."

Want a House? Build Your Own Walls Dirt Free

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. WILLIAM LANGER

OF NORTH DAKOTA

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES

Friday, August 2 (legislative day of Monday, July 29), 1946

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the Appendix of the RECORD an article entitled "Want a House? Build Your Own Walls Dirt Free," by A. B. Lee, published in the July 1946 issue of the Washington, D. C., Legion News.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

WANT A HOUSE? BUILD YOUR OWN WALLS DIRT FREE

(By A. B. Lee)

American Legion officials in Topeka, Kans., have advised the veterans to dig their homes—meaning to build them of rammed earth. There is no priority on dirt. You may use all you want of it without asking anyone's permission. If you own your lot, you are standing on your own best building material, for enough earth for the walls may be obtained from the cellar excavation.

The Kansas veterans point with pride to their State university as an example of this type of construction because they know walls built of such material and in this manner will stand for hundreds of years. Returning veterans from the valley of the Rhone River, report that houses of earth 900 years old are still occupied and in good condition.

I have just received a letter from a home-hungry soldier recently back from Europe. He says:

"The article, Houses of Earth, you wrote and Coronet published in June 1937, plus the fact that I saw and lived in that type of house in both France and Germany, prompted me to investigate its possibilities in this section—Williston Park, N. Y., but so far I have run into nothing but ridicule and it-can't-be-done type of answers.

"What are the facts?"

BUILD IT YOURSELF

This veteran, Ezio L. Roffino, is entitled to the facts, and so are several million other veterans who want homes.

These facts are furnished by the Bureau of Standards in its report to the Government after testing rammed-earth walls. "These walls will hold" says the report—"and there is reason to believe that anyone with a little instruction can build earth walls successfully. The fact that people having little money can build walls themselves with material readily available appeals very strongly and making information on earth construction available through our report is an effective way to help people of this country to help themselves."

The difference in cost lies in the saving made by using free dirt and unskilled labor for most of the work. The Alabama project included a number of cottages and proved that a six-room cottage could be erected for $2,250, including wiring, plumbing, and fixtures; $850 for materials and $1,400 for labor, and there you have a house so fire-resistant that but one-third of the fire insurance on frame construction would be required. The results attained by the Alabama experiment, under the auspices of the Farm Security Administration, were so satisfactory that the Department issued a bulletin stating that it is possible to build:

1. A house of such sturdy character that it will last indefinitely. Such maintenance as is necessary can be performed by the owner at minimum cost.

ADVANTAGES

2. A house so insulated that it is exceptionally cool in summer and easily and cheaply heated in winter.

3. A house which can be built in some areas and under certain conditions for approximately two-thirds the cost of frame dwellings of comparable space and functional design.

The Alabama houses marked only the beginning of the Government's activities in rammed earth, and it was soon knee-deep in its promotion for the Indian Service. The Sioux Indian buildings were the warmest and driest of any of the community high schools—there being a difference in temperature of 20 degrees between the inside and outside walls, in a region where the thermometer registers from 108° in summer to 30 below in the winter.

The Government's greatest activities have been concerned in the building of schoolhouses throughout the Nation by Boy Scouts, NYA, and WPA organizations, but it must not be assumed that these efforts of pisô de terre construction are for economy alone, for many beautiful Spanish haciendas copied from European ancestral estates now grace the landscape in California.

Farmer Appreciates Congressional Aid

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. JAMES H. MORRISON
OF LOUISIANA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Friday, August 2, 1946

Mr. MORRISON. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks, I wish to insert in the RECORD the following letter received from Wiltz Hoover, a farmer of my district. His letter is as follows:

PONCHATOULA, LA.

DEAR CONGRESSMAN: I intended writing you sooner but have been very busy here on the farm. I want to tell you how much we appreciate your fine work on our behalf. You have helped us so much since you have been in Washington.

When you kept the ceiling price on cucumbers it did a lot of good and helped many a farmer. Raising the ceiling price on beans helped plenty, too.

I was talking with some fellows in Ponchatoula and we were figuring how much money we got as a result of your taking off the ceiling price on strawberries this spring. We would have lost money on our strawberry crop because of bad weather conditions if the ceiling had remained on. With your wonderful help we came out fairly well. We figure you gave us over $1,340,000 for our strawberries by taking off the ceiling. That amount would pay your salary, as one farmer put it "for 134 years there in Washington," which shows you how much value in money you mean to the farmers. We got this amount of $1,340,000 by figuring what we got without the ceiling as compared to what we would have gotten with the ceiling remaining on.

I guess you have heard from a lot of farmers thanking you for this wonderful work. All the merchants and everyone I talk to seem to think that you had done a remarkable job. I believe more farmers would have written you if they were not so busy at this time.

You are very strong with all the farmers here and I tell them every day that having you in Congress means money in the farmers' pockets, since you have done so much.

It looks like you may not have opposition this time but, if you do, I know you are going to be reelected by a larger vote than ever, as you are very strong with all these farmers and they keep talking how much they like you and how strong you are going to run.

I hope to see you when you are down here in Louisiana. I hear your two boys are getting along fine.

Yours truly,

WILTZ HOOVER.

The Importance of Conciliation and Its Work

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. JAMES M. MEAD
OF NEW YORK
IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES
Friday, August 2 (legislative day of Monday, July 29), 1946

Mr. MEAD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a statement entitled "The Importance of Conciliation and Its Work," prepared by me.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE IMPORTANCE OF CONCILIATION AND ITS WORK

Not long ago I heard that an eastern manufacturer had decided to give one of his officials a new title, namely, "Director of Human Relations." That has stuck in my mind, for I can think of no better way to describe the job we usually call director of industrial relations.

To most of us the phrase "industrial relations" has a forbidding sound. It suggests controversy and labor unrest. But actually the term covers a much wider field, embracing not only labor disputes but the complex daily intercourse between those who work and those who direct work. This is a close and intimate relationship, one which calls for greater tolerance and human understanding than most of us realize.

For a near view of this whole process I want to turn to the United States Conciliation Service, which is now one of the most active Government agencies concerned with labor-management relations. Apart from the quasi-judicial National Labor Relations Board and the National Mediation Board, which handles railroad labor relations, the Department of Labor's Conciliation Service is the only Federal agency in this vitally important field.

As a democratic, freedom-loving nation we have woven collective bargaining into the very fabric of our industrial system. And there is widespread agreement that this is by far the best method of determining the "social contact" between labor and management. Now collective bargaining itself is essentially a problem in human relations, though we often forget this fact because economic issues usually claim the spotlight.

To most onlookers it is differences over wages, hours, or working conditions that cause unrest. These issues are present in most disputes and they must be dealt with by collective bargaining. But like the visible part of an iceberg, these obvious differences are not the fundamental cause of industrial strife. Industrial strife has its roots in faulty human relations which block the way to real collective bargaining.

The United States Conciliation Service was created to bridge that very gap and to promote free collective bargaining between the representatives of management and labor. By purely voluntary methods of negotiation and mediation the Service has disposed of more than 125,000 cases since it was set up in the Department of Labor back in 1913. This impressive total included almost every imaginable kind of dispute and provides a rich background of experience for present-day operations.

How well these lessons have been learned is shown by recent figures. During the fiscal year which ended June 30, 1946, commissioners of conciliation, as they are called, settled more than 18,800 cases, involving over 8,500,000 workers. This total included 3,206 strikes, 5,088 threatened strikes, and 8,140 controversies.

Particular significance attaches to the record since VJ-day. With the removal of wartime controls the Conciliation Service faced one of the Nation's most difficult periods in terms of labor-management relations. Wartime maladjustments, the prolonged strain of all-out production, and widespread uncertainty over the economic future created an atmosphere that was anything but conciliatory. Moreover, during the war period Government controls had largely superseded or interrupted the process of collective bargaining.

Against that backdrop the Conciliation Service was able to settle 14,134 cases from VJ-day through June 30, cases that involved more than 7,000,000 workers. Work stoppages totaled 2,865; there were 4,794 threatened strikes, and 6,475 controversies. Arbitrations, technical services, and other situations made up the balance of the postwar case load.

I want to underline that figure for threatened strikes because it tells a most important and reassuring story. In March the Service handled 448 cases where a walk-out was impending when a commissioner reached the scene. Yet they went ahead and settled 85 percent of these disputes before a walk-out occurred. The performance in later months was equally good.

In New York State we are rightly proud of the good relations that exist between labor and management. And our citizens know that many factors are responsible. Wise legislation, soundly administered, has promoted better understanding. In addition, many of our industries have practiced collective bargaining over a long period of years.

Nevertheless, New York State with its immensely varied industrial pattern and its heavy concentration of corporate leadership, has been the scene of frequent labor disputes. During the past fiscal year the United States Conciliation Service handled 1,454 of these cases, involving some 972,000 employees. Of this total only 242 were strikes, involving less than 263,000 workers. In other words, about 1 dispute in 6 led to a work stoppage.

Whether we look at New York State or the country as a whole, these figures show that commissioners of conciliation know their business. Equally important, this record demonstrates the value of collective bargaining—even when the industrial climate is very unsettled.

When reports of labor unrest fill the news columns, how many of us stop to realize that about 14,000,000 workers now are covered by some 50,000 union contracts? Contracts which affect not only the wages and hours but the way of life these workers and their families enjoy. This means that every working day many of these contracts come up for renewal or renegotiation, and literally thousands of grievances are adjusted through regularly established grievance procedure. These day-to-day accomplishments are a vital part of collective bargaining, even if we seldom hear about them.

With these general considerations out of the way, I want to focus on the techniques of conciliation, the methods that commissioners use in promoting industrial peace. Here are five key functions as defined by Edgar L. Warren, Director of the United States Conciliation Service.

"In the first place, I feel that the function of Conciliation is to make sure that each issue in dispute is considered on its merits and as dispassionately as possble by both parties."

"Each party must thoroughly understand the other's point of view."

"All possible means of reaching a settlement must be thoroughly explored by both parties."

"The parties should be made to realize the implications in terms of economic consequences of their failure to arrive at some kind of settlement."

"The settlement must be one which will promote good relationships in the future."

Mr. Warren calls that last function the most important of all and I see no reason to quarrel with his judgment. It is equally plain that the men who are assigned to these duties must be strictly impartial if they are to win and hold the confidence of management and labor alike. And without that confidence the commissioner's task would be almost impossible.

Though no two cases ever follow exactly the same pattern, it is possible to outline the essential steps. Once he is assigned to a case the Commissioner's first task is to meet the parties and try to get a clear picture of the situation—not forgetting any personal angles that may lie in the path of real negotiation. Sometimes this spade work can be done during the first confidential interview with each of the parties.

The next step is to arrange a joint conference where the issues are presented and both sides can discuss them freely and frankly—with the commissioner sitting in as a friendly, impartial moderator. From this point on, progress may be slow or rapid depending on the complexity of the issues, the personalities involved, and the extent of the differences which must be resolved. It is not unusual for such a meeting to recess while one side or the other gathers additional information or submits a new and confidential proposal.

But no matter what routine is followed this conference-table method is a vital part of conciliation procedure. Essentially it is a continuation of collective bargaining—under expert guidance. Let me emphasize that point, which every commissioner is well aware of. While these men must be ready with suggestions that will avoid a deadlock, their real purpose is to help the parties work out terms of agreement that both can live with.

Here are one or two examples of the techniques commissioners have used. These involved firms in New York State, but the human characteristics which they illustrate have no State boundaries.

After prolonged negotiations between union representatives and the manager of a metal-working plant, an agreement was reached that left both parties well satisfied.

The commissioner was about to suggest that both parties sign when the plant manager called him aside.

"There is only one hurdle left, commissioner. I don't believe the president of the company will accept that contract."

"It's a good contract," the commissioner said.

"I know it is," the manager agreed, "but how can I make the boss believe it?"

"Would it help any if I went with you?" the commissioner asked.

"That's not a bad idea. You see I'm afraid he won't realize this is the best contract I could get."

Together they visited the company president and got his acceptance of the full agreement.

On another occasion a clash of personalities had reached a point where neither the representative of the employer nor of the union would speak to each other—and the dispute could not be settled except through these two persons.

Searching his mind for a possible means of bringing them together, the commissioner remembered that both men were rabid baseball fans. It was comparatively easy to get three tickets and when the game started the commissioner literally was sitting in the middle. For a few innings the two men ignored each other. Then came a 3-run rally which broke the ice, and before the game ended another labor dispute was on its way toward settlement.

Needless to say the Conciliation Service has more to offer than tact and good will. Today the commissioner must be well versed in what constitutes successful practices in industrial relations and he must be familiar with governmental laws and regulations that have a bearing on a particular case.

At present some 300 commissioners are in the field. Since the service is not an enforcement agency and rarely enters a case except at the direct request of management or labor, the first step is taken when one side or the other asks the services of a conciliator. In most instances time will be saved if this first contact is made through the nearest regional office There are seven regional directors, strategically located from coast to coast:

Howard Durham, 294 Washington Street, Boston 8, Mass.

H. Ross Colwell, Parcel Post Building, 341 Ninth Avenue, New York 1, N. Y.

Clarence H. Williams, 10 Forsyth Street Building, Atlanta, Ga.

Edward J. Cunningham, 258 Federal Building, Cleveland 14, Ohio.

J. J. Spillane, 228 West Adams Street, Chicago 6, Ill.

E. P. Marsh, Phelan Building, Room 533, 760 Market Street, San Francisco 2, Calif.

William F. White, 2411 Fidelity Building, Kansas City 6, Mo.

New York State is served by Ross Colwell. During the past several years disputes handled by the Conciliation Service in New York State have been as follows:

	Disputes	Workers involved	Other situations	Workers involved	Total	Workers involved
Fiscal year—
1942-43	1,305	2,056,101	235	56,879	1,540	2,112,980
1943-44	1,665	1,336,708	180	18,954	1,845	1,355,662
1944-45	1,680	998,325	175	32,676	1,855	1,021,001
1945-46	1,270	952,772	184	19,041	1,454	971,801

This picture of the Conciliation Service, with its emphasis on voluntary negotiation and the human side of labor-management disputes, contains no magic formulas or iron-clad rules. There is no element of compulsion, no stage where mandates or decrees may be imposed. And if I read our history aright, there is no place for such compulsion within the framework of American democracy. On the contrary, we must rely more and more on the growth of tolerance and understanding—that spirit of give and take which is the basis of all human relations. collective bargaining is an essential ingredient.

How Many Billions Were Given Away?—Statement of Comptroller General Warren

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. RICHARD B. WIGGLESWORTH

OF MASSACHUSETTS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, August 1, 1946

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. Mr. Speaker, on July 29, 1946, the Comptroller General of the United States made a challenging statement before the Special Committee to Investigate the National Defense Program in the United States Senate.

The statement emphasizes once again the gross waste, extravagance, and misuse of the people's money under the present administration.

I believe—

He said—

the greatest service I can render is by pointing out the statutory break-down and the abuse of vastly broadened authority given to the procurement agencies, all under the guise of war, as well as the degeneration of moral standards which has led inevitably to conditions such as this committee has uncovered.

We cannot overestimate the seriousness of this situation.

He continued—

Nothing less than the faith of our people in the integrity of their Government is at stake.

The statement should be read by every one in America interested in eliminating conditions which have prevailed under the present administration.

Under leave to extend my remarks, I include at this point in the RECORD a copy of the statement, allowing it to speak for itself.

STATEMENT OF LINDSAY C. WARREN, COMPTROLLER GENERAL OF THE UNITED STATES, BEFORE THE SPECIAL COMMITTEE TO INVESTIGATE THE NATIONAL DEFENSE PROGRAM, UNITED STATES SENATE, JULY 29, 1946

Mr. Chairman and members of the committee, I appreciate your invitation to come here today to bring you my views on the safeguards needed in wartime procurement and to tell you what the General Accounting Office can and cannot do in policing war contracts under present law. I am not here to belittle the splendid job done by this Nation's industry in producing, and by the Government agencies in distributing, the materials needed to win the war. All credit to them for that. However, I am still old-fashioned enough to believe in the sanctity of contracts, and that there should be a strict accountability for public funds, and that the taxpayers should get value received for their dollars. From my seat it has looked as if everybody and his brother were out to get the Government during the lush war years. I want to congratulate this committee as one body that is determined to do something about it.

During the committee's early days, when it was still the Truman committee, it came to the attention of our auditors in the Detroit area that employees of cost-plus contractors were exacting fees, or kickbacks, from subcontractors. The GAO has no power of subpena, so I immediately telephoned Senator Truman, who had the committee's investigators move in. The committee held hearings in Detroit, at which our findings were confirmed and further kick-back cases were brought out. In 1943 I sent to Congress a draft of legislation designed to prohibit this nefarious practice and to give us the power to audit the books of cost-plus contractors or their subcontractors. Such legislation was not enacted until 2½ years later, in March 1946, but it was made retroactive and the GAO has already received voluntary refunds from one large motor manufacturer.

At the request of the committee, the GAO has assisted and will continue to assist in the investigation now in progress. I believe, though, the greatest service I can render is by pointing out the statutory break-down and the abuse of the vastly broadened authority given to the procurement agencies, all under the guise of war, as well as the degeneration of moral standards which has led inevitably to conditions such as this committee has uncovered. We cannot overestimate the seriousness of this situation. Nothing less than the faith of our people in the integrity of their Government is at stake.

In peacetime there were two great, fundamental bulwarks which have stood the test of many years, protecting the taxpayers as well as the contractors, to see that fair prices were paid for what the Government bought. The first—enacted 2 days before Abraham Lincoln's inauguration, the law ever since—has demanded that contracts be let only after public competition to get the best bargain for the Government. The second—taking the words from a resolution of April 1776 by the Second Continental Congress, the law for over a century—has demanded that claims and adjustments be finally settled not by the officers whose own contracts are in question, but by the accounting officers. Obviously, the system of advertising was not designed for wartime and needed a lot of change. But let us see in what manner those ramparts actually were scaled when the demands of war took the forefront.

NO. 1. THE COST-PLUS CONTRACT

Even though that major vice of World War I, cost-plus-a-percentage-of-cost contracting, was reformed to avoid the percentage figuring of the fee, it still remains true that cost-plus procurement is the greatest device ever invented for pumping out the Treasury. What incentive remains to exercise the American genius for efficiency when the most farfetched and extravagant outlays are reimbursed, dollar for dollar, upon the unchecked approval of a friendly or downright sociable contracting officer? From the very start I have cried out at the waste and extravagance that the cost-plus system invites. And it is certainly no rejoinder now to point out that GAO has audited the payments and passed them in the accounts—the fact is we were bound by law, or so the courts have held, to whitewash almost any conceivable cost so approved. Thus the cost-plus contract in reality is a wide-open invitation to spend the people's money, a gate wide enough to drive a team through, and nobody but the contracting officer can stop it so long as it comes within the terms of the contract.

NO. 2. THE FIRST WAR POWERS ACT

It took only about 10 days after Pearl Harbor to get enacted a statute whose simple and eloquent language is its own best exposé. It allows the officers to "enter into contracts and into amendments or modifications of contracts heretofore or hereafter made and to make advance, progress, and other payments thereon, without regard to the provisions of law relating to the making, performance, amendment, or modification of contracts."

That statute, and Executive Order 9001 that implemented it, mean that the departments, subject only to their varying notions of the precautions and controls to be set up, and with authority delegated all the way down the line, could promise and pay any amount of money to anybody for anything, or for nothing at all, provided only it was certified as facilitating the prosecution of the war. Under it the common law sanctity of contracts has been forgotten—when the breaks went against the contractors, time and time again they have been bailed out by the process of amendment to raise the price, sometimes even after they were completed and the books closed. And that authority is being continued by a bill which passed the Congress not 3 days ago. But when the shoe is on the other foot, the breaks going to the contractors instead of against them, not often does any one think of price reductions and refunds, at least until we get into the larger cases covered by renegotiation. Do you see why I say most everyone seems to be out to get the Government?

The GAO's audit under these negotiated lump-sum contracts—and I might mention that includes the Garsson contracts—is limited to the simple function of seeing that the payments made (in advance or otherwise) wind up to be the total sum promised in the contract. We may not question a favored firm, an extravagant price, nor a specious undertaking. It is practically impossible, in the absence of fraud, for the GAO to take exception to any payments made in accordance with these contracts.

NO. 3. RENEGOTIATION

The Renegotiation Act places final and conclusive authority in the departments concerned. While the contractor has the right to appeal to the Tax Court, there is no authority, in the absence of fraud, for the GAO to question any renegotiation which may appear too favorable to the contractor. For example, some time ago there were brought to my attention the results of renegotiation of a number of machine tool contractors where a great deal of inconsistency appeared. The comments of the War Contracts Price Adjustment Board were invited, and in reply the Board quoted from the statute and concluded with this astounding statement:

"In view of the finality which the Renegotiation Act places upon a renegotiation agreement, and in view of the tremendous amount of work which would be entailed by even a superficial answer to your inquiry, this office deems it inadvisable to attempt to furnish an answer in detail."

That, gentlemen, is a polite way of telling the GAO, an agent of Congress, to mind its own business. Nevertheless, in our general investigation work, special attention was given to cases where profits appeared excessive, and we sent the information to the departments for their use. I am not advised what, if anything, they did with the information.

It is all very well to talk about the billions collected in renegotiation, but what I would like to know is how many billions were given away in contract terminations.

NO. 4. THE CONTRACT SETTLEMENT ACT OF 1944

This act leaves an independent review of termination settlements completely out of the scheme of things. It specifies that the function of the GAO is to be confined to determining, after final settlement, (1) whether the payments were in accordance with the settlement and (2) whether the records transmitted, or other information, warrant a reasonable belief that it was induced by fraud. Throughout the legislative process, I had consistently urged that the interests of the United States would not be protected by a procedure which permitted contracting officers to effect final settlement without any prior review by an independent agency. On October 18, 1943, I was moved to go before the House Committee on Military Affairs because I had been shocked by the extravagant and ridiculous character of the allowances which had been approved by these same contracting officers whose word was now sought to be made final on the termination payments. I gave them instance after instance of inept and inefficient contracting officers who were "dishing out and giving away the property and the money of the United States with reckless abandon," and in conclusion I left this warning with the committee:

"If by inaction you permit this termination procedure to go on as proposed by the War Department, let no one in the future point an accusing finger at either the Comptroller General or the General Accounting Office. I have warned and I again today warn the Congress and you now have sufficient time to protect the public interests. No one can say that they were not told beforehand of the far-reaching consequences. Believe me when I say that after this war is over it is not inconceivable that under this procedure we may be required to have another great bond issue to take care of the unjust enrichment of some war contractors and war profiteers.

* * * * *

"As you love your country and are here to protect its interests, I urge you to take action."

I appeared before nearly every committee considering this legislation, and offered to no avail the services and facilities of the GAO to make an independent review of contract settlements. Only one Senator heard my testimony before the Military Affairs Subcommittee. Again, in April 1944, in a letter to the special Committee on Postwar Economic Policy and Planning, I said:

"I would be lacking in candor and frankness and would fail in my conception of my duty as Comptroller General and the obligation that I owe to the Congress, if I did not say to you that the provisions under the heading 'General Accounting Office,' section 16 on page 21 of the report, are absolutely meaningless and offer no protection whatever to the public funds. The audit of a war contract termination as therein provided by the General Accounting Office could be consummated by a 10-year-old child in 10 seconds and this would apply to a termination of the amount of a half billion dollars as well as the one in the amount of $100. The section rather piously provides that if the Comptroller General believes the settlement was induced by fraud he may report same, but I can assure you that such a settlement might reek in fraud, but nothing in the bill would require the making or submission of a record which would make it possible for the General Accounting Office to detect it.

* * * * *

"I therefore regret that I was given no opportunity to appear before your committee and to actually show its membership some of the termination settlements that have been sent to the General Accounting Office and all that can be done in reference to a so-called audit of them. If, after seeing this, the Congress wishes it done that way, then I have nothing to say, but at least it cannot be charged in the future that the Congress had not been fully informed in advance. Under the provisions of this bill and some others along similar lines I am convinced that the taxpayers of this country will pay a frightful toll."

Finally, in my annual reports, I again warned the Congress of what it might expect.

Had some independent agency been in on the settlement of termination claims, I am confident the interests of the Government would have been better protected. Do you suppose the GAO would have approved a million dollar overpayment? We were not in on it, because Congress by its own action took its own agency out of the picture. It is futile to question a settlement—except for fraud, which is exceedingly hard to detect after the event, even if we look at the records retained by the contractor or the department—because those settlements are final and conclusive. Already over sixty-five billions in canceled war contracts have been settled, and the door closed forever on any recovery of overpayments by the Government.

Just as important as the break-down in the law is the low moral standard exhibited by some connected with war contracts, both on the contractors' side and on the Government's. Much of the Government's interest has been irretrievably lost by those on whom the responsibility fell during the war years. It is certainly no satisfaction to me to come here today and say, "I told you so," but I had this to say in my testimony on the Contract Settlement Act:

"A large number of contracting officers are of proven inefficiency and incapacity. It has been officially reported to me that a great many of them constantly fraternize with the contractor after working hours—golfing, dining, and wining with them. These reports say that this intimate relationship has the tendency to make them more liberal in their dealings with the contractor. In some instances they have approved purchases far beyond the contract needs and the surplus resulting from such excess purchases is later sold as scrap. They feel that their certificate on a voucher should not be subject to question by the General Accounting Office, even though matters of record disclose that the facts are other than as certified. As an illustration there may be cited many instances where an examination of the records disclosed rejected materials when the contracting officer had certified on the voucher that the materials were received in good condition. Supply officers in the War Department are constantly telling us that they can procure articles locally at a cheaper price than provided for in negotiated (lump-sum) contracts."

With some high officials of the Government the acceptance of entertainment, including cocktail parties, hotel bills, and even travel, from the contractor, while at the same time drawing travel expense and per diem from the Government, was the rule rather than the exception. It got so bad in the Maritime Commission, for instance, that I called personally on Admiral Land—whose name was not mentioned in any of the reports—and also wrote him officially. He issued an order condemning such practices.

Here, in my opinion, is an example of the break-down of moral standards. As far back as 1872, Congress enacted a law which banned former officers and employees of the Government from prosecuting pending claims against the United States within 2 years after leaving the service. Through the years since, this statute has had a most salutary effect. It remained substantially unimpaired until the Revenue Act of 1943 made it largely inapplicable to certain officers. Who were these officers? Were they in the Department of Agriculture, or the GAO? No, of course not. They were the officers and employees of the War, Navy, and Treasury Departments and the Maritime Commission, the big war procurement agencies. Under this amendment a War Department official who was not "directly connected" with a matter could leave the service and prosecute a claim arising therefrom the next day, using knowledge and entree gained while in the employ of the department. Mr. Jacobson, provided he was not required to be a member of the bar, could handle claims immediately after getting out of the service.

Twice since 1943 the 1872 statute has been further modified and weakened, and now comes the last straw. They are not satisfied to wait until their connection with the Government is broken, but they want to come in and prosecute claims while still wearing the uniform of their country. Just last week the Senate, without a vote, adopted an amendment to the GI leave bill which would permit even officers on terminal leave from the armed forces to prosecute claims against the Government, again provided they have not been "directly connected" with the subject matter. This trend of the law, if not reversed, will result in a complete loss of faith in Government on the part of our people.

This committee can make a great contribution by taking a strong stand on this vital issue and insisting on a high standard of conduct on the part of those who carry on the Government's business. It can help by calling attention to the need for restoring some of the safeguards, checks, and balances which have worked through the years to prevent this Government from becoming an arbitrary government of men rather than a free government under law. Finally, as one step toward this objective, let us restore the General Accounting Office to its full vigor and intended purpose. The General Accounting Office is the last great bulwark for the protection of the taxpayers of this country against unbridled and illegal expenditures of public funds. As some evidence of this fact, the GAO during the fiscal year just closed collected more than $100,000,000 from those to whom it had been paid. Those were illegal payments returned to the Treasury without going to court.

We cannot stop waste or extravagance or improvident expenditures, but we do report them to Congress. I have sent more reports to Congress than all of my predecessors. Naturally, in time of war there will be some waste and extravagance and some fraud. What I am insisting upon is just a little ordinary common decency. There would have been far less fraud, far less improvidence, far less extravagance in war contracts if the civil officials and military officers of the War Department and other procurement agencies had been constantly alert and had always borne in mind that they were the representatives and agents of the United States. That should always be the lodestar of those in Government who handle other people's money.

Reception at White House and Meeting of Electors on Inauguration Day, January 20, 1945

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. ALBEN W. BARKLEY

OF KENTUCKY

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES

Friday, August 2 (legislative day of Monday, July 29), 1946

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the Appendix of the RECORD a statement with reference to a reception held at the White House and the meeting of the electors on January 20, 1945, including a list of the electors from the various States.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, I am curious to know what is the purpose?

Mr. BARKLEY. To place the statement in the RECORD.

Mr. TAFT. I mean the purpose in now referring to the election of 1944.

Mr. BARKLEY. We do not want to have any doubt about the result. [Laughter.]

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

RECEPTION AT WHITE HOUSE AND MEETING OF ELECTORS

On the invitation of President Roosevelt, the electors met at the White House on Inauguration Day, January 20, 1945, where they were officially received in a body by President and Mrs. Roosevelt and Vice President and Mrs. Harry S. Truman. Each elector was presented personally by Michael Francis Doyle, chairman of the electoral college of the United States, who was also aided by Gen. Edwin Watson, secretary to the President. At the conclusion of the reception, a committee of electors, on behalf of the entire group, presented the official Presidential flag to the President. The presentation address was made by Mr. Doyle. President Roosevelt, in his acceptance, expressed his gratitude, remarked that he would have it placed at the side of his desk where it would always remain as a symbol of his office. Following this presentation, the electors were the guests at a buffet luncheon given by President and Mrs. Roosevelt.

Following the luncheon a meeting of the electors was held. A report of the program was made by Mr. Doyle and upon motion, he was reelected as chairman of the Presidential electors. Thomas J. Pitts of Texas was elected secretary and Homer Cummings of Connecticut, treasurer. The chairman was authorized to add two additional members and to fill any vacancy on the committee. They were directed to prepare plans for the following inaugural and to cooperate with the secretary of the Senate and a representative to be appointed by the President-elect in carrying out any program which may be decided upon.

Tribute to Sidney Hillman by Rev. George G. Higgins

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. JOSEPH F. GUFFEY

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES

Friday, August 2 (legislative day of Monday, July 29), 1946

Mr. GUFFEY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a tribute to Sidney Hillman by the Reverend George G. Higgins, assistant director, social action department, NCWC.

There being no objection, the tribute was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Yardstick]

A TRIBUTE TO SIDNEY HILLMAN

(By the Reverend George G. Higgins, assistant director, social action department, NCWC)

Sidney Hillman—God rest him—will be mourned as much by the employers in the garment industry as by the members of his own union. For Sidney Hillman, with a genius which even some of his bitterest political enemies have graciously acknowledged in their obituaries, did as much for the welfare of the one group as for the welfare of the other.

Hillman was a militant trade-unionist (earlier Communist propaganda to the contrary notwithstanding), but his militancy was inspired by a passion for the general welfare. He was a shrewd negotiator—certainly one of the shrewdest in the American labor movement—but he always negotiated for the best interests of the industry as a whole and not merely for the selfish and shortsighted advantage of his own constituents.

This is not the biased opinion of an uncritical eulogist. Rather it's the common testimony of the employers with whom he bargained for so many years as president of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers of America. These men are the first to admit, with a sense of real gratitude, that Hillman did more perhaps than any other single individual to bring at least a reasonable measure of prosperity to a chaotically disorganized industry. He believed sincerely in the wisdom of labor-management cooperation, even to the point of lending money from the union's treasury for the building up of the industry. He recognized instinctively the interdependence of management and labor. He was almost religiously devoted to the common good.

This was the same Sidney Hillman who, at the time of his death a week or two ago, was perhaps the most controversial figure in American public life—thanks as much to the intemperate criticism of some of his enemies as to his own acknowledged genius for the dramatic in political action. Hillman made mistakes in his administration of the CIO Political Action Committee, serious mistakes if you will. He probably made commitments and compromises which never should have been made. But one has the feeling that most of the controversy which surrounded his name as the leader of this unprecedented movement was synthetic.

Hillman was not a Communist; but he was tagged as a Communist by his enemies. He was not revolutionary; but he was called a revolutionary by his critics. He was not in favor of state socialism; but his enemies repeatedly said that he was.

Hillman's PAC philosophy—just as his economic philosophy in the garment industry—was essentially sound and progressive. It was a philosophy which looked to the general economic welfare of the Nation and not merely to the welfare of the CIO. As a matter of fact, his long-range program for national economic reconstruction was strikingly in line with the program of the social encyclicals.

As long ago as 1931 Hillman appeared at the Senate hearing on the establishment of a National Economic Council and made the following recommendation: "Now, as I view it, in order to meet this emergency we have to find jobs. No one industry can find jobs for the people who are unemployed. Naturally no one employer can do it for all. Any plan of that kind would have to be national in scope, and to have it national in scope there is no existing agency * * *. Now, the instrumentalities, as I see it, should be a representative of labor * * * a representative of the employers and a representative of the Government. Any other organization of an economic council will probably lead to fascism."

This is the language of a man who subscribed to the best that there is in the American tradition and in the American way of life, the language of a man who believed in economic democracy. It's not the language of a Communist or a Socialist. Rather it's the language of a man who knew that you can't effectively combat communism or socialism unless you have something better to offer.

The American people will gratefully remember the contribution which he made to the general economic welfare. They will join with the editors of America in hoping that "in death he will find a peace he never knew in life—and that his thirst for justice will at last be satisfied."

Explanation in Reference to Certain Roll Calls

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. JENNINGS RANDOLPH
OF WEST VIRGINIA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Friday, August 2, 1946

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, during the latter part of February and the early part of March, of this year, I was traveling through Central American countries as a member of the House Roads Committee. We were officially inspecting the Pan-American highway, and conferring with officials of those nations about the necessity for the completion of this tremendously important road.

During that period certain roll calls were made in the House of Representatives. I desire the constituency which I represent to have information as to how I would have voted had I been present. The tabulation follows:

H. R. 3370 (H. R. 495), February 21, 1946: Providing for a permanent school-lunch program.

Amendment page 9, line 6, "to eliminate the possibility of discrimination in administration of funds of this act."

Vote on amendment, Yea. (P. 1540, CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.)

On motion to recommit: Vote, yea. (P. 1541, CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.)

Passage of bill: Vote, yea. (P. 1542, CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.)

H. R. 3606, February 26, 1946: Merchant ship sale conference report.

Passage of bill: Vote yea. (P. 1650, CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.)

February 27, 1946: Discussion of remarks relative to Un-American Activities Committee. Re motion that full text of letter be read. Vote, yea. (P. 1725, CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.)

February 27, 1946: On motion to table Mr. Rankin's motion to strike material on page A873 from the Appendix to the RECORD. Vote, nay. (P. 1727, CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.)

H. R. 4761, March 6, 1946: Amend national housing bill.

On motion adding new title relative to real estate speculation: Vote, nay. (P. 1658, CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.)

On motion to strike lines 3 to 12, page 9, ceiling prices: Vote, yea. (P. 1994, CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.)

On motion to expand and/or clarify ceiling price: Vote, nay. (P. 1995, CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.)

Passage of bill: Vote, yea. (P. 2001, CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.)

H. R. 563, March 12, 1946: Conference report, Communications Act, Petrillo bill.

Passage of bill: Vote, yea. (P. 2174, CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.)

House Joint Resolution 307, March 12, 1946: Authorizing use of naval vessels for atomic-weapon tests. Vote, yea. (P. 2173, CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.)

Mr. Speaker, I desire also to state that I was in attendance at an important flood-control conference, in company with Representative BEALL, on July 9. Had I not been necessarily absent I would have voted "yea" on roll call No. 204 to make available certain funds to the War and Navy Departments.

I would also have voted "yea" on roll call No. 2051, recommitting H. R. 6407, a bill for the construction and preservation of certain public works, with instructions on the part of the House to insist on its disagreement to the Senate amendment which added $95,000,000 for the canalization of the Arkansas River. I feel this to be an unnecessary expenditure.

Why Is the Control and Development of Atomic Energy a World Problem?

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. CLAUDE PEPPER
OF FLORIDA
IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES
Friday, August 2 (legislative day of Monday, July 29), 1946

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD an address by Secretary of Commerce Henry A. Wallace, delivered on the "You and the Atom" program of the Columbia Broadcasting System on Wednesday, July 31, 1946.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD as follows:

Previous speakers on this program have told you how atomic energy was developed. They have told you how scientists of all nations pooled their knowledge to unlock the secret of power in the atom, and how the United States, Great Britain, and Canada worked together to develop atomic energy as a weapon of war.

I am not going to talk about the scientific aspects of atomic energy, but about the social and political problems that have been created as the result of this tremendous new discovery. These problems are clear. We must control this new force so that it will not destroy us in a world-wide conflagration, and we must use it for the greatest possible good of all men.

We can achieve these ends by following the example of the men of science who discovered and developed atomic energy. Scientists more than any other class of people are internationalists. There is no such thing as an American science, a French science, a Brtish science, and a Soviet science. Neither is there a capitalist science as opposed to a Marxist science. Scientists are concerned with only one variety of truth, but no truth can be shut out by international boundaries. Physicists all over the world—regardless of nationality—cooperated in a marvelous way to give us atomic energy. The roll is long and I shall not mention all the names. Here are a few: Einstein the German, Bohr the Dane, Rutherford the Englishman, Fermi the Italian, Szilard the Hungarian, Compton the American.

These men developed the fundamental knowledge that was necessary to the discovery and application of atomic energy by working together and disregarding their national origins. They were also the first to understand the tremendous meaning of their discovery. They were the first to realize that this new gift of knowledge to mankind is an ambiguous power, one that can be used to destroy man and his civilization or to comfort and heal him and bring him joy. Scientists are developing a new morality that is just as impressive to me as their amazing technical developments. There was a time when scientists tended to disregard moral problems. They were devoted to the pursuit of an ever-growing truth about nature, but they felt that human values were too nebulous to be analyzed. Today they have been shocked into an awareness of the human meaning of their own creations. No group in our society has been more vocal than they in urging that we take steps to protect ourselves against this new danger and to utilize it for the good of all nations.

Our problem now is to get the same attitude among the people and the political leaders of different nations that we have among the physicists. We shall see the beginning of this new international morality as soon as peoples and political leaders devote themselves to the scientists' ideal of an ever-growing truth instead of appealing to an ever-darkening ignorance.

I was talking recently with Mrs. Edward U. Condon, the wife of the distinguished physicist and director of the National Bureau of Standards, about our becoming minor gods and learning how to make new kinds of matter by the use of atomic energy. With true woman's intuition, she said, "Yes, we shall handle all matter but the matter which is the matter with man himself." This is the heart of the problem. To prevent atomic energy from destroying mankind, it is essential that there be a psychic revolution, a profound change in the moral values and the thinking habits of people the world over. Such a revolution would be infinitely more important during the next 150 years than the industrial revolution has been during the past 150 years.

The industrial revolution placed steam, chemistry, and electricity at the center of the universe. Men thought they could use these great powers without regard to human values. As a result, our knowledge of social and political relations has lagged far behind our understanding of steam power, chemical power, and electrical power. Our business crises have become continually more overwhelming, and our wars more devastating. But atomic energy will not permit us to postpone these basic human problems any longer. By the very magnitude of its possibilities, the development of atomic energy means that we can no longer avoid grappling with the most central problem of all—that is, the problem of finding out how men can work together without fear and use the developments of science to serve each other creatively.

In my mind there is no question at all about the necessity of outlawing the atomic bomb. Of course, the United Nations should ban the bomb. Of course, the United Nations should have a scientific inspection force to make it absolutely certain that international commitments are kept, and that no group anywhere is planning atomic skulduggery of any kind. But we cannot protect ourselves from the atomic bomb merely by outlawing it as we outlawed poison gas. We must go deeper, and make war itself impossible and unthinkable. In an age when people possess a weapon as terrible as the atomic bomb, it is sheer savagery for nations to arm themselves for war and to maintain bases against one another.

But the conditions of peace will not come until we have real international trust and international cooperation. And this trust and cooperation will not arrive until we have the moral and psychic revolution I spoke about a few minutes ago. We know what is right. We have all heard of the Golden Rule. Some of us say that the Golden Rule is a beautiful ideal, but not very practical. I say that Christian morality, not as practiced during the last 1,900 years, but as Jesus himself taught it, has finally become the most practical thing in the world. It has become so practical that unless all nations in the world practice it, there will no longer be a human race to worry about.

The Golden Rule demands that we look at things from the other fellow's point of view as well as our own. If every nation in the world could for 1 week drop its selfish, hateful maneuvering and adopt the Golden Rule, we could work out an international moral code that would permit us to use atomic energy safely so as to unlock for us one door after another to abundance and joyous living.

If we fail to take advantage of our knowledge to achieve a decent life for all men, the reason will be that we let nationalistic fear, greed, and stupidity stand in our way. It is easy to understand why nations and certain groups within nations should have been selfish in an age of scarcity, when there was no hope of producing enough to go around. But in the age of potential abundance that we are now entering, any nation that tries to keep a monopoly of wealth and of nature's power is like a man continuously trying to keep other people from breathing for fear there might be a shortage of air.

It is easy to preach a sermon on the evils of the world. It is not so easy to suggest ways to curb the evils. I have only a few suggestions to offer. I suggest first that we discard the doctrines of Machiavelli's Prince as a guide to international action and substitute therefor a modern elaboration of international law as founded by Grotius.

The greatest statesmen of the future will be the men who do the most to get the great nations to pull together in raising the standard of living of the common man in the so-called backward areas of the world. We shall achieve a sound and lasting peace only by making all peoples feel that they are participating in the forward march of civilization. We shall not free the world from the fear of war as long as the world is divided between rich nations and exploited nations. The nations that are rich and powerful today will best safeguard the future security of the world by doing all they can to bring about a rapid rise in the standard of living in China, India, the Near East, eastern Europe, north Africa, and Latin America.

The guiding star of the future must be international cooperation in the service of the common man. We in the United States have the chance to follow that star and to win for ourselves the gratitude of the world, just as we have the chance to keep our so-called secret to ourselves for a few short years and gain the world's envy and fear and hate. I believe we—and the other nations of the world—are going to make the right choice. If the facts of atomic energy are fully understood, there is no tolerable alternative.

I suggest, finally, that we learn to look upon the future with confidence and upon our tremendous opportunity with a sense of joy. Atomic energy has made us afraid, and with good reason. Our fear may force us to find ways to work with other nations to control the military use of atomic energy. But I have less confidence in fear than I have in joy. I believe we shall go farther on the road to controlling and using atomic energy if we fully understand what it can do for ourselves and for the other peoples of the world. It is conceivable that we shall be able to construct and harness the energy of miniature suns that will give off power for hundreds of years. It is possible that we can completely change the geographic meaning of the deserts, the tropics, and the frozen areas of the world. By properly utilizing this great gift we can make peace more exciting, more challenging, than war ever was. I can visualize the possibility of our competing peacefully with other nations—with the Russians for instance—in making the great deserts blossom and the Arctic wastes bear fruit.

These things and more await the world if we choose the right course now—the course of sanity and good will.

The National Tribute Grove

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. WILLIAM F. KNOWLAND

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES

Friday, August 2 (legislative day of Monday, July 29), 1946

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the Appendix of the RECORD an address entitled "The National Tribute Grove," which I recently delivered.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Tallest of all trees, and among the most beautiful, are the everliving redwoods (Sequoia sempervirens), symbolic of immorality. The Nation-wide movement for preservation and dedication of a great primeval grove of redwoods in honor of the men and women who served our country in the armed forces in World War II—in honor of those who live as well as those who have lost their lives—is meeting with spontaneous and unanimous approval, and it is expected that during 1946 this project will attain complete success.

The outpouring of patriotic sentiment represented in this National Tribute Grove is worthy of the increasing attention which is being accorded it. As Donald Culross Peattie wrote, in an article on the redwoods which appeared recently in the Reader's Digest, "The Nation Tribute Grove will express to all eternity the living gratitude of this Nation, and express it in serene beauty which can never be less fair than it is today."

By official action of the California State Park Commission, a forest remarkable for its size and scenic beauty has been named the National Tribute Grove—a magnificent primeval redwood forest in the Mill Creek-Smith River region in Del Norte County, Calif., on the Redwood Highway about 4 miles northeast of Crescent City. This grove, within the California State park system, is only about 12 miles in an airline south of the Oregon boundary.

The significance of the National Tribute Grove merits the wide notice which has been given it since the beginning of this program. The proposal to create this fitting and imperishable tribute was made by The Garden Club of America to the Save-the-Redwoods League. Treasurer of the National Tribute Grove fund, on behalf of the league, is Dr. Robert Gordon Sproul, president of the University of California, 250 Administration Building, Berkeley 4, Calif. The State of California has matched in equal amount the money which has been contributed through the Save-the-Redwoods League from individuals, firms, and organizations.

Hon. Joseph C. Grew, of Washington, D. C., is the chairman of the National Committee of Sponsors leading the National Tribute Grove program, a committee representative of outstanding personages in our Nation.

Much has been accomplished toward completion of the National Tribute Grove, and additional funds are to be raised so that the project can be rounded out, and can be completed in accordance with terms of a purchase agreement now in effect, to add in the very heart of the grove approximately 1,000 acres of giant redwoods adjacent to Mill Creek and Smith River. Some of these acres are among the most heavily forested in the world. By action of the California State Park Commission, this primitive forest when added to the park lands will become part of the National Tribute Grove, which then will comprise more than 5,000 acres of superb redwood forest.

It is hoped also that it will be possible to acquire additional densely forested acres in the Smith River and Mill Creek region. All can assist this program, helping to preserve a noble forest and participating in our people's tribute to those who served in the armed forces of the United States in World War II.

Many of the giant redwoods which will be saved within this grove have stood for 2,000 years. Some of them, exceeding 350 feet in height, are from 12 to 16 feet in diameter, measured 5 feet above the ground. In contemplating such a mighty grove, the often-made comparison to a great cathedral is indeed apt. Duncan McDuffie, president of the Save-the-Redwoods League, has expressed this thought in eloquent words:

"To enter a grove of giant redwoods is to step within the portals of a cathedral—dim, lofty, pillared, peaceful.

"But this temple which the Great Architect has been building for a score of centuries is incomparably nobler, more beautiful, and more serene than any erected by the hands of man. Its nave is loftier than that of Amiens and longer than that of St. Peter's. Its wine-red shafts, rising clean and straight over 200 feet, are more numerous than the pillars of Cordova; its floor is carpeted with a green and brown mosaic more intricate than that of St. Mark's; its aisles are lit with a translucence more beautiful than that which filters through the stained glass of Chartres; its spires pierce higher than those of Cologne; its years are greater than those of the first lowly building devoted to Christian service.

"To destroy this noblest of places of worship would be more irreparable than was the destruction of the cathedral of Rheims.

"Fortunately, such a primeval grove, representative of the finest redwood forest, is to be kept inviolate forever, as the national tribute grove."

The giant redwoods are a precious national heritage. This grove, notable for its beauty and grandeur, being set aside as a testimony of undying thanks, will be regarded as a sanctuary and shrine by all Americans. The administration of the grove will be cared for by the State of California, and the people of the United States through the years will come in thousands upon thousands to view its imperishable majesty. Those who do not look upon the great grove itself are, nevertheless, beneficiaries of its continued existence, and the present generation and generations to come will gain inspiration from this symbol of a people's gratitude to those who served in our armed forces—the national tribute grove.

Write to the President

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF

HON. GEORGE B. SCHWABE

OF OKLAHOMA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, August 2, 1946

Mr. SCHWABE of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I was very much impressed with the following article which appeared in a recent issue of the New York Herald Tribune of June 11, 1946, written by Mr. E. F. Hutton. I think it clearly depicts situations which should be brought to the attention of the people of this country and the part they can play in reestablishing and preserving our American traditions:

SOMEBODY MUST SPEAK FOR AMERICA—YOU CAN DO SOMETHING ABOUT IT HERE AND NOW—WRITE TO THE PRESIDENT OF THE INSURANCE COMPANY IN WHICH YOU HAVE A POLICY AND TO THE HEAD OF EVERY BUSINESS IN WHICH YOU HAVE YOUR MONEY INVESTED

TELL HIM TO DO SOMETHING

Tell him American business should be the champion of American liberty and freedom. Tell him it is the responsibility of business to speak out in direct answer to all the secret, slippery plans ideologists have been attempting to saddle on this Nation and its people since 1932.

Tell him to quit worrying about getting into politics. He has been dragged into politics. Tell him the way to get out of politics is to tell the truth, and all of the truth, about business. Tell him defending the Constitution and the Bill of Rights is no more getting into politics than defending the Red Cross is getting into medicine.

Tell him America is in danger of losing forever its rights to private enterprise and free enterprise. Tell him to tell the man on the street the difference between these two forms of enterprise. One man with a business is private enterprise. He owns the business and it belongs to him, whether it's Henry Ford or a corner grocery store. Free enterprise is allowing the public to buy shares in an enterprise and become part owners. If they don't like it, they can sell out next day, whether it be General Motors, General Foods, Westinghouse, the Pennsylvania Railroad, or the Bell Telephone system.

TELL HIM TO GET BUSY SELLING AMERICA

Tell him to be as dramatic in selling America as he has been in selling his soaps, brass, foods, or fountain pens—his automobiles or his radios.

Tell him to hire the best talent available to present facts, facts, and still more facts—and present these facts to the man on the street—out loud. Are we a downtrodden, frustrated, exploited people? Then why do peoples of every other land want to emigrate to America? Is our economic system obsolete, decrepit, broken-down, and in need of replacement by a glorious totalitarian state? Then why do they come to America, asking us for gifts made by our system which they pretend to despise? Because we have the wealth their system will not create. And we have the wealth because we have the system that makes it—the free enterprise system—the competitive profit and loss system—the system in which everyone of us can risk his savings, if he please, to build new business and new pay rolls. Tell him to point out that there is no Ogpu or Gestapo to tell us what we may or may not do with our own savings.

LET'S LOOK AT THE RECORD

Al Smith used to say: "What are we quibbling about? Let's look at the record." If you, the man on the street, or the president of any business, wants to know what the ideologists within our administration plan for all of us, it's in print. And every one of the following statements has been made by men appointed to high office who have sworn to defend the Constitution. All of these statements have been made by men in high-appointed positions—appointed by men the Nation has elected as custodians—not changers—of our Constitution and our Bill of Rights. Just listen to these:

"Having once captured the Government and shelved the Supreme Court, we Socialists would nationalize as many large industries as we could chew. We would do it peacefully, if possible, and otherwise, if necessary."

"The whole capitalistic shell game can sink and be damned. Tell them we've got a war on—a war to establish a workers' government."

"Ownership will become more and more divorced from any active part in the business of society. The owners will cease to be necessary."

"To take control of industry and government, abolish the present capitalistic system, and build a workers' republic."

"Congress will surrender to the administration the power to tax * * * directing when and how the money will be spent."

"It has already been suggested that business will logically be required to disappear. This is not an overstatement for the sake of emphasis; it is literally meant."

"The Government will gradually come to own most of the production plants of the United States."

"All owners of stocks, bonds, mortgages, land, buildings, or equipment shall be required to surrender them in return for commonwealth bonds."

"People are too damned dumb to understand."

"The Government will provide the market and say what and how much is to be produced."

NOW WHAT ARE THE FACTS?—FACTS THAT WILL REFUTE THESE CONSPIRATORS WHO OPENLY SPOUT WHAT, IN OTHER LANDS, WOULD BE DOWNRIGHT TREASON?

Answer these recorded claims and plans with this simple fact: The United States of America has been a workers' government since 1776. Rail splitters have become Presidents, privates have become generals, gobs have become admirals, shoemakers have become Senators, newsboys have become governors. That is our history. Everybody starting poor in money but rich in freedom, liberty, and opportunity.

Answer the fellow-travelers in Government by telling all Americans this always has been a workers' republic. It was the farmer, butcher, baker, and candlestick maker, the gunsmith, pewterer, and button maker who told Hamilton, Adams, and Jay to get the Constitution adopted and how to make it work. Workers have elected every type of official provided for under our republican form of government * * * but they've had no voice in electing appointed officials who, in appointed sinecures, want to hold onto the easy money, coming from your high taxes, and to keep their appointed power forever and ever.

Tell them that in this workers' republic no appointed official is going to shelve the Supreme Court and capture the Government. Tell them that brands of goods are for people's choices, the logical products of a democracy, and that democracy ceases when a housewife must buy what an official says is to be bought, or else.

Tell all of these conspirators against your liberties what American business has done: How it has pulled down the price of an electric bulb from $1.50 to 10 cents. How it has made the automobile the property of the man on the street, made the telephone a household convenience, put refrigeration, central heating, bathrooms, radios, hot water, and gas stoves in so many homes that these luxuries, almost unheard of in many lands, are staples in the United States of America.

WHO CREATES WEALTH IN AMERICA?

What peculiar mint do we have that makes us the richest people in the world and our money the most stable? We have the mint that is American business—the goose of fable made a fact, laying golden eggs for everyone. Was it a political system that first announced a $5 minimum wage? No. It was Ford, a private enterprise. Was it the politicians who built a little iron furnace into Bethlehem Steel? Was it politicians who developed radio and put radio sets in every home? Was it politicians who brought down the price of electric refrigerators from $400 to $100? Was it politicians who built the railroads, who established steamship lines and air lines? No. It was free enterprise that planned and paid, developed and produced.

TELL YOUR FREE ENTERPRISE COMPANY PRESIDENTS TO TELL THEIR STORY

Tell them to dramatize, with all the arts of advertising they have used to sell goods, the most precious commodity in the entire world—the liberty and freedom that is America. Unless they do, we may well walk into slavery blindfolded, and with never another emancipation proclamation to save the day.

A GREAT MAN IS ONE WHO DOES A THING FOR THE FIRST TIME

Tell the presidents of these companies to get right down to cases and show how much of the cost of every item sold generally in stores goes somewhere, somehow, into the pockets of the American worker. Tell them to show what part of the price of every bit of merchandise goes into all kinds of taxes.

DRAMA? THERE IS SO MUCH OF IT HERE THAT IT SOUNDS UNBELIEVABLE

The millions of common men (as a recent but now ex-vice president has called them) aren't so common after all. They are the most uncommon men and women in the world. They are not so stupid that the wool can be pulled over their eyes and kept there by appointed officeholders. They own the department stores, the mail-order houses, the railroads, the steel industry, the dairy industry, and the beverage industry—by free enterprise investment. They have ventured their savings in American business. They have made possible the thousands of mints that produce America's wealth and all her high standards of living.

SO WE ARE STUPID?

We do not know the meaning of liberty. We don't know how lovely it is to be told precisely where to work, what hours, and at what job. We don't know what fun it is to be told exactly where to live, what to eat, what to think, where to buy, and what to buy. We are so dumb about liberty that we offer voters a choice between candidates of two, three, or four parties at elections. So this is undemocratic? The right way is to have one party and to vote for that party always. We do not know the meaning of security. Security is all meals guaranteed, full-time work (and Lord be with you if you think of quitting for any cause), care and close attention from cradle to grave. American business should tell Americans we have that kind of security but we reserve it for criminals at Alcatraz, Atlanta, and Sing Sing. None of the criminals like it * * * they call it prison. And a "prison" is what that kind of security would be for all of us, walls or no walls.

YOU HAVE THE RIGHT TO HAVE YOUR SAY IN THIS COUNTRY

So tell the heads of every free enterprise in which you have an interest you want to see action. Tell them to protect their rights to remain in business and thereby protect your savings. Tell them that under the threat of all oppressions, and under the greed of all powerful factions, there still remains the people, the real America, the real private enterprisers, the real free enterprisers, and the real wealth creators and preservers of this Nation.

TELL THEM YOU WANT IT ALL TOLD

And why shouldn't you? It is your savings that are at stake. It is your children as well as you who are in danger. Your liberty is on the auction block. You have the right to demand that men of business again take to heart that nugget of wisdom that reads, "The price of liberty is eternal vigilance."

Eternal vigilance isn't a matter of saying and doing nothing. It is getting down to cases, displaying uncommon sense, and being that precious thing—a real American.

So tell your company presidents to take over the direction of their advertising, to spend of their appropriations to protect the rights and interests of the owners of the business, the man on the street.

BUSINESS HAS THE STORY THAT WILL SELL ALL AMERICANS ON AMERICA

If business fails in its duty to tell the truth now, the truth may forever remain untold. Of one thing we can be sure: the appointed officeholders above quoted will not do it. They must continue to take refuge in half-truths, in distortions, and in untruths. The truth is too dangerous for them. The truth about America is too full of proof of the fact that we are a workers' republic, too full of reasons why we should keep our Constitution and Bill of Rights and not trade them for that joker "the new economic order."

Tell the presidents to tell all America that the worst crime against the workers a business can commit is to operate at a loss and not at a profit. Tell him to show how profitable operation is profit for all; that operation at a loss is the beginning of shutdown, and loss for all. Tell him to demonstrate how the worst crime against all Americans is Government that, each year, spends more than it takes in and then taxes to the point of confiscation to pay its bills as it runs into greater debt. To sacrifice fundamental arithmetic in order to keep power is repudiation, by a political party, of everything this country stands for and everything that has made it—and its people—great.

SO TELL BUSINESS TO SPEAK WHILE IT STILL HAS THE RIGHT. AFTER IT SPEAKS AS IT SHOULD SPEAK, IT WILL HAVE CITIZENS OF OUR COUNTRY AS DEFENDERS

Tell business to speak without fear and be unafraid of the mistakes in its record, for the entire American system is nothing but a record of overcoming mistakes and attempting always to make things better, faster. This is what American business has done. but all of its mistakes were paid for by those who chose to risk their savings in business and not, as the Federal Government does it, by taxing all the people for its mistakes. The $60,000,000,000 bill for experimenting by Government between 1932 and 1940 will be paid for by the people. But the few billion dollars spent by American industry in experimenting in those same years already show results in better living, better foods, better transportation, better pay rolls, better everything.

"Men are never so likely to settle a question rightly as when they discuss it freely." The wide-open question to be settled now is simply this: Shall America continue to be free? That's why you should write to the presidents of the companies in which your savings are invested. Do it now.

This expressed viewpoint is my own responsibility, paid for by me, and is in no way connected or identified with any group, organization, or company. This advertisement is placed before the people with the hope of promoting a better understanding of our problems between capital and labor, and the further hope of preserving our competitive profit and loss system. "Error of opinion may be tolerated when reason is left free to combat it."

A Long Beach Man Writes Poetry and Sends It to His Congressman

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. CLYDE DOYLE

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, August 2, 1946

Mr. DOYLE. Mr. Speaker, following is an elegy by a very much respected and able citizen of my home city of Long Beach, Calif. I thank you and the House membership for unanimous consent to place it in the Appendix of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. I hope it may inspire many the way it has me.

ELEGY TO THE MEMORY OF HON. FRANKLIN DELANO ROOSEVELT

(By William George Reed, Long Beach, Calif., June 22, 1946)

He spread goodwill to every land,
He proclaimed freedom to every man,
To him all freemen shall always say
We lost a friend, when he passed away.

His courage was a shining light;
Like all good men he loved the right;
He loved the poor, like the Savior had;
He gave his life to make them glad.

The worker's rights he always hailed,
He turned to help them while others failed.
The money changers were still on hand
To lie and cheat on the rights of man.

God bless the land that gave him birth;
His fame is known throughout the earth.
The love of mankind was in his breast,
He never failed to do his best.

He faced the storms with a lion's will,
Love for his neighbor was in him still.
He helped the needy, cheered the strong;
He hated conquest, he knew the wrong.

He prayed for peace to no avail,
The slant-eyed pagans were on his trail.
Today we wish he was here to see
The battle he fought, for you and me.

Let him rest in peace till the trumpet sounds;
He sleeps at Hyde Park in hallowed ground.
Songs of the ages will praise his name;
As a man of God, he sought no fame.

Charter for World Health

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. CLAUDE PEPPER

OF FLORIDA

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES

Friday, August 2 (legislative day of Monday, July 29), 1946

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the Appendix of the RECORD an address entitled "Charter for World Health," by Dr. Thomas Parran, Surgeon General of the United States Public Health Service, and President of the International Health Conference.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

This has been a historic international health conference. Its success equals that of any comparable international gathering. This has been due to the outstanding ability of you, the delegates, who are the leaders of the world in public health and medicine and to the professional atmosphere and spirit of cooperation which has marked this month of arduous work.

The foundation of our work was laid by the Economic and Social Council last February in calling the Conference, and by the constructive work of its preparatory committee of experts in Paris. It has been greatly aided by the excellence of the Secretariat which the United Nations has provided. To the Council, the preparatory committee, and the secretariat we express our deep appreciation.

The nations represented here today are signing a magna carta for health, which will bring into being a world health organization unique in its scope, authority, and functions. Its broad purpose is the attainment by all peoples of the highest possible level of health and well-being. We are convinced that health is not merely the absence of disease or infirmity, but a state of complete physical, mental, and social well-being, the enjoyment of which we declare to be a fundamental right of every human being without distinction of race, religion, political belief, economic or social condition. We believe its attainment is essential for peace and security.

It is becoming clear that the health sciences can contribute to man's ability to live harmoniously in a changing total environment. Thus, improved health enhances standards of living, promotes economic prosperity, contributes to our total objective, which is peace. The fundamental freedoms can be realized only when people are healthful and well nourished.

In the field of health, nations are interdependent. Epidemics anywhere in the world are dangerous to other nations. Low standards of health lay a burden upon prosperity and trade, imposing an economic handicap on every nation and on the world as a whole.

While the responsibility for health within its own borders is of primary concern to each nation, the success of each can be greatly enhanced through international teamwork. The world health center we are creating, therefore, should be the directing and coordinating agency to provide information, leadership, and assistance in every phase of health work. Not only will the organization aid in disseminating and applying all of the scientific knowledge we now possess to prevent disease and promote health, but it will encourage and conduct scientific research to forge more effective tools. Better remedies will be discovered. New preventives will be found. As a result, there will be brought under better control many of the human ills which now take such a large toll in disability and death. Cancer, heart disease, mental illness, and degenerative diseases, for example, are obvious targets for such international scientific endeavor.

Public health is a dynamic composite of many scientific disciplines. Through their application the average life span in the more advanced countries has been doubled during the past century. Yet, progress has been very uneven in the different nations. In some countries, for example, one-half of all children born do not reach their fifth birthday. The average life span is about half of that attained in the more fortunate nations.

Recently we have seen the miracles which can be accomplished by the sulfa drugs and penicillin, yet only a small proportion of the world's population has access to these remedies. For to a large part of the world's people, doctors and hospitals, in the modern sense, are virtually unknown. Even such an elementary requirement for health as an uncontaminated water supply is lacking over large areas of the earth.

To achieve the great objectives of the World Health Organization will require our best, our most persistent efforts. But our efforts alone are not enough. We must bring to the rank and file of mankind—to the common man everywhere—an understanding and appreciation of the elements of health and a consuming desire to achieve it. Without this our signatures on a document here in New York will have little meaning. The World Health Organization, therefore, must be built for human service, must give practical help to the world's people, must undertake first things first.

During the past 40 years our nations have acquired some experience in international health action first through efforts to prevent, through quarantine, and through exchange of epidemic intelligence, pestilential disease from spreading between nations. During the years between the two world wars these efforts were broadened to include mutual help in disease control, training of health personnel, gathering valuable statistics, and standardization of certain drugs and biologic products. During the war the United Nations pooled fully their military efforts to prevent disease. All of this experience will be useful to us in our tasks ahead.

The World Health Organization will be prepared to use all of our most modern scientific knowledge, our best tools, wherever needed to help heal the wounds of war and to eliminate the ancient human plagues, such as malaria and cholera, tuberculosis and syphilis. Prevention of disease is a first objective. But this is only a first step. Hunger and malnutrition stunt the bodies and warp the minds of a large part of the world's population. To attain freedom from want of food is another goal which we may hope to reach by pooling our nutritional knowledge with the food and agriculture efforts of the United Nations.

A next step toward world health is the positive improvement of health, of physical and mental fitness. Higher levels of physical development, a longer, more productive, more vigorous life span will be sought and attained.

To help reach these goals we need not only to apply all the knowledge we now have for prevention, treatment, and control of disease everywhere in the world, but we need to conduct intensive research in the laboratory, at the bedside, and in the field to push back the frontier of the unknown in the health sciences.

These several measurable, scientific objectives are difficult, but not impossible of attainment. Yet at our conference the practical scientists have not been content to stop at this point. We have an additional task.

Humane plans for world health go for naught unless the peoples of the world can learn to live together in peace. Never again can our world disintegrate into the insanity of another total war.

Public health experts realize that our science may be used either to save life or to destroy civilization. Whether science is to be used for good or for evil is not determined by scientists themselves. The same type of research worker may discover penicillin or atomic fission. It is the mass conscience of mankind—the dominance of the moral or the amoral—which determines whether research is to be used for life or death.

In our magna carta for health we have ventured to declare that we have a contribution to make to the central world problem of our day, which is to help man learn to live together harmoniously with his fellow man. In making this proposition I, for one, believe that health science must share the task with religion and education.

The science of mental hygiene is one of our newer disciplines, concerned with the human mind and emotions. Even in its present early stage of development, it helps man adjust to his environment, to live in greater harmony with his family, his community, his world. This science of mental hygiene needs urgently to be developed and applied as a basic element in preventing war and destroying the seeds of war.

The World Health Organization is, therefore, a collective instrument which will promote physical and mental vigor, prevent and control disease, expand scientific health knowledge, and contribute to the harmony of human relations. In short, it is a powerful instrument forged for peace.

We return to our homes knowing that we have done our best. We hope that history will record a job well done.

Address by Hon. Claude Pepper, of Florida, Before the American Slav Congress

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. CLAUDE PEPPER
OF FLORIDA
IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES

Friday, August 2 (legislative day of Monday, July 29), 1946

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the Appendix of the RECORD an address by me at the Third All-Slav Day Rally of the Midwest Division, American Slav Congress, at Pilsen Park, on July 7, 1946.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Mr. Chairman, members of the American Slav Congress, my fellow Americans and old friends, what is there so stimulating and satisfying as to come again to see and to visit with old friends? In all history it has been proved that there is no friend more loyal and faithful than a Slav friend. So I am glad to come here this afternoon again to enjoy this colorful and inspiring occasion and to see you all again.

When I was here the last time in Pilsen Park with you the war was still in progress. Since that time the glorious victory has come and the many dead have gone. Since that time I have had an opportunity to see in many of the old countries something of what they suffered in that war. I already knew that here in the United States no people had more gloriously, more self-sacrificially and more gallantly contributed to win that war than the American Slav in and outside the armed forces of the country.

I knew that in the heavy industries of this country where the great material of war was turned out that the Slav was known to have borne the brunt of the burden, and I knew that in the armed forces, in all the armed forces, he had no superior as a fighting man.

I had a chance to appraise at close range what had been done in Russia, in Czechoslovakia and in Yugoslavia. The world knows that the Slav bore the brunt of this war; that he lost more killed and wounded and prisoners, that he had more of his own people made homeless than all the other people of the United Nations fighting the evil enemy put together.

I had a chance to learn not only from the people but from the heads of governments in those three countries, and I am sorry I did not get to visit the other countries, Bulgaria and Poland especially, but I learned from the mouth of the great Stalin himself what the Russian sacrifice had been in the armed forces and among the civilians of Russia.

I heard again at the Nuremberg trials in the official testimony how many Russians had been brutally and horribly murdered. I talked to Russian soldiers and officers who had been to the homeland and could not even find their ancient village, so complete had been its destruction by the evil Nazis. Yes; I heard of the prison trains from Russia back into Germany, how women had been snatched from their homes without regard for their health, and how when little children were born to them they had been snatched out of their mothers' arms by the Nazi guards and thrown out the window to perish in the snow beside the tracks.

Yes; the Slav bore the brunt of the war and deserves a great measure of the honor and the glory of the victory.

In Czechoslovakia I got a chance to grasp the hand of and to talk with one of the great statesmen of the world who has been many times, many years here in your great City of Chicago, President Benes of Czechoslovakia.

And the distinguished Foreign Minister, the son of the founder of Czechoslovakia, Jan Masaryk.

I heard of the Munich days from Benes himself, and President Benes said to me what I have repeated upon the floor of the United States Senate, that in the dark days of Munich, when Hitler held his sword drawn over the head of the Czechoslovak people, brave as they were, the one nation that unequivocally said, "We are ready to fight by your side, if Hitler strikes," was Russia. And I heard from the lips of that great soldier, that dynamic leader, the man that drove the Nazis out of Yugoslavia, Marshal Tito the story of the partisan struggle in Yugoslavia.

I will add that Marshal Tito, with characteristic humanity and human interest that he possesses, carried me out into the stables and showed me there the horse that he rode in all that great period of warfare, his little mare Molly, and I saw how he put his arms in affectionate embrace around Molly's neck, for she too was a gallant comrade in the victory. I suggested to Marshal Tito that I hoped he would do with Molly what had been done with General Lee's great horse Traveler, whose skeleton is preserved in Washington and Lee University at Lexington, Va., that she too may be memorialized for all time as a great soldier.

I saw Marshal Tito's great dog Tiga, which lingered lovingly at his feet, and I saw a republic being borne in Yugoslavia.

Incidentally, I can tell you that those falsifiers who say that United Nations relief funds are being misused in Yugoslavia and in White Russia and the Ukraine tell falsehoods, and I have the testimony of the United Nations Relief organization, Mayor LaGuardia himself testifying a few days ago before a Senate investigating committee, and I heard from the mouths of these great leaders what their objectives were for the peace and how determined they were to keep the peace against evil enemies.

I shall never forget the moment when Marshal Stalin hit his fist down upon the table in front of him and said, "Never again must Germany and Japan be allowed to make war upon the world."

I proclaim to you as a visitor and an observer who had rather unusual opportunities for getting information that in my opinion the objectives and the aims and the purposes of the Slav nation are peaceful as are the aims and objectives of Great Britain or the United States. Why shouldn't they want peace when they suffered more than anybody on earth today in this war? What they want is security of their homeland against renewed assault from those enemies who have so many times and so viciously attacked them in the long past, and that is what we all want. That security is the essential of peace all over the earth. It is our common problem, therefore, to provide and assure security for all nations as a condition of peace in the world.

Well, there are some who say that wars don't settle anything. Well, ask them where Hitler and Mussolini are.

A little more than 2 years ago they gloried in their empires as the heads of their powerful states, waging a dangerous and mighty war. Today they both lie in unknown and ignoble graves. Those which were once great states and mighty powers today are prostrate and impotent. Yes, we haven't done as good a job with them as the Romans did when they defeated Carthage, but we have it within our power to see to it, as Stalin said, that never again shall Germany and Japan be permitted to wage war upon the world. And so that war did settle certain things. It destroyed Hitler and Mussolini; it destroyed the military might of Germany and Italy, and it emancipated the Slav world from the tyranny of western imperialism. It not only liberated the Slav world but it opened new and widening doors of opportunity for the Slavs to enter into the future they have so long and so richly deserved.

Now, it remains to be seen whether those great gains shall be lost or whether they shall be preserved. Our own United States of America, I venture to say, shall be the decisive factor in the determination of that factor.

There are some in America who counsel us back to isolation. Do not listen, my friends, to the words of these sirens who would lure to destruction your country and your people. Had America not embraced the folly of isolation before this war I believe we should not have had this war.

When our great President, Franklin D. Roosevelt came here in 1937 to warn the world from Chicago at the christening of a great bridge, you remember what he counseled—"A disease threatens to engulf the earth. It is a contagious disease. Unless we quarantine against it we will all be afflicted by contagion." And that disease was war and totalitarianism.

Yet when he gave us that warning from certain sources in Chicago, from many sources in the country, from multiple sources in the Congress, he was denounced as a warmonger, as one who would shed the blood of the citizenry of his land.

We did not take his advice, therefore. We waited. We waited past Munich. We waited past the time when Poland was struck. We even waited past the time when Russia was stricken. We waited until the enemies of democracy almost had democracy down before finally the provocation of the dastardly Japanese attack upon us awakened us into action on a common front against a common enemy, and if we retreat again into the shell of isolation in America, as we did after the last war, if we think that what happens in the world is no concern of ours here at home, here in Chicago, here in Florida, then get ready to send your babies from their cradle in a few years into the mouth of a more destructive war than their seniors experienced in this war, for war will come inevitably again. So steer away from that counsel of isolation. It will destroy our country and our work.

Then there are some, on the other hand, equally extreme and equally dangerous who say, "Now is the appointed time for America to grasp an empire. Now is the time when we shall take advantage of our great and unparalleled strength and dominate the world, either alone or with another power."

That will lure us to the same destruction that isolation will lure us to, for throughout all history imperialism has proved to be not only fool's gold but folly of the worst character. We might survive a while, we might have our day of glory when we might sparkle in the sun of conquest, but it would come, as all such empires inevitably do, to the day of reckoning and to the inevitable day of defeat and destruction.

So what we must find is a path between isolation and imperialism for America.

A little while ago the Foreign Secretary of Great Britain warned his labor colleagues at Bournemouth that they had to be the nation to reconcile the two extremes of Russian communism and American capitalism. Well, a capitalist is a mighty good friend to have when you want to borrow a little money. I am a little afraid, because I have always supported the British loan, that the Foreign Secretary spoke a little too quickly. He should have waited until the House acted before he made that speech.

I do not look upon it as the role of any other power to reconcile the differences between the United States and the Soviet Union, because fundamentally there are no differences between us that need to be reconciled.

What is it that we have to fight the Russians about? If ever in history the three great powers that emerged from the war were so situated as to be the tripod of a permanent peace it is the Big Three that emerged victorious from this war: the Soviet Union, Great Britain, and the United States. Each of us has a great land territory; each of us has many natural resources; each of us is a strong power and a strong people; each of us has a great past and a glorious future. We are widely enough separated so we are not constantly impinging one upon the other in a friction that sometimes produces the climate of war. I admit there is some friction in the Middle East and in the Mediterranean and the Balkans and in eastern Europe between Great Britain and Russia. I thought we were the ones to reconcile the differences, rather than Britain feeling it was her spiritual duty to reconcile differences between Russia and us, and as far as I am concerned, when I say it is our duty to find an American policy that will produce peace and prosperity in the world, I am remembering that we must remember the warnings of George Washington, made to us in his Farewell Address, when he told us not to engage in or enter into any permanent alliances, and that means that rules out Mr. Winston Churchill's fraternal alliance.

I do not advocate an alliance between the United States and Great Britain. Neither do I advocate an alliance between the United States and Russia. I do not want this country to be anti-British, and I do not want to see my country anti-Russian, or anti-Slav, or anti-anything else in any part of the world. That is not the American way. That is not the course that America should follow.

As far as I am concerned, I have no objection to Russia getting into the Mediterranean. She has as much right there as anybody who does not live there.

I am not averse to Russia having a decent influence in the Middle East, comparable to her proximity to that area. I say if any great power is to have a dominant influence in the Balkans and in Central Europe, certainly no nation has a greater right than Russia, which in history and in origin and in thought is more closely allied to them than any other great power.

When British and American and other statesmen tell the people of the Danube Valley how they have got to run their navigation, I wonder how they would feel if people over there started telling the people in Great Britain and the United States how to handle navigation in some of the great valleys of Britain or the Americas.

Now, my friends, today there are forces loose in this country and in the world who are employing the old Nazi and Fascist technique. They are disseminating propaganda. Some of them are trying to confuse and to arouse the prejudices of people of the church. In America we believe in a separation of church and state, and I do not think it is the proper function for us to inject a religious question into an organization to keep the peace of the world. Let us, therefore, say that we will answer all those people who are trying to stir up any prejudice that we are a tolerant Nation and a tolerant people and we want to be the friends of all who deserve our friendship.

Then there are some people who are trying to stir up prejudice in this country, particularly against the Slav people, on the ground of communism. Just a little while ago Mr. John Foster Dulles, who somehow has been picked as one of our Nation's counselors in international affairs, the biggest international cartel Wall Street lawyer in America, yet Mr. John Foster Dulles writes a great article in Life magazine to scare the American people against Russia, and he makes the burden of his accusation the charge that Russia is communistic and determined to spread communism all over the world and to conquer the world through communism.

My friends, I am an American. I love my country. My country is not a capitalist country, as some people describe it. My country is a great free republic. We have got a right to have any kind of a governmental organization in this country that the people of this country choose. Of course we will resist the effort of any country to foster upon us any ideology which is not typically and truly American in character and does not come from the great heart and soul of the American people, but I have got a witness, Mr. Jan Masaryk, and he is a responsible statesman, who told me in the presence of our Ambassador in Prague last year that he did not even believe Russia was out to communize Europe. I have got a witness, one of the highest officers in the United States Army, who told a United States Senate committee that it was his observation in Manchuria that Moscow was not even dominating the Communists of Manchuria. I have it from the lips of most responsible statesmen that communism in every country in Europe today where it exists is a patriotic indigenous movement of that country.

I know, of course, that I will be called a Communist if I dare to speak a word of clarification of such prejudices as have been disseminated by such propaganda, but I am not afraid of the arrows of these critics. I am not even afraid of their falsehoods and falsification, because the American people somehow have a genius for seeing through such subterfuges as those they would foster upon our people.

I am not defending communism. I don't like communism. I would fight it in every way I could if it threatened to become the philosophy of America, but if the people in France, if the people in Yugoslavia, if the people in Czechoslovakia, if the people in Russia, if the people in Poland, if the people in Bulgaria, if they choose to have a Communist Party, they have as much right to have it as the people of Great Britain. I say if it comes typically and truly from those countries, they have as much right to have a Communist Party as the people of Great Britain have the right to have a Socialist Party, and I am against socialism too. I don't want that to come to America. And I don't want Mr. Winston Churchill to bring Toryism over here either. And so if Mr. Winston Churchill starts to bring Toryism to America, or the Foreign Secretary, Mr. Bevin, tries to bring socialism to America, or someone else tries to bring communism here, I am against all of them. I am for America. As a matter of fact, in my personal opinion, everybody ought to be a Roosevelt Democrat anyhow.

My friends, we are in danger of losing the peace, which is the reason I am speaking out of my heart to you, and the reason I am here and in this city, that I have run the risk of being malefacted and misunderstood.

But I know if I were to ask you who lost a loved one in this war to hold up your hand that there would be a forest of hands that would rise up in this great auditorium. Four hundred thousand American boys in the prime of life will never come home except in the cold lifeless form of a corpse or a skeleton. Aren't their memories worth preserving and honoring?

At long last God has given us the chance to have an enduring peace and a standard of living the like of which mankind has never dared to dream of. That peace is in our hands. It is almost within our grasp. That prosperity is here, if we will preserve it. Yet those enemies who would take away that prosperity by destroying price control, by bringing unbridled inflation that would hurl us back into the dark abyss of another depression, against those enemies let us make a single undivided militant and belligerent front and hurl them back. And those who would rob us of the peace that we have won by the sacrifice of the dead, let us hurl them back too. Let us build upon Big Three unity that won the war the kind of peace that will endure, and when we doubt or when in our hearts there is confusion let us harken back to what Franklin D. Roosevelt stood for in American, in domestic, and foreign policy, and we will know we are on the right track for democracy in the world and peace among men.

God bless you to carry on that program.

Opposes Congressional Pension Plan

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. JAMES H. MORRISON
OF LOUISIANA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, August 2, 1946

Mr. MORRISON. Mr. Speaker, during my absence in Louisiana on official business this Congress passed the congressional reorganization bill known as the La Follette-Monroney bill, which had included in same a congressional pension plan and an increase in salary.

Had I been present, I would have voted against pensions for Congressmen and Senators and also against a salary raise. I do not think that any Congressman's or Senator's salary should be increased until the National Budget is balanced or our national debt substantially reduced. I am also of the opinion, before any increase in pay for Congressmen or Senators should occur that the income tax should be substantially lowered on all our people.

However, I do believe that the reorganization of Congress as contained in this bill is an excellent and needed piece of legislation and I would have wholeheartedly supported it provided it was so amended as to exclude the increase in salary and pension plan for Congressmen.

As a member of the Civil Service Committee I opposed and voted against a direct bill providing for congressional pensions which passed the committee notwithstanding my vote in opposition and was later defeated on the floor of the House. When this bill came before the House, like all other congressional pension bills in the past, I very vigorously opposed same.

Damning the Unborn

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. CLYDE DOYLE
OF CALIFORNIA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, August 2, 1946

Mr. DOYLE. Mr. Speaker, following is an unusually pertinent and appropriate editorial which I thank you for having allowed unanimous consent to insert in the Appendix of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

It was published in the West Side Monitor at my home city of Long Beach, Calif., on July 25, 1945:

DAMNING THE UNBORN

If, in our sincere desire to help make conditions better for our children, we have saved an inheritable pittance and are content to rest on our laurels, the battle for our posterity is only half won.

There is too much buck passing to our fellow citizens.

Our duties to the coming generations are not confined to the financial spheres alone, which is relatively unimportant when compared to the broad scope of potential obligations, but rather to the development of a more workable democracy.

What do we owe our children? Most important of all we owe them the right to be citizens of a good country, especially if our combined efforts can produce the desired results—and we can produce them.

We should stop our duty shirking now. Vote your opinions, elect the right man, and write your Congressman. Don't gripe to your neighbor—he probably agrees with you anyhow—and 9 chances out of 10, you'll have a long face listening to his gripes.

Our children—yes, our unborn children and grandchildren—will be damned by our negligence and carelessness.

We are handing them I O U's for billions of dollars, with the equivalent of, "Here you are, son; I hope you can make a home run with two strikes against you."

We used up American resources at an enormous rate during the war. How are we going to get them back? Can we claim our share in the heretofore legendary spoils of war, to help make up for those used resources? No! Why? Because to claim any products or resources of the defeated nations would be competing with American made goods. The lobbyists for industries and manufacturers would not permit this absurd program to be carried out.

The common man would benefit from the old-fashioned methods of taking the spoils of war!

Why are thousands of jeeps, Army trucks, and construction machinery rotting and rusting on foreign soil? Lack of transportation? No—lack of pressure upon Congress by the American people.

If we should return this outmoded equipment to the United States our American markets for these items would be partly filled. Result? Retail prices on automobiles, tractors, trucks, and other construction equipment would probably drop. This would indeed be a calamity to the American manufacturers. But labor also thinks it can see advantages in this needless waste. So we dig fresh iron ore and we manufacture new rubber and hope that our posterity can do the same.

We are not living in the future, we are living today and in this erroneous philosophy our coming generations will be the real sufferers—your grandchildren and mine.—G. E. E.

Freeing of Northern Norway

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. MAX SCHWABE
OF MISSOURI
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, August 1, 1946

Mr. SCHWABE of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks, I include an article from the Midwestern Bulletin of Minneapolis, Minn., as follows:

Northern Norway, the area which is known as the Land of the Midnight Sun, is at last free. Northern Norway fell under German domination in 1940 and as the German armies began to withdraw, the scorched-earth policy was brought to bear by the local SS commander, for he was withdrawing before the pursuing Red army. As the Red army rolled across Finland and into Norway many of the Norwegians felt that perhaps the Russians were coming as liberators, but to their utter amazement the policy and program instituted by the Russians was as severe, if not, in a few instances, worse than that of the Nazis. Women were molested, property was violated, and as soon as the country was stripped bare and the Russians could find no further loot, they soon withdrew. But the impression left in the minds of the Norwegian people, according to a letter from Pastor K, of the Norwegian Church, is best expressed as follows:

"Bitterness which knows no depth, has left its mark upon the people of my flock. Plagued in their search for freedom from the Nazis, they welcomed the Russians as liberators, but we did not find freedom, we found tyranny closely akin to that of National Socialism. My people are now free, the Russian troops can loot no more, they have evacuated back to Petsamo (Finland), but they have left us disillusioned, for we thought this war was fought to bring the Four Freedoms to all mankind. At this early date we feel that the promises that Roosevelt and Churchill made are but empty words which, though fine sounding, can never be put into realization until that monstrosity of terror in the East is disbursed."

Norway is not the only Scandinavian country which felt the grip of the Russian bear. Denmark likewise experienced it when the Danish island of Bjornholm was occupied by the Soviet army. The people of this area put up with much and, as one man put it: "If I had to choose between the Brown rats—Nazis—and the Red ones, I could find little difference except in their color." It is time that our State Department realized that we cannot do business with Russia on the terms we have accepted up to the present time. It is time that we adopted and presented to them a definite policy and that we stand fast to this policy and not be brow-beaten by Soviet representatives into accepting their proposals. Until now we have won few arguments with Soviet diplomats, only because our representatives at Paris, at Potsdam, at Teheran, at Cairo, Casablanca, and Montreal lack one characteristic which most of us Americans possess, and that is backbone. A little bit more backbone in our foreign policy and a little less catering to wishful thinkers and our Government will earn the undying gratitude of freemen throughout the world. America desires no new territory in Europe or Asia. We do not wish to dominate the government of any other country. If our policy is based upon sincerity and honesty, we will find the wholehearted backing of all freemen, but if we continue to follow the willy-nilly policy of concession and retreat before the Russian bear, we not only will lose the respect of freemen everywhere but we will also endanger our own future security.

The Charge Account Comes Due

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN
OF MINNESOTA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, August 1, 1946

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Mr. Speaker, the Seventy-ninth Congress is concluding its business today after a long and active session. It has been both a war and a reconversion Congress. Much has been left undone to straighten out the economy of the country. We are still operating under Government controls and our Federal Budget remains unbalanced. The Government, which is under full control of the Democratic administration continues to spend more money than is taken in. This must come to an end. The day of reckoning will be at hand for the Eightieth Congress when it meets in January 1947. The charge account comes due, which condition is clearly stated in the following editorial from the Lake City (Minn.) Graphic, one of the leading weekly newspapers of the Northwest:

THE CHARGE ACCOUNT COMES DUE

For years the people have been lulled into the belief that the Nation could run indefinitely by spending more than it took in, and still avoid inflation. This was sleight-of-hand reasoning that those who learned that two and two make four could not understand. They were pooh-poohed into silence if they mentioned their ideas. To carry out the illusion of "holding the line," subsidies to the tune of billions of dollars to pay producers part of the cost for what the consumer purchased, were resorted to—the subsidy came out of the taxpayer and helped pile up the deficit and hide inflation. Then came the cost-absorption illusion whereby the retailer was forced to absorb growing production costs.

But the old rule that two and two make four still stands. In order to have anything to eat or wear, OPA has had to increase the price for both producers and retailer to make up for the accumulation of wage increases and tax increases which for years were hidden in Government deficit spending. As the cost of living goes up, our standard of living goes down because the average person does without or substitutes inferior for better goods.

It is useless to blame the manufacturer or the retailer for high prices. They have to work on the formula that two and two make four. Encouragement of industrial activity, increased production per man, and the old-fashioned habit of saving, thrift, and reduction in Government debt are the only protection against inflation—all the laws, rules, regulations, and regimentation to the contrary.

Relief Funds for Italy

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. MICHAEL J. BRADLEY
OF PENNSYLVANIA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, July 31, 1946

Mr. BRADLEY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, in conformity with unanimous consent which I have received, I am placing in the RECORD an exchange of correspondence between my colleague from Philadelphia, the Honorable WILLIAM A. BARRETT, and myself:

JULY 26, 1946.

Hon. WILLIAM A. BARRETT,
House of Representatives,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR BILL: Because I am aware of the interest you have expressed on many occasions with regard to present conditions in Italy, where there is great suffering and distress, I am taking the liberty of writing to you with reference to the relief funds which are being raised here in America for the benefit of the Italian people, who are in such sore need of help and assistance.

The economy of Italy has been more than seriously dislocated and there is a critical shortage of essential articles which are necessary for the sustaining of life. I had an opportunity to see conditions at first-hand when I was in Italy last year and I was appalled at the misery which existed. When our country was forced into the war the Italian people immediately demonstrated their reluctance to fight America, where so many people of their own blood had found happiness. Thousands of American boys of Italian blood were among those who gave their lives in North Africa and in the campaign in Italy, and the action of the Italian people in revolting against Fascist and Nazi dictators was in no small measure due to the traditional friendliness they felt for America. Anything we can do here in America to help them is more than justified by the sacrifices which were made by those Americans of Italian blood who served so ably and heroically in our armed forces. If you could see the things which I saw in Italy last year, I know you would agree with me that it is essential for us to extend any aid which we can to the Italian people, who are actually on the verge of starvation. Might I, therefore, appeal to you to make a contribution to the committee which is in charge of raising funds for the relief work in Italy? I know there are many demands made upon you, but I am sure this is one which well merits consideration.

With warmest regards, I am
Sincerely yours,
MICHAEL J. BRADLEY.

CONGRESS OF THE UNITED STATES,
HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, D. C., July 30, 1946.

Hon. MICHAEL J. BRADLEY,
House of Representatives,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR MIKE: I am in receipt of your letter of July 26 relative to the relief funds which are being raised here in America for the benefit of the Italian people who are in such dire need of assistance.

Realizing the deplorable conditions which exist in Italy and the suffering and distress of the Italian people, I enclose herewith my check in the form of a contribution toward helping alleviate this situation.

With cordial regards, I am
Sincerely yours,
WILLIAM A. BARRETT.

Our Foreign Policy

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. ALEXANDER WILEY
OF WISCONSIN
IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES

Friday, August 2 (legislative day of Monday, July 29), 1946

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the Appendix of the RECORD a copy of an interview which will be held between the senior Senator from Kansas [Mr. CAPPER] and myself over the NBC network on August 3, 1946.

There being no objection, the interview was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

AMERICA AND PARIS

Following is the text of an NBC network broadcast, the seventy-seventh in an NBC University of the Air series entitled "Our Foreign Policy."

Participants:

1. Senator ARTHUR CAPPER, of Kansas, senior Republican member of the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations.

2. Senator ALEXANDER WILEY, Republican, of Wisconsin, a member of the Committee on Foreign Relations.

3. Mr. Sterling Fisher, director of the NBC University of the Air.

ANNOUNCER. Here is news from Washington: Senators WILEY and CAPPER pledge Republican support to bipartisan policy of unity on foreign affairs; cite voting record of Congress to refute charges of an isolationist trend; advocate raising status of our chief representative to the United Nations to Cabinet level.

This is Our Foreign Policy, the weekly broadcast of the NBC University of the Air. In about 15 minutes we shall call on NBC in Paris for a short-wave report directly from the conference of 21 nations now writing the peace with Italy and the Axis satellite countries. But first we bring you from Washington a report on American foreign policy in relation to the Paris Conference, featuring Senator ARTHUR CAPPER, of Kansas, and Senator ALEXANDER WILEY, of Wisconsin, both members of the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations. Sterling Fisher, director of the NBC University of the Air, will serve as chairman. Mr. Fisher.

Mr. FISHER. A great part of the world looks to the United States for leadership at the Paris Conference—leadership not only in writing a just peace, but also in backing it up after it is written. The eyes of the world are on America, therefore, as well as Paris. Now, last week Secretary of State Byrnes and Senators CONNALLY and LUCAS gave us their views on the prospect for peace in Europe. This week we have asked two outstanding Republican members of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee to give us their views. Senator CAPPER, let's start with you. As the senior Republican member of the Committee on Foreign Relations, what do you think of the policy our State Department has been following in the peace negotiations?

Senator CAPPER. Well, Mr. Fisher, during most of my 27 years in the Senate I have been a member of the opposition—the minority party. But despite that fact, I think the present administration has done the best it could with a very difficult task in the field of foreign policy—a much better job, perhaps, than on domestic policy. I think President Truman and Jimmy Byrnes have shown good judgment in the face of commitments they inherited from Yalta and preceding conferences. I think these commitments have taken from them much bargaining power in their conferences with foreign powers. I'd go so far as to say that Byrnes is a great Secretary of State. In the Senate we know him well and have confidence in him.

Mr. FISHER. You believe, then, Senator CAPPER, that we should have united, bipartisan support for our foreign policy?

Senator CAPPER. I go along with Senator VANDENBERG on that. We must have a united stand on our policies for dealing with other nations, or we can't expect them to take us very seriously.

Mr. FISHER. Senator WILEY, do you agree on the need for a bipartisan approach on these matters?

Senator WILEY. I'd go further than that. It should be recognized that we do have united backing for our foreign policy. Senator VANDENBERG speaks for the great majority of Republicans when he asks for unity to strengthen our hand during the peace negotiations and after.

Mr. FISHER. Some people have voiced the fear that there is a trend toward isolationism in this country today, as part of the reaction to the war. Do you think that would weaken our position, Senator WILEY, in our dealings with other nations?

Senator WILEY. My answer to that is that the American people will be adequate to their international responsibilities. The big question is: Will the peoples of Europe be adequate to their responsibilities? America never wanted war. Before Pearl Harbor, according to every public-opinion poll, 90 percent of our people opposed our entrance into the war. But war came, and the situation in the world has changed. Incidentally, I don't like that term isolationism. It's loaded. It implies an ostrichlike provincialism.

Mr. FISHER. But, Senator, don't you think that to some extent provincial attitudes still exist in America?

Senator WILEY. Among a few people, perhaps. But the point is, the term isolationism is applied altogether too often to smear American noninterventionists—people who wanted to stay out of the war in the days before Pearl Harbor. Most of these people were honest patriots, and they changed with the times.

Mr. FISHER. Senator CAPPER, have you noticed any signs of a trend—shall we say—away from internationalism in your section of the country, the Midwest?

Senator CAPPER. I don't see any real evidence of it. My State of Kansas is a farming State. The people out there are 96 percent native-born Americans. They are a hard-headed, sane-thinking people. Of course, they are more deeply concerned with domestic problems, such as prices and jobs and homes, and are thinking less about foreign problems than they did during the war. They are disposed to belittle the war agitation you hear so much about. They have confidence that we'll work out our international problems. They don't weep every morning over their coffee just because some new "crisis" pops up in the headlines. But they are not retreating from the rest of the world.

Mr. FISHER. Do your people unanimously support the United Nations as the means of working out world problems?

Senator CAPPER. I wouldn't say that. They are putting their main hope in the United Nations. But they have some reservations, knowing that just setting up a world organization isn't going to insure peace.

Mr. FISHER. What do the people of Kansas pin their hopes on, then, Senator CAPPER, to insure peace?

Senator CAPPER. I think the feeling among the general run of people is that if the great powers can only get together on a program to keep the peace for the next few years the machinery of peace will have a chance to get established. Of course, we stand for the United States first, but we've got to hang together, at Paris and in the United Nations, or we in America may have to suffer the agony of another world war.

Senator WILEY. I think the record of Congress in this session, Mr. Fisher, reflects public opinion pretty well—and it's ample proof that we needn't worry about a reversal of our policy of strong leadership in world affairs. We're in this thing up to our necks, and we'll see it through.

Mr. FISHER. Of course, Senator WILEY, there have been some highly publicized charges that narrow nationalism is still strong in Congress.

Senator WILEY. There are differences of opinion on specific measures like the British loan. But the issue is not nationalism versus internationalism. Nor it is a question of Republicans versus Democrats. Look at the record. Congress has shown a dominant international point of view in its vote on every major foreign policy issue.

Mr. FISHER. That certainly was true of the Senate's approval of the United Nations Charter.

Senator WILEY. Yes, 26 years ago the Senate rejected the League of Nations—due largely to the fact, I believe, that Woodrow Wilson refused all reservations. This time, there were only two dissenting votes on the United Nations. We have also overwhelmingly approved full American participation in the Economic and Social Council and in each of the specialized organizations of the United Nations that has come before us—food and agriculture, the educational organization, and soon, I hope, the world health organization.

Mr. FISHER. It seems to me that the Senate's stand on the World Court is also very significant.

Senator WILEY. Yes, I'm glad that the Senate Foreign Relations Committee saw fit to approve unanimously the resolution for America's acceptance of compulsory jurisdiction under the International Court of Justice. Passage of this resolution should reassure thinking people all over the earth.

Mr. FISHER. I've noticed that the sharpest divisions in Congress have been on questions of economic policy.

Senator WILEY. Even so, the Senate passed the Bretton Woods agreement for a world bank and monetary fund by a vote of 61 to 16, and the House voted for it 345 to 18. On the expansion of the Export-Import Bank, and the British loan or financial agreement, the vote was also decisive.

Senator CAPPER. I voted against the British loan. I couldn't support that.

Mr. FISHER. Why not, Senator CAPPER?

Senator CAPPER. I didn't think it was a sound business proposition. It amounts to an agreement by which Britain binds herself to make payments that can't possibly be made. I felt, and I still feel, that in the long run it will create ill will instead of good will between ourselves and the British. Every time a payment comes due it will be a source of friction—to them if they meet it, to us if they don't.

Mr. FISHER. But aside from the British loan, Senator, you feel our international policies are sound?

Senator CAPPER. Well, in general, I think we're working on a high plane, making a real stand for international peace. As I said before I give Truman and Byrnes credit for working hard, and effectively, to get the United States, Great Britain, and the Soviet Union together to stop war. They have done well, and I think we should continue to support any reasonable program along these lines.

Senator WILEY. I'd like to say a word here, Mr. Fisher, for my bill to create a Department of Peace in the Cabinet, headed by our chief delegate to the United Nations as Secretary of Peace. I believe this would strengthen our efforts to build a peaceful world. And it might lead other nations to do the same thing—to put the accent on peace, not on war or preparations for war, or diplomatic fencing.

Mr. FISHER. Yes; I've read about your bill, Senator WILEY, but I've had one mental reservation on it. Wouldn't the creation of a separate Department of Peace to handle United Nations' affairs weaken the State Department? After all, it has a lot to do with the problems of building the peace, too.

Senator WILEY. It's true there would be some jurisdictional questions to solve—but I believe they could be worked out. The Department of Peace, as I see it, would consist only of a few policy-making men, and would work closely with the State Department.

Mr. FISHER. I should think that to raise our chief representative on the United Nations to the rank of Cabinet Secretary—Secretary of United Nations Affairs, perhaps—would accomplish the same thing.

Senator WILEY. That would be a step in the right direction, certainly.

Mr. FISHER. Senator CAPPER, how do you stand on this?

Senator CAPPER. I think it's a fine idea. I think it would be a fitting recognition of the importance we attach to the United Nations, and also a fitting recognition of Senator AUSTIN'S leadership when he becomes our chief United Nations representative.

Mr. FISHER. Well, it's certainly an interesting proposal, and I've an idea we'll hear more of it. Now, I think we've disposed of the changes of isolationism and partisanship in foreign policy thoroughly enough. Let's get on to the Paris Conference. Senator CAPPER, what do you think Bill Johnson, our average listener in, say, Dodge City, Kans., ought to know about that Conference?

Senator CAPPER. Bill Johnson ought to know first of all that we are going to this conference not to remake the world but to try to stabilize Europe to a point where both Europeans and Americans can live their lives out in peace. We're trying to show the world that we are not war mongers—or imperialists. We want nothing from the war-ridden countries of Europe except security against war.

Mr. FISHER. But how does all this affect Bill Johnson?

Senator CAPPER. Right in his pocketbook. The last two wars have cost Bill Johnson plenty—including his share of a national debt running close to $300,000,000,000. We want a world in which there will be no reason to go on with an expensive program of armament because of fear that some nation might go on the warpath.

Senator WILEY. Bill Johnson and every citizen of the United States and every Member of Congress should realize the crucial importance of the Paris Conference. It's only the first of three peace conferences.

Mr. FISHER. Some British wag has called it the "Conference of the Little Peaces. P-e-a-c-e-s."

Senator WILEY. It's true that peace terms still have to be drawn up for Germany and Japan; this conference will write the peace only for Italy, Hungary, Rumania, Bulgaria, and Finland. But I maintain, nevertheless, that it is more important even than the Versailles Conference of 1919, because this time we're living in an atomic age. The world has been shrunk by the atomic bomb, the rocket bomb, jet-propelled planes, and electronic devices, to name only a few of our advances toward self-destruction. The chips are down. There will have to be success at Paris, or there will be chaos in Europe and the world, and the possibility of a new world conflict more terrible than we can conceive.

Mr. FISHER. Well, that's putting it plainly. Paris is a real challenge, then, to our diplomats and representatives.

Senator WILEY. Yes, we should all feel humble in the responsibility that is on our representatives and upon us. We should exercise restraint in our judgments and not make any snap criticisms of what is done at Paris. We should put ourselves in the shoes of our own conferees and of the other conferees. As the conference proceeds, there may be many points at which we may take issue with what is done. Now we should not compromise our convictions but we should be restrained in our criticism.

Mr. FISHER. Senator CAPPER, how do you like the developments in Paris this week?

Senator CAPPER. I like the way the small nations have spoken up for their rights. I like the way the meetings have been opened to the press—Secretary Byrnes had a lot to do with that. It's in the spirit of Woodrow Wilson's "open covenants openly arrived at."

Mr. FISHER. As a former newspaperman, too, I can see why you would approve of that.

Senator CAPPER. Yes. And I have confidence in our representatives at Paris. We'll see some scareheads about the conference, but I don't think there will be any disagreements so serious as to be impossible of solution. Of course I would like to see the Russians a little more friendly—but I am not alarmed. They are a bit isolationist themselves, and behind many of the other countries in their world peace program. But I believe they will come around.

Mr. FISHER. Senator WILEY, how does the Senate Foreign Relations Committee view the progress made so far in Paris?

Senator WILEY. I cannot speak for the whole committee, Mr. Fisher. But I do feel that it is the particular responsibility of the 23 members of the Foreign Relations Committee to look upon the Paris Conference with understanding, sympathy, and tolerance. The members of our committee are more or less in the position of judges. We have to be impartial while the case is being considered, and we should not complicate the problems of drawing up the peace treaties by premature remarks.

Mr. FISHER. Well, that puts me in my place * * * But seriously, Senator, you must have some views you can express here and now on the principles by which you will weigh the results at Paris.

Senator WILEY. I will say this: I think our delegation should insist on certain traditional American concepts as a basis for peace.

Mr. FISHER. What are they?

Senator WILEY. First, the self-determination of peoples—the right to choose their own government; second, the right of small nations that helped to fight the war to take real part in drafting the treaties; and third, justice for all—victor and vanquished alike.

Mr. FISHER. What do you mean by "justice," Senator? Any thing specific?

Senator WILEY. It includes mercy and charity for our enemies. We don't want a peace based on revenge.

Mr. FISHER. In some quarters, Senator, that would be called "soft peace" talk.

Senator WILEY. Then those quarters are guilty of loose thinking. Peace cannot be built on revenge but only upon understanding and justice. We must remember that, if we want to bring the German satellite states back into the family of nations where they can play a respected and useful role.

Mr. FISHER. What you're saying is that we need to take a long-range view.

Senator WILEY. Exactly. We need perspective. We need to realize that past peace conferences, such as the Congress of Vienna and the Versailles Conference, only bred more wars because they were warped by age-old feuds, hatreds, and suspicions. Now, you can't wipe these feelings out overnight. Such territorial problems as Transylvania, the Greco-Bulgarian frontier, the Italian-Austrian frontier.

Mr. FISHER. On the Italian-Austrian frontier, there has been some criticism of the decision to leave South Tyrol in Italy, rather than returning it to Austria where it belongs historically.

Senator WILEY. I won't undertake to pass on that. I do feel that the Paris Conference ought to review all these decisions and change them if they are not consistent with the principle of self-determination. This and other territorial questions, such as the Russo-Finnish and Italo-Yugoslav frontiers, should all be settled in such a way as to remove the causes of future friction insofar as possible.

Mr. FISHER. But isn't it true, Senator, that the people of European countries are so mixed up that there will always be minority problems?

Senator WILEY. Yes; and it's hard for any of us here on this blessed continent to appreciate the fix the people of, say, the Balkan countries are in. Wherever they may live, they are only a hundred miles or so from the frontier of another country, which may have gone berserk a generation or more ago and slaughtered their ancestors. We must understand the fear, the anxiety, the worry in the hearts of people in these European countries—small and large alike.

Mr. FISHER. Now, it's time to call in NBC in Paris, by short wave, for a direct report on events at the conference of 21 nations. Come in, Paris.

ANNOUNCER. That was NBC in Paris, bringing you a direct report on the Conference.

Earlier in the program, American policy in relation to the Conference was discussed by Senators ARTHUR CAPPER, of Kansas, and ALEXANDER WILEY, of Wisconsin, both members of the Foreign Relations Committee. Sterling Fisher was moderator.

Next week we shall bring you a discussion of the New International Court by Judge Green Hackworth, America's representative on the Court, and Charles Fahy, legal adviser of the Department of State.

In succeeding weeks, we expect to deal with the following topics: Oil and international relations, issues before the Security Council, the Economic and Social Council, trusteeship and dependent territories, the Rio Conference and hemisphere security, the International Bank and Fund, freedom of the airways, the United Nations Secretariat, the General Assembly meets, control of international cartels.

Officials of the United Nations, the State Department, and other United States Government agencies, and Members of Congress will discuss these important subjects. If you have questions which you would like to have us ask the participants, please send them to Our Foreign Policy, box 30, station J, New York City.

This has been the seventy-seventh weekly series of broadcasts presented by the NBC University of the Air and transmitted to our service men and women overseas through the facilities of the Armed Forces Radio Service. The series is coordinated by Selden Menefee.

You can obtain printed copies of these broadcasts at 10 cents in coin. If you would like to receive copies of 13 consecutive reprints, send $1 to cover the cost of printing and mailing.

Address your orders to Our Foreign Policy, box 30, station J, New York City. Make checks payable to the Columbia University Press. Special rates are available for large orders.

Economy in Government

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. CHESTER H. GROSS

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, August 2, 1946

Mr. GROSS. Mr. Speaker, I was rather amused to read a headline in this morning's Philadelphia Inquirer saying "Truman Orders Slash in Spending." The President went on to warn against "inflationary pressures" created by large Federal expenditures.

It appears to me that this warning comes with poor grace and at a late hour, in view of the fact that he has signed every deficiency appropriation bill passed by the Congress. Such continued action on his part, not only sanctions but encourages the reckless expenditure of public funds by heads of the various bureaus. While the President talks economy he refuses to use powers granted him to curtail expenditures as well as curtail the public pay roll.

He might do well to explain to the taxpayers the recent creation of new organizations thereby greatly increasing the public pay roll.

Retailing and the Economic Future of Texas

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. WRIGHT PATMAN

OF TEXAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Saturday, July 27, 1946

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, permission having been granted, I am inserting at this time in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD an address delivered by Mr. Joseph Ross, general assistant to the executive vice president of Neiman-Marcus, Dallas, Tex., before the Texas Retail Dry Goods Association Convention, at Dallas, on June 11, 1946, entitled "Retailing and the Economic Future of Texas."

Mr. Ross' address is not only interesting and informative but his observations, which have been amassed by his experience in connection with a large successful retail business and his conscientious study of the problems of the retailer, can well be applied to retailers everywhere. The time given to the reading of this address will certainly be well spent.

It is as follows:

We are probably approaching the final phase of a very lush period in retailing; a period when the very existence of formidable problems have been responsible in themselves for the remarkable prosperity we have enjoyed. Despite the scarcity of merchandise, sales hit an all-time peak. Despite the excess-profits tax, profits hit an all-time high. Despite our complaints of OPA restrictions, the dollar margins between cost and selling rose to record levels.

And now, in this final phase, bounty piles upon bounty. Not only do we still enjoy the sure, easy business of the war which is the product of a still unfulfilled demand, but, on top of that, we enjoy a gradual easing of those conditions which exercised a restrictive influence upon business during the war. The excess-profits tax has been removed. The supply situation is improving. You will hear, as I did in New York, that the market is tighter and worse than it has ever been, but you will find that you can place larger commitments than you have ever placed before. All this, while the joyride continues. Verily, for the next 6 months, in my opinion, our cup will runneth over.

But after that, what then? At some point in this cycle, production will catch up with demand. At some point, the wheels of competition will begin to turn. And instead of being carried along the tide to greater heights by the broad sweep of history, our individual destinies as retailers will be determined again by the solid measure of our own thinking and our own ingenuity and our own resourcefulness.

Here at the Texas retail dry-goods convention we are considering the question of "retail business, today and tomorrow." Even if it were possible to forecast exactly when business would begin to turn or if it would turn at all, even if it were possible to forecast precisely how long a chance we could afford to take to exploit in full our present boom conditions; even if it were possible to forecast precisely how much conservatism we should exercise when the tide does turn to keep our losses at an absolute minimum, even if it were possible to do accurately all of these things, which I doubt, what would it mean to our long-term future as retailers? For one brief fleeting moment of transition we may be a little bit more on the right side, a little bit less on the wrong side, but would all this change the basic direction of our business? In these times does this type of educated guesswork truly represent the fulfillment of our long-term responsiblities?

I, for one, feel that there is a more practical and solid approach to our future; that we retailers in Texas have a unique opportunity to shape the trend of business in this State. If each of us can see beyond the horizons of our individual stores and our individual problems to the level of the State itself and its problems, I believe a great future lies ahead for us, for I am of the opinion that the competition for postwar business does not lie between store and store but between economic region and economic region. If we can exploit to the fullest the extraordinary opportunities that lie within the State of Texas, we can lay the foundations of a permanently greater retail business in this area.

If among you there are some who think I am talking in generalities, let me be specific. I recently saw a survey of production in Texas of nine of its basic commodities—cotton, corn, milk and butterfat, hogs, pecans, sweetpotatoes, hay, and soybeans. This survey showed, for instance, that although Texas produced more bales of cotton than any other State in the Union, in yield per acre it is the next to the last State in the country. If we could take the yield per acre of a State like Mississippi and apply it to all the acres planted in Texas, we would be richer in a single year by nearly $260,000,000. Applying this same type of thinking to each of these nine commodities, if Texas had been able to match the production figures of other top-ranking States, our agricultural income in this State for a single year would have increased by $1,176,000,000, or $2,800 for each farm family in our State.

I address myself to you retailers who service the State's great rural areas and ask you, "Is this or is this not a proper source of concern of yours? If the income of each farm family in the State could be increased by $2,800, how would this affect your business? What are you doing about it?"

In a recent address, Mr. C. L. Lundell, director of the Institute of Technology and Plant Industry at Southern Methodist University, said, "In Texas we have a sick rural economy. * * * The agricultural situation in Texas is not the result of one or two crop failures. It is rather the cumulative result of a broad decline in production due to two primary causes: (1) The exhaustion of the soil and (2) the failure to undertake fundamental research to achieve crop diversification."

Only the sheer size of our State and not its per-acre production has accorded it the preeminent position it occupies in agriculture. But here is a great job to be done which could ultimately be of great dollars and cents' significance to us retailers; a job of reorienting our agriculture and reclaiming our land; of crop diversification and new land-use practices; a job that could raise substantially the yield per acre of this State and with it the agricultural income from which retailing draws a large segment of its volume.

I say this is as much the concern of Texas retailers as it is of Texas farmers and more the concern of Texas retailers than the question of whether the fabric market is softening up in New York City. I say this not as a matter of moral concern but as a matter of common business sense. If we want to speak of the future of retail business in Texas, let us speak of the future of agriculture in Texas. Let us ask ourselves the question, "As retailers, what are we doing about it?"

Nor need we confine ourselves to agriculture to evaluate the scope of our opportunities. We are in the throes of a momentous change in the industrial economy of Texas. Our long-term future as retailers will be largely determined by our recognition of the extraordinary developments which are now taking place and by our ability to exploit these developments in the interests of the region we serve.

The great development which came out of the war was the emergence of the chemical industry as one of the cornerstones of our modern economic life. It is as significant to the economic history of the twentieth century as the steam engine was to the eighteenth century and the discovery of the Bessemer steel-making process was to the nineteenth century. It is as basic to our modern industrial structure as steel and power and light. It is significant because it provides for a large portion of modern industry new, cheaper, and, in many cases, qualitatively superior basic raw materials than these industries previously enjoyed.

This new industry is of extraordinary importance to Texas because it is founded on the hydrocarbons of natural gas and petroleum in which this State abounds. During the war, natural gas and petroleum were proven superior to any other base materials for chemical development. Other base materials such as coal tar are limited as to their chemical derivatives. This is not true of petroleum and natural gas. A distinguished chemist has estimated that over a million new organic compounds will be produced from these two sources.

Texas, which produces about 40 percent of all the oil and natural gas produced in this country, can thus become the center of the chemical industry in the United States. And because this particular industry will occupy such a strategic source-relationship to the rest of our whole economic structure, it can accelerate the industrialization of Texas on a scale we are likely to underestimate.

Some of the raw materials supplied by the chemical industry are exemplified by the expanding field of synthetics; rayon, cellophane, cellulose acetate, nylon, synthetic rubber etc., all of which can be made from the compounds of petroleum and natural gas. Other raw materials may not be so well known. All dyes for instance, are of synthetic chemicals. Synthetic protective coverings and finishes will compete with conventional products of the paint, varnish, and enamel industries. Perhaps more symbolic of our postwar world than anything else are the lightweight alloys and steels which are the product of magnesium, which is produced by chemical processes. In this connection, the Gulf coast area of the State bids fair to be one of the magnesium-production centers of the country.

Already the importance of Texas as a chemical center has been recognized by some of the leading industrial companies of the country. Companies such as Dow Chemical, du Pont, Celanese Corp. of America, American Cyanamid, Diamond Alkali Co. of Pittsburgh have either built or are planning to build large plants in this State.

These remarks concerning the chemical industry are intended to convey only a suggestion of the vast panorama which is unfolding in Texas and the unique opportunity it affords our State above all the other 47 because of our extraordinary endowments with respect to the mineral resources this industry requires.

You may well ask at this point what has all this to do with retailing and I would answer that I believe the proper development of the chemical industry can do more for retail business in this State than any other factor. Such a program involves many problems which must be a source of our attention and concern. It involves the projection of certain policies which deserve our articulate support.

Let us consider the fabricating industries. These are largely devoted to the production of consumers' goods and as a rule are characterized by a high degree of diversification. Fabrication industries fundamentally complement related primary industries; the latter supplying the raw materials to become processed into finished articles. In general, fabrication industries utilize large numbers of workers and are therefore of special concern to us as retailers because of the pay rolls they bring into the community.

The various phases of the basic chemical industry being established in Texas furnish outstanding opportunities for the building of these fabrication industries. An illustration is furnished by the tire manufacturing industry. The General Tire & Rubber Co. is successfully operating at Waco a plant costing several millions of dollars and using synthetic rubber made in Texas. The Kelly-Springfield Tire Co. was building a large tire plant at Houston for the Government which has been discontinued only temporarily with the war's end. Recently the Seiberling Rubber Co. was negotiating with the War Assets Administration to take over the Government-owned war plant at Garland, Texas. It is probable that these tire plants will not only expand their tire manufacturing capacity, but that also they will expand into the manufacture of a multitude of products made from synthetic rubber.

The point is that the potentialities of rubber production in this State are so tremendous that we have not approached the related capacity we could achieve in the manufacture of tires and other rubber products. We have not begun to sell Texas adequately as a rubber center to the great number of fabrication manufacturers in the United States.

Similarly, an important plastics industry could come from the synthetic resins produced from the chemicals made in Texas. A great textile manufacturing industry could be generated from the synthetic fibers that our chemical industries provide. A whole range of consumers goods can be manufactured from the magnesium alloys being produced on the Texas Gulf Coast. A great paper industry is potentially feasible founded upon the sulphite processes in conjunction with the East Texas scrub pines.

The whole field of specifically what types of fabrication industries could economically thrive in Texas in relation to our primary industries should be surveyed and, after this information is determined, an organized plan should be developed consciously to attract these industries to the State. If we attempt consciously to organize and integrate this program instead of permitting ourselves to grow like Topsy, we will achieve far more effective results in competition with other economic regions bidding for the same postwar business.

Then there is the vital question of control of our mineral resources. If these resources are the basis of a great primary industry, then proper conservation of them should be a major part of the economic program of the State. Our resources in natural gas will dwindle much more rapidly if used primarily as a source of heat and power than if they are used as the base of a hydrocarbon chemical industry. Obviously, it is necessary to use some of this gas to furnish heat and power for the State, but somewhere between two extremes we may find the approximate truth. Somewhere we can draw a line and allocate a portion of this gas for the specific use of our chemical industries. In 1943, we piped out over 305,000,000,000 cubic feet of natural gas to other States in the union or nearly 25 percent of our entire annual production. Since 1943, other pipe lines have been under construction and it is probable that this percentage has risen. It is questionable whether we can sustain and develop a great chemical industry in Texas, with all its far-reaching implication toward the development of related fabrication industries, if as large a proportion of this natural gas continues to be piped out of the State.

I speak of natural gas only as an example of the conservation problems which exist with respect to all our mineral resources. The issue is whether we are content to be a colonial economy pouring out our raw wealth to support the industries of other areas or whether we will utilize these resources as a base for great industries of our own.

Surely we as thinking retailers can see the ramifications of these basic developments upon our business and the desirability of our being a vital, activated, constructive force in assisting in the sound economic and industrial growth of the State. I repeat our long-term future as Texas retailers is bound more closely to the competition between economic areas than it is between stores.

As a group, what can we do to help develop this growth?

First. We must actively support the Texas State Research Foundation now being organized at Southern Methodist University to conduct agricultural research to the end of making Texas a top-ranking agricultural State on an intensive as well as an extensive basis. This is one of the great economic problems of the State and its ultimate solution will provide one of the foundations upon which the continued prosperity of the State will rest. We should support the Gulf Southwest Industrial Conference committed to a program of the fullest intensive development of the natural resources of this region.

Second. As retailers we must subscribe actively and articulately to a broad program for industrial development. What this program should be specifically I would not presume to say at this time; but it should perhaps encompass the principle of the proper conservation and control of our mineral resources. It should determine specifically what manufacturing industries could with economic justification be serviced by the primary industries of the State; and then develop an effective merchandising plan to assist the various chambers of commerce in attracting the leading companies of these manufacturing industries to the State.

Third. We can disseminate information concerning the problems, issues, and opportunities involved in the future economic growth of Texas and in this way create an informed public opinion which can be a constructive force for the development of the State.

What the late Wendell Willkie said about one world applies to retailing as well as international affairs. The time is past when each of us can consider himself an island of individual competitive effort in the sea of business. We are inextricably linked to the broad economic fortunes of the region we serve. We must bear our share of all its economic problems because they directly concern us as retailers. How bright or how dim our future may be depends upon the measure of broad responsibility we are willing to assume. In this era of challenge that lies ahead of us, we as retailers must not be found wanting.

The "Four Freedoms" and the Four C's

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. CHARLES W. VURSELL
OF ILLINOIS
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Friday, August 2, 1946

Mr. VURSELL. Mr. Speaker, the New Dealers formerly spoke and wrote with piety about the "four freedoms," the freedom of religion, the freedom of speech, the freedom from fear, and the freedom from want. There "four freedoms" were most assuredly ends most devoutly to be wished. I ask, Mr. Speaker, what has become of these "four freedoms"? Where in a large part of Europe is there freedom of religion? Where is there freedom of speech? Where is there freedom from fear? And where is there freedom from want? Every American knows that these "four freedoms" were sacrificed for many peoples in many lands at Yalta.

What has the New Deal offered the people of the United States and the world in place of the "four freedoms"? The New Deal offers the four C's, confusion, control, corruption, and communism.

The confusion is not only apparent in its relation with certain countries of the world, but this confusion is so evident in the domestic, civil, and economic life of the United States that one is justified in assuming that they "planned it that way."

The desire for control—control of every act of every citizen of our Nation—is so intense that the New Dealers appear unwilling to admit that the people themselves are capable of living their own lives, running their own business, or able to do their own thinking.

Corruption is daily becoming more apparent in high New Deal offices and seems now to be taken for granted. A most worthy gentleman and our former colleague, Mr. Lindsay C. Warren, now Comptroller General of the United States, cannot stand the stench. He openly charges that eight to ten billion dollars of the taxpayers' money has been wasted, and that there is no method of finding who received it and where it has gone. This really could be expected when the Hague, Kelly-Nash, Tammany, Pendergast political machines became such a leading part of the national administration.

And where do this kind of performances lead us? They lead us, my colleagues, down the road to communism. Communism breeds and thrives on people and nations which are controlled, confused, and where there is corruption in the Government. When any country becomes weak through the machinations of its government and the people are confused and frustrated, controlled and coerced, corrupted, debased, and defiled, a fertile field for the seeds of communism to be sown in is most assuredly provided. Every American in public life knows he is liable to attack by the smear mongers who aid and abet the very movements which would overthrow our Government.

When any people or any government pay heed to a philosophy of government or life based on the thesis that there is no God, that man has no soul, that the state is supreme and the individual nothing, that a state is "good" if it believes in communism and "evil" if it thwarts communism—such a government will never provide man the privileges and the opportunities that he is entitled to under the stars and stripes. Such a philosophy has and will provide moral and spiritual ruin for any people and any government. Such a philosophy will wither the hopes and aspirations for the better things of life which has long been our American heritage.

Whatever may be said of me when I leave these earthly shores, I pray it may never be said that I helped turn the key in the church doors of my beloved country. May it never be said that I would substitute hymns of hate, terror, name-calling, smear attacks, and character assassinations for the real fundamental values of life which include tolerance, liberty, friendship, peace, love, charity, and justice for all men before all men and their Maker. May I always be remembered as a builder rather than a destroyer; a constructive force that supported the real fundamental values of life in accordance to the talents I may possess.

Frankly, I have sufficient confidence in the people of my district, my State, and my country to believe that they are aware of the forces which threaten the well-being and welfare of themselves, their children, and their children's children.

When the home, the church, the fireside, and the flag replace the four C's, the American people will enjoy the freedom they so richly deserve, and are entitled to enjoy.

Need for New Rules

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. T. MILLET HAND
OF NEW JERSEY
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Friday, August 2, 1946

Mr. HAND. Mr. Speaker, the final week of the Seventy-ninth Congress has presented the country with a ludicrous spectacle of an archaic parliamentary system, used to block rather than to facilitate the Nation's business.

During these closing days of the session, with a calendar crowded with work already too long delayed, the House has been almost completely occupied with quorum and other roll calls, mostly designed to kill both time and pending legislation.

The proceedings have to be seen to be believed. It is inconceivable that grown-up men and women continue to operate under a system which may allow a single Member to put a spoke in the wheels of Government.

The people have a right to expect better conduct of their affairs. What we have been doing is childish.

Mr. Speaker, the overwhelming number of the Members of the House are conscientious and hard-working, and are here willing and anxious to do their duty. It is a scandal that they are not permitted to do so under these ancient precedents.

The time we have wasted this week highlights the reorganization bill just passed. Good as it is in some respects, it is only a step toward an efficiently functioning Congress. Obviously, rules which at times permit a whole day to be wasted, must be changed. What we have done is good, but we must do much more.

Mr. Speaker, I have advocated reorganization and better rules since my first month here. I shall continue to do so until a system is achieved adapted to the work to be done in a modern world.

Government-Owned Patents

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. FRANK W. BOYKIN
OF ALABAMA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, August 2, 1946

Mr. BOYKIN. Mr. Speaker, the House Committee on Patents has recently conducted hearings on H. R. 5940, a bill to make Government-owned patents freely available for use by citizens of the United States, its Territories and possessions, and the testimony has been printed. I have just received a report from the Secretary of the Interior on that measure which was too late to be incorporated in the record of the proceedings with respect to it, and in order that there shall be an official documentation of the Secretary's views, and under leave to extend my remarks, I will insert it verbatim:

THE SECRETARY OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, D. C., July 26, 1946.

Hon. FRANK W. BOYKIN,
Chairman, Committee on Patents,
House of Representatives.

MY DEAR MR. BOYKIN: Reference is made to your request for a report on H. R. 5940, a bill to make Government-owned patents freely available for use by citizens of the United States, its Territories and possessions.

I am in entire agreement with the policy expressed in H. R. 5940 of securing for the people of the United States the full benefits of Government-owned patents upon inventions made and acquired at public expense. I do not believe, however, that in every instance this policy would best be achieved by the compulsory dedication to the public of Government-acquired patents.

Public dedication is undoubtedly completely effective with respect to inventions which require no development after the issuance of the patent but merely publicity to bring them to the attention of the public, and which can be utilized without costly commercially manufactured apparatus. A simple example of such an invention would be a method for home canning. The sole purpose of a patent in such instances is to prevent private concerns from patenting and monopolizing the results of Government research and thereby withholding them from the people. The Department of Agriculture has dedicated patents for inventions of this character to the public for many years, and it is the intention of this Department to do so whenever the occasion arises.

In some other instances, however, dedication of patents, rather than the issuance of licenses, might defeat the purpose avowed in the bill of bringing the inventions before the public. If an invention necessitates experimentation at substantial expense before it can be utilized on more than a laboratory scale, as is the case with many Government patents, it is likely in some cases that a private concern would be unwilling to develop the invention without some assurance that its investment would be protected, at least to a limited extent, against a subsequent and costless encroachment by its competitors. Accordingly Government inventions of this character might become mere paper patents, unused in spite of obvious possibilities, if they were dedicated to the public. The right to issue licenses which are exclusive or limited to a few licensees for a period of time long enough to allow the licensee or licensees to recoup their developmental expenses would be desirable in such cases. The granting of such licenses, however, has been held in opinions of several Attorneys General to be beyond the authority of the executive branch of the Government without legislation by Congress. A suitable provision in a bill relating to Government patent ownership would be one allowing the head of any department or agency of the Government to which a patent has been assigned to issue an exclusive license thereunder for a limited time upon a determination that such a license is desirable to make the benefits of the invention available to the public. Discrimination would be avoided by awarding the license to the highest and best bidder, with due consideration for the time for which an exclusive license was desired and the extent to which the invention would be brought before the public.

In still other instances, the Government should be allowed to determine whether a prospective licensee is technically qualified to practice the invention. Some inventions on which the Government holds patent rights may be brought into disrepute if they are practiced by persons without the requisite technical skills. An indiscriminate right to manufacture or use other inventions covered by Government patents would tend to result in unnecessary hazards either to the persons practicing the inventions, or to the purchasers of the articles manufactured by such persons.

Dedication to the public of all Government-owned patents would also, without appropriate amendment, vitiate many of the security provisions written into the various atomic energy bills now before Congress. These bills provide for ownership by the Government of all patents relating to atomic energy and its production, whether resulting from private or Government research, with strict controls over licensing and the furnishing of information, in order to protect the national security. As now written, H. R. 5940 would release to the world all the information which these bills seek to protect by providing for Government ownership of such patents.

I am of the opinion that an over-all Government policy concerning the ownership and use of Government patents which would promote the widest use of such patents should be established by statute. In the absence of such a policy the Department of the Interior is utilizing its best efforts to make patents under its control available to the public by listing them in the Patent Office Register of patents available for licensing, by as widespread publicity in technical journals as circumstances permit, and by the granting of licenses as unrestrictive as sound administrative discretion will permit. For your information, a copy of Departmental Order No. 2158 of January 23, 1946, governing the departmental policy for the granting of licenses relating to inventions controlled by the Department of the Interior, is attached.

The Bureau of the Budget has advised me that there is no objection to the submission of this report to your committee.

Sincerely yours,

J. A. KRUG,
Secretary of the Interior.

Relief Funds for Italy

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. MICHAEL J. BRADLEY
OF PENNSYLVANIA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, July 31, 1946

Mr. BRADLEY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, in conformity with unanimous consent which I have received, I am placing in the RECORD an exchange of correspondence between my colleague from Philadelphia, the Honorable WILLIAM T. GRANAHAN and myself:

JULY 26, 1946.

Hon. WILLIAM T. GRANAHAN,
House of Representatives,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR COLLEAGUE: Because I am aware of the interest you have expressed on many occasions with regard to present conditions in Italy, where there is great suffering and distress, I am taking the liberty of writing to you with reference to the relief funds which are being raised here in America for the benefit of the Italian people, who are in such sore need of help and assistance.

The economy of Italy has been more than seriously dislocated and there is a critical shortage of essential articles which are necessary for the sustaining of life. I had an opportunity to see conditions at first-hand when I was in Italy last year and I was appalled at the misery which existed. When our country was forced into the war the Italian people immediately demonstrated their reluctance to fight America, where so many people of their own blood had found happiness. Thousands of American boys of Italian blood were among those who gave their lives in north Africa and in the campaign in Italy, and the action of the Italian people in revolting against Fascist and Nazi dictators was in no small measure due to the traditional friendliness they felt for America. Anything we can do here in America to help them is more than justified by the sacrifices which were made by those Americans of Italian blood who served so ably and so heroically in our armed forces. If you could see the things which I saw in Italy last year, I know you would agree with me that it is essential for us to extend any aid which we can to the Italian people, who are actually on the verge of starvation. Might I therefore appeal to you to make a contribution to the committee which is in charge of raising funds for the relief work in Italy? I know there are many demands made upon you, but I am sure this is one which well merits consideration.

With warmest regards, I am,

Sincerely yours,

MICHAEL J. BRADLEY.

CONGRESS OF THE UNITED STATES,
HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, D. C., July 31, 1946.

Hon. MICHAEL J. BRADLEY,
House of Representatives,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR COLLEAGUE: I am in receipt of your letter of July 26 relating in detail the distress and suffering in Italy, and informing me of the relief funds which are being raised in America for the benefit of the Italian people, who, as you truly state, are in such dire need of help and assistance.

I recall very well your statement to me upon your return from Europe last year of the deplorable conditions existing in Italy at that time. From what I read of these conditions, they have become gradually worse.

I am, therefore, glad to enclose my check as a contribution to the relief committee, and ask that you kindly forward this check to them. I trust the committee will be successful in obtaining funds for this relief cause, and that the people of Italy will be relieved of their present plight in the very near future.

Sincerely yours,

WILLIAM T. GRANAHAN.

Government-Owned Patents

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF

HON. FRANK W. BOYKIN

OF ALABAMA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, August 2, 1946

Mr. BOYKIN. Mr. Speaker, the House Committee on Patents has recently conducted hearings on H. R. 5940, a bill to make Government-owned patents freely available for use by citizens of the United States, its Territories and possessions, and the testimony has been printed. I have just received a report from the Secretary of Agriculture on that measure which was too late to be incorporated in the record of the proceedings with respect to it, and in order that there shall be an official documentation of the Secretary's views, and under leave to extend my remarks, I will insert it verbatim:

JULY 25, 1946.

Hon. FRANK W. BOYKIN,
Chairman, Committee on Patents,
House of Representatives

DEAR MR. BOYKIN: This is in reply to your request of April 1, 1946, for a report on H. R. 5940, a bill to make Government-owned patents freely available for use by citizens of the United States, its Territories and possessions.

The purpose of the bill is to make the subject matter of patents owned by the Government freely and promptly available for use by and for the benefit of the citizens of the United States, its Territories and possessions by divesting the United States of substantially all it rights to the patents now owned by it and those which may hereafter be owned by it. This would be tantamount to a dedication to the citizens of all Government-owned patents and would have the same effect as if the terms of the patents had expired.

This Department is unable to agree that the provisions of H. R. 5940 would result in attaining its apparent objective. It is axiomatic that inventions are of no use to society unless the public is able to use them. Dedicating patents to the public would not guarantee such use and, in most cases, would guarantee the opposite result. Public service patents obtained by this Department have always been "freely and promptly available for use by and for the benefit of the citizens of the United States, its Territories and possessions." In the case of patents of this Department vested in the United States, the formality of first obtaining a nonexclusive, royalty-free license is the only prerequisite to such use. However, experience has shown that, although these inventions are freely available to the public, many of them lie dormant and commercially undeveloped. This is especially true in those cases where substantial capital investment is necessary to develop the invention. Since only nonexclusive licenses can now be issued under patents vested in the United States, we have found that many apparently valuable inventions covered by such patents lie dormant due to the inability to protect manufacturers who may be willing to expend the sums necessary to develop the inventions commercially. Manufacturers are unwilling to invest development or venture capital without some protection from competitors who could avail themselves of the results of the development without the expenditure of capital.

The provisions of H. R. 5940 are in conflict with the recommendations made by this Department in a letter dated July 30, 1941, from the Under Secretary of Agriculture to the Speaker of the House of Representatives, from which the following is quoted:

"In recent years, the activities of this Department have developed to such an extent that the present law is inadequate to enable the Department properly to cope with the problems which present themselves in the prosecution of the Department's program.

"These problems while they may exist generally throughout the Government service, are of major importance in this Department, due to the varied and extensive nature of this Department's research work and to the fact that this Department must maintain a close relationship with the general public. In carrying out the activities of this Department in the field of research, it is essential that the greatest good should be obtained for the public out of the inventions arising from such research.

"One source of difficulty is the fact that, under the present state of the law, the Secretary of Agriculture, when he holds title to a patent, is only authorized to grant licenses which are nonexclusive, nonassignable, and revocable. The commercial exploitation of new inventions requires, in many cases, the expenditure of large sums of money. In such a case, unless some protection or some advantage is given to enable a particular manufacturer to reap a reward as the result of the risk taken by him in investing capital in the new endeavor, he will usually refuse to enter a competitive field. No protection against competition in the commercial development of an invention covered by a patent controlled by this Department can be given to a manufacturer at the present time. As previously indicated, a license to use such a patent is subject to revocation at any time and the licensee must anticipate competition from other manufacturers who, upon request, can obtain similar licenses to use the patented invention. As a result of this, many patents, which are dedicated to the public or controlled by the Secretary of Agriculture, apparently become dormant, even though they possess decided advantages and improvements over the prior art."

The provisions of H. R. 5940 are also in opposition to the recommendations of the National Patent Planning Commission in its second report dealing with Government-owned patents and inventions of Government employees and contractors. Attention is particularly directed to page 14 of this report, wherein it is stated:

"The Commission therefore recommends that legislation be enacted authorizing the several Government agencies, subject to the approval of the central control body described hereafter, to issue exclusive licenses in cases where it seems evident that otherwise the inventions in question will not come into general us."

In addition to the above, many patents of this Department, particularly those covering new insecticides and medicinal products, require administrative control in order to safeguard the public against substandard or injurious products. Enactment of the provisions of H. R. 5940 would completely disarm the Department in its efforts to protect the public against such products at the source of manufacture where other effective means are not available.

H. R. 5940 represents, in our opinion, a step backward in the development of a sound Government-patent policy having as its objective the greatest public good from Government research.

Accordingly, this Department is opposed to the provisions of H. R. 5940, and passage of the bill is not recommended.

The Bureau of the Budget advises that it has no objection to the submission of this report.

Sincerely yours,

CLINTON P. ANDERSON,
Secretary.

Waste and Corruption in Handling of War Contracts

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF

HON. HUBERT S. ELLIS

OF WEST VIRGINIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, August 2, 1946

Mr. ELLIS. Mr. Speaker, today we are greeted by these headlines in the local press "United States gave away billions, arms probers hear." Comptroller General Lindsay C. Warren, a Democrat appointed by the late President Roosevelt, charged the Government gave away untold billions through defects in war contract renegotiation laws, and said many officers who tried to prevent such losses were pulled from their jobs and sent to the sticks.

Testifying at the Senate War Investigating Committee's probe into the Garsson munitions combine, Warren said his General Accounting Office was so restricted in scrutinizing war-contract matters that "we may not question a favored firm, an extravagant price, nor a specious undertaking."

To quote Mr. Warren further, "From my seat, it has looked as if everybody and his brother were out to get the Government during the lush war years."

Thus, the sordid picture is being unfolded to the public. To those of us who have sat in this Chamber during the war years it is not news. I want to say to you now that the Republicans in this House fought continually and courageously day in and day out against this waste and corruption, but we were beaten at every turn by the overwhelming power of the majority party.

When we directed attention to the waste and maladministration in the War and Navy Departments, such as the Canol oil project, the Pan-American Highway, the Pentagon Building, and many others, we were called obstructionists. When we objected to the high military commands being brought in to lend their weight and lobby for some pet New Deal social program we were accused of opposing the war effort. When we directed attention to the enormous waste in lend-lease and UNRRA we were called Fascists. When we pointed out the incompetence, waste, and corruption in the handling of war contracts we were called reactionaries. This town was running over with New Deal pets, all here to get their share of the rake-off. But when we raised a voice we were branded as isolationists and nationalistic.

So now we are getting the story of how this administration handled the domestic situation while our military forces fought and thousands died on a hundred battlefronts throughout the world.

Because it is relative to this subject, under unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD, I include a news letter I mailed to the District on July 11, 1946:

Between now and November the populace is going to experience what can well be described as an administration filibuster. We are going to be entertained by the New Deal investigating itself; the right hand is going to investigate what the left hand doeth. The term "New Deal" is used as an accurate designation for this administration because, I believe, there is a clear distinction between a Democrat and a New Dealer. The New Deal is going witch hunting for the culprit who has brought on inflation; they are going in search for the gang who has administered the affairs of this country during the most wasteful and corrupt period in all history.

The timely announcement of the Mead committee that it is beginning investigations into war profits is of no little significance. The "goat" is going to be found and blamed for inflation, profiteering, waste, and general confusion, and at the moment the American businessman is selected to serve as the "whipping boy" for the purpose of the congressional election.

We must ever bear in mind that all war contracts where let by New Dealers, were supervised by New Dealers, and for the most part were received through a New Deal "go-between" or "fixer," and further, the renegotiation of war contracts, as provided by law, was conducted by New Dealers.

While much of this maladministration was of common knowledge, the administration resisted every attempt on the part of some Members of Congress to terminate the unholy practice. The New Deal controlled the situation inside and out, from top to bottom, and now political expediency demands that they unload the smelling mess. In their first case of note, it appears that they have bitten themselves by the tail by uncovering a sordid transaction that involved members of the New Deal family and no one worthy to represent American business seems to be implicated.

During the past few days we have seen these flaming headlines: "War profit inquiry links ghost firm head to gangsters." "General gave Garsson Co. huge contract before it existed." "Mead probers link huge war-job fees to fabulous lobby." "Lend-lease middleman investigated; FBI widens quiz."

An industrial paper empire, a $16,264 bill for picnics and dinners, fabulous salaries for officers of the corporation and their wives, neither of whom rendered any service, has figured in the testimony. Fifteen middlemen, not one of whom could have manufactured as much as a bullet for a .45, drew down fantastic fees for negotiating lend-lease contracts, the committee evidence disclosed yesterday. Senator FERGUSON said that the firm turned in bills for the period January 30, 1942, to June 30, 1945, amounting to $301,646.41 for traveling expenses, and $2,284,841.11 for salaries to officials and key personnel.

The FBI is on the job, and one of the hottest leads the G-men have reported is the charge that fat fees were paid in high places so that war profiteers could get the contracts that would net them Midas returns—regardless of whether they could or could not execute such contracts.

The exposure of the transactions of this $76,000,000 paper corporation will prove to be a most interesting story and no doubt depict the New Deal in full bloom.

Address of Hon. Robert S. Kerr, Governor of Oklahoma

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. WILLIAM G. STIGLER
OF OKLAHOMA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Thursday, August 1, 1946

Mr. STIGLER. Mr. Speaker, on July 22, Gov. Robert S. Kerr, of my State, addressed the Democratic State Convention at Mitchell, S. Dak.

Under leave to extend my remarks, I desire to include the address:

Good friends and fellow Democrats of the great State of South Dakota, I was happy when I received the invitation from your distinguished Democratic leaders to address this meeting.

I am honored to be here in the company of so many devoted and able Democrats, men and women alike.

Your outstanding national committeeman, Eugene Mahoney, and your fine State chairman, Lynn Fellows, are demonstrating the kind of united leadership that will inspire all Democrats of South Dakota to combine their efforts to insure victory.

I share your pride in the devoted work and effort of your fine Democratic women and their able leadership, including your national committeewoman, Mrs. Jennie O'Hern, and your chairwoman, Mrs. Nellie Carrier.

I am thrilled to catch the fighting, victorious spirit of your Democratic nominees for Congress, John Rinehart and Merton Tice.

And I am certainly honored to pay my respects to the next Governor of South Dakota, Democratic nominee Richard Haeder.

Every year in the history of any republic is a decisive one; some, of course, far more important than others; 1828 was one of the most turbulent years in our history. It saw one of our bitterest political struggles, and the people made one of their most important and far-reaching decisions when they swept the great-hearted Andrew Jackson into the Presidency of the United States.

The following years saw the battle continue with unabated fury, but again in 1832 the people met the crisis of another momentous political conflict with the right decision.

History repeated itself during the next 100 years and then, in 1932, after a fight that had been just as bitter, the people, with the same clear vision and high resolve, again met the challenge of mighty issues when they elected democracy's greatest chieftain, Franklin D. Roosevelt.

With what undiminished fierceness the political wars of the last 14 years have been fought you are fully acquainted, and you are likewise aware that of all the years of decision none has been more important than this year, 1946.

The decision we have to make is in the choice of political parties and leadership that will best serve the people's purposes and welfare.

Will it be the Republican Party and its leaders or the Democratic Party and its leaders?

We of the Democratic Party who have been so generously blessed with the people's confidence have the rare privilege and the solemn duty of accounting to them on our stewardship, of declaring the reasons for our continued leadership, and of challenging the Republican Party to produce either a record, a program, or a leadership that would justify the people in making a change.

What is the Republican Party?

Now there is a $64 question!

In seeking an answer, however, we are not entirely without clues and certain elements of basic information to enlighten us.

Let us examine the public utterances of the Republicans themselves. In a recent speech the Republican Governor of Illinois, Dwight Green, stated: "The Republican Party was founded to elect not sheriffs, but Presidents."

Many had forgotten, if they had ever known, exactly why the Republican Party was founded or, rather, whatever, became of it after the administration of Abraham Lincoln. Well, apparently it is still here and apparently it is still trying to reelect Lincoln, even though I suspect if he were still available he would decline to run in company with the party's present national leadership.

Governor Green continues: "It was born as a national party, has always been a national party, and if it cannot win national elections it has lost its main reason for existence."

As much as caution warns against agreeing with any declaration of Republican policy, candor compels admittance of the possibility that the Republican Party has lost its main reason for existence.

The Congressman from Tennessee, JOHN JENNINGS, Jr., who keynoted the Republican Convention at Pierre a few weeks ago, displayed the same kind of fact blindness with which the present Republican leadership is afflicted. Said Mr. JENNINGS: "We propose to release the productive capacity of our people which the New Deal has stalled on dead center." What stupidity for one who survived 1932 when there were less than 38,000,000 Americans gainfully employed and 14,000,000 unemployed, seeking jobs that did not exist, to talk about production being on dead center in 1946.

When Roosevelt in 1944 predicted jobs for 60,000,000 Americans these Republican leaders ridiculed it as his wildest dream. Yet today there are 58,500,000 gainfully employed and the number is steadily increasing.

The national income in 1930 amounted to $69,000,000,000, in 1931 to $54,500,000,000, in 1932, $40,000,000,000. The total for the 3 years was $163,500,000,000. In this year of 1946, when Republican keynoters bewail what they refer to as a break-down of the national economy, the national income will exceed $170,000,000,000 in 1 year, or a greater amount than the 3 years of 1930, 1931, and 1932 commined.

According to Republican Keynoter JENNINGS, the New Deal has "stalled the productive capacity of our people on dead center." Yet in this year of 1946 it is three times as great as the Nation ever boasted under any Republican President in history. And the Nation's mills and factories strain under unceasing 24-hour-a-day production. He may have forgotten, but the people have not, that the Nation's capacity in 1932, being less than one-third of what it is today, was really "stalled on dead center." Millions of farmers, submerged in the surplus of their own production for which there was no market, sought jobs that did not exist. Thousands of South Dakota farmers burned their corn as fuel rather than give it away at available prices. And millions of workers haunted bread lines and soup kitchens for pittances of food to prevent starvation.

This same Republican keynoter, Congressman JENNINGS, declared: "This Government no longer annually shears the taxpayer as a farmer shears his sheep. It skins him. You can shear a sheep once a year. You can skin him but once." The cold facts in the record disclose that the wage earners and farmers and businessmen of America will in this year of 1946 have a greater net income, after all taxes, than they enjoyed during the entire 4 years of Herbert Hoover's administration as President.

Republican Governor Schoeppel, of Kansas, came to Oklahoma a few weeks ago and spent considerable time and effort discussing what he referred to as "the sad plight of the United States of America today."

Reporting his speech further, the press stated: "In Governor Schoeppel's opinion, this country is broke." In a nearby column in the same paper was a story from Perth, Scotland, saying that a certain shorthorn bull, by name, Supreme Champion Pittodri Up-Right, had just been sold to Ralph J. Smith, of Sin-O-Bar, Mo., for $61,335. It was the highest price ever paid for a beef bull of any breed in the history of the world.

Just a few weeks prior to that an Oklahoma breeder sold a whitefaced Hereford bull for $51,000 to a stockman from Canada. Now, I think even Governor Schoeppel would agree, that a country is neither "broke" nor "in a sad plight" whose citizens receive and pay that much money for pure-bred stock. Second, I think that the real cause of Governor Schoeppel's pessimism is that citizens would pay so much money for so little pure-bred bull, and pay so little attention to so much Republican "bull."

Some of the remarks of the Tennessee keynoter were even below the level of Republican "bull." He sank from ignorance to infamy when he accused Roosevelt indirectly, if not directly, of putting this country in the war. He alined himself with other Republican leaders who have made themselves the laughingstock of the Nation by trying to convict Roosevelt of the responsibility for Pearl Harbor.

If the Japanese war lords were responsible for Pearl Harbor and for forcing war upon this Nation they should be tried, convicted, and executed. If Roosevelt was responsible the Japanese war lords should be acquitted.

These Republican leaders may try to mislead the American people into the false belief that Roosevelt was to blame, but an overwhelming majority of Americans know that Roosevelt rightly read the evil intentions of the Jap leaders, warned this Nation of the unavoidable conflict being forced upon it, led us bravely and magnificently through that conflict to the very dawn of victory, and then, exhausted, and spent from his labors and sacrifices, died, as he had lived, in the service of his country!

Now, back to some more Republican "bull." Congressman JOSEPH MARTIN, Republican leader in the National Congress, and their choice for Speaker of the House, in a recent statement of Republican policy declared: "We have had 13 years of the New Deal. Their theme song today is as it was in 1932. The New Dealers fight shadows of the past. They must talk of the past. They dare not face the facts of the present. They dare not ask for popular support on their record of achievement. That record is too bad and the Nation knows it. Thirteen years! Certainly that is enough time for any party to make good."

Let us accept his challenge. Like a synthetic Jupiter from a make-believe Olympus he lays down the issue: "Let the battle be waged on the record of the New Deal." Quick, my fellow-Democrats, let us accept that issue. Then let us give him the benefit of every doubt by boldly adding: "Let us also go to the people on the record of the 'Old Deal'."

He refers to the 13 years under the New Deal. Let us compare them with the 12 years when we "hardened under Harding, cooled under Coolidge, and hungered under Hoover"!

Let the people compare; let the people choose between the two on the basis of the people's welfare, and we will welcome the decision.

Ah, we know and the people know there are faults in the present program. The Democrats recognize and acknowledge these faults and seek to correct them in order to make a good program into a better one.

It is true that the Republicans denounce our mistakes. And they offer a very effective way to eliminate them. How? They cry: "Let us cure the faults by destroying the program; then let us return the old-fashioned conservatism."

In 1920 their cry was: "Let us return to normalcy." The people accepted their invitation and what a buggy ride that was!

In 1928 through 1932, they had the best window dressing and the most alluring slogan in their history. Listen! Are you listening? Do you remember? "Prosperity is just around the corner—two cars for every garage." Then they rolled back the curtain of the future and gave us a preview of their proposed economic millennium with this one: "Two chickens in every pot."

I lived through the 4 years under Herbert Hoover; I suffered the lot of the average citizen; I was as well off, but no better—as bad off, but no worse. I didn't have two cars; I didn't have one, nor any garage. I didn't have two chickens; in fact, I didn't have one chicken—and not even a pot to cook it in.

What is the Republican Party?

Is it the party of prosperity for the people and economic security for the average citizen? Go and ask the American people how they fared during the 12 years of the "Old Deal."

Ask the millions of farm families of America. They were carried down the stream of misfortune and poverty, over the rapids of foreclosure of their farms, and into the dead and stagnant water of hopelessness and despair.

They will tell you that under Herbert Hoover they sold their cotton for 4 cents a pound, their corn for 15 cents a bushel, their oats for 9 cents a bushel, their wheat for 20 cents a bushel, their cattle for 3 cents a pound, their hogs for 2 cents a pound.

Ask the workers of America. They will tell you of the hunger they suffered, the poverty they endured, the awful fear of insecurity and unemployment that haunted their waking hours.

Yet, Congressman MARTIN has the colossal gall to say that "the Democrats dare not ask for popular support on the record of their achievements."

I am ready to publicly admit that we cannot match the Republican record in any respect. They produced an epidemic of national calamities in a few years. The Democratic Party has not been guilty of producing a single one in 100 years.

Listen. Are you listening? The American people lost more homes and more savings in 12 years of the "Old Deal" than in any similar period in our history. More banks went broke, more worthless stocks and securities were unloaded upon the public, and more despair filled the hearts of more people than ever before. More poorhouses had more inmates and more small businesses were forced into bankruptcy in those 12 years than in any 24 years in the history of the Republic.

Yes, Congressman MARTIN; you are right, the Republican Party achieved many things in those 12 years that cannot be matched by the Democratic Party in all the years it has served the American people.

And yet, in the campaign of 1944 I saw this screaming headline, quoting from Governor Tom Dewey's Oklahoma City speech:

"Roosevelt Brings on One-Man, Twelve-year Depression."

In the want-ad section of the same paper was the following notice:

"For Sale: Tulsa County Poor House—no longer needed."

What is the Republican Party?

What does it offer the American people today? Well, it is not entirely empty handed. There is B. CARROLL REECE, the new chairman of the Republican National Committee. If the people of America are determined to return to the isolationism of the prewar years let them remember that this new chairman of the Republican National Committee was its stanchest advocate.

Now they do say that Mr. REECE belongs to TAFT, of Ohio. Well, I say let TAFT, of Ohio, have him; the American people don't want him. They don't even want TAFT, of Ohio.

A few months ago in a Nation-wide radio broadcast he delivered an out-moded blast against progressive and liberal political philosophy. Nothing that I could say about the position taken by Senator TAFT could be so effective as the broadside which Republican Senator WAYNE MORSE, of Oregon, fired against the Old Guard political philosophy espoused by Senator TAFT and such a great host of other Republicans today.

He called upon the "millions of independent Republican voters and the millions of other independent voters to make clear in the 1946 elections that they want a progressive and not a reactionary Congress."

I want to join Senator MORSE in that challenge to the enlightened citizens of the great State of South Dakota. The only difference of opinion between me and Senator MORSE in this regard is that he hopes to change the leopard's spots of Republican reactionaryism to a robe of liberalism and progress. It cannot be done. If the people of this Nation really want a progressive Congress and not a reactionary one—if the people want a Congress to carry on and improve the program of the great Roosevelt—and I know that they do, then let us all join in reelecting a Democratic Congress.

I have been greatly honored with the privilege of becoming acquainted with the progressive people of South Dakota. Here, as in Oklahoma, strong men, and brave and courageous women have withstood the storms and built an agricultural and industrial economy that is the marvel of the Nation.

We realize the significance of your continuing contribution in food and feed to the welfare of the Nation and the world. Your corn is as tall as that of Iowa; your wheat matches the quality of Kansas wheat; your potatoes rival those produced in Minnesota's Red River Valley; your sugar beets and other irrigated crops match those of Colorado or southwest Nebraska, and we in Oklahoma recognize the magnificence of your matchless cattle on a thousand hills. We regret to be reminded of the fact that you have a Republican governor, two Republican United States Senators, and two Republican Congressmen elected by Democrats—who didn't vote.

You have magnificent resources, good homes, schools, and churches. You have people alert, progressive, and successful.

You made a generous and noble contribution of fighting men and of food and feed for victory and of industrial production in helping to win the war, and I believe that the fine and generous people of South Dakota are entitled to representatives in the National Congress who are more in tune with the thoughts and progressive ideals of your people and the welfare of your State and Nation.

I do not believe your people approve of the voting records either of Congressman MUNDT or Congressman CASE. I do not believe they represented the will of the people of South Dakota when on May 8, 1939, they voted against the Navy appropriation bill providing funds for military preparedness; nor on March 12, 1940, when Congressman MUNDT voted against the naval expansion bill authorizing construction of naval power for the national defense.

On September 7, 1940, they voted against the Selective Service Act, so vital in securing in a democratic way the manpower necessary for the national security.

On February 8, 1941, they voted against lend-lease, whose purpose was to keep the war away from America's shores and to save the lives of America's fighting men.

On May 7, 1941, they voted against the bill authorizing seizure of German and Italian ships interned in United States ports.

Less than 4 months before Pearl Harbor, on August 12, 1941, they voted to disband that part of our armed forces secured through selective service.

On May 26, last year, they voted against the extension of the trade-agreements acts to promote additional markets for American farmers and factories.

I do not believe your people are satisfied with these records of obstruction—obstruction against preparedness for war—obstruction against preparedness for peace.

I think it was Republican obstruction records such as these that genial Democratic Congressman GORE had in mind when he suggested for the Republican Party this slogan: "We're against taxes, we're against sin; we're against keeping the Democrats in."

At least this would be a clearer, more comprehensive, and certainly more candid platform than the one on which they staggered through the 1944 campaign.

We are, of course, aware that every once in a while a Republican leader, after hearing from the voters, analyzes the accomplishments of the Democratic administrations and then declares himself in the bold words, "Me, too!"

I think Wendell Willkie did this sincerely in 1940. Under great pressure Thomas Dewey finally said: "Me, too" in 1944, but back in 1936 all Alf Landon could say was, "Who? Me?"

What is the Republican Party?

Do not misunderstand me, good friends: I am not altogether ignorant about the Republican Party. But most of what I know about the Republican Party is bad.

Many critical problems press heavily upon the American people today crying for solution. The threat of inflation looms upon the horizon with all the terror of an ocean hurricane.

I think the Republican leaders are against inflation. But I know they are doing their dead-level best to destroy the only power thus far found that has proven its ability to hold the tidal waves of inflation in check.

I wish there was an ample supply of consumer goods to meet the needs of the American people. But the supply is not there, and, until it is, the prices of the necessities of daily life must be held in reasonable check.

The living cost of the average family must be maintained on a reasonable balance with the families' daily wage. And I declare to you that the Office of Price Administration has done a magnificent job in this respect.

Republican Senators TAFT, of Ohio, and WHERRY, of Nebraska, in their zeal to represent the selfish interests of very limited groups, have again proven the identity of the objects of their affection. They have again demonstrated where their loyalty is.

Under the guise of supporting a bill to prevent inflation for the benefit of the people, they succeeded in getting amendments approved for the benefit of favored groups and at the expense of the people.

These Republican stalwarts, in line with time-honored principles of the Republican Party, still seek primarily to guarantee profit to business regardless of how much it may cost the people.

The Democratic Party is dedicated to the principle of guaranteeing opportunity for prosperity and security to all of the people in the knowledge that thereby business has its greatest assurance for profit.

These and other Republican leaders in Congress have blindly devoted themselves to insure even greater profits to business alone with reckless disregard of increased cost for housing for veterans, of increased cost of necessities to the Nation's farm families, of increased cost of rent and food and clothing and every other item of individual and family expense to all our people, including veterans.

Yes; Senators TAFT and WHERRY have maintained their traditional and unbroken record of representing everybody—except the people. And the people will remember this betrayal of their interests by these Republican leaders. The veterans will remember this betrayal of their interests by these Republican leaders.

As the national administration strives to secure legislation to prevent inflation and to provide adequate housing for veterans and the rank and file of our citizens, and to help solve other great and pressing problems, it is constantly confronted with the continuing and almost unanimous opposition of the Republican membership in the national Congress.

Some Republicans seek to justify this Republican opposition by pointing to opposition within the ranks of the Democrats. This is strange reasoning. There will always be minority opposition within any party to any program. But, while the record discloses Democratic Congressman voting wrong a small percentage of the time it discloses with equal clarity that the overwhelming majority of Republican Congressmen vote wrong all the time!

What is the Republican Party?

Within their ranks are too many old men who cannot emerge from the shadows of the past and too many young men who cannot emerge from the shadows of the old men.

We accuse the Republican leadership of working to destroy something others are building rather than striving to build something better, and of seeking to divide the people for partisan profit when there should be a greater unity for the general welfare.

But, in charity, let us forget these Republican leaders, as they, without charity, appear to have forgotten the responsibility of their position and the welfare of the people they represent.

We are reminded again and again that our choice is not between perfection and imperfection, but between varying degrees of imperfection. This is true within the party, within the Nation, and within the world. Americans realize that through their united efforts they achieved victory in war. Much as we would like to continue to view with pride the accomplishments of the past, caution compels complete and applied vigilance for the present and for the future.

The American people are determined that we shall go through the reconversion period as rapidly as is possible, on a basis that will guarantee to the rank and file of our citizens the opportunity for profitable peacetime employment, profitable peacetime agricultural production, profitable peacetime industrial expansion.

The American people are determined through their own efforts and with the assistance of their Government to prevent and hold in firm check the awful evils of inflation.

The American people are determined that their Government shall be an agency of even greater service to all of the people, both at home and among the nations of the world.

These objectives cannot be achieved by doing nothing nor by merely finding fault with the efforts that others are making.

Can the people achieve this best through the Republican Party or the Democratic Party? That is the question and there is but one answer.

Whatever fault you may have found with the immortal Franklin Roosevelt, whatever fault you may find with the magnificient Harry Truman, their most prejudiced enemies cannot accuse them of having no program, of doing nothing, or of being bewildered in an environment at home, or in a world with which they were unable, or unwilling, to become acquainted.

There was no doubt in the mind of the average American citizen, Democrat or Republican, about where Roosevelt proposed to lead us, or that he was making progress and achieving success in his efforts.

There can be no doubt in the mind of the average citizen today as to the direction President Truman is determined that we shall go.

We may find fault with some of their specific methods, but we must agree with their general objectives.

We challenge the Republican leadership, in the name of the general welfare, to cooperate in the achievement of these objectives, either in the manner suggested by our great President, or in one that would have the merit of being equally as good, or better.

We invite the support of all patriotic Americans and call upon them to march forward in unity to the achievement of liberal and progressive goals that will guarantee continuance of better opportunities for the employment, security, and prosperity of all.

This is the year for decision. The people must choose in South Dakota, in Oklahoma, and in America. We accept the challenge of the Republican leadership to let the people decide on the records that have been made.

We accept that challenge in every congressional district in the land.

We know that our cause is just.

We know that our purpose is right.

We have the pattern in the declarations of principles by our party and its leadership.

We have seen the demonstration through 13 glorious years of unparalleled accomplishment.

We have marched with democracy's greatest leader in a crusade for freedom and equality in our own land and around the world.

We have seen that leader glorify this cause in life and ennoble it in death.

We have seen our new captain take his place and humbly and courageously march on. Under his leadership we have felt the Nation and the world respond with renewed devotion and unyielding resolve for greater prosperity at home and a finer friendship and security among the nations.

The hour for decision is at hand. As Democrats and as Americans we will not falter, we will not waver, we will win.

The Fight Against Inflation

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. ROBERT J. CORBETT

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, August 2, 1946

Mr. CORBETT. Mr. Speaker, inflation is a silent thief of our savings. It is an insidious destroyer of our standard of living. It diminishes the value of our wages, salaries, pensions, and insurance policies. Inflation right now is the most serious menace facing our Nation. It is an immediate danger which we must defeat during the coming months.

I do not refer to wild, run-away inflation that results in newspapers selling for a billion dollar note, or apples selling for $5,000,000,000. The spectacular inflation of Germany during the twenties and of Hungary today is hardly the degree of inflation that concerns us. It could happen here, but the present possibility is very remote.

What we have to fear and guard against is an inflation high enough to cut the value of our fixed incomes and savings one-half, two-thirds, or three-fourths. We must safeguard the estates of widows and orphans; the endowments of churches, hospitals, and colleges; the savings of the thrifty; the incomes from our investments; the value of our fixed wages and salaries; the insurance for our dependents; and the purchasing power of all pensions. Those are the things at stake in our battle against inflation.

This is a battle which is peculiarly the people's own battle. They can do very much to help win it. They can and should resist high prices whenever possible. By being careful shoppers, and by buying as little of everything as possible they will hold prices down and slow the speed of circulation of money. Likewise they can do much good by putting all spare cash into Government bonds or long-time holdings. These things plus public insistence on wise economical governmental policies, local, State, and National, will help tremendously to stop the upward spiral.

The Government, of course, from the administration down, will be a most potent factor in the winning or losing of this fight. The new price-control law, whether we like it or not, is a powerful weapon, if properly used, against inflation. The Civilian Production Administration with its power to allocate materials to areas of scarcity or selected industries is another powerful instrument. Deficit spending must be stopped quickly, and every Government expenditure that can be ended or reduced must be ended or reduced. That applies with special emphasis to Government pay rolls which are bulging like a stocking full of apples. The monetary policies of the Government must be carefully managed, and credit must be contracted. The administrators of our laws have terrific responsibilities in this critical period. If they fail to exercise good judgment the fight against inflation will be lost.

Production as a means to prevent inflation deserves special emphasis. The workers of America have displayed a wholesome and intelligent fear of inflation. They have come to know the difference between real wages and money wages. Perhaps they have not always acted in their own best interests; that debate can be left to historians, the important thing is that we are caught now in the upward whirlpool and the question is what to do about it now. Capacity production in all industries is one of our best offensive weapons. As fast as we can we must end shortages of all essentials of life. That calls for a degree of cooperative effort between labor and management equal to the marvelous joint effort of the victory-winning years. It calls also for the farmers, cattlemen, dairymen, and other producers of food to continue their record-breaking output. Production can go far to win the battle against inflation.

The enormous volume of our exports is another serious factor. Omitting entirely goods sent to poverty-stricken areas, which shipments cannot be stopped, there is still a great quantity of scarce items going to foreign markets. The excuse is that these foreign markets must be supplied to be saved. The price of saving them, even if we grant the argument that they would be lost if not supplied, may be too high. Here again drastic administration action is possible and may become either necessary or desirable. Production for export will not end domestic shortages.

One other point. We are headed for depression someday. How soon it will come and how far we will fall is a most serious concern of everyone. There is no better way to say it than "the higher we go the harder the fall." Obviously, our best political and economic brains should be concentrated on ways and means to cushion that fall and how to get us back up to normal in the shortest possible time. But the clearest and easiest approach to the whole problem is to presently restrict the upward climb every inch possible.

To you who hear or read these remarks, I urge that you resolve to join in the fight. Shape your own financial affairs with care and talk with friends and neighbors. We can lick this thing. We can get through this period of post-war adjustment without consequences too serious to too many of us. We can if we are wise enough and cooperative enough take the sting out of both inflation and depression. Let us start now to do it.

Lynching in Georgia

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. JOHN KEE
OF WEST VIRGINIA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Friday, August 2, 1946

Mr. KEE. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD, I include a copy of a telegram from former Congressman Arthur W. Mitchell, of Illinois, to President Truman on the matter of the recent lynching in Georgia:

PETERSBURG, VA., July 27, 1946.

President HARRY S. TRUMAN,
The White House, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. PRESIDENT: I know that you, along with millions of Americans were shocked some days ago to hear of the lynching of four colored citizens (two of them women) at Monroe, Ga., Thursday night. This mass murder of good American citizens is bound to have its repercussions throughout the world, and especially at the Peace Conference, where we are told that America is taking the lead in the fight for the protection and the rights of minority groups in other parts of the world. This black crime just committed in Georgia following closely the close of the bitter campaign in which the successful candidate for governor promised to ride roughshod over every civil and political right of the colored people of Georgia seems to be a part of the Talmadge-Ku Klux dominated program, and if not checked now will spread and cause race violence in other parts of the South. It is the hope and fervent desire of good citizens in all parts of the country that you, Chief Executive of the Nation, will speak out in strong words condemning this tragic crime and mob violence wherever it is resorted to.

I am,

Very sincerely,

ARTHUR W. MITCHELL,
Formerly Member of Congress from First Illinois District, Chicago, Ill.

Eightieth Congress Should Give Favorable Attention to Legislation for Federal Aid to Public Schools

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. JENNINGS RANDOLPH
OF WEST VIRGINIA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Friday, August 2, 1946

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, at the close of the Seventy-ninth Congress, I desire to give some facts and views on the subject of Federal aid to public education. Two of my distinguished colleagues, the Honorable EVERETT M. DIRKSEN, of Illinois, and the Honorable GEORGE P. MILLER, of California, have worked actively on this proposal. Mr. DIRKSEN and I are cochairmen of the House Bipartisan Committee for the Support of Federal Aid for Public Schools. Mr. MILLER of California is secretary of the group, which includes on its roster approximately 115 Members of the House.

The House Bipartisan Committee for the Support of Federal Aid for Public Schools was organized November 15, 1945, on call of Representative Robert Ramspeck, of Georgia, sponsor of H. R. 1296, to consider how its members might best express their interest in and support of the proposal to strengthen public education for greater service in the Nation and in the world.

Difficulties obstructing the effective operation of our public schools have pyramided in recent years. At our entrance in World War II the differences in educational opportunity for the youth of this Nation ranged from 60 to 1. We had some classroom units in 1940 on which we spent more than $6,000 per annum. We had others on which we spent less than $100 per annum. This wide gap between our best and our poorest schools resulted from forces that have operated for many decades. The States that have relatively the most children to educate are as a rule the States that rank low in ability to finance their schools. These are the States which, even in the darkest years of the depression preceding the recent war, were devoting the higher percentages of the income of their citizens to pay for public elementary and public high schools.

The effect of the recent war has been to widen rather than contract the gap between our best and our poorest schools.

An astonishing fact that has received too little attention in this Congress is that expenditure for public elementary and public high schools actually declined during World War II. For the first time in our history, a period of war witnessed this striking and dangerous phenomenon.

We have many millions of American children in unsatisfactory schools today. We have, according to reliable estimates, approximately 2,000,000 youth, 6 to 16 years old, inclusive, who are not enrolled in any kind of school at all. We have some 10,000,000 adults who are for all practical purposes illiterate.

We have 3,000,000 adults living in the United States who have never attended any kind of school.

Half of the brightest and most talented youth of the Nation leave school prematurely.

It was from the areas of the Nation where schools are poorest that we suffered the highest rates of rejections under selective service during the recent war. We lost almost as many men, for educational deficiencies alone, as we used in combat divisions on the Pacific front. We lost more than 2,000,000 men for health deficiencies, most of which could have been prevented had our schools been adequately supported over the past two decades.

Lack of an education handicaps our economy. Education is the right hand of American business. As long as we tolerate ignorance in any section of our country we are deliberately doing what we do not have to do; we are making the road to Nation-wide well-being far more difficult to travel than it otherwise would be.

The position of leadership to which our country has been called as a result of the war demands a highly educated citizenship. We are compelled, whether we like it or not, to carry responsibilities on the world front that are greater in magnitude and significance than ever before. These responsibilities we cannot discharge ably if large numbers of our people are bankrupt of understanding of what other nations are doing, what their objectives are, and how the interests of our own country are involved. The basis of national strength is knowledge and understanding. We cannot afford to undercut our national prosperity and world peace through a studied toleration of ignorance in even the smallest community of our Nation.

These conditions are not the product of lack of State interest and State effort to provide acceptable schooling for our young people. Many of our poorest States are relatively making magnificent effort to support the educational welfare of their children.

We must have Federal aid to assist the States if the educational shortages of the Nation are to be eliminated.

These are the considerations which prompt expression of a sincere regret that the House of Representatives approaches the end of this Congress without having taken constructive steps to further strengthen education in the Nation. Our closed classrooms, the reduction in number of properly qualified teachers, and other deficiencies in our educational program call for direct and wisely conceived action. It is most certainly to be hoped that the next Congress, to convene in January 1947, will move quickly and favorably on this matter.

The Crime Against Poland

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. CHARLES A. WOLVERTON

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, August 2, 1946

Mr. WOLVERTON of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, when the principles of the Atlantic Charter were announced the heart of America was stirred, because of the recognition of the principles of freedom, justice, and democracy that have made America great, and, hope was enkindled in the hearts of the people of the smaller nations of the world. It gave promise to them of a new day. A day when that love of liberty and justice, that is inherent in every human breast, would find opportunity of expression and establish a new order of living.

Nowhere was this hope more real than in Poland. It had felt the iron heel of oppression as no other nation. The armies of Hitler had devastated its farms and cities. Its people had suffered and died under a cruel bondage. All but the spirit to live and be free had been crushed.

The loyal sons of Poland rallied to fight the aggressor. They joined the armies of the Allies and fought with the valor and courage that, through centuries of time, has always distinguished the Polish patriot. Fearless and courageously its underground army kept alive the spirit of Poland even in the dark days when the aggressor held sway throughout its land. The pages of Polish history, already filled with acts of heroism in many struggles for the cause of freedom, received a new chapter of heroism and courage in freedom's cause.

Notwithstanding the clear and explicit adherence to the principles of freedom set forth in the Atlantic Charter, the promise of nonaggression and the right of self-determination today, we see Poland under the domination of the Kremlin, with a puppet government in which Soviet officials are in control. And all of this is with the consent of the United States and Great Britain, signatories to the Atlantic Charter.

Poland has had its territory forcibly taken from it by Russia, not on the basis of any principle of right or justice, but by the exercise of brute force. The citizens of Poland are subject to immediate arrest for any thought or act that is construed anti-Soviet. There is neither freedom of speech nor of the press. Soviet troops have stripped the land of industrial equipment. They have taken the cattle from the farms. They have robbed the people of their limited supplies of food. Polish soldiers, who fought for the Allies in the cause of freedom, are roaming the face of the earth, like men without a country, unable to return to their native land for fear of imprisonment or death. Today there is no freedom in Poland except to do the will of the Soviets.

The president of the Polish-American Congress in a stirring speech has summarized the pitiful condition of present-day Poland and its people. He said:

> Poland lies prostrate, a fourth of her population destroyed, 6,000,000 children facing starvation, and others being pushed from pillar to post by the lawless elements in control with the help of the Red Army bayonets.

Is this justice? Did the Atlantic Charter mean slavery when it promised freedom? Is this the kind of liberty we guaranteed, and, for which our noble sons have died? No, a thousand times no. It is a mockery of the ideals contained in the Atlantic Charter, and, a disgrace that our Nation, the mightiest human force in the winning of the war, should permit such treatment to a freedom-loving people, and, what is even worse consent to its continuance. It is the duty of America to speak up and protest this unjust and inhuman treatment that has been laid upon the stricken people of Poland.

Has the President, Secretary of State, and other administration officials of our Government forgotten that in 1939 we condemned Russia for attacking Poland and taking its territory? By what law of justice, then, can this Nation in 1946 consent to the taking of that same territory by Russia? It just does not make sense. This action upon our part indicates that our Nation in this matter is willing to sacrifice its ideals of justice, and, willing to appease Russia, regardless of the wrong that is done to Poland. Why is it necessary for us to appease Russia, in this or any other matter, at the expense of the principles of justice and freedom we proclaimed in the Atlantic Charter?

There can be no real and lasting peace based upon force that disregards the principles of freedom enunciated in the Atlantic Charter. We owe it to ourselves and the nations of the world, both large and small, to insist upon a recognition of the principles for which we fought the aggressors. Our failure to do so, will weaken the whole structure of future peace. It is time we offered less appeasement to present-day aggressors, even though they may have been former allies, and more consideration to the fulfillment of our obligation to make certain and sure the principles for which we fought and sacrificed.

The downtrodden people of the world have looked with hope and expectancy to this Nation as the leading exponent of liberty and freedom. The Atlantic Charter with its promised freedom from want, freedom from fear, freedom to choose their own government, and freedom from territorial seizure, is only an empty gesture to the peoples of the world, and, with no substantial benefits to them, until this Nation and the other nations of the world are willing to recognize and make effective its principles of freedom.

What is done for Poland will be a fair estimate of what the smaller nations can expect in future years. Poland, by its sacrifices and its loyalty to the Allies, has earned the right to be protected against any and all aggressors, and, to be made secure in its freedom and territorial boundaries. Anything less than this is an injustice to Poland. Justice for Poland is of primary importance. America must see that Poland gets justice.

Digest of Veterans' Benefits

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF

HON. FRANCK R. HAVENNER

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, August 2, 1946

Mr. HAVENNER. Mr. Speaker, in the hope that it may be helpful to all of our war veterans, I am submitting herewith a digest of benefits which have been provided for veterans by congressional enactments during the war and since the end of active hostilities.

DIGEST OF VETERANS' BENEFITS

ELIGIBILITY

A veteran must have served in the active military or naval service on or after September 16, 1940, and prior to the termination of the present war. He must have been discharged or released under conditions other than dishonorable after active service of 90 days or more or because of an injury or disability incurred in line of duty.

MONEY

1. Mustering-out pay: Service personnel up through the rank of captain in the Army and Marine Corps and senior lieutenant in the Navy and Coast Guard are entitled to: (a) $300 mustering-out pay if they have performed active service for at least 60 days outside the United States; or (b) $200 mustering-out pay if they have performed active service for at least 60 days no part of which was served outside of the United States; or (c) $100 for any active service less than 60 days.

2. Bonus: Public Law 268 repeals that portion of the law, which provided that any financial benefits received under the act would be deducted from any future bonus authorized.

3. Retirement pay: Service personnel on active duty for more than 30 days and disabled from disease or injury received in the line of duty are entitled to receive the same retirement pay as now provided for regular personnel of the service.

4. Pensions: Discharge or release from service under conditions other than dishonorable is a prerequisite to veteran's benefits. Any veteran having a 10-percent or more disability resulting from disease or injury incurred in or aggravated by war service will, if his application is approved, receive the following amount:

Percent of disability:	Amount payable per month
10	$11.50
20	23.00
30	34.50
40	46.00
50	57.50
60	69.00
70	80.50
80	92.00
Total disability	115.00

Eligibility for pensions for non-service-connected disabilities requires honorable discharge and 90 days wartime service—or if period of service was less than 90 days, have been discharged for disability incurred in service in the line of duty. The disability must be permanently and totally disabling and not due to the veterans' own willful misconduct.

Any single veteran with an annual income of over $1,000, or any married veteran—or with dependent minor children—with an annual income over $2,500, is ineligible for non-service-connected disability pensions. This pension is $50 per month and is increased to $60 upon 10 years of continuous, permanent, total disability or upon reaching the age of 65.

5. Insurance: Service personnel are eligible for the cheapest and best life insurance attainable—the National Service Life Insurance. This is term insurance for 8 years convertible into ordinary life, 20-payment life, or 30-payment life policies.

Insurance that has lapsed may be reinstated by the veteran, either within 6 months after date of separation from active service, or within 8 months after date of lapse whichever is later, by payment of only 2 monthly premiums without interest.

6. Readjustment allowances: Unemployed veterans who register with an office of the United States Employment Service are entitled to a readjustment allowance of $20 per week while unemployed. An eligible veteran may receive such payments up to a maximum of 1 year, depending on length of service. Self-employed veterans with net earnings of less than $100 per month may receive an allowance amounting to the difference between net earnings and $100 in any month, up to a maximum of 1 year, also depending on length of service.

7. Loans: Veterans have up to 10 years after official end of the war in which to make application for guaranteed loan at no more than 4 percent interest. These loans are automatically guaranteed if made in accordance with the provisions of the act and if the amount does not exceed the appraisal made by an appraiser of the Veterans' Administration.

Any loan on real estate may be guaranteed up to a maximum guaranty of $4,000 of the loan, with the Government guaranteeing 50 percent of the total loan up to the maximum amount. The business loan guaranty limit remains at $2,000, or 50 percent. Real-estate loans may be amortized over a period up to 25 years, and farm realty loans up to 40 years. Maturity on non-real-estate loans may not exceed 10 years.

Proceeds of a loan may be used to purchase a lot in connection with home construction. Loans may be made for all ordinary farming purchases, and any normal business enterprise, and so that existing indebtedness in default may be refinanced in connection with all types of eligible loans.

8. Income-tax exemptions: Special provisions have been enacted by Congress for the tax benefit of veterans. These benefits include (a) $1,500 of active service pay is excluded from gross income for the taxable year 1943 and until the termination of the present war is proclaimed; (b) mustering-out pay is excluded from gross income for the taxable year of 1944 and later years.

JOBS

1. Employment placement and assistance: The United States Employment Service and the Veterans' Placement Service Board are directed to cooperate in seeing that all veterans, able and willing to work, obtain employment. This assistance includes employment counseling.

2. Employment preference: Preference in job referrals through the United States Employment Service is available to veterans under regulations adopted by the Veterans' Placement Service Board, carrying out the direction of the GI bill of rights that the veteran receive "the maximum job opportunity in the field of gainful employment."

3. Civil-service preferences: Veterans with service-connected disabilities or in receipt of pensions, disability retirement benefits, or compensation from the Federal Government, receive an additional 10 points on their civil-service examination rating.

A five-point preference is allowed to veterans not disabled.

These preferences will place veterans' names above all other names on the civil-service list except for professional or scientific positions paying over $3,000 a year.

4. Restoration to former Federal job: A veteran who held a permanent, probational, or probational-indefinite civil-service job when called to active service with the armed forces is entitled to mandatory reemployment in his former position, or one of like seniority, status, and pay, provided he has satisfactorily completed his period of service, is still qualified to perform the duties of his position, and applies for restoration with 90 days after separation from active service or discharge from the hospital.

5. Other civil-service benefits: The civil-service rule that not more than two members of a family, living in the same house, may hold a Federal civil-service position does not apply in case of a person entitled to veteran preference.

BUSINESS AND HOME AIDS

1. Small-business said: "Assistance is provided to veterans in establishing small businesses through (a) loans not connected with the GI bill of rights for worth-while manufacturing projects; (b) assistance in obtaining surplus war materials that will be helpful to the planned business venture; and (c) supplying of technical assistance.

2. Material priorities: Priorities for materials are granted by the Civilian Production Administration and the Office of Price Administration to veterans.

3. Purchase of surplus property: Veterans can purchase surplus property to set themselves up and help to maintain themselves in business without buying through regular dealer channels or paying a profit to anyone.

4. Housing priorities: Priorities for the construction or purchase of new houses have been established for veterans in obtaining homes under $10,000.

5. Legal assistance: The American Bar Association has adopted a program of legal assistance to veterans and members of their families.

EDUCATION AND TRAINING

1. Education: Any eligible veteran may receive 1 year of education or training plus additional education (up to a maximum of 4 years), for total length of active service. There is no age limit nor is there any need to show that a veteran's education was interrupted by war service.

The time during which a course may be initiated is within 4 years after discharge or the end of the war, whichever is later, and the time limit for completion of the course is 9 years after the end of the war.

Short intensive courses may be undertaken and the additional cost prorated against the period of eligibility to which the veteran is entitled at the rate of $500 per school year. No such short course may cost more than $500. Veterans may apply to take a correspondence course but they are entitled to no subsistence allowance. One-fourth of the elapsed time used in pursuing such a course is charged against the veteran's period of eligibility. Total amount payable for correspondence courses for any veteran is limited to $500.

Monthly subsistence allowance, while in school or training, is $65 for veterans without dependents and $90 for veterans with dependents.

2. Vocational rehabilitation of disabled veterans: The purpose of vocational rehabilitation is to restore the employability which has been lost by virtue of a handicap due to a disability incurred in or aggravated by service.

Vocational training involving more the 4 years of training may be begun by disabled veterans, subject to approval of the Veterans' Administration. The time for completing such training is 9 years after the end of the war.

Disabled veterans in vocational rehabilitation training are entitled to receive monthly subsistence allowance of $65 (without dependents) or $90 (with dependents) plus whatever pension they are entitled to by law. The minimum total amount such veteran may receive is set at $100 per month (without dependents) and $115 (with a dependent), plus $10 for the first child, $7 for each additional child, and $15 for any dependent parent. If the veteran would otherwise receive less than these minimum amounts, his allowance is raised to equal the minimum during the period of training and for 2 months thereafter.

HOSPITALIZATION AND DOMICILIARY CARE

1. Hospitalization: The Veterans' Administration provides hospitalization for any veteran of any war who was discharged under conditions other than dishonorable. Veterans with service-connected disabilities are given preference. Veterans with non-service-connected disabilities are eligible if a hospital bed is available and the veteran makes a sworn statement that he is unable to defray expenses of treatment.

The Veterans' Administration has been authorized and directed to expedite additional hospital construction and to establish all necessary administrative offices to make veterans' benefits more readily available.

2. Artificial limbs and prosthetic appliances: Provision has been made to insure ample funds for the Veterans' Administration to purchase prosthetic appliances for veterans and instruct them in the use of such appliances, including payment of any expense involved in the veterans' traveling to and from the center where the appliance is fitted and training given in its use.

3. Guide or seeing-eye dogs: Guide or seeing-eye dogs may be provided for the aid of blind veterans who are entitled to disability compensation or pensions for a service-connected disability under laws administered by the Veterans' Administration, including payment of any expense involved in the veterans' traveling to and from the center to become adjusted to the dogs.

Blind veterans are also entitled to mechanical or electronic equipment to aid them in overcoming the handicap of blindness.

4. Domiciliary care: A veteran who is so disabled as to be unable to earn a living, and is without adequate means of support, may be admitted for home care to a facility of Veterans' Administration providing such accommodations.

Shameful Perversion of UNRRA Supplies to Support of Chiang's Dictatorship

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. HUGH DE LACY

OF WASHINGTON

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, August 2, 1946

Mr. DE LACY. Mr. Speaker, the statement of Mme. Sun Yat-sen, revered wife of the founder of the Chinese Republic, once again has focused our Nation's attention on the present crucial situation in that unhappy land which fought so valiantly on our side.

This situation is of direct concern to ourselves and the people of the world. Once again our peace and security are threatened from the Far East. For as Madame Sun has stated so succinctly, "The first flame of a world conflagration is burning in our land." Armies are marching again in China with thousands of American boys in the midst of the struggle. More than that, our Government persists in giving aid to a power-mad clique of evil men who would threaten the peace of the world, as well as the health and lives of their own people, to gain their nefarious ends. I refer to the central government bloc, dominated at present by the Kuomintang and headed by Chiang Kai-shek.

To see to what lengths this group will go to impose their totalitarian ideas on the Chinese Nation, we have only to consider the situation with UNRRA supplies. When UNRRA was set up by the nations of the world, two basic ideas motivated its work—first, the humanitarian ideal to relieve human pain and suffering. And second, the knowledge that the germs of war find their greatest breeding grounds in nations where starvation and suffering are allowed to exist among millions of people.

The Kuomintang bloc has seen fit to pervert the motivating ideals of UNRRA and its attempt to alleviate starvation in China for its own political ends. To gain power and spread its influence, it is even willing to murder its own people by starvation.

In the New York Times of April 16, 1946, Director General of UNRRA, Fiorello LaGuardia, reported that an estimated 30,000,000 Chinese men, women, and children faced starvation while 4,000,000 were on the point of death as a famine of unprecedented severity swept the land. And with the United States pouring millions of dollars worth of relief supplies into China through UNRRA, I think it is pertinent for us to ask what the Kuomintang central government did to meet this crisis?

Unfortunately, the answer is not a very pleasant one, but it does illustrate the basic, ruthless and reactionary nature of the Government we are at present supporting. The answer was given in a cablegram, telegraphed July 9 by 300 UNRRA employees, representing 16 nations, and printed in the New York Times of July 10. The telegram, addressed to Director LaGuardia, accused the Chinese Government and I quote of "persistent misuse" of relief supplies. These employees, including vice directors and department heads, charged the Kuomintang government with using UNRRA food as a political weapon. Relief supplies were reaching the black market instead of the starving people of China. The employees charged that vast stores of food were deteriorating and were being pilfered while Chinese in the antigovernment sections were left to die. They said that less than 2 percent of UNRRA supplies reached Communist-controlled areas, where more than 40 percent of China's population lives. I quote again:

Failure of the Chinese Government to provide funds for UNRRA has crippled operations and projects in many regions (including those under Government control). It is the prime reason supplies are piling up in warehouses, undelivered to the needy and hungry. The disregard for agreed policies has resulted in the sale of UNRRA food on the black market while many people die.

This Nanking government we are maintaining in power by the presence of American troops and gifts of American arms, is corrupt to the core. John G. Dowling, correspondent for the Chicago Sun, reported to that paper on July 12 some particularly unsavory examples of shameless graft. I call your attention to the documented case of the 36 air-conditioning units for the skin-disease wards of Chinese hospitals. According to Dowling's report:

Of this shipment, which passed out of the hands of UNRRA to those of CNRRA or to Government hands on the dock, UNRRA officials claim that there was a quick sale at $1,500 United States apiece.

Of these, two units have been traced by UNRRA investigators to the Park Hotel (formerly run by Nazi-Germans) in Shanghai, six to local allocations, seven to the secretary of the Executive Yuan, eight to the Asia Development Corp., and four to telegraph communications.

UNRRA engineers have been requested to go to Nanking to take measurements for the installation of two units in two of T. V. Soong's houses and one in his office.

In attempting to explain the mishandling of UNRRA supplies in China, the Koumintang official Dr. T. S. Tsiang, head of Chinese National Relief and Rehabilitation Administration, held a press conference July 12, 1946, in Shanghai. According to the United Press dispatch the following took place:

There were discrepancies between the figures Tsiang read at the press conference and figures submitted by CNRRA to UNRRA. Tsiang said that he could not understand them. Nor did he attempt to explain items in CNRRA accounting such as "4 jeeps sent to Chinkiang, 55½ tons." Jeeps weigh only a fraction of those figures.

The handling of food revealed the same corruption in Chinese governing circles. The first flour put on the market in January by CNRRA was sold in 20-bag lots, supposedly for bakers. Actually it went into the hands of black-marketeers. From January to April, the price went up from 4,000 to 12,000 Chinese dollars per bag. Meanwhile in January and February, from 30 to 60 children were picked up every week in the streets of Shanghai alone, dead of starvation.

CNRRA's program of industrial rehabilitation was another racket: a man of means, in good standing, with the Kuomintang Party, could buy all the machinery he wanted. The little fellow who had lost everything in the war got nothing to rebuild his workshop. As a result the revival of small business and industry in China is at a standstill.

There are more, many more of these instances of private thieving—I know no other word for it—from the starving people of China by their corrupt officialdom. I will not take the time of the House to recite them all.

I think all of us are shocked by the spectacle of the central government which lines its pockets with gold while robbing the people of food; incites and spreads civil war—and, as Madame Sun has said, lays the groundwork for a third world war.

We must as a nation refuse any longer to support this government. We must withdraw our troops and other military aid from a government Kuomintang clique who would ruthlessly barter the people's health and rehabilitation to impose its form of totalitarianism.

We must stop sending military and financial aid to the central government of China until the democratic coalition, urged last December by President Truman, is put into effect and the corrupt racketeers are cleaned out of high office.

China can become either a great democratic force for world peace, or the first battleground of World War III. In the interests of our own national security and of peace, we must leave the Chinese people free to decide that great issue—for they, unless outside forces thwart their will, can be relied on to decide it for democracy and peace.

American Wool Textile Industry

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. HAROLD KNUTSON
OF MINNESOTA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Friday, August 2, 1946

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Speaker, will it never stop?

Under our present tariff system foreign wool producers now supply 90 percent of the wool used in our clothing, our household furnishings, and our blankets. American wool growers, comprising more than 500,000 persons, living in 13 Western States, are rapidly being put out of business at a time when this country is using more wool than it ever has before. Since 1942 our wool production has fallen from 475,000,000 pounds to 311,000,000 pounds.

The American wool textile industry is the seventh largest employer in the country, and its product is the fourteenth in dollar value. The wages paid are four times the rate of wages in Britain and other European countries, from which most of our imports come. We are today the world's greatest market for raw wool and wool textiles. Approximately 3,000,000 people depend on these industries for their livelihood, and the States which grow sheep exist only because livestock is grown there.

At this moment, I am informed, the State Department is continuing conversations started many months ago, arranging to cut the duty on wool and on wool textiles, as part of our good-neighbor policy of finding markets in this country for foreign producers. State Department officials have practically told wool growers and wool manufacturers that under the reciprocal trade treaties renewals wool and woolen goods will suffer tariff reductions because they represent prime products of our good friends and neighbors, the United Kingdom, and its Dominions of Australia, South Africa, and New Zealand. And any tariff cuts awarded these countries will apply automatically to Uruguay and the Argentine, the other two great wool-growing countries of the world.

Yet, right now, if the wool clip of the American grower were not being bought by the Commodity Credit Corporation, every wool grower in the United States would be bankrupt. The CCC which buys the wool sells it at a loss to meet the competition of Australian and South African wools which are being sold here by a Government owned and controlled agency that buys the growers' wool before it is off the sheep's back. These dominions furthermore have a surplus of wool sufficient to last for more than 10 years, and their best market now and in the future is the United States. During the war we bought 90 percent of all the wool they sold, and today we are buying approximately 50 percent.

The American wool textile industry which has a capacity that enabled it to clothe our Army and Navy, our great population, and in addition, a large part of the armies of Russia, France, and China, is today waiting fearfully to find out what our State Department is going to do. The wool which it is using, because it must use it, comes from 12,000 miles away. The OPA regulations have upset the industry's historic methods of production and is now trying to interpret the Brown-Bankhead amendment clearly intended to apply to individual mills, as meaning an industry-wide cost formula. The Civilian Production Administration is refusing linings and pocketings to clothing manufacturers who make clothes above a certain price, and this same body refuses to let manufacturers use more than a certain amount of yardage in women's clothing. That, gentlemen, is why the family's skirts are so short and tight. While this control over the size of your wife's sleeves and the length of her skirt is being exercised, European manufacturers are spending millions of dollars in this country to introduce their styles and their fabrics, which not only have no limitations as to yardage or fit, but which are designed with the help and advice of experts paid for by the foreign governments.

The Late Senator Maloney and Reorganization

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. CHASE GOING WOODHOUSE
OF CONNECTICUT
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Friday, August 2, 1946

Mrs. WOODHOUSE. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks I wish to append a brief comment on the Reorganization Act.

The passage of this bill was proof of the oft-made statement that the work of great men lives long after they have left us. The late Senator Francis Maloney, of Connecticut, was a statesman and a scholar. His early death was in no small part due to overwork in his devotion to his duty as a legislator. He had high ideals of what that duty was. He believed that government could and must be efficient, effective, and directed always to the greatest good of all the people. He gave unstintingly of his time and energy to that end.

The reorganization of Congress was a major interest of Senator Maloney. It was his untiring efforts that started the joint committee working to that end. Today we can look forward to the results of his work and that of his associate, Congressman MONRONEY, and the members of the committee as shaping the next to Congress toward more effective functioning. The reorganization is not yet complete. There is still much for us to do before Senator Maloney's goal is reached but a first great step has been taken.

There is one point on which action should be taken early in the next Congress. Regardless of how well the organizational machinery of Congress is set up it will operate effectively only if Members of Congress have the time and the energy to devote to the business of legislation. It is important that each Member have adequate assistance in his office in Washington. For this reason I regret that the clause providing such assistance was stricken from the House bill.

It is true that the bill as passed will provide a more adequate staff for each committee. But such personnel are specifically assigned to the chairman and ranking minority member for help on committee business. The expansion of the Legislative Reference Service will be of great aid in making informative data available. Likewise, the greater appropriation for the office of the legislative counsel will facilitate the technical work of bill drafting.

All of this will be of great value but it will not take the intensive pressure off the Member. He must have personal assistance.

This is a country of 140,000,000 people, covering half a continent. Of necessity our governmental functions are centered in Washington. If democracy is to function it is essential that there be close contact between the individual citizen and the Federal Government. The Member of Congress is a primary channel for such contact.

In the popular discussion of the need for reorganization of Congress there has been a good deal of talk about Congressmen "running errands." I do not like the phrase and I am sure other Members do not. I am glad when residents of my district ask me for help. Because of mere size our governmental structure is of necessity complicated. Often a citizen who has very legitimate need for assistance or for information does not know where to go. For example, recently the question of surplus property has brought up many questions as to where, when, and what. The Congressman is the logical person upon whom to call. He is the immediate representative of the people. Such services are not errands. Properly handled they are much more in the nature of adult education in government. But such handling takes time.

Policy making and legislation is the major business of a Member. We all want time for reading, for study preparatory to discussing and voting on legislation. A well-qualified assistant could relieve the Member of much routine and repetitive work which cannot be cared for by a clerical staff however good. This assistant, by taking over such work, would leave the Member free to think, to make judgments, to develop ideas on legislation for the well-being of the country. The economic and social problems before Congress are exceedingly complex. Our role in international affairs grows more and more important. It will be real economy to give Members such assistance. No business would undertake to serve 300,000 clients—the size of the typical congressional district—with an office staff such as a Member has today. And legislation—sound, carefully thought-out legislation—is much more important to the country than is the activity of any business office.

The assistant would be in no sense a deputy Congressman, as some have feared. He would be a well-trained assistant, a person to carry out a plan of work laid down for him by the Member.

Congress makes policy and should be in a position to see that its policy is carried out by the pertinent department or agency. But how many Members today have time to read in any detail even the reports of the departments with which their committee is most concerned?

A well-informed Congress is the best guaranty that legislation will always be for the best interest of all the people and not be unconsciously slanted toward the interest of an articulate group which has facilities for providing information in easily usable form. A well-informed Congress is the best possible protection against a lobby.

Much more could be said but every Member must feel the great need for more time for thought and study, for time to think, discuss, and work on legislation—in brief—to tackle the real heart of our job as we would like to do it. No two of us would use such an assistant in exactly the same way. I think in terms of a research assistant, of a fact finder, information provider. Other Members would have other functions in mind but the outcome would be the same—more time and energy for the Member to fulfill his real function of legislation. That is the ultimate goal of reorganization. We can reorganize committees, streamline procedures as we will, but it is only the Members who can make the machinery work, it is only Members with time and energy for thoughtful legislation that will produce an effective Congress.

Baby Chicks Take an Air Ride to the Philippines

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. CLARENCE F. LEA
OF CALIFORNIA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Friday, August 2, 1946

Mr. LEA. Mr. Speaker, arrangements for the shipment of 100,000 baby chicks by airplane from California to the Philippines furnishes another illustration of the expanding utility of air transportation.

With a view to improving the breeds of chickens in the Philippine Islands, a contract was recently entered into between the Philippine Commonwealth through its economic adviser to the Philippines and O. W. Berger, of the Pioneer Hatchery, and N. C. Thompson, of the Poehlman Hatchery, both of Petaluma, Calif., to furnish a stock of 100,000 blooded chickens for the Philippines.

Shipment is to consist of baby chicks just after they have been released from their shells. Nature provides these chicks with food to maintain them for 64 hours, or a little more, so they can be delivered to their new homes without feeding or watering if transported within that time.

These chicks are all to be furnished from five hatcheries in Sonoma County. Shipments are to be made in three installments of about 35,000 each. The eggs will all hatch at practically the same hour, then each bird will be examined by skilled inspectors, and only those in perfect condition will be accepted for shipment.

The sex of each bird will be determined and the total shipment of selected birds will consist of 80,000 pullets and 20,000 of mixed sex. About one-half of the shipment will be of White Leghorns and the other half of New Hampshires. White Leghorns are selected for their predominant egg-producing qualities and the New Hampshires primarily because of their meat-producing qualities.

Trucks will immediately convey the chicks to the airport at Santa Rosa where a cargo plane will be in waiting to receive them for the flight to the Philippines. The trip will have four stops including one at Hawaii and one at Guam. The flight is scheduled to take 40 hours from the Santa Rosa Airport to delivery at Manila.

The first of these flights is to be on September 13 by the Trans-Ocean Air Lines. The two succeeding shipments will follow about 30 days apart.

Each shipment will be accompanied by an attendant skilled in the treatment and care of baby chicks.

Proper care of these delicate birds requires a temperature between 60° to 80°. The airplanes will be operated by fliers experienced in Pacific flights during the World War. Their planes will be flown at elevations which automatically provide the degree of temperature needed. At each stop fresh air of proper temperature will be forced through the plane to purify the atmosphere.

The 40-hour schedule gives a leeway of 24 hours for delivery of the chicks before their first feeding time. Provision is made, however, for feeding in case of any unforeseen delay. In that event, the birds can be given their first meal and food like they would have received at home served in Dixie cups. This would require some aid which can be supplied at the contemplated stops.

Transportation will cost about $20,000 for each of the three trips, or 60 cents per chick. The total expense involved will amount to about $1 per chick delivered safely at Manila, including cost of insurance.

These baby chicks are among the most highly developed birds that could be secured from American flocks. They will likely serve as a pioneer strain for an expanded poultry industry in the Philippines.

A shipment by steamer would have required from 3 to 4 weeks and a large battery of brooders carrying approximately 1,000 birds each. It would have involved elaborate provisions for feeding en route and for maintaining temperatures and humidity adapted to these chicks.

Sonoma County is one of the largest poultry producing centers in the world. It has hatcheries with a capacity comparable to its poultry production. One of its hatcheries is capable of handling 1,800,000 eggs at one hatch.

The shipment of these birds may be accepted as indicating the desire of the Philippine Government for progressive advancement in matters of economic importance to the islands. The shipment is also an outstanding illustration of the advancing utility of the airplane.

Relief Funds for Italy

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. MICHAEL J. BRADLEY
OF PENNSYLVANIA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Wednesday, July 31, 1946

Mr. BRADLEY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, in conformity with unanimous consent which I have received, I am placing in the RECORD an exchange of correspondence between my colleague from Philadelphia, the Honorable HERBERT J. MCGLINCHEY, and myself:

JULY 26, 1946.

Hon. HERBERT J. MCGLINCHEY,
House of Representatives,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR COLLEAGUE: Because I am aware of the interest you have expressed on many occasions with regard to present conditions in Italy, where there is great suffering and distress, I am taking the liberty of writing to you with reference to the relief funds which are being raised here in America for the benefit of the Italian people, who are in such sore need of help and assistance.

The economy of Italy has been more than seriously dislocated and there is a critical shortage of essential articles which are necessary for the sustaining of life. I had an opportunity to see conditions at first hand when I was in Italy last year and I was appalled at the misery which existed. When our country was forced into the war, the Italian people immediately, demonstrated their reluctance to fight America, where so many people of their own blood had found happiness. Thousands of American boys of Italian blood were among those who gave their lives in north Africa and in the campaign in Italy, and the action of the Italian people in revolting against Fascist and Nazi dictators was in no small measure due to the traditional friendliness they felt for America. Anything we can do here in America to help them is more than justified by the sacrifices which were made by those Americans of Italian blood who served so ably and so heroically in our armed forces. If you could see the things which I saw in Italy last year, I know you would agree with me that it is essential for us to extend any aid which we can to the Italian people, who are actually on the verge of starvation. Might I therefore appeal to you to make a contribution to the committee which is in charge of raising funds for the relief work in Italy? I know there are many demands made upon you but I am sure this is one which well merits consideration.

With warmest regards, I am

Sincerely yours,

MICHAEL J. BRADLEY.

CONGRESS OF THE UNITED STATES,
HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, D. C., August 2, 1946.

Hon. MICHAEL J. BRADLEY,
House of Representatives,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR COLLEAGUE: I wish to acknowledge your letter of July 26.

I am grateful to you for directing my attention to the fact that relief funds are being solicited in the United States for aid of the people in Italy. I am very much interested in this matter and I recall your observations regarding conditions there when you returned from Europe last year.

I am enclosing check as a contribution and ask that you be good enough to direct it through the proper channels for me. I fully agree with you that we should make every effort to alleviate the suffering of the people in Italy, who in many instances are bordering on starvation.

Sincerely yours,

HERBERT J. MCGLINCHEY.

REA Program of Democratic Party Brought Electricity to Thousands of Farms in Twenty-second District of Illinois

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. MELVIN PRICE
OF ILLINOIS
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, August 2, 1946

Mr. PRICE of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I have always been deeply interested in the rural electrification programs, one of the great social benefits which Franklin D. Roosevelt and a Democratic Congress supporting his progressive ideas brought to the farmers of the United States in 1935.

Until the establishment of REA this Nation, though considered one of the most progressive, was actually backward in this modern blessing of mankind. Our own congressional district, while close to great power facilities in the industrial areas around East St. Louis, Granite City, Venice, Alton, and Wood-river was without electricity in many of the rural sections in each of the five counties.

I am happy that I have had the opportunity to vote for additional appropriation to renew REA activities on a post-war basis so that the benefits of this great program may be extended to still more farms in our district through the next few years.

AIDED COOPERATIVES

It has been my pleasure to have assisted various cooperatives to participate in this program, both since I became a Member of Congress and while I served as secretary to former Congressman Edwin M. Schaefer. Mr. Schaefer was an early supporter of REA and gave much of his time toward promoting this program. It was through his efforts that so much of its benefits came into Bond, Monroe, Madison, Washington, and St. Clair Counties.

Personally, I share Mr. Schaefer's interest in REA, and it is my intention to continue to give the program my unqualified support.

FIVE MILLIONS IN LOANS IN OUR DISTRICT

Since the Rural Electrification Administration was established in 1935, REA has allotted $5,189,000 as loans to the six cooperatives that have built rural power lines in the counties of the Twenty-second Illinois Congressional District.

The Southwestern Electric Cooperative, of Greenville, has received $1,131,000 in REA loan allotments. This cooperative has built most of its lines in the Twenty-second District, in Madison and Bond Counties and along the northern edge of St. Clair County. The rest are in Montgomery, Fayette, Clinton, and Effingham Counties.

The Monroe County Electric Cooperative, of Waterloo, has received $545,000 in REA loan allotments. Practically all of the cooperative's lines are in the Twenty-second District, in Monroe County and southern St. Clair County. It also serves Randolph County.

The Tri-County Electric Cooperative, of Mt. Vernon, has received $1,235,000 in loan allotments from REA. A substantial part of the cooperative's lines are in the Twenty-second District, in Washington County, and the southeast corner of St. Clair County. The remainder are in Jefferson, Marion, Perry, and Franklin Counties.

BENEFITS MADISON COUNTY FARMS

The Clinton County Electric Cooperative of Breese has received $463,000 in REA loan allotments. The cooperative's lines reach into the Twenty-second District to serve members in northeast St. Clair County, the southeast corner of Madison County, and an area in northwestern Washington County. Other parts of the cooperative's system are in Clinton, Fayette, and Marion Counties.

The Egyptian Electric Cooperative Association, of Steeleville, has received $897,000 in REA loan allotments. Part of the cooperative's system extends into the Twenty-second District, in southeast St. Clair County, and t[illegible] southwest corner of Washington County. The rest is in Jackson, Randolph, Perry, and Williamson Counties.

BOND COUNTY PARTICIPATES

The M. J. M. Electric Cooperative, of Carlinville, has received $918,000 in REA loan allotments. The cooperative's lines extend into the Twenty-second District, in northwest Madison County, and northeast Bond County. The rest of these lines are in Jersey, Macoupin, Montgomery, and Fayette Counties.

REA estimates that the six cooperatives have built about 1,650 miles of lines in the counties of the Twenty-second District and are furnishing electricity to approximately 5,000 consumers in these counties. This development is distributed among the five counties approximately as follows: Bond, 300 miles, 1,000 consumers; Madison, 400 miles, 1,200 consumers; Monroe, 250 miles, 700 consumers; St. Clair, 300 miles, 800 consumers; Washington, 400 miles, 1,300 consumers. Most of the consumers served are farmers; the rest are nonfarm rural homes, churches, schools, stores, and other rural establishments. The cooperatives expect to extend electric service ultimately to as many as 5,000 more rural consumers in the district.

REA's latest financial summary, covering all transactions through January 1, 1946, shows that the six cooperatives serving the Twenty-second District have paid all principal and interest due on their Government loans. They have paid interest totaling $448,390 and have repaid principal due in the amount of $136,586. In addition, the cooperatives have paid $500,673 on principal in advance of the time it was due. REA loans are made on a self-liquidating basis and are amortized over 35 years, with interest at 2 percent. Electric rates paid by consumers are based on the actual cost of service, including REA loan payments.

REA POPULAR IN DISTRICT

Rural electrification has made rapid strides in the Twenty-second District since the REA program was started in 1935. Estimates indicate that approximately half the farms in the area now have central-station electric service. The main network of REA-financed lines has been largely built in the district, and the cooperatives now are constructing extensions to unserved consumers as rapidly as materials and manpower can be obtained. Their objective is to make electric service available to every rural community in the area. This method of rural electrification, known as area coverage, is a basic part of the REA program.

In addition to lighting rural homes and farm buildings, electricity has helped rural people in the Twenty-second District to obtain a better living standard and has made work easier on farms and in rural homes. On the farm, labor is saved and production is increased through the use of such electrical devices as electrically pumped water systems, chick brooders, milking machines, milk coolers, and a variety of other equipment. In the house, time and steps are saved with the electric washing machine, iron, refrigerator, and an electrically pumped supply of running water. Electric stoves, radios, and various small appliances help make the rural home more comfortable.

Explanation of Public Law 589, Seventy-ninth Congress, an Act To Amend Certain Provisions of the National Service Life Insurance Act of 1940, as Amended, and for Other Purposes

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. CLAIR ENGLE
OF CALIFORNIA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, August 2, 1946

Mr. ENGLE of California. Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this legislation is to liberalize the provisions and benefits of the National Service Life Insurance Act of 1940, as amended, to overcome certain deficiencies and inadequacies in the existing law.

The major effects are as follows:

Section 1 amends section 601 (f) of the National Service Life Insurance Act of 1940, as amended, to include a stepparent if designated as beneficiary by the insured. The amendment, effective as of October 8, 1940, authorizes payment of installments of insurance to the designated stepparent from and after the first day of the third calendar month following receipt of claim by or on behalf of such stepparent; that is, if claim is received September 1, 1946, payment will be made of installments accruing on and after December 1, 1946. Under prior law a stepparent is within the permitted class of beneficiaries only when it is shown that such stepparent stood in loco parentis to the insured for at least 1 year prior to the insured's entry into active service.

Section 2 amends section 602 (c) of the act, as amended, by adding two subsections (c) (2) and (c) (3). Subsection (c) (2) extends the right to apply for insurance after separation from active service to all persons who have had active service between October 8, 1940, and September 2, 1945, upon payment or authorization for deduction of premiums and evidence satisfactory to the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs showing the applicant to be in good health at the time of application. The requirement in connection with application for issue or reinstatement of insurance as to the good health of the applicant is waived when application is made for life or disability insurance prior to January 1, 1950, if the applicant is partially disabled by injury or disease incurred in or aggravated by active service only.

The maximum amount of insurance for which a person may apply will be $10,000, less any insurance which may have been surrendered for its cash-surrender value.

Subsection (c) (3) grants insurance to those persons in active service between October 8, 1940, and September 2, 1945, whose application for insurance was denied because of the condition of health, if such person thereafter became permanently and totally disabled in line of duty or died in line of duty. The amount of such insurance when added to other insurance issued by the Government may not exceed $10,000. The premiums due on such insurance from the date of application to the date when the applicant became totally and permanently disabled in line of duty or to the date of death, will be deducted from the proceeds of the insurance.

Section 3 amends section 602 (f) of the act as amended, to authorize issuance of insurance on a 20-year endowment plan, endowment at age 60, and endowment at age 65, in addition the plans previously authorized in the act; namely, ordinary life, 20-payment life, and 30-payment life. Conversion to an endowment plan may not be made while the insured is totally disabled. This provision is designed to prevent application for endowment policies at a time when waiver of premiums can be secured by reason of total disability.

Section 4 amends section 602 (g) of the act, as amended, to remove all restrictions on the permitted class of beneficiaries as to national service life insurance maturing on or after the date of enactment of this act. This amendment permits a veteran to name any person, firm, corporation, or legal entity as beneficiary after August 1, 1946, date of enactment of the act.

Section 5 amends paragraphs (1) and (2) of section 602 (h) of the act as amended, to authorize the beneficiary of a national service life insurance policy on which payments were commenced prior to September 30, 1944, to elect to receive a refund life income in lieu of the method of payment otherwise provided. Such right of election will terminate 2 years after date of enactment of the act—August 1, 1946. Within 1 year after the date of enactment, the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs must send to each beneficiary a notice by registered mail, addressed to the last known address of the beneficiary, explaining the right of election. The refund life income mode of settlement provides for payment in such number of installments certain as will equal the face of the policy, less any indebtedness, with payments continuing throughout the lifetime of the beneficiary.

Subsection 5 (b) makes subsections (i), (j), and (k) of section 602 inapplicable to insurance maturing after the date of the amendatory act.

Section 6 amends section 602 (m) of the act by adding a new subsection (2) to provide that in any case in which the insured authorized in writing a deduction of premiums from his service pay, such insurance shall not lapse so long as the insured remains in active service prior to the date of enactment of the Insurance Act of 1946, August 1, 1946, notwithstanding the fact that deduction of premiums was discontinued because the insured was discharged to accept a commission; or was absent without leave, if restored to active duty; or was sentenced by court martial, if he was restored to active duty; required to engage in combat; or was killed in combat.

The premiums due on such insurance would be deducted from the proceeds of the insurance and any premiums deducted or collected will be credited to the national service life insurance appropriation and payment of benefits will be made from such appropriation.

Section 7 amends section 602 (n) of the act to provide that upon application made within 1 year after the date of enactment of the Insurance Act of 1946, August 1, 1946, the Administrator shall grant waiver of any premium becoming due not more than 5 years prior to the date of enactment of the act which may be waived during continuous total disability, which continues or has continued for six or more consecutive months, if such disability commenced subsequent to the date of application for insurance and while the insurance was in force under premium-paying conditions and prior to the insured's sixtieth birthday. Further provision is made that the Administrator, upon any application made subsequent to 1 year after the date of enactment of the act, shall not grant waiver of premiums becoming due more than 1 year prior to the receipt of application for such waiver, except as otherwise provided.

Section 8 amends section 602 (p) of the act to provide that in any case in which, prior to August 1, 1946, application was made for national service life insurance to become effective subsequent to the date of application, and the applicant died in line of duty prior to the effective date of the insurance, payment of benefits would be authorized on the same basis as if the insurance had been in force on the date of death of the applicant.

Section 9 amends section 602 of the act by adding several new subsections. The effect of these sections numbered (t) to (v), inclusive is:

First. To authorize optional methods of settlement of insurance maturing on or after August 1, 1946, so that the insured may elect to make it payable: (a) in one sum; (b) in equal monthly installments of from 36 to 240 in number, in multiples of 12; (c) in equal monthly installments for 120 months certain with such payments continuing during the remaining lifetime of the first beneficiary; or (d) as a refund life income in monthly installments, the total to equal the face value of the contract, less any indebtedness, with payments continuing throughout the lifetime of the first beneficiary.

Second. To provide for payment of any amount unpaid at the death of the beneficiary to the estate of the insured, except that if a beneficiary was entitled to receive a lump sum settlement and elected to receive payments in some other manner, the unpaid balance would be payable to the estate of the beneficiary.

Third. To authorize inclusion in a national service life insurance policy provisions for protection against total disability which continues 6 or more consecutive months upon payment of an extra premium to be prescribed by the Administrator. Total disability must commence after the date of application and before the insured is 60 years of age and while the payment of any premium is not in default. Monthly disability payments are at the rate of $5 for each $1,000. Provision is made for waiver of proof of good health prior to January 1, 1950, when inability to prove good health is due to partial disability incurred or aggravated by active service. Policies containing this provision for disability benefits may be classified separately for the purpose of dividend distribution from otherwise similar policies not containing this benefit.

Fourth. Makes insurance incontestable from date of issue, reinstatement, or conversion, except for fraud, nonpayment of premium, or on the ground that the applicant was not a member of the military or naval forces of the United States.

Fifth. Authorizes a guardian of fiduciary or person recognized by the Administrator as having custody of the person or estate to elect the mode of settlement of insurance in behalf of an incompetent or a minor.

Sixth. Provides for reinstatement of level premium term insurance within the term, on payment of two monthly premiums and proof of good health.

Seventh. Provides that any level premium term insurance may be reinstated within the term upon written application made within 6 months after date of lapse or within 6 months after August 1, 1946, and payment of two monthly premiums provided the applicant is in as good health on date of application and tender of premiums as he was on due date of premium in default and furnishes evidence satisfactory to the Administrator. A 60-day grace period is granted under certain specified conditions.

Section 10 amends section 602 of the act by adding a new subsection (z) to define as total disability for insurance purposes as including permanent loss of the use of both feet, hands, eyes, or one foot and one hand, or one foot and one eye, or one hand and one eye, or total loss of hearing in both ears, or the organic loss of speech.

Section 11 amends section 607 (b) of the act to permit the use of suitable mortality tables where life contingencies are involved in the calculations of the value of benefits.

Section 12 amends section 608 of the act to make Administrator's decision on insurance matters subject to reviews by United States district courts. This amendment is effective as of October 8, 1940.

Section 13 amends section 616 of the act to authorize assignment of an interest in insurance by a beneficiary to certain relatives of the insured.

Section 14 amends section 617 of the act, to authorize a trial by jury in the event of denial of a claim for waiver of premiums on account of total disability or payment of benefits on account of total disability.

Section 15 adds a new section (313) to the World War Veterans' Act, 1924, as amended, to provide that whenever benefits under the disability provision authorized by section 311 of that act become, or have become payable because of total disability traceable to the extra hazard of military or naval service, the liability shall be borne by the United States and to provide for necessary transfer of amount to and from the military and naval appropriation and the national service life insurance fund as is required because of such provision.

Veteran Praises Congressman's Work

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. JAMES H. MORRISON

OF LOUISIANA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, August 2, 1946

Mr. MORRISON. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks, I wish to insert in the RECORD the following letter received from J. A. Rockhold, a veteran, of my district. His letter is as follows:

BATON ROUGE, LA.

DEAR JIMMY: I know you will be surprised to hear from me, but I have been wanting to write to you for some time to tell you all the wonderful work you have been doing for the veterans and members of the armed forces. I remember when I was over in the Pacific when the war with the Japs was at its worst I was surprised to find that so many boys had called on you for help and that you had done your best for them. When I returned to the States and was at the hospital at Jackson, Miss., with jungle fever I met two boys that you had aided and they were high in their praise for you.

I have followed your record closely as to bills that you have introduced and voted for, which has meant so much to us veterans. In checking all the bills in Congress I have found that you have the only veterans' bill pending for a substantial bonus for services rendered payable in cash.

Your bill H. R. 6863, which you introduced, which provides that soldiers' insurance shall be paid if the widow or children are deceased to the mother or father or the next of legal kin of the insured means a lot and will be of tremendous value when enacted.

Your bill H. R. 6864, which provides that a disabled veteran can receive disability benefits as well as educational benefits, is a very fine bill, and I feel sure will correct the wrong which now exists.

I know that you have helped thousands of veterans with their problems and you have gained a reputation not only in the Sixth District but all over the State as being one man in public office who has left no stone unturned and put forth tremendous effort and energy in helping veterans individually and collectively.

Your work here in securing veterans accommodations at Harding Field was a great victory for many veterans and their families who had no place to stay. I live near LSU and every day I see new barracks and new houses going up for veterans which the officials at LSU give you credit for securing. I also understand that you secured veterans housing for Southeastern College at Hammond.

Jimmy, you don't know how much all this has meant to the boys, many of whom sacrificed so much during this war, and I am just writing you this letter to let you know how much it will mean to you in the future. There seems to be such a tremendous contrast. Some officials brush us off, while others, like yourself, seem to be unending in their efforts to help us. You just wait until the next election and watch the veterans vote and you will see how much they appreciate all the wonderful work you have done.

Since I have been out of the Army I am building some houses and will start building some apartments for veterans and their families. It is hard to get material but I am doing everything possible to get them built. Next time you are in Baton Rouge please get in touch with me as I have a lot to tell you about.

Sincerely,

ROCK.

Virginia White Speel

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. HARVE TIBBOTT

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, August 2, 1946

Mr. TIBBOTT. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks, I include the following address to be delivered by me on Saturday, August 3, 1946, before the Council of Republican Women of Indiana County, Pa., in memory of a great American, Virginia White Speel:

It is fitting and proper that we should pay homage to the memory of an outstanding citizen of Indiana County, the State of Pennsylvania, and the District of Columbia; one who had strong faith in constitutional government, the late Virginia White Speel. All of us are aware of her keen interest in Indiana, Pa., where she was born on July 18, 1861, the daughter of Judge Harry White and Anna Lena Sutton White. As a devoted daughter to her father, he, himself, who had been a member of Lincoln's commission to seek means of preventing the secession of the Southern States, and one of the founders of the Republican Party, she did much to help him in public life, as well as to make his home life extremely happy.

Mrs. Speel was a great American. When only five she could recite perfectly both the Declaration of Independence and the Constitution of the United States. Later and while still very young she also memorized the Bill of Rights. She was charitable, responsible, and always considerate of others. Deeply shocked by the neglected ignorance of the Negro, she organized and taught classes in simple numbers, reading, and writing. These tasks of life and death, she maintained, were necessary. She counted among her close friends several Presidents of the United States, namely, McKinley, Harding, Coolidge, and Hoover.

I remember in one of the frequent conversations which I had with her in Washington one day we were discussing the "flu" epidemic of 1918. What Mrs. Speel did then to help alleviate the suffering in a small mining community in Indiana County is well known to all. She gave much of her time to the Daughters of the American Revolution and was a devoted worker in the little Episcopal Church given by her grandfather to the dioceses of Pittsburgh.

She was a splendid correspondent and for a long time wrote for a chain of news periodicals owned by Col. Alexander K. McClure, of Philadelphia.

She achieved great success as a National Republican Committeewoman from the District of Columbia. Those with whom she was associated as a Republican leader recognized her ability and had the utmost respect for her honesty and loyalty. Many now living in the Capital city of this Nation, with whom I have discussed the life of Virginia White Speel, have told me how helpful she was to them and of her willingness to lay aside matters of personal interest to aid the GOP. The League of Republican Women Headquarters in the District of Columbia was founded by Virginia White Speel. She was its first president, and later was made its honorary president for life. Its original meetings were held in her home. Its success, without minimizing in any way the work, devotion, and generosity of her fellow organizers, was largely due to her vision, persistence, and tireless expenditure of time, energy, and money. The League was first known as the Women's National Republican Club. However, a New York group preempted the title and the Washington organization changed its name to that which it now bears.

Mrs. Speel firmly believed in the two-party system of government. A second conviction was that women should not segregate themselves in political efforts, but should work side by side with men. For this reason she disapproved of nonpartisan organizations such as the League of Women Voters.

During the Harding, Coolidge, and Hoover campaigns, she was in great demand as a speaker going at her own expense to small rural communities in Ohio, Pennsylvania, Maryland, and Virginia.

In 1928 she was elected to the office of National Republican Committeewoman from the District of Columbia. She held this office until she retired from it in 1944. The last meeting she attended of this organization was in May 1944 when she was elected honorary vice president for life. She was a recipient of certain honors which she prized highly, one of these was membership in President Hoover's Conference on Child Welfare. Another was her appointment as one of the District of Columbia Commissioners in the George Washington Bicentennial Celebration. She was a member of the inaugural committee for the inaugurations of at least three Presidents.

Virginia White Speel left a mark upon her time in the hearts of the countless persons, whose lives touched hers. She had fought a good fight. She had remained true to her ideals, principles, and convictions. She passed away on April 13, 1945, at the age of 83.

I am greatly honored in having the opportunity to present to the Council of Republican Women of Indiana County this testimonial to the memory of Virginia White Speel.

"TESTIMONIAL TO THE MEMORY OF VIRGINIA WHITE SPEEL BY THE MEMBERS OF THE LEAGUE OF REPUBLICAN WOMEN OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA APRIL 1945

"Whereas Virginia White Speel was a pioneer in the active participation of women in national politics and a most progressive and wise leader in the Republican Party for over half a century, having served on the national committee for two decades; and

"Whereas Virginia White Speel was the organizer of numerous groups of women for patriotic service in many localities; and

"Whereas she was the beloved founder of the League of Republican Women of the District of Columbia: Therefore be it

"Resolved, That in the passing of Virginia White Speel, the patriotic organizations and the Republican Party have lost a wise and conscientious counselor; therefore, the members of the League of Republican Women of the District of Columbia do extend sincere condolences to her bereaved family and friends; and be it further

"Resolved, That these resolutions be spread on the minutes of the League of Republican Women of the District of Columbia and be sent to the family of Virginia White Speel and to the Republican groups with which she was affiliated."

An Attorney Gives His View on Tideland Oil

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. MELVIN PRICE
OF ILLINOIS
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, August 2, 1946

Mr. PRICE of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, under leave to revise and extend my remarks, I desire to include in the RECORD a very well written article that appeared in the East St. Louis (Ill.) Daily Journal of Sunday, July 28, 1946, by Mr. Frank Smith, attorney, of East St. Louis. Mr. Smith, in his article, deals with the legal background of the present controversy involving title rights to land under navigable waters.

To the Editor:

Congress is now in a muddle over ownership of navigable waters, as to whether the State or the Government has title. The reason of this is because oil has been discovered in the beds of some navigable waters including seashore out 3 miles into the ocean.

When the question first arose Secretary of the Interior Ickes ruled that title to the shore between high- and low-water marks and the bed of the river or seashore and for 3 miles out into the sea vested in the State. After discovery of oil he changed his ruling saying the State holds title between high- and low-water marks only and that the Government holds title to the bed below low-water mark. To sustain his ruling he had a suit filed in the Supreme Court of the United States. But will the Supreme Court help him out? We think not.

To date the Supreme Court of the United States has in 54 cases held that the State held title on navigable waters below high-water mark and to the bed of the river, lake, or ocean out to the 3-mile limit.

During the debate Senator DONNELL, of Missouri, cited a century-old decision of the Illinois Supreme Court (23 Wall. 46–60). In that case the Mississippi River was held to be a nonnavigable stream because it did not conform to the common law rule, "Ebb and flow of the tide" and the riparian owner took to the middle of the river. This 1847 decision was overruled.

When Carter Harrison was mayor of Chicago the Illinois Central Railroad sought to erect a roundhouse on the lake front (Lake Michigan); the mayor with his police force halted the work, whereupon the railroad company, through its counsel, filed an injunction suit to enjoin the city of Chicago, its mayor, and police force from interfering with the construction of a roundhouse on its own property. In connection therewith there was filed a copy of the act of the Illinois General Assembly quit claiming and conveying any right the State might have in such lake front to the said railroad.

The case in due time reached the Supreme Court of the United States (146 U. S. 387). Chief Justice Fields wrote the opinion, all other judges concurring. The Court held that the Mississippi and all other rivers, including the Great Lakes—of which Lake Michigan was one—were navigable waters and the riparian owner took title to high-water mark only. That the State owned the shore below high-water mark and the bed or beds. That the State held title as trustee for all the people, and that trust could not be alienated; and the act of the legislature seeking to convey a part of the lake front to the railroad was a nullity. The Supreme Court did say the common-law rule of navigability might be all right in England, where all rivers flowed into the sea, but not applicable in this country. That decision nullified the 1847 decision of the Illinois Supreme Court.

We do not know if there is or is not oil under the water of the Mississippi River. As the law now is, such oil will belong to the State. Should Ickes succeed in his case before the Supreme Court, the State will hold only between high- and low-water marks and the Government will own the bed—and with the bed goes the oil.

Sincerely,

FRANK C. SMITH.

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, August 2, 1946

Mr. FLANNAGAN. Mr. Speaker, as chairman of the House Committee on Agriculture, I desire to report not only to the House, but to the American farmers on the work of the committee during the Seventy-ninth Congress.

In my opinion, and I make the statement advisedly, no other Congress in the history of this Republic has done as much for agriculture as the Seventy-ninth Congress. Now, that is a pretty broad statement and one, no doubt, that those who are not familiar with the record will challenge. However, after examining the record, I believe that there are few unbiased, fair-minded men, if any, who will dispute the correctness of the statement.

While much of the credit should go, of course, to the House Committee on Agriculture, upon which fell the laborious duty of preparing legislation, making investigations, holding hearings, redrafting the bills into final shape, and presenting them upon the floor, it should always be remembered that none of the bills could have been enacted into law had not a great majority of the membership of the Congress been sympathetic, cooperative, and helpful.

Permit me to digress at this point to say that the Representatives from the rural districts are grateful to the Representatives from the urban districts for the fine spirit they have shown in cooperating with us in our effort to improve the condition of the American farmer. And, also, let me thank our great farm organizations and our State agricultural agencies for their splendid cooperation and help.

One thing I want to call particular attention to is the fact that politics never once entered into the deliberations of the committee. When the members entered the committee room they left their politics on the outside. One and all they devoted their time and talents to working out our farm problems, and as a result the House never turned down a single bill reported by the committee. This is a remarkable record, and one that each member of the committee is proud of.

Without further comment, let me submit the record: During the Seventy-ninth Congress 208 bills were referred to the committee, 32 of which have been enacted into law, 7 of which were favorably reported by the committee and passed the House but have not been acted upon by the Senate, and 8 of which were favorably reported by the committee but have not, due chiefly to lack of time, been considered by the House. In addition, the committee held numerous hearings on bills that, due to one reason or another, the committee did not think wise to report. Moreover, the committee and its subcommittees held numerous hearings looking into the food—domestic and world—livestock, cotton, OPA, and other agricultural problems. The committee has been in practically continuous session since the beginning of the Seventy-ninth Congress.

The above recitation, of course, only exhibits the great amount of work done by the committee. It only shows that the committee has been, at least, a hard-working committee. This would mean very little to the farmers if we did not have something to show for our labor.

Let me point out to you what that something is. Let me be specific. While time will not permit me to give an analysis of all the bills enacted into law, I do want to call special attention to three of the bills that will, in my opinion, go down in history as landmarks along the long, hard road that American agriculture has traveled.

1. H. R. 6932, PRODUCTION, UTILITY, AND MARKETING RESEARCH

No. 1 on the list I would place H. R. 6932, commonly known as the agricultural research bill. I am constrained to believe that this bill, if rightly administered, will accomplish more for American agriculture than any other piece of legislation ever enacted. There are few, if any, who are familiar with this legislation that do not hold the same opinion. Wrapped up in this bill is the answer to most of our agricultural problems. I verily believe that in the not-too-distant future farmers will refer to it as America's Agricultural bible. I hope all farmers in America will secure copies of this law, read it and reread it until they are thoroughly familiar with its provisions and its possibilities, and then see to it that the law is efficiently administered so they will reap its full benefits.

While many agencies, organizations, and individuals contributed to the drafting of this bill, it is primarily the outgrowth of the study and investigation of the Special Committee on Marketing set up by the House under House Resolution 54.

This bill covers production research, utilization research, and marketing research. In other words, it covers the whole field from the production of agricultural products until those products appear upon the tables of the consumers; and in addition it calls for research into new and more profitable uses of the products of the soil. Research as used in the bill is not restricted to the laboratory where the scientists prove that two plus two make four, but is used in its broadest sense, to cover all activities connected with production, utilization, and marketing of agricultural products.

In presenting the legislation to the the House, I made this statement, which I now repeat:

> Briefly stated, the bill, through research, attempts to give all phases of agriculture the opportunity of growing and developing along the line that has made industry in America so efficient and successful. We have realized for years that the dynamo back of the great industrial empire we have built up in America is industrial research. This bill is an attempt to put the same kind of dynamo back of agriculture.

Farm marketing is given special treatment in the bill, and there is every reason why special emphasis is placed upon marketing. Agricultural marketing has been neglected, woefully neglected, during the past. Over the years we have emphasized production and, on the whole, have done a pretty fair job. Something over 2 years ago a Special Committee on Marketing, as you know, was set up by the House to make a thorough study of our whole agricultural marketing system, and I say to you a more difficult assignment was never given a committee of this House. The more your committee wrestled with the problem the more thoroughly we became convinced that we would not only have to harness, but coordinate, all our agencies directly or indirectly concerned with agricultural marketing—Federal, State, and private—and that we would have to approach the problem from a scientific rather than a haphazard angle, if we succeeded in accomplishing the great task imposed upon us by the resolution creating and setting up the committee. Now, after months of thorough and painstaking study and investigation, the best answer to our agricultural-marketing problems that your special committee has been able to work out is H. R. 6932.

Under the bill the sums made available for marketing alone are as follows:

1947	$2,500,000
1948	5,000,000
1949	10,000,000
1950	15,000,000
1951	20,000,000

And in addition to these sums, beginning with the fiscal year beginning June 30, 1952, such additional sums as the Congress may deem necessary.

2. H. R. 5991, FARMERS HOME ADMINISTRATION

This is the American model of the old Farm Security Administration. While modeled in principle upon the Executive orders, certain language appearing in appropriation bills, and the Bankhead-Jones Act under which the Farm Security Administration has been functioning, it winds up all the half-baked, crackpot projects and undertakings heretofore carried on by the old Farm Security Administration, and provides basic law for a well-thought-out and coordinated rehabilitation and farm-tenant program. I do not think that any legislation ever had more thorough and painstaking study and consideration. Much credit is due to the special committee for its thorough and painstaking investigation of the Farm Security Administration and for the wholesome and worth-while recommendations it made with respect to a sound, sensible, workable rehabilitation and farm-tenant program. The bill follows, in the main, the recommendations made by the special committee. One important provision in the bill to which I desire to call particular attention is the provision calling for insured loans to farm tenants similar to the loans that have been made by the Federal Housing Administration. In other words, this provision extends to farm tenants the same treatment city tenants have been receiving for many years.

This provision, in that local banks, financial institutions, and individuals, can now safely make loans to tenants purchasing farms, as such loans will be insured by the Federal Government, should go a long way toward solving our tenant problem. Qualified veterans are given preference under the tenant program. To those who say that this is a risky program, that the Government is bound to suffer losses, let me answer: While we have thrown around the program every reasonable protection, and under the program the farms will be purchased under the normal value yardstick, I agree that losses will be suffered. We are embarking upon the program, however, under no delusions, with our eyes open, and with the thought in mind that the Government can well afford to suffer a few losses if in so doing it converts tenants and sharecroppers into farm owners, thereby anchoring them to the soil. Tenancy will first weaken, then destroy, any nation. On the other hand, farm ownership is the best guaranty to the perpetuation of this Republic I know of. Anchor our tenants and sharecroppers to the soil under farm ownership and America will become immune from communism and every other "ism."

The Farmers' Home Administration is a well-thought-out and coordinated rehabilitation and tenant program and in time will become one of the landmarks not only in our agricultural progress but in our national progress.

3. H. R. 3370, PUBLIC LAW 397, THE NATIONAL SCHOOL LUNCH ACT

This bill is another real land mark in our upward progress, and is the first basic law we have ever had setting up a national school-lunch program. The two main objectives of the program are these:

First. The improvement of the health of our children by providing them with a nutritious midday lunch, and Second. The assurance of a substantial market for agricultural products when in surplus supply. Moreover, the legislation will go a long way toward educating our people along dietary and nutritional lines. The eating of improper foods, or the not eating enough of the right kinds of food, probably causes as much sickness, illness, and distress as the lack of enough food.

This program, I hope in a few years, will grow and expand until it embraces all of our school children.

When our boys were inducted into the service under the selective service and we found that over 50 percent of them were physically unfit to defend our Republic our eyes were opened and we did a lot of hard thinking. When we commenced to look into the cause, we were told by Gen. Hershey, Dr. Parran, our Surgeon General, and other high medical experts, that probably one-half of all men rejected for the draft were rejected because of poor nutrition in childhood. And all of these men testified that probably the best way to bring about the needed correction was through a national school-lunch program.

In my opinion, a greater program was never inaugurated by the Congress. I know that all interested in the program are happy that at last the program has been written into the basic law of the land.

OTHER LAWS

While time will not permit me to go into all the other laws affecting agriculture that were passed, permit me to call brief attention to a few of them.

H. R. 1690, PUBLIC, 76, AGRICULTURAL EXTENSION WORK AND 4–H CLUB WORK

This bill increased the funds for cooperative extension work by some $12,500,000, and, for the first time, gives proper recognition of the work of the 4–H Clubs. It is now generally recognized that the 4–H boys and girls are not only making a great contribution to agriculture, but are making a great contribution toward training and developing real American men and women. In my humble opinion, the 4–H Clubs are the greatest training schools in Americanism we have in America today.

The funds would be employed as follows:

First. One hundred additional county agricultural agents at $3,200 per year, $320,000.

There are a few over 3,000 farm counties in the United States. At present we have 2,903 county agricultural agents. The 100 additional agents would bring the total up to 3,003 and would provide an agent for each county.

Second. One thousand and ten county home-demonstration agents at $2,600 per year, $2,626,000.

We now have 2,035 county home-demonstration agents. The 1,010 additional agents would bring the total up to 3,045, which means you can have at least one agent in each county.

Third. Two thousand three hundred and sixty-five assistant county agents, called in some counties 4–H Club agents, at $2,800 per year, $6,508,000.

We now have 1,068 of these agents. The 2,365 additional agents would bring the total up to 3,443 and would provide for at least one of these agents in each county.

Fourth. Six hundred and fifty-two assistant home-demonstration agents or 4–H Club agents at $2,250, $1,479,000.

We now have 544 of these agents. The additional agents would bring the total to 1,196.

Fifth. One hundred and twenty supervisors of county extension agents at $3,600 per year salary plus $1,500 travel and clerical help, $612,000.

At present we have 343 of these agents. The addition of 120 would bring the total up to 463.

Sixth. One hundred and forty-one State field agents in marketing, rural housing, nutrition, rural youth farm management, at $3,500 per year, plus $1,500 travel and clerical help, $705,000.

We now have 100 such agents, and the additional 141 would bring the total up to 241.

Total, $12,500,000.

H. R. 2113, PUBLIC, 98, AMENDING THE FEDERAL FARM LOAN ACT

This bill increases the loan value on farms up to 65 percent of the normal earning capacity, clarifies certain provisions of the law, sets up a more efficient farm-mortgage-credit system for farmers, and simplifies procedure so farmers may obtain agricultural credit in accordance with normal business practices and efficiency.

The Federal land-bank system has been of great service, not only to the American farmer, but to our whole economy. Had it no other accomplishment to its credit than reducing farm mortgage interest from an average of 6½ percent in 1916 to 4 percent in 1946, it would be considered a godsend to the American farmers. Add to this accomplishment the bailing out of the banks, insurance companies, and other farm-mortgage lending institutions during the depression, when loans went up—1933—from $272,446,223 to — 1934 — $1,283,503,456, thus saving not only thousands of farmers but thousands of our financial institutions holding farm-mortgage paper by swapping cool cash for agricultural paper, and you begin to realize what an important part the system has played in our financial picture. Yes, the system has stood the test, and I am happy to report that 11 of the 12 banks in the system have paid back every cent of Government capital and are today farmer owned and controlled. The other bank, the St. Paul Land Bank, will be able to retire all Government capital in a short while, at which time the entire system will become farmer owned and controlled.

H. R. 6303, MARKETING AGREEMENTS

Amends the Agricultural Adjustment Act, as amended, and the Agricultural Marketing Agreements Act of 1937, as amended, and authorizes the use of marketing agreements and orders to establish and maintain minimum standards of quality and maturity and grading and inspection requirements for agricultural commodities notwithstanding the fact that the seasonal average prices of such commodities may be above parity. Almonds have also been brought under the scope of the act and made subject to marketing agreements and orders.

H. R. 6097 AND H. R. 3821, WILDLIFE

H. R. 6097 amends the act of March 10, 1934, and provides for the development, maintenance, and coordination of wildlife conservation and rehabilitation. The Secretary of the Interior is authorized to assist and cooperate with Federal, State, and public or private agencies in the protection and development of wildlife resources and to make surveys and investigations of the wildlife of the public domain including lands and waters acquired or controlled by any agency of the United States.

H. R. 3821, Public, 533 amends the Federal Aid to Wildlife Restoration Act of September 2, 1937, as amended, so as to permit a number of the States to obtain a more equitable share of the amounts authorized under the act to be allocated to them for wildlife restoration projects.

H. R. 765, PUBLIC 296, METEOROLOGICAL REPORTING NETWORK IN ARCTIC

Authorizes necessary appropriation with which the Chief of the Weather Bureau, under the direction of the Secretary of Commerce, shall take such action as may be necessary in the development of an international basic meteorological reporting network in the Arctic region of the Western Hemisphere, including the establishment, operation, and maintenance of such reporting stations in cooperation with the State Department and other United States governmental departments, and so forth. The war brought sharply to our attention the necessity for this work.

H. R. 5135, PUBLIC 302, TOBACCO

Amends the AAA of 1938, as amended, first by authorizing the Secretary of Agriculture to decrease the national quota and State and farm acreage allotments for the 1946 crop of burley tobacco so as to prevent accumulation of surplus supplies; second, it authorizes the proclamation of national marketing quotas for the 1947 crop of burley and flue-cured tobacco and the holding of referenda to determine whether growers favor quotas even though the supply of burley or flue-cured tobacco is less than the reserve supply level; and third, it changes the rate of penalty applicable to tobacco marketed in excess of farm-marketing quotas from 10 cents per pound to 40 percent of the selling price.

HOUSE JOINT RESOLUTION 98, PUBLIC 163, TOBACCO

Authorizes the establishing of marketing quotas and acreage alloments for flue-cured and dark air-cured tobacco in substantially the same manner as has been done for flue-cured and burley tobacco. Secretary of Agriculture would be authorized to increase or terminate national marketing quotas for such tobacco if, after investigation, he finds such action necessary to meet a national emergency or an increase in export demand or to effectuate the declared policy of the act.

H. R. 6689, PUBLIC 558, EXTENDING SUGAR ACT

Extends for 1 year, from December 31, 1946, the provisions of the Sugar Act of 1937 and extends the tax provisions for a period of 1 year from June 30, 1947. The Sugar Act, of course, will have to be rewritten before the expiration of the extension date.

H. R. 6477 (PUBLIC, 505), EXTENDING COMMISSIONER LOANS

Extends commissioner loans for 1 year, from June 30, 1946. Directs administration to make a thorough study of the situation and make recommendations to the committee not later than March 1 next year. The commissioners' loan has served a great need and should not be discontinued. Without this type of loan from 40 to 45 percent of our farmers could not be adequately served by the Federal land banks. The thing to do, I believe, is to provide the farmers with the same type of loan through the Federal land bank system.

H. R. 6459 (PUBLIC, 546), EXTENDING SOIL CONSERVATION AND DOMESTIC ALLOTMENT ACT

Extends for a period of 2 years, from January 1, 1947, within which the Secretary of Agriculture may carry out the purposes of the Soil Conservation and Domestic Allotment Act by making payments to agricultural producers. This is done to afford opportunity for the States to take legislative action which would enable them to carry out the programs through grants made by the Federal Government.

The next Congress should make a thorough study of this program, make needed corrections, if any, and make the program a permanent one. The protection, rebuilding, and improvement of our soil is of paramount interest, not only to the farmers, but to the Nation as a whole. This is one of our greatest agricultural programs and should be protected and strengthened in every possible way.

H. R. 6828, CONTINUING FARM LABOR SUPPLY PROGRAM TO JUNE 30, 1947

Provides for the continuance of the farm labor supply program to June 30, 1947, and authorizes an appropriation of such funds as are necessary for such program. Had it not been for this program our war food effort would have been badly crippled.

HOUSE JOINT RESOLUTION 359, PUBLIC, 545, ELIMINATING MARKETING QUOTAS ON PEANUTS FOR 1947 CROP YEAR

Provides that, in view of critical shortage of high protein foods and fats, and fats and oils, peanut-marketing quotas are eliminated with respect to the crop of peanuts produced in the calendar year 1947, and no National, State, or farm acreage allotments for peanuts for the 1947 crop shall be established.

HOUSE JOINT RESOLUTION 336, PUBLIC 544, ELIMINATING MARKETING QUOTAS AND ACREAGE ALLOTMENTS FOR COTTON FOR 1947

Provides that, in view of the critical shortage of fats and oils and protein feeds, cotton-marketing quotas shall not be proclaimed with respect to the marketing year beginning August 1, 1947, and no national, State, county, or farm acreage allotments for cotton for the 1947 crop shall be established.

H. R. 2601, LIQUIDATING THE LAND HOLDINGS OF THE OLD FARM SECURITY ADMINISTRATION, DIVIDING SAID HOLDINGS WITH FARM UNITS, AND GIVING THE VETERANS PREFERENCE IN THE PURCHASE OF SAID UNITS

Provides that the resettlement projects and other lands acquired by the old Farm Security Agency, not heretofore disposed of, shall be divided up into family unit farms and sold within 3 years and that veterans and present project occupants shall have preference in the purchase of said units. The object of this legislation is to liquidate these projects as soon as possible, the extreme limit being 3 years, and to give the veterans preference, wherever possible, in the purchase of said farm units.

HOUSE JOINT RESOLUTION 364, PUBLIC 522, ESTABLISHING QUARANTINE STATION ON SWAN ISLAND

Provides an animal quarantine station on Swan Island—an isolated region in which breeding livestock coming from countries in which certain highly contagious animal diseases exist can be held under strict quarantine conditions prior to their introduction into the United States or other countries of North America.

HOUSE RESOLUTION 710, GARBAGE DISPOSAL

Provides for controlling the handling of garbage from vessels, railway cars, aircraft, and other vehicles, and the disposition thereof into territorial waters of the United States or onto land within the United States, so as to reduce the risk of diseases and to protect American agriculture and the public generally.

SOME THINGS THAT SHOULD BE ON THE AGRICULTURAL PRIORITY LIST WHEN THE EIGHTIETH CONGRESS CONVENES

I. Consolidation and coordination of agricultural lending agencies

There is great need to bring about a consolidation of all Federal agricultural lending agencies. Until this is done, the farmers of America will never have a Federal agricultural credit system that is administered in an efficient and businesslike manner and enjoys the respect and confidence that it should. The American farmers are entitled to a Federal Credit System that is just as efficient as the Federal Reserve System, and the system should enjoy and command the same confidence and respect in the field of agriculture that the Federal Reserve System commands and enjoys in the field of business and finance. The House Committee on Agriculture after thorough study and extensive hearings reported such legislation to the House—H. R. 3422—and the House by a vote of 239 to 80 put its stamp of approval upon the legislation. The legislation, however, died in the Senate

II. Fertilizer experimental pilot plants

Such legislation, H. R. 2922, was introduced during the present session, but due to other pressing matters was not considered by the committee. This should be on the must list when the Eightieth Congress convenes. While I do not believe the Government should go into the fertilizer business, I do believe that the conservation and improvement of our soil is of such national importance that it is the duty of the Government to render every reasonable assistance in its protection, improvement, and preservation. Beliving as I do, I would like to see the Government step in and set up fertilizer experimental pilot plants at such points as will serve the different sections of our country, run the plants for the length of time necessary to develop the right kinds of fertilizer needed for our different soils and demonstrate to the farmers the imperative necessity for soil improvement and care, and then turn the plants over to private industry.

III. Parity price

The inability of the farmers to regulate price, as does industry, has probably been the greatest problem that has confronted the American farmer over the years. This problem will have to be solved before we will ever be able to stabilize agriculture and place it upon a sound business basis. Of all the suggested or tried farm-price formulas the parity concept, I believe, is the soundest. It is sound because it is fair to all. It protects producers and consumers alike. Parity is a relative term. It is a price relationship and seeks to maintain the proper price relationship between those things the farmers sell and those things the farmers buy. Under it farm prices would change in order to maintain the proper relationship between what the farmers sell and what the farmers buy. Under it, for instance, if wages go down and consequently what the farmers buy costs less, farm prices would go down accordingly. In other words, it would give the farmer's dollar the same purchasing power as the consumer's dollar, and conversely, it would give the consumer's dollar the same purchasing power as the farmer's dollar. It would keep the industrial dollar, the labor dollar, and the farm dollar on a parity—on an equality. Inasmuch as farm wages are not figured in determining parity, the present parity formula does not maintain a correct price relationship. The parity formula should be revised so as to bring about a fairer price relationship, and when this is done farm wages should be written into the formula. On two occasions the House has passed such legislation. The Senate in each instance failed to act.

When we write farm labor into parity prices, however, the job is only one-half completed. It is an idle gesture to establish parity prices unless we take the next step and make parity prices effective. This is going to be a most difficult undertaking, but unless it is worked out setting up parity prices for the farmers means very little. And when it is worked out it should be worked out in such a way as to give the farmers the full parity price, and not 75 percent or 90 percent of parity. We can no more put farming on a business basis, for instance, by giving the farmers 90 percent of parity than we can place industry upon a sound business basis by cutting industrial prices to 90 percent of a fair selling price.

IV. Farm subsidies

We should continue our fight until farm subsidies are entirely eliminated. What the farmers want, and justice and fair dealings demand they have, is a fair price in the market place. The farmers, like everyone else engaged in business, want to look to the market place and not the Government for their pay.

In conclusion let me express my thanks to the committee for the constructive and far-reaching legislation it reported out and to the House for its splendid cooperation in writing that legislation into law.

This Congress has certainly demonstrated its friendship for the farmers and I know the farmers are grateful.

Compassion Would Help Cut Wrecks

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. JOHN H. FOLGER

OF NORTH CAROLINA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, August 2, 1946

Mr. FOLGER. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following newspaper article:

COMPASSION WOULD HELP CUT WRECKS

An attitude of compassion and brotherly love on the part of drivers would do much to reduce highway accidents, believes Walter L. Williams, Winston-Salem, Route 4, who has been investigating highway casualties for about 15 years. Mr. Williams' recommendation for a campaign by churches and civic groups to change the driver's attitude has been sent to Gov. Gregg Cherry for presentation to the highway safety conference in Raleigh on Thursday, June 27.

This idea of changing the attitude of drivers is an outgrowth of 15 years of accident investigation for insurance companies, and 3 years of study and planning by Mr. Williams. He feels that churches, Sunday schools, and civic groups could do a really important job in sponsoring a campaign to encourage the driver to follow the Biblical teaching, "Love thy neighbor."

EDUCATION FAILED

Mr. Williams contends that campaigns for highway safety through education have failed for the past 25 years, and that highway accidents are continuing to take a heavy toll. He believes that the only solution to the problem lies in a change in attitude by the man behind the wheel.

This teaching of drivers could be done, Mr. Williams says, through safety signs carrying slogans and quotations that inspire in drivers an attitude of compassion. That is where the churches and civic groups would come in. They would place these signs in conspicuous places on the highways and at crossroads.

Highway accident prevention, says Mr. Williams, is based on a fourfold program. Engineering, licensing, and enforcement are all important, but after these three have been carried through, the accident is referrable to the attitude of the driver. More than 90 percent of the highway deaths are due to the driver's attitude, says Mr. Williams.

BROTHER'S KEEPER

In discussing the outlook wanted in an automobile driver, Mr. Williams says that above all "instinctive and rational tendencies to save his fellow citizen from harm" should be cultivated. Mr. Williams scores the driver outlook which is summed up in Cain's rhetorical question, "Am I my brother's keeper?"

Mr. Williams says further that the self-interest motive used in industrial safety education does not tend to develop the right attitude in drivers. Nor is a courtesy campaign the answer to the problem, he says.

Justice for the Veteran

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. HADWEN C. FULLER

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, August 2, 1946

Mr. FULLER. Mr. Speaker, the outrageous practices of the War Assets Administration in dealing with veterans who are seeking surplus materials to which they are legally entitled is a chapter of shame in the administration of the Federal Government.

Many well documented cases of injustice to veterans have come to my attention, and I am pressing for a thorough and vigorous investigation of every one of them.

Veterans of my district feel they have not had a square deal from the War Assets Administration, and they are right about this. Evidently this agency is choosing to ignore the intent of the Congress to have a law on the books which would give veterans preference for surplus material. Veterans have been sent off on wild-goose chases from one end of the country to the other, while unscrupulous nonveterans, calling themselves businessman are getting all the cream intended for our fighting men.

As a veteran of World War I, I have had some experience with the way some people like to push the veterans around. It is a shame and disgrace, and not only should this practice cease at once, but the persons responsible should be brought to book and properly punished.

Two outstanding veterans in my district who have interested themselves in cleaning up this mess, and who are providing important evidence, are Alan Stevenson, of Utica, N. Y., past national commandant of the Marine Corps League, and Hollis A. Wilson, of Pulaski, N. Y., of the New York State Division of Veterans' Affairs.

I have presented this and other evidence to the House Select Committee Investigating Surplus Disposal and have requested a full investigation and hearings. That this investigation is already making some headway is evident in the recent announcement that there have been several shake-ups in the high and low command of the War Assets Administration which deals with veterans.

Public officials who deprive veterans of their rights should be given short shrift, and a full investigation of these bureaucrats by the Justice Department is also well in order, as is an investigation of these so-called businessmen who by devious and underhand methods have a pipeline to the surplus which rightfully belongs to the veteran. This outrageous performance must be cleaned up at once, and I am pledged to the fullest and most vigorous efforts in this direction.

As a further explanation of what is going on in this picture, I append an article by Mr. James C. Munn, an outstanding writer for the Associated Press at Washington.

SURPLUS GOODS IN AREA DEPOTS APPALL UTICAN—SAYS HUGE AMOUNT STILL IN VOORHEESVILLE, SCHENECTADY, ALBANY

(By James C. Munn)

WASHINGTON, August 1.—Many Members of Congress, including a number of New Yorkers, say they are irked at the way the War Assets Administration is handling disposal of surplus property to veterans.

Representative HADWEN C. FULLER, Parish Republican, sums up in this wise:

"I am not at all satisfied with the way surplus material is being handled. I want to see all veterans get a square deal and I am prepared to give my full support to a congressional investigation.

"These bureaucrats (meaning WAA officials) have a thousand regulations to prevent anyone from doing anything in a sensible way. That is how they keep themselves on the pay roll. * * * If any veteran who has a rough deal will write me about it, I will follow through as vigorously as I can."

OUTRAGEOUS PRACTICES

Fuller is particularly bitter, he says, regarding WAA's outrageous practices whereby veterans are deprived of their just rights in permitting unscrupulous persons to prey upon the returned fighting men.

FULLER said he had been informed by "an outstanding constituent" that a veteran went to Albany to pick up two bulldozers he had purchased. While there, he related, the veteran received a phone call from Rochester from a person who offered to buy the bulldozers at $3,000 more than he had paid for them.

FULLER'S informant conceded $3,000 profit "not to be a bad day's pay," but he asked:

"How did this person in Rochester know that this veteran had made the purchase before he even received the bulldozers?"

The informant, Alan Stevenson, Utica, past national commandant of the Marine Corps League, also told FULLER that he had visited surplus depots at Albany, Voorheesville, and Schenectady. He viewed at these places, he said, "an appalling amount" of material.

"At one place," he wrote, "I saw approximately 125 10-ton Army wreckers that I am told cost taxpayers about $25,000 each. I also saw hundreds of trucks, jeeps, locomotives, rollers, generators, etc.

"It is my understanding that these depots * * * are insignificant compared with other depots—Belle Mead, N. J., for example."

FULLER declared that Chairman SLAUGHTER, Democrat, of Missouri, of the House Committee on Investigation of Surplus Property said that a "full inquiry" would be made into the examples of "misuse and misconduct" that he cited.

American Veterans Protest Roxas Terror in Philippines

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. HUGH DE LACY

OF WASHINGTON

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, August 2, 1946

Mr. DE LACY. Mr. Speaker, the American Veterans of the Philippine campaign today sent a statement to President Truman praising the patriotism, courage, and self-sacrifice of Filipino guerrillas led by the Hukbalahap—People's Anti-Japanese Army.

Protesting the "inhuman campaign of extermination" now being waged by President Roxas against these guerrillas, the covering letter called on President Truman to withhold arms from the Philippine Army and to protest the slaughter of innocent peasants. The letter charged that former collaborators who traitorously served the Japanese are now in control of the government, and are trying to wipe out patriots who helped United States armed forces during the Japanese occupation and saved the lives of many Americans.

The full text of the statement which was signed by 135 veterans follows:

We, veterans of the United States armed forces who served in the Philippines, salute the Hukbalahap (People's Anti-Japanese Army), leading Filipino guerrilla organization, and condemn the present campaign against it.

We are part of the countless American servicemen and servicewomen who are alive today because of the heroism and self-sacrifice of the Hukbalahap and other Filipino guerrilla fighters. That is a debt we shall never forget.

For more than 3 years the Hukbalahap were a constant thorn in the side of the Japanese. The Hukbalahap alone killed more than 25,000 Japanese, spies and traitors, and fought over 1,200 engagements with the enemy. Many towns and villages in central Luzon were liberated by the Huks without the firing of a single American shot. It was the Hukbalahap which provided the major forces for the thrilling attack which liberated the American prisoners of war at Cabanatuan.

Expressing the sentiments of many American fighting men, Major General Decker, chief of staff of the United States Sixth Army, declared that the Huk is "one of the best fighting units I have ever known."

The Philippines are the only dependency in the Far East which produced a large guerrilla army; yet we continue to maintain great concentrations of American troops in the midst of this friendly, allied people. American arms have been loaned to Philippine armies directed by former collaborators, and the Bloom bill (H. R. 6572) proposes further arms to the Philippine armed forces. These arms are being used to terrorize the Huks. The Associated Press reported on May 5, 1946, that armed searching parties were roaming the countryside for Huks.

Manuel Roxas, elected President of the Philippines thanks to United States intervention in his behalf, refuses to seat the Hukbalahap and Democratic Alliance leaders elected to the new Philippine Congress.

Tomas Confessor, famous guerilla leader and new minority leader in the Philippine Senate, declared in May: "Fascism now is on the march in the Philippines. The majority party senators in the opening session, determined to curtail the rights of the minority, have taken pernicious antidemocratic steps."

GI's now stationed in the Philippines, at a meeting in May of the Manila Chapter of the American Veterans' Committee, adopted a resolution paying tribute to the Hukbalahap as the representatives of "the finest sons of the Filipino people." They condemned the "Fascist attack" of Filipino MP's on the Filipino people and appealed to the American people to bring the campaign of "Fascist oppression in the Philippines to an end."

As ex-GI's who have learned the truth about the state of affairs in the Philippines firsthand, we endorse the appeal issued by the servicemen now in Manila.

We call for an immediate end to the drive to wipe out the Huks, a drive being conducted by Filipino MP's with American arms, who are still under the jurisdiction of the United States Army.

We urge the prompt withdrawal of United States armed forces from the Philippines; we urge the defeat of the Bloom bill, H. R. 6572.

We urge the withdrawal of American aid and assistance to the Fascist forces, led by President Roxas, in the Philippines.

"How Many Billions Were Given Away?" —Comptroller General Warren Before the Mead Committee

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. RICHARD B. WIGGLESWORTH
OF MASSACHUSETTS
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Thursday, August 1, 1946

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks, I include at this time portions of an article by William Odlin, Jr., appearing in the Washington Times-Herald of July 30, 1946, commenting on the testimony of Comptroller General Warren before the Mead committee and entitled "United States Lost Billions by Army's Laxity, Warren Tells Probe":

UNITED STATES LOST BILLIONS BY ARMY'S LAXITY, WARREN TELLS PROBE

(By William Odlin, Jr.)

Senate war rackets investigators yesterday received from President Truman a new weapon with which to battle fraudulent munitions dealers when the Chief Executive signed an order making the Internal Revenue return of every person in the country available for the scrutiny of Mead committee agents.

This blanket authority came on the heels of testimony by Comptroller General Lindsay Warren that even common decency was lacking in war contract settlements that have cost taxpayers billions of dollars in funds wasted and stolen.

CAN CHECK PROFITEERS

Income-tax inspection by the Senate probers will result in their obtaining vital evidence on the shady dealings of war profiteers before these individuals and corporations know they are under investigation.

In the past the committee has been handicapped in its investigation by the sudden disappearance of records and accounts just before their subpenas are presented.

Warren took advantage of his appearance before the committee to flay the laxity of Federal war contract regulations that enabled "everybody and his brother (to go) out to get the Government during the lush war years."

SCORED ARMY OFFICERS

He reviewed his futile attempts to have enacted legislation "to prohibit this nefarious practice" and scored Army officers "who were downright sociable" and engaged in afterhour pleasures with contractors with whom they were dealing.

Policing powers of his Government Accounting Office were virtually nil because of the "abuse of vastly broadened authority given to the procurement agencies under the guise of war" and the "degeneration of moral standards which led inevitably to conditions such as this committee has uncovered," Warren declared.

Using unusually blunt language for the head of an executive agency, Warren was visibly angered by the break-down of fiscal safeguards that the Government allowed during its greatest era of spending.

OBTAINED CASH REFUNDS

At one point he rose from his seat on the witness stand and waved a handful of papers from which he read the names of nationally known firms from which his auditors had enacted "cash on the barrel head" refunds of excess payments.

He emphatically pointed out that the only type of contracts his auditors were allowed to check were cost-plus agreements, many of which were changed by Government representatives to fixed-price arrangements. Such a change prohibited a GAO check.

Warren's condemnation of the Renegotiation Act, under which billions of dollars' worth of war contracts were negotiated, was scathing. The act does not provide for the GAO to have power of audit on settlements determined under the act except when fraud is evident.

LITTLE EVIDENCE OF FRAUD

Under questioning by George Meader, chief committee counsel, Warren admitted that there would be little evidence of fraud unless some independent Government agency was allowed to scrutinize accounts of the contracting firms.

In this type of agreement, he said, the GAO's function is limited to "seeing that payments (limited or otherwise) wind up to be the total sum promised in the contract."

He mentioned that the Garsson brothers' "paper empire," whose $78,000,000 worth of Government contracts comprise the principal business on the committee's agenda, benefited under this type of contract.

Warren explained that the War Powers Act and the Presidential order placing it in effect gave contracting officers untold power.

"Here," he said, "is an example of the break-down of moral standards.

"As far back as 1872, Congress enacted a law which banned former officers and employees of the Government from prosecuting pending claims against the United States within 2 years after leaving the service. The law remained substantially unimpaired until the Revenue Act of 1943 made it largely inapplicable to certain officers. Who were these officers?

"Were they in the Department of Agriculture or GAO? Of course not. They were the officers and employees of the War, Navy, and Treasury Departments, and the Maritime Commission, the big war procurement agencies."

SIMILAR ATTEMPTS BEFORE

"In the Spanish-American War, a strong and determined effort was made to break down this statute. In World War I there was a similar effort. This time it was broken down, and the chief leaders in breaking it down were the officers of the War Department.

"There have been various efforts to restore the law, and the lobbying against the effort is terrific."

"By the Army?" asked FERGUSON.

"Yes," Warren replied, "and by the Navy, Treasury, and Maritime Commission.

"Now comes the last straw. They are not satisfied to wait until their connection with the Government is broken, but they want to come in and prosecute claims while still wearing the uniform of their country."

HAVE ACCESS TO RECORDS

"Just last week, without a vote the Senate adopted an amendment to the GI leave bill which would permit even officers on terminal leave to prosecute claims against the Government if they have not been directly connected with the subject matter.

"They are not even waiting until they get out of uniform, but are working while they still have access to the records.

"The ban against acting on matters with which they have been connected does not stop them. Jones can scratch Smith's back and Smith can scratch Jones'. They can act as counsel, agent or attorney for any company they choose.

"Personally I think it is damnable.

"We have evidence and the names of three contracting and contract termination officers who, as soon as they had completed termination (final settlement) of contracts, went to work for the companies whose contracts they had terminated."

"Is that becoming a custom?" asked Ferguson.

"Yes," answered Warren.

Turning from the collection to the army contracts again, Warren praised the $1 a year men who came to Washington but conceded that some of them had favored their own companies with fat contracts.

Telling of the "low moral standard" of some of those connected with war contracts, Warren read a report he had presented to another congressional committee:

"Large numbers of contracting officers are of proven inefficiency and incapacity. It has been officially reported to me that a great many of them constantly fraternize with the contractor after working hours, golfing, dining, and wining with them."

SURPLUS SOLD AS SCRAP

"These reports say that this intimate relationship has the tendency to make them more liberal in their dealings with the contractor. In some instances they have approved purchases far beyond the contract needs and the surplus resulting is sold for scrap."

In support of his insistence that the GAO should have accountants on the scene to audit all war contracts, Warren cited the following examples of how his men saved the taxpayers funds:

"Boeing Aircraft Co.—GAO auditors at contractor's plant questioned failure of the contractor to credit the Government with refunds from vendors. As a result we collected and turned back into the Treasury $1,567,411 that the Treasury would never have seen had we not been there.

"Lockheed Aircraft Corporation—Auditor at the contractor's plant questioned failure to credit the Government with the value of Government-owned surplus sold to the contractor. As a result we collected $1,074,812."

CREDIT FOR BOMBER PARTS

"Consolidated Vultee Aircraft Corp.—Auditors at the plant questioned the failure of the contractor to credit the Government with the value of parts removed from bomber planes converted to transport planes under a cost-plus-fixed-fee contract, the said parts being retained by the contractor and used in the performance of fixed price contracts—$2,367,909.

"Bell Aircraft Corp.—Auditors at the plant questioned reimbursements to the contractor for amortization charges. * * * Since such charges had been fully amortized under prior commercial and Government fixed price contracts—$1,299,000."

Warren continued with a long list of collections, all from Army contractors.

Operation of the Coal Mines

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. CHARLES R. ROBERTSON

OF NORTH DAKOTA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, August 2, 1946

Mr. ROBERTSON of North Dakota. Mr. Speaker, it is inconceivable in the United States of America that the operations of the coal mines should continue under the direction of the United States Government. These mines were seized more than 2 months ago by the Secretary of the Interior, Julius A Krug. The Secretary, in turn, made a contract between labor and the Government, labor being represented by John L. Lewis. The mine owners were not a party to the contract.

There may be many conditions in which the operators of mines have dealt unfairly with their employees. The question involved here is not one of labor and capital but rather it is a question of governmental policy. If this is to be the policy of the Federal Government in the future that is before us, there is little likelihood that the free enterprise system can prevail. Surely risk capital will take for cover. There will be little business expansion and the country will have reason to be deeply concerned, regardless of the size of the business, lest it be disturbed by this governmental policy.

Under unanimous consent, I ask permission to include herewith an editorial entitled "Federal Operation of Mines Held Precursor of Socialism," by E. T. Leech, editor of the Pittsburgh Press, published in the New York World-Telegram, Monday, July 22, 1946:

[From the New York World-Telegram of July 22, 1946]

FEDERAL OPERATION OF MINES HELD PRECURSOR OF SOCIALISM—SEIZED 2 MONTHS AGO, OWNERS NOT PARTY IN CONTRACT—COURTS BELIEVED STYMIED, UNIONS BEHIND POLICY

(By E. T. Leech, editor, the Pittsburgh Press)

PITTSBURGH, PA., July 22.—Two months ago the Government seized the coal mines. It still has them.

On the day before Memorial Day, Interior Secretary Krug made a labor contract between the Government and John L. Lewis—a contract to which the mine owners were not a party and which they claim was reached without their knowledge or consent. The mines are still operating under that contract.

No negotiations are going on between the union and the mine owners. Mr. Lewis is on a trip. There isn't any indication when—if ever—the mines will be returned to private ownership. And there is increasing prospect that some of them never will be

NATIONALIZED BY DEFAULT

With the passage of time it becomes increasingly apparent that the coal mines have been virtually nationalized by default. It has been done without public approval or congressional legislation.

What happened in England only after a national election and parliamentary action took place almost overnight in the United States by executive edict. One of the most momentous changes in our history was made in spite of our constitutional system of checks and balances, representative government, and protection of property rights.

It was done under legal fiction—the claim that America is at war. The coal mines are being run under war powers more than 14 months after Germany surrendered and almost a year since the surrender of Japan.

FORMER OWNERS IGNORED

The Government takes the position that the coal mines no longer belong to their former owners—and that their former owners have no rights as regards their operation. It even claims that the owners have no right to appeal to the courts.

The Jones & Laughlin Steel Corp. recently did go to court in an effort to keep the Government from entering into a union contract covering the foremen in its mines.

Harry I. Rand, of the Department of Justice, appeared before the United States Court for the District of Columbia as representative of the Coal Mines Administrator and the National Labor Relations Board. As part of his plea he declared:

"It is our further position that even if the defendants (the Government) might be exceeding their powers under the statutes, the court has no authority to review the actions taken by those defendants.

COURT SEEN POWERLESS

This seems to mean that even if the Government seizes property illegally the courts can't do anything about it.

As for the position of the coal operators, Mr. Rand gave them the bum's rush in these words:

"It is our position essentially, first, that the United States Government, in the operation of properties which it constructs or acquires, has the same authority to do with those properties and to deal with respect to them as any private proprietor has, and that no stranger to the operation has the standing in any court of law or court of equity to challenge the method of operation of these properties."

The "stranger to the operation" means the companies which actually owned the mines before they were seized—and which are still running them under Government direction because there isn't anybody else able to do so.

The coal operators have not only lost their mines—but they have become strangers to the business.

This situation not only represents a momentous change in our attitude toward private property—but it may involve an equally radical change in our system of collective bargaining. The strange part of it is that the union leaders don't seem to realize that this easy disregard for property rights can also become an equal menace to union rights.

There has been a tendency to follow the Lewis pattern in other labor disputes involving vital industries. This pattern is to force Government seizure of the properties so that a labor contract can be entered into directly with the Government rather than the owners—the belief being that the Government will be more liberal.

That pattern eventually would mean that the Government would make all important labor contracts. Wages, hours, and working conditions would become a matter of Government policy—that is, of political manipulation—rather than of free collective bargaining.

UNIONS COULD OVERPLAY HAND

Such a development could end free collective bargaining and lead to some form of state unionism, such as Germany and Italy had under Hitler and Mussolini.

And where would the union leaders be then?

The answer, of course, is that they would become "strangers to the operation" just as has happened to the mine owners.

This question of what eventually happens to the coal mines is one of the most vital that has confronted the United States. It involves fundamenal questions of property and individual rights. It could—I don't say it will—be the start of a system of national socialism in this country.

The next few months will tell. The wonder of it all thus far has been how easily the job was done under our constitutional system that has withstood so many other attempted inroads. Just by a few words by one man.

We March for Justice

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. JAMES C. AUCHINCLOSS

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, August 2, 1946

Mr. AUCHINCLOSS. Mr. Speaker, I am glad to have an opportunity to have printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD the remarks, We March for Justice, an address made by Rabbi Edwart T. Sandrow at the Washington Monument on the occasion of the veterans' rally held in Washington on July 15, 1946.

On this occasion delegations from many posts of the Jewish War Veterans of the United States came to Washington to appeal to Members of Congress and the President for prompt consideration of the serious situation in Palestine. It was my privilege to meet with groups that came from my district in New Jersey and I was very much impressed with their sincerity and eagerness to do something constructive.

Many of them have friends and relatives who have suffered torture and death in the stricken areas of Europe and their desire for justice is enhanced by this personal feeling of wrong which they have.

More than 20 years ago, Justice Louis D. Brandeis in a mood of hopefulness and convinced of the just character of the world's great democracies called upon America to make real the brotherhood of man. He said, "The suffering of the Jews due to injustice continuing throughout nearly twenty centuries is the greatest tragedy in history. Never was the aggregate of such suffering larger than today. Never were the injustices more glaring." A great American said that. Not today or yesterday. More than 20 years ago. Justice Brandeis felt that by deep sympathy, by a passion for the righteousness of the cause of the Jew and all oppressed peoples, America could become a more effective instrument for democracy * * * That was in the years following the Balfour Declaration in which Great Britain promised the Jews a national home in Palestine using the following words:

"His Majesty's Government view with favor the establishment in Palestine of a national home for the Jewish people, and will use their best endeavors to facilitate the achievement of this object."

This statement was issued in the name of the British War Cabinet on November 2, 1917. It was confirmed by joint resolution of the Sixty-seventh Congress of the United States, approved by President Woodrow Wilson and by all Presidents since his day.

If President Wilson and Justice Brandeis and other great prophets of democracy were alive, they would be shocked by the shameful, cold-blooded, and criminal disregard not only of promises made and repeated, but of the simple right of a suffering people to peace and freedom.

That is why we veterans—men and women—who have served in all branches of the armed forces of our beloved America are here today. We have come to Washington with the good wishes of millions of our Christian comrades who know us and with whom we fought side by side in all the battle fronts of the world. Together—as Americans—and with the air of our allies—the British, the Russians, the French, the Chinese, the unsung heroes of Czechoslovakia, of Greece, of the Philippines, and of Palestine—we have restored oppressed peoples to their homes. Prague is Czech. Brussels is Belgian. Paris is French. Warsaw is Polish. Only the European Jew remains in the shadow of homelessness. We are here to ask why. Why should that be?

Al Smith, another great American, loyal to his religious and national heritage as we are to ours, often said, "Let's look at the record." What does our record show? Six million Jews, allies of our allies, were slaughtered in Europe by the Nazis and Fascists. These 6,000,000 were a blood offering given by our people for a United Nations victory. These 6,000,000 were gassed, burned, buried alive. The whole world knows that. But we gave more than that. Over 1,000,000 Jews fought in the armies of the United Nations alongside Protestants and Catholics.

Five hundred and fifty thousand American Jews were in the various branches of the Armed Forces of our country. Thousands were killed and wounded on every beachhead, island, and battlefront. We did our duty as loyal citizens of America and firm believers in America's cause for which we staked our lives and our fortunes. Thousands of our faith were awarded decorations for valor and distinguished service. Many of you here today wear your decorations with just pride. More than that! Were the Poles Allies? Of course they were. And in the ranks of Polish legions were Jews, many of them coming from cities darkened by the horrible disgrace of recent pogroms. When the Free French were recruiting in the Middle East, a high response came from French Jews. And, wasn't it Winston Churchill who spoke of the war effort of Jews within the British Empire and said "They rendered magnificent service." There were Jews in the guerilla armies of Greece and Yugoslavia, of Norway and the Netherlands.

Jews fought and died, for their own freedom and for the salvation of a world which was becoming enslaved. They fought for those freedoms enunciated by the leaders of the United Nations. They believed in that design envisioned by President Franklin D. Roosevelt—a world where the Four Freedoms would become a reality. We fought so that the survivors of concentration camps who today degenerate physically and mentally can have a chance to rehabilitate their lives in a land which is home to them. They wait for pledges admitting them to that land to be fulfilled.

Is it necessary to review pledges made by Britain and not kept? Promises rendered to the Jewish people in peace and in war; vows uttered, which, if kept, could have saved millions from gas chambers and crematories? We believed Britain when she assured us over a period of years that all "efforts would be made to facilitate the establishment of a national home for the Jewish people." We accepted her assertions that commissions of inquiry and Government studies would in the end enable her to fulfill her plighted word. When the Anglo-American commission finally decided that a partial solution to the problem of the Jewish displaced persons in Europe was to transplant 100,000 of them to Palestine. Britain answered by assault and oppression. Instead of responding to the demands of justice and suffering, instead of remembering that in Palestine Britain and the United Nations had their staunchest allies among the Jewish population, the British wantonly attacked Jewish settlements, imprisoned Jewish leaders, herded men and women into concentration camps—while the 100,000 waited in vain for admission to the only place to which they desire to go; to Palestine, where 600,000 Jews—resolute, strong, hard-working, democratic—await them.

We veterans know what role Palestine has played in the war effort. So do the British people, even though their leaders have made a dishonest effort to hide the true facts from them. The British people know that during the war "services were accepted by His Majesty's Government from Jews in Palestine—some of which put the highest demands on the courage and loyalty of the men and women chosen to carry them out." Prof. L. B. Namier, of the University of Manchester, England, tells us that Palestine Jews "were parachuted into German-occupied territories, where some of them paid the supreme penalty under torture. * * * Members of Haganah (the Jewish self-defense units which Jews in Palestine will never surrender) went ahead of the British forces in Syria to capture strategic bridges. * * * When the British Army in Palestine required specially trained men for technical work or men to answer sudden calls, they would apply to the Jewish agency and, in the first place, to Moshe Shertok, now imprisoned."

The only genuine allies the United States had in the Middle East were the Jews of Palestine. Jews created war industries. Until the Mediterranean was cleared of the enemy, Palestine was the only place where British ships were repaired—machine parts, medicines, optical instruments manufactured. Between thirty and forty thousand Jews were in the military service. The rest of the Jewish population made Palestine the arsenal of democracy in the Middle East. Jews went sugarless, eggless, meatless for a United Nations victory. No other people in Palestine or its environs made such sacrifices. And for this war effort, Jewish Agency members are imprisoned and Jewish colonies turned into trenches and barracks. Some of you here today remember those colonies. You and many of your Christian buddies wanted furloughs in Palestine when you served in France, Italy, North Africa, Iran, etc. Why? Because only in that small land were you able to find modern, hygienic accommodations—only there were three modern hospitals and clinics and the cleanliness that marks a progressive society.

We came here today to cry out, with all the energy we can muster up, against the injustices to which our people have been subjected. We refuse to stand idly by and see pledged words broken. That is not why we went to war. There can be no peace for us as Americans while hundreds of thousands of our people are trapped on a continent where they have known much sorrow and tragedy these last years since the First World War. They must go home, and that home must be Palestine. We are not here to argue politics. We are here to present a clear case of justice and humanitarianism. We call upon our Government to demand of Great Britain, for those people Americans will be taxed to meet the British loan, that the unanimous recommendation of the Anglo-American Commission to bring 100,000 Jews to Palestine be implemented immediately. These people must be permited to leave the lands where they were and are persecuted, to take up life anew in a community whose arms open for a hearty welcome to them. We are proud that President Truman has, in the face of British duplicity and delay, repeatedly stated his desire to save these lives. It was our commander-in-chief who in asking for this humanitarian step asserted America's true destiny as a great democratic power. We look to our President to arouse the conscience to the end that 100,000 Jews may be admited to Palestine immediately, and that the solemn promise made to the Jews of Palestine, who have shown exemplary self-discipline and self-sacrifice, as well as to the Jewish people everywhere may be honored.

That is why we have come to Washington from all parts of the country. That is why we have marched. The whole problem of human dignity and freedom brought us here. That is why we will not rest until peace comes to the Jew and to mankind.

Senseless and Highhanded Interference by the Children's Bureau

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. WALTER H. JUDD
OF MINNESOTA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Friday, August 2, 1946

Mr. JUDD. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks, I include a news story and an editorial from St. Paul, Minn., papers as a sample of the apparently incurable tendency on the part of some Federal bureaus to want to extend Federal control over welfare activities which properly belong and are under the direction of the individual States. The Congress appropriates money to assist the States in their own child-welfare programs, not to dominate or control those programs. No authority is given by Congress for the Children's Bureau to exercise such dominance and its urges in that direction should be restrained:

[From the St. Paul (Minn.) Dispatch of July 29, 1946]

CHARGES HURLED IN CHILD WELFARE FUND DISPUTE—WASHINGTON POLICY HIT AS BUREAUCRATIC—KATHARINE LENROOT FLAYED FOR WITHHOLDING ALLOTMENT

The Federal Children's Bureau at Washington was charged today with withholding child-welfare funds from Minnesota through a bureaucratic move to obtain unjustified influence in welfare administration in this State.

Source of the charge is Jarle Leirfallom, director of the Minnesota division of social welfare.

He leveled the accusation at Katharine Lenroot, Chief of the Children's Bureau, as a result of the Bureau's action in withholding a $90,000 allotment for child-welfare work in rural Minnesota.

The Bureau today agreed to release allotments due for work until October 1, but the controversy continues unsettled.

Leirfallom said today that the basis of the argument is a demand by the Bureau that the State set up minimum civil-service requirements, meeting standards fixed by Washington, for employment of child-welfare personnel.

The Children's Bureau insists on these minimum standards while at the same time admitting that administration of child welfare work in this State is perfectly satisfactory, Leirfallom asserted.

"Miss Lenroot is sticking her nose into something that is none of her business," Leirfallom said today. "She has no criticism whatever of the way we handle child welfare work, but, nevertheless, she insists on regulating employment of personnel.

"We don't have minimum civil-service requirements for personnel because we don't think they are necessary. We employ our workers under standards of experience, proved performance and examinations.

"We don't believe a person has to have 4 years at Vassar or be a Yale graduate to be qualified to fill a position."

Leirfallom also set forth that under Federal statutes affecting the allotments, no civil-service system of any kind is required, much less minimum standards.

"We've got the civil-service system and the Bureau admits our administration is on a high level," he said. "There is no justification of any kind for the Bureau's stand in this matter.

"Miss Lenroot is attempting to gain influence for the Federal bureaucracy in something that is entirely within the jurisdiction of the State of Minnesota."

[From the St. Paul (Minn.) Pioneer Press of July 30, 1946]

SENSELESS AND HIGHHANDED

The Federal Children's Bureau is worshiping form for form's sake in its dispute with the Minnesota Social Welfare Division over the Federal allotment for child welfare work in rural areas of the State. The two agencies disagree on rules concerning State personnel engaged in this work. There is no dispute, however, as to the quality of child welfare work in this State. The quality is high. The Federal agency simply objects to the way the State agency gets good results. It wants more arbitrary standards to determine whether the personnel is qualified.

Such senseless disputes lend credence to to charges recently made by a witness before the House Labor Subcommittee, who accused the Federal Children's Bureau of being so immersed in administrative operating details that it loses sight of its reason for existence, which is to promote child welfare. One of the charges is more serious. It is that the Bureau has become more interested in extension of its authority than in child welfare. This also is essentially the accusation made by Director Leirfallom, of the Minnesota Social Welfare Division.

Whatever the motives of the Federal bureau, it is clearly allowing petty details to get in the way of the program it is supposed to be administering. With almost equal certainty, it is attempting to dictate in matters in which it has no proper authority.

These are the faults which bring bureaucracy into disrepute and make bureaucrats out of conscientious public servants almost without their own recognition of the fact.

Draining the Treasury

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. GEORGE B. SCHWABE
OF OKLAHOMA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Friday, August 2, 1946

Mr. SCHWABE of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, the following editorial from the Tulsa (Okla.) Daily World of July 30, 1946, is a good statement of the high appreciation the public is pleased to express for the testimony given by Comptroller General Lindsay Warren in his recent appearance before the Congressional investigating committee:

DRAINING THE TREASURY

According to Comptroller General Lindsay Warren, the cost-plus system "is the greatest device ever invented for pumping out the Treasury." He was alluding to the great profits due to cost plus and to the double pay drawn by many and the general run-around given the fiscal authorities.

Mr. Warren's testimony is of high value. He has been before the committees several times and the country generally has seen the purport of his statements. Apparently he believed a better system of auditing—a requirement that everything go through the Accounting Office—would prevent great abuse and save an indefinite number of billions of dollars. He says the auditing department is "the last bulwark against unbridled and illegal expenditures of public funds."

Specifically, the Comptroller complained about high officials of the Government accepting lavish entertainment from contractors and agents at the same time drawing good expense accounts from the Government. This was apparently in allusion to disclosures in the war-profits investigations. Many an official, many a high officer in the Army, was transported, fed, wined and otherwise beguiled on a double schedule. Meanwhile the country was dishing out money by the barrel.

The liberalization of Government contract practice in wartime was probably necessary, but it has been carried to a ruinous extreme. The procurement agencies got too many powers and too-broad powers. The current scandals are just one of the outcroppings of that license. Congress will probably be urged to pass some more antiprofit acts, and the munition inquiry should aid materially in bringing this about. The cost-plus system was the villain of the peace in World War I and World War II and is still prospering.

A Plea for Human Rights for the Baltic States

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. MARTIN GORSKI
OF ILLINOIS
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Friday, August 2, 1946

Mr. GORSKI. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include therein a plea for human rights for the Baltic States, which was published by the League for the Liberation of Lithuania:

A PLEA FOR HUMAN RIGHTS FOR THE BALTIC STATES

In the name of justice, for which millions have fought and thousands never returned, we beseech you to put an end to the suffering, degradation, denial of freedom, liberty and independence to those who are entitled to it by our own and our allied commitments in the Atlantic Charter, the "four freedoms" and many utterances made by our leaders.

The war is over, yet the same concentration camps that were operated by the Nazis are full again, supervised by the Soviets. Many of the occupants are Fascists or those who sought refuge from the Soviet brand of liberation, which spelled liquidation or deportation to Siberian labor camps for no other reason save that they refused to subscribe to the communistic way of life.

The countries that were occupied by aggression for the sole purpose of war contingency, are still occupied and its people are denied their inalienable rights to freedom and independence.

The Peace Conference now in session in Paris should place the question of the Baltic States on its agenda as a real test case. This will prove to them and the world that the United Nations is a factor in instituting and preserving a just peace, but not peace at a price of annihilation of smaller nations, and creation of a superdictatorship, where all human rights are denied.

We, as Americans of Lithuanian descent, representing over one million Americans, respectfully request that the American delegation to the Peace Conference demand that Soviet Russia withdraw its armies and all other agencies from Lithuania and the Baltic States, that they repatriate all the prisoners and deportees from Siberia and other parts of the USSR, and that we allow all the refugees, now in American and British zones of occupation in Germany and elsewhere, to return to a free and independent Lithuania, under supervision of Allied commission and then allow the Lithuanian nation to conduct a free and unmolested election, so as to form a government such as the Lithuanian nation desires, without the coercion or duress of foreign occupational armies.

The war is over. We are feeding these refugees who could feed themselves, and be happier for it, if they had a free country to return to. They would become useful to themselves and to their fellow men. The United Nations should take a firm stand and demand justice and avoid appeasement, temporizing, and power politics, thus demonstrating its right of existence.

We fought for freedom of man; now it is up to our leaders, to see to it that a just peace is established and maintained. In conclusion, we beg you, in the name of humanity and justice, to use your good offices to establish justice and freedom for all suppressed nations and to live up to our peace aims.

We have the honor to remain,
Yours very truly,

RFC Loans to Kaiser Interests

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. RICHARD B. WIGGLESWORTH
OF MASSACHUSETTS
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Friday, August 2, 1946

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. Mr. Speaker, with further reference to my remarks in reference to the enormous financial assistance by this administration to the Kaiser interests through the Reconstruction Finance Corporation and other means, I include at this point in the RECORD a brief dispatch by the Associated Press appearing in the Washington Post of August 2, 1946:

ROOSEVELT-KAISER TICKET CONSIDERED IN 1944—ROSENMAN

NEW YORK, August 1.—Judge Samuel I. Rosenman, adviser to the late President Roosevelt, said today that for a short time in 1944 the wartime President "was thinking of Henry J. Kaiser—as a liberal industrialist—as a possible Vice Presidential candidate."

Rosenman's comment was made in connection with an article in the current issue of Collier's magazine in which Writer Lester Velie said "political machine bosses turned thumbs down" on Kaiser.

The former Presidential adviser declined further comment on the magazine story which said that Kaiser was summoned to Hyde Park by the President in July 1944 to learn that Mr. Roosevelt "looked on him favorably for Vice President."

Petroleum Prices

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. JOHN PHILLIPS
OF CALIFORNIA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, August 2, 1946

Mr. PHILLIPS. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD, I wish to insert the following letter addressed to the Chairman of the Decontrol Board of OPA by the preseident of the Independent Petroleum & Consumers Association of California. The letter is self-explanatory.

INDEPENDENT PETROLEUM AND CONSUMERS ASSOCIATION,
Los Angeles, Calif., July 30, 1946.

Hon. ROY L. THOMPSON,
Chairman, Board of Decontrol,
Office of Price Administration,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: While the measure extending the life of the Office of Price Administration may not be all that could be desired, it does plainly and definitely reflect the intent of the Congress to return our country to its constitutional basis of free enterprise for all industry under the natural and immutable law of supply and demand. The creation of the Board over which you preside is the clearest proof of that intent.

In good time the petroleum industry will come under the scrutiny of the members of your honorable Board, and you will find it well organized, both for efficiency and open-market price control. The efficiency was demonstrated throughout the period of war emergency, with all abortive attempts at Government control proving a hindrance instead of an aid, and with the price structure frozen under the OPA despite the constantly mounting costs of production, processing, and distribution.

We believe that the balance between the independents and the major organizations in the oil industry is responsible for the competitive open market which has been maintained through the years, with the prewar price of gasoline (the price today) plus taxes, remaining at the same level it was four decades ago, when the general use of automotive power began to increase the demand for the product which is so vitally important to our way of life at the moment. Can this be said of any other product in general demand?

In California we have been fortunate in maintaining the independent-major organization balance without any governmental control (except that of the war emergency), even though the independents have twice been forced to invoke the referendum to turn back State control which might have taken the form of major monopoly.

And here let me call attention to the fact that although the petroleum industry of California has been entirely free from governmental control over a period of 30 days, there has been no rise whatever in the price of crude petroleum or its products. Certainly this shows no disposition toward an inflationary stampede or a runaway market, and permit me to venture the prediction that there will be none.

For upward of 3 years a reasonable rise in the price of petroleum and its products has been clearly indicated by reason of increased costs, and cannot longer be denied, either with or without artificial control, if the industry is expected to maintain production and exploration.

Authoritative data is immediately available for all phases of the petroleum industry—production, demand and reserves, imports and exports. Today demand for gasoline is at an all-time peak. People are pouring over the border into California in unprecedented numbers—the vacation-hungry and the prospective settler—the great majority motor-borne and buyers of gasoline.

Press dispatches inform us that the first use of our British loan will be for the purchase of gasoline, and due to war dislocations in petroleum-producing and processing centers abroad, undoubtedly England will look to this country for her increasing supplies of gasoline.

All these are matters to be considered by a fact-finding body, together with the capacity and the ability of an industry to meet demand, and we ask that you file this communication for reference in connection with any inquiry which your board may conduct. We pledge you to do our best to furnish any information which you may require as to all phases of the industry in California.

Very truly yours,
INDEPENDENT PETROLEUM & CONSUMERS ASSN.,
By J. A. SMITH, President.

Elections in Tennessee

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. CLARENCE J. BROWN
OF OHIO
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, August 2, 1946

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, on July 13, 1946, Congressman JOHN JENNINGS, Jr., of Tennessee, brought to the attention of this body the deplorable conditions prevailing in Tennessee where Democratic election officials by fraud and terror have been depriving citizens of the right to vote. Repeatedly, he gave notice of the unlawful conditions there existing. I direct your attention to the Appendix to the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, page A4099, page A4147, and page A4151. Again on July 20, Representative JENNINGS referred to the subject on pages A4293, A4298, and A4301.

Evidence of what happened through the conspiracy of the two Democratic election commissioners in the appointment of officers and in the conduct of the November 1944 election for the election of presidential electors and a Members of Congress is in the hands of the Department of Justice and has been prior to and subsequent to the November elections of 1944. If any prosecutions result they must be in the Federal court. None can be had in the criminal court for McMinn County. All the machinery for the enforcement of the law in McMinn County is absolutely under the control of the machine.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, on July 24 Representative JENNINGS again told the House of corrupt conditions prevailing in Tennessee and as to which the Department of Justice failed to act. See the Appendix to the RECORD on page A4368 for remarks under the title, "Bullies of the Ballot Box and Thieves of Elections Prepare To Again Rob the People of McMinn County of Their Right To Vote." The evidence submitted by Judge JENNINGS also touched upon "the attitude of the Truman administration toward the purity of the ballot box" in reference at page A4151 of the Appendix to the RECORD. It is time we took notice of the Crump and Pendergast machines and the political manipulations of these people in high place.

Yesterday, August 1, the State-wide primaries were held in Tennessee. Representative JENNINGS' predictions have been borne out in full. How long are the American people to tolerate an administration of justice which fails to act when action is clearly required? How long are our laws to be administered to suit the private interpretations of officials of the Department of Justice who disregard their plain duty or who pervert the expressed will of Congress to partisan political ends? I hold in my hand the Washington Post for Friday, August 2, 1946, bearing a front page, five-column headline reading "Veterans Storming Jail in Tennessee Vote Fray; State Guard Called Out."

A deputy has been killed. A score have been wounded. Under leave to extend my remarks, I include the entire article, which follows:

VETERANS STORMING JAIL IN TENNESSEE VOTE FRAY—STATE GUARD CALLED OUT—DEPUTY KILLED, SCORE WOUNDED—GI-FUSION TICKET BUCKED MACHINE

ATHENS, TENN., August 1.—A crowd estimated at 1,000 persons stormed the two-story jail here tonight with tommy guns, rifles, shotguns, and pistols and killed a deputy sheriff standing guard with other officers entrenched in and around the red-brick building. At least 20 persons had been wounded in the rioting.

At Nashville, Col. Hilton Butler tonight ordered the Tennessee State Guard to this riot-torn city in eastern Tennessee. The Sixth Regiment, which has troops in Chattanooga, was dispatched toward the scene.

The slain officer was lying in the jailhouse yard in the line of fire and no one could get to the body to identify him.

Gunfire rattled from the crowd and was returned from some 200 officers barricaded in the jail.

Scores of war veterans were among the mob attacking the jail.

Their leader, Jim Buttran, was directing their fight from the headquarters of the GI Nonpartisan League. The disorders were the result of a bitter county primary fight.

THREATEN TO KILL HOSTAGES

Deputies inside the jail shouted to the crowd that, unless the assault ceased, three of the war veterans being held would be shot and killed.

About a score of war veterans had been arrested during the afternoon and early evening as the result of fist fights between two election factions

Two of the hostages whom they threatened to kill were Tom Dooley, son of an Athens auto dealer, and Felix Herrod, son of a groceryman.

Hundreds of war veterans from Blount County were reported en route here to aid the crowd assaulting the jail. They were coming by cars and busses.

The disorders here followed the killing of Jake Tipton, 65, who was shot to death in Backwoods Vale precinct in adjoining Monroe County. It was not known immediately if his death was connected with the trouble here.

Lowell F. Arterburn, publisher of the Athens Post-Athenian, said he could hear shots being fired from behind his newspaper plant and also two blocks away near the city jail.

"It looks like we are right in the middle," Arterburn said.

(The Associated Press, from Chattanooga, said Sheriff Pat Mansfield of McMinn County at 9 p. m., had broken off a telephone conversation with the words "I can't talk any more—there's mob violence here at the county jail right now."—Editor's note.)

Arterburn said there were some 2,000 persons milling about the streets. At least a score of fist fights were in progress, he said.

The disorders were the aftermath of a bitter election fight between candidates of the incumbent Democratic machine here and a fusion ticket of war veterans, supported by Democrats opposed to the machine and also by Republicans.

At least 1,000 persons were surrounding the two-story brick jail where between 10 and 20 of the war veterans were being held.

Shortly before 10 o'clock one of the veterans, or a GI supporter, fired a rifle shot through the jail window and demanded that the veterans being held be released one at a time.

The jailors refused and the crowd opened up.

At least 40 to 50 shots were fired into the jail.

The crowd outside the jail had rifles, pistols, tommy guns, and tear gas.

Sheriff Pat Mansfield, a candidate for the State Senate on the regular ticket, said he had 300 armed special deputies on the scene.

Seven of the deputies were beaten and taken from town late today by members of the GI fusion faction and were being held as hostages.

The seven had been guarding a voting precinct in the city light and water building and allegedly had threatened two poll watchers on hand there for the veterans.

The two watchers, Charles Scott, Jr., and Ed Vestal, escaped from the building when two Athens newspapermen, Lowel F. Arterburn and Neal Ensminger, of the Athens Post-Athenian, showed up to ask how the voting was going. Scott and Vestal in fleeing plunged through a glass door. They hurried to a hospital and were treated for cuts. Then Scott got in his car and raced out of town.

When word of the incident spread groups of war veterans raced to the water and light building and attacked the seven deputies there, mauling them severely and taking them away as hostages.

Another injured was a 50-year-old Negro farmer, Thomas Gillespie, who was shot by one of the special deputies.

ONE SLAIN, SEVERAL HURT IN TENNESSEE COUNTIES

MADISONVILLE, TENN., August 1.—Election day violence flamed in Monroe and McMinn Counties today, where bipartisan GI tickets opposed Democratic incumbents for county offices.

One man was slain and two wounded in Monroe County and others were reported wounded in McMinn.

Jake Tipton, about 60, was shot to death in front of the Rural Vale voting place near Tellico Plains.

Officers at the county jail here reported early tonight no arrests have been made in connection with the shooting.

"I was told it was the result of an 'old grudge,'" said C. H. Biereley, funeral home operator, who said he answered a summons for an ambulance at Rural Vale, but found Tipton dead when he arrived.

Biereley said he did not know what connection, if any, the killing had with the election.

At Sweetwater, hospital attachés said Clyde Lindsey of Vonore, Tenn., had been admitted for treatment of knife wounds about the head and said he was "still in shock." A boy named Johnson was treated for knife wounds and released.

The Foree Hospital at Athens, Tenn., listed two victims of violence in McMinn County. They were identified as Bob Hairrell of Athens, who was treated for head wounds, and Tom Gillespie, who received treatment for a bullet fired into the left side of his back.

Amvets Assist Bruce Campbell Obtain His Veteran Reemployment Rights

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. GORDON L. McDONOUGH

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, August 2, 1946

Mr. McDONOUGH. Mr. Speaker, the case of Bruce Campbell, former outfielder with the Washington, D. C., baseball club has made veterans' reemployment rights history and maybe the precedent that future cases will be decided upon.

Although the Amvets took a prominent part in this case, much credit is due to the initiative of sports columnist, Shirley Povich, author of This Morning in the Washington Post, who help in obtaining fair play.

Following is Mr. Povich's story on the Bruce Campbell case dated June 24, 1946:

Doubt that Judge Black's ruling will stand up has already been expressed by one club owner who adds that "it is one of those delicate decisions that may have to be argued clear up to the Supreme Court." If that is the typical reaction of the club owners, it is as ill-timed, unbecoming, and feeble a postwar squawk as could possibly be made.

Like many another club, the Washington team has given the back of its hand to the returning war veteran who came back to his baseball job and discovered he wasn't wanted any longer. What happened to Bruce Campbell, who got out of the Army at the age of 36 and reported back to the Nats under the impression he had a job for at least a year under guaranty of the GI bill of rights?

This is what happened to Campbell: The Nats kept him in training with pay for 30 days and then handed him a notice that he was getting 10 days' warning and his discharge. Campbell left the camp jobless. He didn't squawk, probably because baseball players are inured to that sort of thing. But Judge Black is now telling Campbell and others that the law is on their side—that the GI bill of rights protects ball players, too.

Organized baseball has been getting away with contract inequities for so long that it permitted itself last winter to make the most astounding declaration I've ever known. In the face of the GI bill of rights, the club owners came out of a December session with Commissioner Chandler and announced they had decided to guarantee returning war veterans a fair trial at their old job with a minimum of 30 days' pay.

Here was baseball attempting to set itself up as something apart from the rest of the employers of the United States and actually thinking it was entitled to some kind of a bow for its munificence in guaranteeing 1 month's salary to returning GI's. How the club owners ever thought they could get away with it I don't know, but they tried it and were getting away with it until Judge Black jacked them up the other day.

Rather than squawk about it now, organized baseball should accept Judge Black's ruling and slink away from the issue. After all of the owners' high-sounding phrases and pride-taking in the great number of ballplayers who did go into the service, they were among the quickest to forget.

Baseball didn't suffer from the war. The owners ought to be grateful for escaping so lightly. There were enough IV-F's and family men to man the teams, and gate receipts went up at the same time that player pay rolls went down. The public didn't squawk at inferior baseball by inferior players and in dozens of cases the owners were relieved of the high salaries of the better players did go to war. When pullman travel was forbidden, the players took the coaches at another expense saving for the owners.

The point is made that most returning players asked for and received more money than they drew before the war, and that may be true, but it is equally and significantly true that the owners hiked their admission prices after the war, also.

What has happened is that the club owners have been characteristically unsmart. The salaries that they saved by cutting loose the comparative few GI's who slowed up in the armed services are an insignificant item compared to the poor light in which baseball now finds itself. Of some people it can be said they know the price of everything and the value of nothing.

The above story was enclosed in a letter to Robert McLaughlin, national legislative director of Amvets, which reveals the work done by the Amvets in assisting Bruce Campbell to obtain his veterans' reemployment rights:

AMVETS,
WASHINGTON, D. C., July 30, 1946.

Mr. ROBERT E. MCLAUGHLIN,
National Legislative Director,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR BOB: Much has been written and said lately about the action of Clark Griffith, president of the Washington American League Baseball Club, in releasing Bruce Campbell upon his return from 3 years as a buck sergeant in the Army Air Forces. As you may know, Campbell enlisted (he was not eligible for the draft) at the close of 1942 after playing in 122 games and having the third highest batting average of any player on the club.

In 1946 he returned to the Washington baseball club. He started seven games in spring training and appeared in five others as a pinch hitter. He batted .314 and played errorless ball. In his last game as a member of the club he hit two singles and one home run. Yet he was released by Griffith before the season opened for the stated reason that he was making too much money ($9,000 a year).

In championing the cause of Bruce Campbell in the courts of the United States, the District of Columbia Amvets wish to acknowledge the encouragement we have received from the fair and fearless sports column entitled "This Morning" which Shirley Povich writes for the Washington Post. Povich, a war correspondent who was injured in combat during some of the fiercest fighting of the war in the Pacific, began crusading against GI injustices as soon as the boys started coming home, and before Amvets really was organized.

I enclose the column that aroused our interest in the Campbell case, and recommend it to you for insertion in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD as worthy of national recognition of a sports writer who not only believes in, but who fights for the American principle of fair play.

Sincerely yours,

RAY SAWYER,
Department Commander,
Washington (D. C.) Amvets.

The following is a news story from the Washington Post which tells the final action taken by Clark Griffith, owner of the Washington, D. C., Nationals in granting Bruce Campbell his full salary under his original contract:

PRECEDENT SEEN AS CAMPBELL WINS PAY CASE—GRIFF SILENT

Clark Griffith had no comment to make today on his settlement of the salary claim of Bruce Campbell, former Nat outfielder, who was sent to the minors when he returned from Army service, but baseball men believe the case has set a precedent that will result in many similar claims.

Under the terms of the agreement reached yesterday, Campbell, in effect, will be paid a major league salary for playing on a minor league team. He will report to the Minneapolis club of the American Association, where he will be paid $9,000, the same sum he received while in the Nats' lineup in 1942. Griffith will make up the difference between what would be Campbell's regular pay for Minneapolis and the $9,000 figure Campbell estimates this as $5,000 out of Griffith's pocket.

Final settlement came at a meeting in the Washington club owners office attended by Griffith, Campbell, United States Attorney Erward M. Curran and William A. Roberts, Campbell's attorney. The settlement brought to a conclusion a campaign initiated by Amvets, an organization of World War II veterans.

This case is an encouraging sign in the sports world and, in fact, in all types of reemployment of returning veterans. I am sure all Members of the House of Representatives join with me in expressing my congratulations to all those who had a part in bringing fair play to Bruce Campbell.

The Atom Bomb

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. BROOKS HAYS

OF ARKANSAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, August 2, 1946

Mr. HAYS. Mr. Speaker, during the debate on the legislation pertaining to the atomic bomb I made reference to the fact that the first announcement of the scientific discoveries which produced the bomb was made at a conference at George Washington University.

The chain of events which led to the first announcement in the United States that man could split an atom began as far back as 1932, when President Cloyd Heck Marvin, of George Washington University, became impressed with the importance of nuclear physics research while visting the universities of Europe.

In 1932, Dr. Marvin brought to George Washington as professor of physics, Dr. George Gamow, whose work in nuclear physics as applied to stellar evaluation at Copenhagen, Denmark, was becoming widely known.

Dr. Gamow is author of three books on nuclear physics—one just off the press. He was a member of the Scientific Advisory Board of the Navy Bureau of Ordnance which attended the Bikini trials. A class of admirals, including the recently retired Ernest King and Admiral Chester W. Nimitz, learned about the atom bomb from Dr. Gamow when they studied incognito at the university earlier this year.

Dr. Gamow was joined at the university by Dr. Edward Teller, who during the war was a member of the Los Alamos group. One of their students was the still youthful Dr. Charles Louis Critchfield, who also worked on the bomb.

From 1932 to 1939, University President Marvin encouraged Gamow and Teller to promote the discussions of nuclear physics in the Washington area. In 1933 the university, with the Carnegie Institution, organized the Washington Conference on Theoretical Physics, which met at the university annually before the war.

The outstanding theoretical physicists from every nation were invited to attend these conferences at the university. Their expenses were paid by Carnegie Institution and George Washington University.

Visitors included Dr. Niels Bohr, Erik Bohr, Dr. Niels Bjerrum, and Prof. Fritz Kalckar, of Copenhagen; Fritz London, of the University of Paris; Dr. Enrico Fermi, of Rome and later connected with Columbia University; Dr. Greyson Smith, of the University of Toronto; Dr. Leon Rosenfeld, of the University of Liege, Belgium; and such well-known scientists in this country as Drs. M. A. Tuve and N. P. Heydenburg, of Carnegie Institution of Washington; Dr. Gregory Breit, of the University of Wisconsin; Dr. Harold Urey, of Columbia University, who is now attached to the University of Chicago; Dr. H. A. Bethe, of Cornell University; Dr. L. R. Hafstead, of Johns Hopkins University's applied physics laboratory; Dr. K. P. Herzfeld, of Catholic University; and occasionally some eminent scientist whose specialty was not theoretical physics, such as Dr. Vannevar Bush, of Carnegie.

At the meeting in 1937 Dr. Niels Bohr announced details of the atom-splitting discovery to the group.

The conferences, in contrast to most science meetings, were set up to permit the outstanding physicists of this country and the world to talk informally about a conference.

Scientists who attended have termed them one of the "greatest stimuli of war research" because it was at these meetings that the theoretical physicists of the world came to know each other personally and to know better the skill and studies of their conferees. During the war they were better able to call upon each other for special assistance because they had attended the conferences in Washington.

It is recalled that in keeping with the informal atmosphere that prevailed at the meetings, ping-pong tables were made available to the scientists between sessions, and many of the more complicated theories were discussed between eminent scholars engaged in fast fames of table tennis.

The meetings of the conferences were held each year before the war and will be resumed this fall.

Photographs taken at each conference, including the one held in 1939, are to be found hanging on the wall of Dr. George Gamow's office in the university library building.

Will You Be Alive July 5?

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. KARL M. LeCOMPTE

OF IOWA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, August 2, 1946

Mr. LECOMPTE. Mr. Speaker, the National Safety Council conducts each year a contest with a liberal cash award for the best editorial on safety in both daily and weekly newspapers. In the Albia (Iowa) Union-Republican there appeared an editorial entitled, "Will You Be Alive July 5?" written by Robert Larson, a newspaperman who served with honor and credit in the armed services during the last war, received an honorable discharge, and returned to newspaper work a year ago last March. He went in the Army as a private and came out as a major. Although only 31 years of age, Mr. Larson has already won national acclaim in his work as a newspaper writer.

Mr. Speaker, I take pleasure in offering the editorial which won the grand national award and commend its careful reading to all of my colleagues. It appeared in the Union-Republican of Albia, Iowa, the last week in June:

WILL YOU BE ALIVE JULY FIFTH?

Do you have a paper and pencil? Make a note of these things you have to do before next Wednesday. First of all better check on all of your insurance policies. Make certain the premiums are paid and that you have the proper designation of beneficiary. Your local insurance agent will be glad to discuss these items with you.

Then stop around and see your attorney. Examine your present will to make certain that it disposes of your property as you would have it. Make certain your will is in proper form and properly witnessed. If you're one of those persons who hasn't made out a will do so immediately. The time is getting short.

While you're about it you might also stop in and see your favorite mortician about your funeral plans. Let him know of any arrangements you want made, your favorite flowers, the music you like best. Give him the names of a few friends, say an even half-dozen, so that he may call on them in case he needs them.

July Fourth is just a week away. You may be one of perhaps 600 Americans who will meet their death on the highways, in fires, or by various other accidents in the 4-day holiday period.

So perhaps you'd better take the precaution outlined here.

You might also take other precautions.

If you go driving, drive safely. Make certain your car is in driving condition. Avoid excess speeds. And above all remember that alcohol and driving don't mix.

If you're planning to take the family swimming, swim in a supervised place. Don't swim for at least an hour and a half to 2 hours after eating. Don't remain in the water too long, particularly if you are not used to swimming.

The sun may feel good but don't get too much of it. Avoid over-exertion.

Don't play with firecrackers or fire-arms.

If you're going to play—play safe. Be alive on July fifth.

The Name of Hoover Dam

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF

HON. JOHN PHILLIPS

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, August 2, 1946

Mr. PHILLIPS. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD, I wish to set down here the story of the naming of Hoover Dam. The following material is from Democratic sources. For convenience in following the name through the history of its application to the dam and the subsequent change by the Secretary of the Interior, I shall divide the material into chapters:

CHAPTER I. WHY THE DAM WAS NAMED "HOOVER DAM" BY SECRETARY OF THE INTERIOR RAY LYMAN WILBUR, AND WHY THAT NAME WAS CONFIRMED BY CONGRESS

Statement by Congressman Ed Taylor (Democrat, Colorado), ranking Democratic member of the Appropriations Committee, and subsequently its chairman,[1] December 12, 1930, in the course of debate on the Interior Department appropriation bill for the fiscal year 1932 (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, vol. 74, pt. 1, p. 646):

"THE HOOVER DAM

"There is another feature of this section of the bill under consideration that I feel ought not to be passed over in silence.

"I refer to the three words in the second line, 'the Hoover Dam.'

"Do you realize that those words just read by the clerk are making history for thousands of years to come?

"This is the first time that name has ever appeared in any bill or official act of Congress. This Interior Department appropriations committee thought that following the precedents of the naming of the Roosevelt Dam during President Roosevelt's administration, and the Wilson Dam during President Wilson's administration, and the Coolidge Dam during his administration that President Hoover was very justly entitled to the same distinction, so we unanimously and very gladly wrote into this action those words making the naming of that great dam the Hoover Dam by the action of Congress that will be a monument to him for centuries after every other act of his administration, and of this Congress will have passed into utter oblivion.

"In fact, it will be a tribute to him as long as this planet is inhabited by human beings. This committee hopes and believes his administration and entire life will be preeminently worthy of his honor, and that history will approve this action of Congress. If I may, without impropriety, refer to my own personal sentiment in this matter, I will say that when that act was passed, I thought that dam should have been given the name of the President; because it was not, on May 27, 1929, I introduced House Joint Resolution 81 as follows:

"'House Joint Resolution 81

"'Joint resolution naming the Hoover Dam

"'Resolved, etc., That in appreciation of his distinguished services as the official representative of our Government in the negotiation of the Colorado River Compact, signed at Santa Fe, N. Mex., November 24, 1922, and in recognition of his preeminent ability and international reputation as one of the world's greatest engineers, and as a fitting tribute to our President, the highest and greatest dam ever built authorized to be constructed on that river by the act of Congress of December 21, 1928, shall be known and designated on the public records as the Hoover Dam.'

"In the summer of 1930, when the Secretary of the Interior, Ray Lyman Wilbur, dedicated the project with appropriate ceremonies at the site, he formally christened the dam the Hoover Dam. Thereafter he wrote the following letter:

THE SECRETARY OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, September 17, 1930.

Dr. ELWOOD MEAD,
Commissioner of Reclamation,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR DR. MEAD: This is to notify you that the dam which is to be built in the Colorado River at Black Canyon is to be called the Hoover Dam.

Sincerely yours,

RAY LYMAN WILBUR.

"So that the dam is now officially named by both the Secretary of the Interior and by Congress."

CHAPTER II. THE APPROPRIATION ACTS WHICH CONFIRMED THE NAME "HOOVER DAM"

A. Extract from the Interior Department Appropriation Act for the fiscal year 1932 (46 Stat. 1146):

"Boulder Canyon project: For the continuation of construction of the Hoover Dam and incidental works in the main stream of the Colorado River at Black Canyon * * *; $15,000,000."

B. Extract from the Interior Department Appropriation Act for the fiscal year 1933 (47 Stat. 118):

"Boulder Canyon project: For the continuation of construction of the Hoover Dam and incidental works in the main stream of the Colorado River at Black Canyon * * *; $6,000,000."

CHAPTER III. SECRETARY ICKES DECIDES THAT HIS PREDECESSOR AND THE CONGRESS WERE ALL WRONG

No formal action[2] was taken by Secretary Ickes to change the name of Hoover Dam, already confirmed by three statutes. Instead, in approving the text of a pamphlet describing the operation of a model of the dam at the Century of Progress, he wrote the following:

MAY 8, 1933.

Memorandum for Commissioner Mead, Bureau of Reclamation:

I have your reference of the text for the pamphlet descriptive of the Boulder Canyon Project Act for use at the Century of Progress Exposition. I would be glad if you will refer to the dam as "Boulder Dam" in this pamphlet, as well as in correspondence and other references to the dam you may have occasion to make in the future.

HAROLD L. ICKES,
Secretary of the Interior.

CHAPTER IV. SECRETARY ICKES GETS INTO DIFFICULTIES WITH ATTORNEY GENERAL CUMMINGS OVER THE NAME OF THE DAM

The following is an extract from "Selected Papers of Homer Cummings" (Charles Scribner's Sons, 1939), page 254:

"'HOOVER' OR 'BOULDER' DAM? CORRESPONDENCE WITH SECRETARY OF THE INTERIOR HAROLD L. ICKES

"JANUARY 17, 1935.

"DEAR HOMER: On page 4 of the bill of complaint in the case of The United States of America, Plaintiff, v. The State of Arizona, Defendant, there is a reference to 'water discharged at Hoover (Boulder) Dam.' Having gone to great length to give to Boulder Dam its original and proper name which my predecessor in office attempted feloniously to take from it, for which praiseworthy and meritorious public act I have been roundly condemned by reactionary Republican papers in all parts of the country, I may say that the reference in this bill of complaint to 'Hoover Dam' gives me nothing at all to cheer about. I should have been glad to point out what was undoubtedly merely an inadvertence but I lacked the opportunity, since I did not see the bill of complaint until after it had been printed and filed with the Supreme Court."

"JANUARY 21, 1935.

"DEAR HAROLD: This acknowledges your letter of the 17th of January about Boulder Dam, and I am not surprised by your perturbation. Even in the midst of great events, the misuse of a cherished name is apt to be upsetting.

"The difficulty in this particular instance seems to grow out of the fact that, while the term 'Boulder Dam' is used as often as possible and scattered somewhat promiscuously in strategic places in the bill of complaint, nevertheless the drafters of that document seemed to feel it necessary in describing the dam to use the title employed by the Congress in the acts appropriating money for its construction. I believe these acts refer to the dam as 'Hoover Dam' (see 46 Stat. at Large 1146; 47 Stat. at Large 118; and 47 Stat. at Large 535). Moreover, the dam is referred to as 'Hoover Dam' in the contract between the United States and the metropolitan water district, under which contract, I understand, the dam is actually being constructed.

"Our Department was not aware that you had officially rechristened the dam, or that there had been any change in its technical name since the order of Secretary Wilbur made on the 17th day of September 1930.

"I rather doubt whether it is feasible to do anything about the matter at this late day, even if it were deemed appropriate so to do In other words, it looks to me very much like water over the Hoover (Boulder) Dam. When I see you, I shall extend my commiseration in person."

The United States had sued the State of Arizona to enjoin interference with the construction of Parker Dam, whose functions were closely related to those of Hoover Dam Mr. Ickes' letter to Mr. Cummings and Mr. Cummings' reply speak for themselves.

CHAPTER V. SOME COMMENTS ON THE FOREGOING: WHY CONGRESSMAN TAYLOR WAS RIGHT AND SECRETARY ICKES WAS WRONG

When Secretary Wilbur, and the Congress on the motion of Chairman-elect Taylor, of the Appropriations Committee, named the Hoover Dam, they were not only following the precedent of the Roosevelt, Wilson, and Coolidge Dams—all of which were named for Presidents in office when those dams were built (a precedent which the Roosevelt administration later expanded in naming Norris Dam for Senator Norris, then in office)—they were naming the Hoover Dam for the man who had an essential part in making construction possible, and who was far more responsible for the construction of this dam than his predecessors were for the Roosevelt, Wilson, and Coolidge Dams, named in their honor.

[1] The Democrats had won control of the House in November 1930 election; Mr. Taylor became chairman of the Appropriations Committee in 1931.

[2] The name "Hoover Dam" remains to this day in the formal general regulations for the storage and delivery of water, under the Boulder Canyon Project Act.

Herbert Hoover, while Secretary of Commerce, presided in 1922 and 1923, as the representative of the Federal Government, over a score of meetings of the representatives of Arizona, California, Colorado, Nevada, New Mexico, Utah, and Wyoming for the formulation of the Colorado River compact. This compact made construction of the dam possible by allocating the waters of the river system, settling a 25-year-old controversy. The Boulder Canyon Project Act, enacted December 21, 1928, ratified the compact and authorized construction of a dam in Black Canyon or Boulder Canyon, leaving to the President the choice of sites. It also laid upon him and the Secretary of the Interior extraordinary responsibilities. As President, Herbert Hoover took an active part in settling the engineering problems and location of the dam; was required by the Project Act to obtain power and water contracts adequate to assure some $200,000,000 of revenues before construction was begun; settled a bitter controversy between advocates of public and private power, allocating the power, and made the contracts Congress required; and, having met the statutory requirements, proclaimed the Boulder Canyon Project Act to be in effect on June 25, 1929. This act ratified the Colorado River compact, which Mr. Hoover had signed 7 years before, and subjected all operations of the Boulder Canyon project to that compact. He reported to Congress compliance with its mandate that this project be built on a self-liquidating basis; Congress made the necessary appropriations (in acts which three times named the dam in his honor); the construction contracts were signed under his administration, and when he left office construction had been pushed to a point where it was more than a year ahead of schedule.

In these circumstances, Secretary Ickes found the hard work done, the project successfully launched, but bearing a name which he personally disliked.

CHAPTER VI. THE NAME HOOVER DAM SHOULD BE USED NOW

A resolution is now before the Congress properly to use the name Hoover Dam instead of Boulder Dam. It will not come to vote in the Seventy-ninth Congress. A similar resolution will be introduced in the Eightieth Congress and should have first attention. The name Hoover Dam could be applied at once by the Department of the Interior without congressional action. That should be done.

Analysis and Brief Summation of Testimony on H. R. 5434

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. JOHN R. MURDOCK

OF ARIZONA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, July 30, 1946

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Speaker, a subcommittee of the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation held voluminous hearings on my bill, H. R. 5434, without chance of completing action. With a view of facilitating study of this testimony I am presenting the following analysis under leave to print.

PURPOSE OF THIS BILL, H. R. 5434

The purpose of H. R. 5434 is to authorize a change of boundaries and area of the Gila project in Yuma County, Ariz. This is a presently authorized and partly constructed irrigation project by the United States Bureau of Reclamation during the past 10 years, having had an expenditure of nearly ten million dollars made on it since authorization. The original authorized project included 150,000 acres of land, 139,000 acres of which lay on the mesa south and east of Yuma adjacent to that city. The remaining small portion of the original project consists of bottom lands along the Gila River very near its mouth.

The reason that a change is sought to be made and authorized by H. R. 5434 in the existing partially completed project is that since 1937 some very excellent farm land lying along the Gila River but upstream from that part included in the present project has been deprived of its good water for irrigation and now need relief. This deprivation came about through developments higher up on the Gila River and its tributaries but apparently in such a way that injured parties cannot base a legal claim for damages. This has gone on to such an extent that what was highly productive and valuable farm lands, without any change in the quality of the soil, have had to be sold for taxes and some have reverted to the desert, because the water which formerly supplied these lands from wells became too salty for use. Since these distressed lands just described, consisting of about 75,000 acres, could be returned to high productivity by furnishing a supplemental supply of good water from the nearby Colorado River, it is the purpose of H. R. 5434 to eliminate approximately 75,000 acres of the more remote and higher lands on the mesa included in the original project and substitute therefor 75,000 acres of this formerly tilled, rich land along the Gila River. The sponsors of this bill do not regard this proposal as a new project, but merely a modification of a duly authorized existing project.

THE SPONSORS OF THE BILL

H. R. 5434 was introduced in the House by both Arizona Congressmen and in identical form in the Senate by both Arizona Senators. However, it might be called a departmental bill, and had the full backing of the Bureau of Reclamation. The chief witnesses appearing in favor of the bill at the recent hearings were Hugo Farmer, secretary of the Gila Irrigation District, who is also a State Senator in the State Legislature of Arizona, and Mr. R. H. McElhaney, an official of the Gila Valley power district, included in the distressed lands along the Gila River, who is also a farmer owning and operating a farm in the distressed area, which is sought to be incorporated in the present Gila project. Representing the State of Arizona, which was necessitated by the clash with witnesses from Southern California, was Mr. Charles Carson, an attorney for the Arizona Colorado River Board, and Mr. Gail Baker, an engineer, representing the Colorado River Board of Arizona. The Bureau of Reclamation was represented by several witnesses in support of the bill.

BASIS OF SUPPORT

All of the witnesses from Arizona in support of the bill expressed confidence that the project sought to be reorganized would be an improvement over the old project by reducing it from 150,000 acres to 141,000 acres in area, leaving out some of the higher mesa lands and including in lieu thereof the 75,000 acres of distressed valley lands lying adjacent to the project and along the Gila River. They agreed with the Bureau of Reclamation officials that the proposed reorganized project, when completed, would require diverted out of the Colorado River at least 300,000 acre-feet of water annually less than the present uncompleted project would require when it is completed. There is no other water supply for these lands in Yuma County, and it was the unanimous testimony of the Arizona witnesses that unless the 75,000 acres of bottom land sought to be added by H. R. 5434 could be included in the existing Gila project, that there was no hope of their restoration to productivity, but that eventually they would be lost entirely to the desert.

THE OPPONENTS OF H. R. 5434

Those who appeared as witnesses in opposition to the enactment at this time of H. R. 5434 during the hearings in June and July were chiefly representatives from certain agencies in Southern California, although some of them stated they were representatives of the State of California and spoke as such. Mr. M. J. Dowd gave the most extensive testimony against the bill representing the Imperial Irrigation District of Southern California. Mr. James H. Howard appeared in opposition representing the Metropolitan Water District of Southern California and other municipalities as his clients. Mr. Raymond Matthew appeared on behalf of the Colorado River Board of the State of California, being an engineer of that board. Mr. Arvin B. Shaw, Jr., as an assistant attorney general of California, appeared as a representative of the State, to serve the agencies in expressing opposition. Certain Members of Congress from Southern California and from Nevada appeared as witnesses who offered opposition to the immediate enactment of the bill.

GROUNDS OF OPPOSITION TO H. R. 5434

In general the opposing witnesses declare that they are opposed to favorable action on H. R. 5434 at this time. By emphasizing "at this time" they imply that later their opposition might be removed or modified. To give point to their opposition to the measure "at this time," they point out that the Bureau of Reclamation recently issued a Colorado River report, tentative in form, which lists numerous projects in a total basin plan, the development of which would require more water than the whole basin furnishes, and their contention is that no new projects should be authorized until further study has screened the included list of 134 suggested projects and eradicated those which could not possibly be developed because of the shortage of water. They further contend that no development should proceed until definite decision has been made as to how much Colorado River water each of the Colorado River basin States, especially the three in the lower basin, should receive. As one of the substantiating arguments, they contend that the recently adopted water treaty with Mexico creates a new, uncontemplated, and greatly enlarged draft on the firm supply of the Colorado River, which makes it imperative, in order to carry out that treaty, that we must figure carefully on any future drafts on the river supply.

ARGUMENTS AND COUNTERARGUMENTS ON H. R. 5434

The sponsors and supporters of the bill claim that not more than 600,000 acre-feet of water annually "in consumptive use" would be required for this proposed reorganized Gila project when completed, while the opponents place it at a much larger amount. The 600,000 acre-feet is the amount so estimated by the Bureau of Reclamation for the original larger project. The sponsors further state and are convinced that there is rightfully more than that amount of water in firm supply now available in the Colorado River for the completed Gila project without building any further dams or storage, and without depriving any State in the Colorado Basin of any of its rightful share of firm water.

The truth or fallacy of this claim appears to hinge upon, first, physical facts concerning either the historical flow or the virgin flow of the Colorado River, and second, upon the interpretation of certain legal instruments, such as the Santa Fe Compact of 1922, the Boulder Canyon Project Act of 1928, the California Statute of Limitations of 1929, and certain water contracts drawn by the Secretary of the Interior to furnish water out of Lake Mead. This joining of issues is chiefly by men from Arizona and from California, the Arizona witnesses making one interpretation; the California witnesses making another interpretation of these above-mentioned legal documents.

The California witnesses in general agree that the Santa Fe Compact—supplemented by later enactments—is the basic law of the Colorado River Basin, and declare that they are willing to abide by it. The Arizona witnesses take the same stand. The Arizona witnesses point out that in return for the passage of the Boulder Canyon Project Act by Congress in 1928 that California agreed to limit the amount of water she could claim out of the Colorado River to 4,400,000 acre-feet of water annually in firm supply, plus one-half of the surplus. The Arizona witnesses quote that California statute, "the State of California as of the date of such proclamation agrees irrevocably and unconditionally with the United States and for the benefit of the States of Arizona," etc., and claim that that statute of limitations is a covenant irrevocable. The California witnesses say they regarded their statute of limitation as a covenant which they propose to observe, but their interpretation of it differs from the interpretation by Arizona witnesses.

IS ARTICLE III (b) WATER "APPORTIONED WATER" OR "SURPLUS WATER?"

The crux of the matter comes down to the question: "What is the legal character of the million acre-feet of water mentioned in article III (b) of the Santa Fe Compact?" The Arizona witnesses contend that that million acre-feet of water in article III (b), like the 7½ million acre-feet in article III (a), is "apportioned water"—apportioned to the States of the lower basin. The Arizona witnesses contend that, thus considered, article III (a) and article III (b) of the compact apportion 8½ million acre-feet of water to the lower basin in firm supply, and there can be no question about its use in the lower basin if it physically exists in the river. If that be true, and California has limited her own use of apportioned water to 4,400,000 acre-feet—the Arizona witnesses further contend—and Nevada is satisfied with 300,000 acre-feet (which is all she ever claimed), then the remainder, which is 3,800,000 acre-feet, is obviously Arizona's water, since it cannot legally be put any place else in the United States within the lower basin. However, of the 3,800,000 acre-feet for Arizona, only 2,800,000 acre-feet is to come from the main stem of the Colorado River.

OPPOSING WITNESSES DISAGREE ON III (B) WATER

The California witnesses do not agree with this analysis, contending that article III (b) furnishes a million acre-feet to the lower basin, which is not "apportioned water," but should be regarded as "surplus water" within the terms of the compact. If it is "surplus water," under the provisions of the compact, it is to be divided between Arizona and California, each State having half. This dispute is over claim to 500,000 acre-feet of water annually. So the real nub of the controversy is, Does half of the million acre-feet of water mentioned in article III (b) of the compact rightfully and legally belong to California, or does all of it rightfully and legally belong by reason of California's Limitation Act to Arizona?

The California witnesses say that only a judicial decision, or a tri-State compact can determine that question and that nothing new must be done until it is determined. Arizona witnesses contend that it has already been determined by what is, in effect, a tri-State compact through the combined effects of three enactments, namely, the Boulder Canyon Project Act of 1928, the California Act of Limitation of 1929, and the Arizona water contract and a statute of 1944, under the terms of which there can be no legal question but that the million acre-feet of III (b) water belongs entirely to Arizona and to no one else. The Arizona witnesses further declare that not only is a tri-State compact of the lower basin States now unnecessary, by virtue of the above-mentioned enactments, but that earnest attempts have been made unsuccessfully through a quarter century to effect such an agreement and there is no prospect of better success now than during the years since 1922. It was further pointed out that the Supreme Court of the United States had previously refused to consider such a case and probably would not do so now; therefore a settlement by court decision seems very doubtful.

AS THE AUTHOR OF THE BILL SEES IT

As one of the authors of this legislation, H. R. 5434, I feel that the opposition expressed to it is unwarranted, that the demand for delay on the part of the opposition witnesses until agreement is formally reached between all States concerned in a new interstate compact, or until judicial process can be had, would merely mean indefinite postponement of all water development on the Colorado River in both the lower basin and in the upper basin. Such delay would mean a continuation of the status quo, which might be highly desirable by those who are now being supplied water from the Colorado River, but highly detrimental, if not disastrous, to those States and communities starving for the waters of that river and having as good a right, based on human justice, and, in my judgment, as good a right based on human law, as have the present users.

The Congress initiated legislation looking toward the development of the Colorado River Basin by authorizing the States of that Basin to enter into a compact. Such a compact was drawn at Santa Fe, N. Mex., in 1922 and ultimately ratified by all the basin States. In conformity with the Santa Fe Compact the Congress passed the Boulder Canyon Project Act of 1928 as a further step in the proper development of the basin. Numerous other acts of Congress have subsequently been enacted to continue Colorado River Basin development in conformity to the Santa Fe Compact and the Boulder Canyon Project Act. Therefore, I regard some such measure as H. R. 5434 a proper, logical further step by Congress to continue this vital development in Arizona along the lines marked out for it in the beginning.

MAIN OPPOSING ARGUMENTS ARE UNSOUND

In general the contention of the opponents of H. R. 5434 that there was not enough water in the Colorado River system during the recent drought years to meet all of the firm commitments and the legal requirements may seem at first glance to have some basis of fact, it is really fallacious reasoning. It is admittedly true that the records of the last 16 years show a reduced run-off of the Colorado River watershed and thereby a reduced average flow at Lee's Ferry, to which opponents of H. R. 5434 point with a degree of concern. Particularly do they point with alarm to the much-reduced flow during the years of the decade from 1931 to 1940 inclusive, which is the lowest flow of any 10-year period in the recorded history of the river. By pointing to the flow of that 10-year period and by clever manipulation of legal language it might be shown to one not carefully observing that there was not enough water in the river to meet all of the legal requirements.

However, considering all existing projects and proposed projects in the lower basin, requiring a firm allotment of water, it is only necessary to ask whether 75,000,000 acre-feet during any 10-year period have passed Lee's Ferry, plus enough to meet any new commitment such as the Mexican Treaty, to find whether there is such a shortage. Now, it will be observed that during the 10-year period from 1931 to 1940 inclusive more than 100,000,000 acre-feet of water actually passed Lee's Ferry, in spite of depletion above, and that was the very lowest 10-year flow in its recorded history. Looked at thus there was no shortage. It is plainly evident that in this lowest 10-year period that there was more than enough to meet the requirement of the Santa Fe Compact for the lower basin and for the Mexican Treaty and all other firm commitments, allowing 2,800,000 acre-feet annually out of the main stem of the Colorado for Arizona. Thus, their scarcity argument falls before a simple mathematical calculation.

OPPOSITION CAUSING LOSS OF WEALTH

The greatest inconsistency of the opposition, resulting in vast national loss, lies in the claim that there is a shortage of water in the Colorado River for American uses in the very face of the physical fact that from 9,000,000 to 10,000,000 acre-feet of that water during the past 5 years has annually gone out of the lower basin across the international line to Mexico. When that fact is called to the attention of opposition witnesses they say that such is "surplus water" to which the upper basin States have a firm right but which they are not now using beneficially, because less than 3,000,000 of the 7½ million acre-feet of the waters allotted to the upper basin is presently being utilized. Of course, their answer in that respect is partly right but really fallacious, because it would account for less than half of the water now being wasted to Mexico. It is my opinion that not less than 2,000,000 acre-feet of that water now being wasted to Mexico as just described belongs in firm supply and legal apportionment to Arizona lands.

It is a conservative estimate that 1 acre-foot of water in 12 months applied to land in southern Arizona will produce $20 worth of cash crops. Please note that figure, 1 acre-foot of water applied yearly in that region equals $20 in cash products. The record of the great irrigation projects in Arizona for many past years will amply verify that such is a conservative estimate. If I am right, as I believe I am, that at least 2,000,000 acre-feet of Arizona's water, over and above any treaty commitment to Mexico, is flowing annually across the international border, that means that $40,000,000 worth of wealth is annually flowing out of the apex of that funnel to Arizona's loss and the Nation's loss. Yet the opponents of this legislation are very reluctant to permit 600,000 acre-feet of such water in consumptive use in Yuma County, Ariz., as called for in H. R. 5434.

Looking beyond the scope of this bill and considering the 10,000,000 acre-feet of water which flows across the international border often in 1 year, we get some impression of the price we are paying, for what? We are paying it in small part for a good-neighbor policy, but in large part for a policy of blindness which is difficult to understand.

Wool

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. ROBERT A. TAFT
OF OHIO
IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES

Friday, August 2 (legislative day of Monday, July 29), 1946

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the Appendix of the RECORD a statement on the wool bill, about which there has been so much discussion in the last few days, which I have partially prepared, but not completed.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD as follows:

Mr. President, American agriculture is now beginning to feel the disastrous effects of the administration's reciprocal trade-agreements policy.

The wool growers are a case in point. A postwar surplus of 4,000,000,000 pounds of wool in British hands will take 12 to 15 years to absorb, and threatens the very existence of our wool industry. Instead of giving protection by adequate tariff, and quota limitations if necessary, the administration's answer is another subsidy, a subsidy which the wool growers don't want, but are forced to support in order to live.

On July 31, on the floor of the Senate, the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY] inserted in the RECORD an extract from a hearing before the Banking and Currency Committee dealing with the British loan in which a remark which I made was interpreted as implying that I desired to destroy the wool industry of the United States. The Senator himself asserted the wholly unjustifiable conclusion that I had said that the industry is uneconomic and ought to be wiped out. Of course, I had said no such thing, and no such conclusion can be drawn from my remarks. I was cross-examining Mr. Clayton, who was one of the principal backers of the extension of the reciprocal trade-agreement program. It is the advocates of that program who claim that we should encourage imports of all those goods which can be more cheaply produced somewhere else in the world. It is the advocates of that program who refer to any American industry with high costs as uneconomic and draw the conclusion that it ought to be wiped out.

I have always opposed the reciprocal trade-agreement program. Of course, I suppose any industry is in one sense uneconomic if its costs are very much greater than the costs in other countries, and, of course, the very justification for the bill of the Senator from Wyoming is that its costs in this country are higher than the costs of wool production abroad.

My belief is that where we have an industry capable of producing two-thirds of the domestic needs, we should protect that industry by a tariff, even though it is uneconomic in the narrow sense of cost. The industry did very well under the Republican tariff prior to the war. The proper remedy today is to increase that tariff to approximate the difference in cost here and abroad.

The advocates of the reciprocal-trade agreement program, to be consistent, would have to destroy the wool industry, and this industry illustrates the complete fallacy of the whole idea that we must increase imports at the cost of American production. It is true that in recent years the distinguished Senator from Wyoming has opposed the extension of the reciprocal-trade agreements program, but in 1934 he voted in favor of the bill which authorized and initiated the program. At the same time he voted against Senator OVERTON'S amendment, which provided that "nothing in this act shall be construed to give any authority to reduce existing duties on wool." He also voted against Senator VANDENBERG'S amendment providing for hearings before the conclusion of a reciprocal trade agreement.

The bill now proposed by the Senator abandons the whole theory of protection. It permits the importation of foreign wool in unlimited quantity. It proposes to substitute for the tariff a direct subsidy to wool growers which can well amount to $60,000,000 a year. I have no objection to a support price for wool to assure a proper price to American wool growers, but the consumer should then pay the real cost of wool; and it should not be paid out of the United States Treasury. As a matter of fact, there are very few agricultural products which cannot be raised for less money in other countries, and this bill opens a program of subsidies which might be built up to cost billions of dollars. The Senate knows that I have opposed subsidies as a permanent policy, and that at this very moment we are cutting down the consumers' subsidies initiated by the OPA.

Any industry which makes itself dependent on a Government subsidy is completely at the mercy of Government bureaucrats in Washington. This has been the result of the subsidy on meat packing, and nothing could be more fatal in the end to the industry of wool growing. Under the plan of this bill, the Government would purchase the entire domestic wool clip and would then compete in selling it with imported wool. As such a competitor, the Government has been a complete failure. On May 1 of this year all of the imported wool had been sold except 113,000,000 pounds, but the Government had on hand domestic wool which it had purchased in the amount of 440,000,000 pounds.

If we wish to maintain an industry in this country whose costs are greater than in other countries, then we should protect that industry by a tariff. It is inconsistent and hypocritical to oppose tariffs and then substitute quotas on imports or subsidies, but even quotas are more defensible than subsidies.

Mr. President, I think the Senator from Wyoming himself, perhaps, now shares my view of the principles involved. In any event, I note that this bill was reported to the Senate on May 29, and that the Senator at no time has ever moved to take up the bill or make it the unfinished business of the Senate.

The disastrous situation which now confronts the wool growers was not made by them and they should not suffer because of the administration's utter ignorance of their plight and blind, stubborn adherence to the free-trade policy. I would not object to a subsidy for the wool growers as a temporary expedient until an enlightened American policy of adequate protection is forthcoming.

Cochran's Record Is Commended Highly by St. Louis Press

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. JOHN B. SULLIVAN
OF MISSOURI
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, August 2, 1946

Mr. SULLIVAN. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks, I include an article from the St. Louis Union Labor

Advocate of Friday, July 26, commenting upon the record of my colleague from St. Louis, the Honorable JOHN J. COCHRAN:

COCHRAN'S RECORD IS COMMENDED HIGHLY BY ST. LOUIS PRESS—FAMOUS ST. LOUIS CONGRESSMAN, RETIRING FROM OFFICE, LAUDED BY ALL THREE DAILIES AS ONE WHO WORKED HARD AT THE JOB OF SERVING FAITHFULLY ALL THE PEOPLE

All three St. Louis daily newspapers, Post-Dispatch, Star-Times, and Globe-Democrat, pay warm editorial compliments to the sterling record of Congressman JOHN J. COCHRAN, of St. Louis, who recently announced that he would not be a candidate for reelection. These well-earned tributes follow:

POST-DISPATCH

It is at no risk of extravagant statement, we think, to say that JOHN J. COCHRAN, who withdrew yesterday from the primary, is just about the finest public servant Missouri has ever sent to Washington. He is held in admiration, affection, and esteem by men of all parties, creeds, and stations in life, and his seat in Congress, which he has held for 20 years, was secure for the remainder of his life.

Yet, typically, Mr. COCHRAN chose not to continue in public office. "I am not willing," he said, "to render part-time service to my country as a Member of Congress in this critical period, nor am I willing to let my present illness interfere with full and complete service to my district." There are many who wish he had not made this decision; who prefer to have Mr. COCHRAN even as their nominal Representative. But that is not the COCHRAN ideal of public service.

SERVED PEOPLE

In the last two decades, the "redhead from Kerry Patch" has compiled a record that should be an inspiration to all Members of Congress. He has ever been keenly alert to the needs of this community and to the State as a whole. Not only his constituents, but citizens from other congressional districts, placed upon him staggering burdens which he always performed promptly and cheerfully.

In national matters, he has likewise distinguished himself. As chairman of the Committee on Accounts and as a member of the Committee on Expenditures, COCHRAN has saved the country many millions of dollars that otherwise would have been paid out in extravagance or graft. He was constantly vigilant, when phony claims were presented, to prevent raids upon the Treasury.

His voting record was consistently intelligent and progressive. He supported Mr. Roosevelt and the New Deal because it was instinctive of him to be for the common man and the underdog. His knowledge of Washington affairs was encyclopedic and many a newspaper man has been dependent upon Mr. COCHRAN for information about them.

STRAIGHT SHOOTER

A loyal Democrat, Mr. COCHRAN still never permitted himself to be degraded by the baser elements of his party. When his fellow Democrats in Missouri attempted to steal the governorship in 1941, Mr. COCHRAN denounced their action.

His popularity has grown steadily. As far back as 1932, when all Members of the House from Missouri were elected at large, Mr. COCHRAN led the ticket. That term he was the only St. Louisan in Congress and represented the detailed interests of the whole city at the Capital. Last time he ran, the Republican organization, knowing it was impossible to beat him, refused to back an opponent.

In the last few years, despite cruel suffering and the loss of both legs, Mr. COCHRAN has gallantly carried on. Now he feels he must retire and he has asked his district to support for his seat Frank M. Karsten, his able secretary.

A salute to JACK COCHRAN.

GLOBE-DEMOCRAT

It is typical of Congressman JOHN J. COCHRAN that he is not willing to render part-time service. This phrase in the letter announcing his withdrawal from the Democratic primary on August 6 reflects the philosophy of hard work and conscientious service which has made him one of Missouri's outstanding Representatives in Congress.

In recent years Mr. COCHRAN has carried on his duties despite physical handicaps which would have forced the retirement of most men. His continued illness has prompted the decision to retire at the end of his present term. Although the people of St. Louis understand and concur in his decision, they regret the circumstances which make it necessary.

Mr. COCHRAN has served this community well for two decades. Republicans as well as Democrats have joined in paying their respects, and had his health improved he would have been assured of reelection this fall. Instead he has wisely decided to regain his health, and St. Louis extends its sincere wishes for a speedy recovery.

STAR-TIMES

"My heart is and has been in my work as a Member of Congress," JACK COCHRAN wrote yesterday as he announced that continued ill health was prompting him to withdraw from the race for reelection to the House from the Thirteenth District, and he wrote his own seal on the job he has done for St. Louis during the 11 terms he has served.

With an unswerving zeal, Congressman COCHRAN has poured that heart of his into round-the-clock work for his district, his city, and his Nation, and it has always been a tremendously big heart. He is wise, nonetheless, not to wear it out in the further tracking of a man-killing task.

His figure will be missed there at the front of the House, where he sat so long in his wheel chair, head cocked toward the Speaker's chair. It is good to know that, even in retirement, his knowledge and devotion will still be available to the city he has loved so much and served so well.

The Crosser Bill

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. THOMAS A. JENKINS

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, August 2, 1946

Mr. JENKINS. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks, I wish to say that I am glad that the President has signed the Crosser bill. I voted for the Crosser bill on every occasion and did what I could to bring about its passage. I was moved to do this because I was a member of the Ways and Means Committee when the original railroad-retirement legislation was up for consideration. I took a very active part in the preparation and passage of that legislation. I have at all times since then felt a personal interest in that program and have stood up for it on every occasion.

On the historic day of July 3, I was one of the 180 whose votes were responsible for the passage of the Crosser bill and who have been referred to frequently by "Labor," the official newspaper of the railroad brotherhoods.

I was also present in Congress and voted for the final passage of the bill regardless of the amendments which the Senate had placed thereon. That vote was cast on July 27, 1946, when the bill was passed by a two-thirds majority.

I want to congratulate Mr. CROSSER for his untiring efforts in behalf of this legislation. I also want to compliment the representatives of the railroad brotherhoods for the very sensible manner in which they advanced the interests of those whom they represented.

Reserve Officers in World War II

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. JOHN W. BYRNES

OF WISCONSIN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, August 2, 1946

Mr. BYRNES of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, because, in our haste to put the last war behind us and in the confusion incident to our conversion to peace, we are apt to lose sight of the outstanding services performed in that war by the various civilian components of the armed forces, I have asked the Reserve Officers' Association to prepare a short summary of the wartime accomplishments of the Officers' Reserve. Since it shows briefly the wisdom of the policies laid down by the National Defense Act of 1916 and provides a historic guide for our future consideration of our peacetime military requirements, under unanimous consent, I include that summary in the RECORD:

The National Defense Act of 1916, as amended in 1920, provides for the establishment of the Organized Reserve Corps, composed of both the Officer's Reserve Corps and the Enlisted Reserve. When officers were relieved from active duty after World War I, they were offered commissions in the Corps, and approximately 60,000 of them accepted those commissions.

The National Defense Act also provided for the establishment of the ROTC system in our colleges and universities, and, through this system, in peacetime, we produced the officers who were the nucleus from which the Army of World War II was built.

This country, as a whole, does not realize the debt it owes to the 120,000 Reserve officers who were available in 1940 when it was necessary to increase the size of our peacetime Army because of the threat of war. The availability of these officers made it possible to expand this Army from approximately 200,000 in August 1940 to 8,000,000 at the end of the war.

These peacetime-produced Reserve officers, with a sprinkling of World War I officers, who had maintained commission status during these years, were the officers who manned our reception centers, our replacement training centers, our officer candidate schools, and who composed 90 percent of the officers with troops on December 7, 1941. This group of officers built up the Army until it reached the strength of more than 2,500,000. This was the hardest part of the job, since upon reaching that strength, by taking cadres from new units and producing new officers from OCS, it was possible to build up rapidly until we reached our final strength.

It might be of interest to note some of the accomplishments of these officers during this war. A tabulation of the officer strength of five combat divisions who had seen the most service as of June 30, 1944, revealed that 62 percent of the lieutenant colonels on duty with those five divisions were Reserve officers; 95 percent of the majors, 85 percent of the captains, and 70 percent of the first lieutenants—76 percent of the unit commanders in these five divisions, from platoon up, were Reserve officers. In other words, the officers who were leading our troops in battle were largely reserve officers. Later, this percentage changed somewhat as the number of officers commissioned from AUS gradually began to outnumber all other components.

When the total strength of the Army was reached, the Reserve officers represented approximately 20 percent of the total officer strength of the Army. A little more than 60 percent of all field officers in the Army at that time were Reserve officers. This 20 percent of total officer strength, in other words, produced 60 percent of our field officers. The Regular Army only represented 2 percent of the total officer strength; the balance of the officer strength was from the civilian components—the ORC, National Guard, and AUS.

Inasmuch as all AUS officers are offered the opportunity to accept Reserve commissions upon relief from active duty, they may well be considered part of the officer Reserve strength. The National Guard, also part of the Reserve component, represented 3 percent at the peak strength and made as fine a record as the Reserve during the war.

In building for the future, this country must put more and more faith and confidence in our Reserve officers who are willing, during peacetime, to spend time and money and effort to become competent officers when called upon in case of war. It is encouraging to note that approximately 70 percent of the officers of World War II, upon being relieved of active duty, are accepting Reserve commissions.

Save the American Republic

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. RALPH W. GWINN
OF NEW YORK
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, August 2, 1946

Mr. GWINN of New York. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include herein excerpts from an article published in the National Republican Club Bulletin for April 1946:

SAVE THE AMERICAN REPUBLIC

The leading Communist newspaper in the United States, the circulation of which is growing daily, has been publicizing an intensive recruitment campaign for membership by the Communist Party. We hear that the present goal in New York City is 20,000 new members. We have yet to hear of a similar drive for membership conducted by either of the two major parties.

Should a citizen decide to join the Communist Party, it is very easy to become acquainted with its aims, but it is not so easy for any citizen who wishes to join either of the major parties to find out what their principles are.

Because the Communists and their fellow travelers have discovered that the majority of the American citizens will not join their ranks under the label of communism, they have invented a very skillful device which they have been using successfully—to wit, they pose as great proponents of democracy without defining what democracy is. Their propaganda subtly implies that democracy means opposition to fascism only and no opposition to communism and that anyone who opposes communism is a Fascist. Tragically, thousands of our citizens, and they include members of both major parties, have been duped by this formula. We hear of Republican and Democratic Senators and Congressmen attending anti-Fascist rallies, joining various self-styled democratic leagues, the purposes of which are ostensibly to fight fascism but actually to weaken any opposition to communism. Both major parties have been so weakened by this process of communistic erosion, that the Democratic Party can very well be called now the Socialist Party of America.

In the hubbub of political confusion, little do we hear about devotion to the Constitution of the United States of America; little about truly representative government; little about the sacredness of the Bill of Rights.

It was indeed an occasion for mourning when we heard recently of a Congressman who had served his country for many years, resigning with the observation that this has ceased to be a repubic and that we are now a nation governed by decree. The red Democrats have long since thrown to the winds of oblivion all concepts of sovereignty of state and they are clamoring ceaselessly for a more powerful tyranny in Washington and for more government by decree.

In a nation which under its great Constitution has achieved the highest degree of prosperity thus far attained anywhere in the world and which is frequently asked for help by the red democracies, we hear constantly of ever-growing vicious propaganda about capitalist oppression, class injustice, and religious persecution. The red democracies under their slogan of antidiscrimination and democratic equality, have done everything to create class hatred, to destroy religion, and inculcate into the American people an ever-growing greed for more money and less work.

While the Communist Party is soliciting membership, and the two major parties are resting on their laurels, the so-called righteous-thinking citizens indulge in a virile denunciation of all politicians. These men do not miss any opportunity to vilify politicians and to discourage the average citizen from being interested in politics, and such men are the most dangerous opponents of our Republic. They try to discourage our citizens from participating in politics and denounce those who do, thus putting a stigma on any citizen who is active in politics.

Unless the liberty-loving Americans wake up and do something about it without further delay, this Republic, the greatest on earth, shall perish. We can and we must prevent this and it can be prevented if all the lovers of a centralized bureaucracy in Washington and a government by decree—a government in which wages are fixed, prices are fixed, property rights are destroyed by confiscatory taxes, citizens demoralized by paternalistic "gimme" legislation—a government in which free enterprise is fast being destroyed, in which free opportunity is eliminated by making it impossible for a man to choose his own vocation and his own fellow workers—stay in the Democratic Party and let that party honestly change its name to the Socialist Party and let all those nominal Republicans who are supporters of the red democracies join that Democratic Party to which they rightfully belong, but let those who love our Republic and who are mindful of the fact that the greatest Americans—Washington, Lincoln, Jefferson, to mention a few—were politicians in the noblest sense of the word, become politicians also and belong to the Republican Party, be active in it so that that party stands for our constitutional republican form of government. Only by building up a strong major party devoted to our republican form of government can the red avalanche be stopped. Thus I call on you all—become politicians and help to save America.

Meditations of a Nonagenarian

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. GEORGE B. SCHWABE
OF OKLAHOMA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, August 1, 1946

Mr. SCHWABE of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, sometime ago I received a poem written by one on his ninetieth birthday. The author is a former instructor of mine. He is none other than W. J. Lhamon, of Columbia, Mo. He was president of the Missouri Bible College when I was a student in the University of Missouri. He has long been renowned as a biblical scholar and an expounder of the Scriptures of rare ability.

Dr. Lhamon, as we students were fond of calling him, has honored me by sending me his autographed Meditations of a Nonagenarian. These are the meditations of a man who has reached his ninetieth birthday, a man who has lived an exemplary life and has taught others how to live according to the pattern laid down by the Man of Galilee. His wholesome teaching made indelible impressions upon my mind and helped to mold my character. To him and his precepts and example I am most deeply indebted for the ideals I cherish and the life I have attempted to live. In his letter of transmission of his meditations, he was characteristically complimentary when he said to me:

Your letter to me of recent date brings a joy and a surprise. Also it stirs up memories of the long ago. It is good to know that you found those days in our Bible classrooms rich and rewarding ones. I never dreamed that I was helping, however humbly, to educate a Congressman—and I will add, a statesman, which is different—sometimes.

Nothing is sweeter than to see a man who has been active all of his life and at the ripe old age of 90 summers, still mentally alert, intelligently refined, and spiritually inspiring. These are the traits and characteristics of a life that has not been lived in vain and of hopes immortal. Such a life and such a spirit should be an inspiration to us all to live as if we are only beginning at the end of this life to live for immortality. It enables us to envision the sweetness of life eternal.

The beautiful lines of my former instructor, Dr. W. J. Lhamon, follow:

MEDITATIONS OF A NONAGENARIAN

NINETIETH BIRTHDAY

Felicitations above desert. Children, grandchildren, friends afar and near. Handclasps, wishes, kisses, letters galore, and euphemistic adjectives. An old heart grows warm with memories and gratitude.

Friends and friends say, "Keep on living."
I wonder why.
Life's race is well nigh run;
Life's work is well nigh done;
Life waits beyond the setting sun.
Why keep on living?

Loving and loved ones say, "Keep on living."
Your wish is sweet. But think, my child;
I've gone my way;
I've said my say;
There waits an endless day.
Why keep on living?

Flattering words hint years yet ten.
Some sands are yet in time's hour glass;
Some strength of will brings things to pass;
Some force of mind shapes thoughts en-mass;
But no! A slowing step. The flesh is weak.
Why keep on living?

Friends, loved ones, flatterers,
This is why.
I want to strike when I am mad;
I want to crush the thing that's bad;
I want to shout when I am glad,
Deo volente, let me live.

Friends, loved ones, flatterers.
This is why.
A thousand thoughts are yet to say;
A thousand debts are yet to pay;
A thousand prayers are yet to pray;
Deo volente, let me live.

Brothers! brothers!
This is why.
I want to curse the cosmic fraud
That peace is built on Caesar's sword,
On jungle snarl, and fang and tooth and claw;
I want to bless our Lord Christ's way
Of teaching, healing, love and law.
Deo volente, let me live.

Our Choice: Self-Government Under God's Law or Compulsory Government Without God

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. RALPH W. GWINN
OF NEW YORK
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Friday, August 2, 1946

Mr. GWINN of New York. Mr. Speaker, the Seventy-ninth Congress is ending another chapter in the age-old, never-ending conflict between two fundamental concepts of government. One is self-government by men disciplined to exercise freedom on their own account under God's laws, without any other restrictions of government than are necessary to a free social order. The other is government by the strictly enforced compulsions of mere men over other men who hold that people are unfit for freedom and will not behave without ruthless compulsion.

Free societies merely use government in order to protect the exercise of their liberties from foes within and without, never in order to take on the exercise of their citizens' liberties for them. This has been our American concept of the constitutionally limited use of government for 150 years.

In stark contrast to this limitation of Government protecting the citizens' practice of freedom, we find the compulsory state which invariably pretends to be able to manage the people better than they can manage themselves. This is the philosophy of statism, which underlies all forms of fascism, whether it be communism, socialism, or collectivism.

Such Fascist forms of government cannot be mixed with self-government. They must conflict. Yet right now, the greatest American delusion is that we can be half managed or compelled and half free. Simply stated, then, we have attempted for 2 years now to balance and compromise between freedom and tyranny. First one, then the other.

Each time the exercise of freedom, through constitutional self-government, breaks, some group, generally of rough, tough persons, emerge to impose their wills on the whole people. They assume the leadership of the compulsory state. Sometimes they have been in government, sometimes not. It is exceedingly easy to do, as we have seen at home and abroad.

Given conditions of hardship and tension and disorder, complexities of life that seem too hard, scarcity of food and shelter, and the people have listened to the promises of the false leaders of our central government. By a barrage of propaganda, the people are persuaded that the ordinary citizens are unfit, incompetent, selfish, or greedy and must give way to the superior wisdom and power and mercy of the Central Government itself. In this manner, weak minds actually find comfort in the thought that there is an almighty state to carry on their burdens and plan their lives.

Of late, we have been witnessing most of the peoples of the earth reject the disciplines of voluntary self-government to choose instead the compulsory state, depending on the promises of its tyranny. The Italians wanted Mussolini because he promised to get them what they wanted. The Germans clamored for Hitler, voted for him time and time again in overwhelming numbers, just as the Russians worshipped Lenin and Stalin, because they promised them what they wanted. That is the tragedy of all ages. People can be deceived over and over again by the same cold and calculated promises of power-hungry demagogs.

In fact, our own forefathers had scarcely won equality of opportunity to pursue life, liberty, and happiness for themselves, before the people wanted to give it all up and make Washington king over them. Such is human nature, and such is mankind's most deadly and ancient sin. Without exception, sooner or later every nation up to modern times has fallen again and again into this sin.

The paradox of our time is that educated modern people, in spite of this knowledge of history, have given up freedom and personal responsibility and submitted, often without a fight, to many different forms of tyrannical government, all alike in their use of force and murder and slavery on the people. This tragic fact reminds me that never before has the almighty state possessed means of education and propaganda and communication like the modern state parties by which to deceive the people, both efficiently and completely. Add to this the other fact, that modern guns and motors and bombs in the hands of 2 percent of the people, organized under one party control, makes counterrevolution too bloody to contemplate. Thus a so-called new order that may endure for generations is made quite possible. The suppressed citizens are rendered helpless without voice or weapons.

Now, then, how can we Americans any longer entertain the delusion that we alone are not as other men, tempted as they are tempted to put faith in false hopes, built upon the false idea of the goodness of the state. How can we, as a people, foolishly hope to realize our aspirations for the good things of life for all the people through ever-growing state measures, instead of through the exercise of freedom. That so many entertain such false hopes may be explained by the fact that everyone of us has been influenced by the teachings of the same pagan philosophers that taught the Europeans. Do you remember how, prior to the First World War, we sent our top students from our colleges to finish their education in Berlin, Heidelberg, Leipzig, Munich, Vienna, and many other universities glorifying the state? They came back with their Ph. D.'s, proud of their new learning, to instill in us and our children, in college and high school, the political ideas of the so-called greatest modern philosopher, Hegel, and his disciples, Marx and Engels.

True enough, those professors who in their hearts embraced the doctrines of statism have taken care to dilute their Marxist teachings. They are clever. They know the psychology of educational propaganda. They seek to make their insidious ideas palatable. Thus, they have succeeded in confusing young minds and in making our young men and women doubt free society. But this vicious teaching, built on the technique of negative suggestion, can only end by driving our youth toward the only alternative to freedom—namely, statism and government control. That is the new God that has been systematically and regularly taught to them.

That we, the descendants of a great religious tradition of political liberty, should have to confess the very great influence of such pagan and freedom-killing learning from Europe, makes us hang our heads in shame too late. Yet it is our American tragedy that we permitted it to happen. God and the passion for freedom have been generally banished from our literature, our conversation, our everyday plan of life and our political order. Have not our masters been the same as those who taught the Germans and Russians? And since we let down our religious and moral guard, a vacuum of spiritual development for self-government was permitted to emerge. That vacuum is now being filled by the modern demon of statism.

It is inevitable that true freedom must disappear under this teaching of statism. Every time power is added to the state, and faith increased in centralized government, the people's faith in themselves and in each other is decreased. They are weakened in their own moral judgment. Their constitutional ideas are blunted. Their inventive and productive capacities are increasingly burdened with the oppressive load which the state places upon them.

Is there any doubt of it? Are we not at this time looking to the all-wise state and depending on its promises to manage prices and persons?

Are we not promised cheaper butter and beef and clothing and houses than free men and women would or could provide? Do we not look to the Government for jobs and wages and subsidies? For health and medicine and hospitals at lower costs and better than freedom provides? For Federal aid and direction of education which the individual counties and States fail to provide, as well as the Federal Government could? Do we not clamor for Government to provide houses for our veterans because the ways of Government are alleged to be cheaper, more competent, less selfish, and greedy than the ways of individual builders? Taught by our own Government to be afraid of freedom, we fear to take back powers we extended to it for the duration of the war only.

Who says that free men are less competent and honest and productive than government? Why, our own Government itself. To persuade and deceive the people it employs 45,000 experts, publicists, writers, radiomen, and columnists at a public expense of more than a hundred million dollars per year.

Who says a free people are full of greed, and selfishness, and ignorance, and sickness, unhoused and unfed, while the clamor goes up for appropriations, management and control by government. Why our own Government says so. It leads the clamor against the people's own representatives. Thus, the people are taught by the Government itself the goodness of Government and the evils of free men. Thus, our own Government prostitutes the American concept of freedom. It does not glory in the freedom of its citizens, but in the control and management of them.

Suppose for a moment we should employ 45,000 experts to teach the blessings of freedom and its fruits in production and invention. And suppose further that we kept this up for a period of 10 or 15 years, on an appropriation of more than a billion dollars. We could convert this world to freedom as America did change the world, by its example, during the last 150 years. But as we have weakened our faith in freedom at home, we have weakened our example, our influence, and our mission abroad.

Let it be clear, that once we lay down the practice of our Christian concepts of freedom as our dominant culture, the compulsory state is unable to practice this freedom for us. Quite the opposite is true when the state ceases to protect the individual exercise of freedom and becomes the manager of individuals, it violates the fundamental laws of God and free human spirits.

Among free individuals, love is the greatest thing in the world. Love suffers long and is kind. As between individuals exercising self-government, love is, therefore, the perfect law of freedom. We have been taught that we must love even our enemy, but all this is impossible in a political order maintained through compulsion, through the exercise of power of mere man over other men. Such a state cannot practice the Golden Rule; it can only suspend and destroy it.

The compulsory state, in all of its manifestations, loves itself and is proud. It is puffed up and vain. It pretends to be the source of goodness and mercy and which, therefore, must not be disputed or questioned or opposed. It sets itself up as the judge of all that is right and wrong, and there is no appeal from its decisions. By propaganda, and by the control of the thoughts of the people, it tells only the one side that is favorable to itself. It conceals the whole truth. It rejoices in the iniquity and the fall of all those opposed to it. It suspends the operation of the Golden Rule. If necessary, it murders its opponents to achieve its purposes. It can tolerate no party but one loyal to itself. It can acknowledge no mistakes, unless it weaken its own omnipotence and its hold upon the people. Its management of prices and persons, health and education and housing plans, in brief, its tyranny, must be maintained without opposition, lest the presumed good of the people be disturbed. Thus, the almighty state is, in truth, God, and can tolerate no other god beside it.

This is the reason why the modern state is necessarily atheist of character. It does not exalt God's sovereignty. Neither does it keep inviolate the rights and dignity of the individual person.

From the individual the promise of life eternal is from God. The immortal message to individuals is, "Give—lose your life that ye may find it"—a concept impossible for statism to comprehend.

And let us remember, too, the state is of the earth—earthy—it cannot give. The state can but imitate and appropriate and coerce. It does not create, and where it becomes all-powerful it is all, and it ends all. So, in review, to the extent that we have expanded the power of government over us, we have done what Christians, anxious to maintain a Christian society, cannot do.

Our forefathers had to decide whether they would remain loyalists to a crown or whether they would cast their lot uncompromisingly and dangerously for freedom from foreign tyrants. They could not then—we cannot now—compromise between freedom and tyranny, as we are trying to do among the conflicting forces here and the powers beyond the Atlantic.

We must take an uncompromising and constructive stand for freedom. Above all, we must become practical. Just as this Republic was not brought into being by men who merely talked about freedom, so even we must realize that it is not enough that we see the problem or have knowledge of it. Freedom is a political idea and can live only by the work of political parties. There never was any other practical defense of freedom than the practice of politics—practical politics.

The traitors to freedom are organized. They must be overwhelmed in the political arena. This attack will be made soon at the polls.

This battle, more difficult for us to win than mechanical warfare, requires active participation in the systematic organization of groups, schools, churches, neighborhoods, and political parties across the country in every election district. It means volunteering as a worker, a doorbell ringer in the election district, a leader of thought, and an organizer of your neighbors' votes. We must become crusaders for freedom, political freedom under God's laws. We must organize and teach and spread our concern until it is commonly supported. People vote the way they are organized to think and vote.

We must make freedom work so well that it will be more greatly desired at home and then by example and influence spread abroad. If there are unemployed, if there is sickness, if there is need of friendship, houses for veterans, if our neighbor is troubled in any way, it is our concern. Only freemen have found enough for their needs. Only freemen are so inventive, productive, and cooperative as to provide the needs equal to an increasing population. If we fail in this, the people will turn to salvation by Government control. That is the nature of the conflict we are in.

In a world for the most part submerged in tyranny and statism, Providence has granted us an hour of grace. This is the challenge today to men and women who wish to prove themselves worthy of freedom, by assuming personal responsibility for it. God help us to appreciate, and, if necessary, fight to maintain freedom of life, freedom of the spirit of man, and freedom in the invention and production and use of property. And may our example be so good at home that it may be extended to all men everywhere.

Prospective Trade Agreements May Be Destructive to Many Industries

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. THOMAS A. JENKINS

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Saturday, July 27, 1946

Mr. JENKINS. Mr. Speaker, on July 11, 1946, I made a speech on the work of the House in which I discussed the fact that the Committee on Reciprocity Information had been contemplating making trade agreements that would involve at least 3,000 different commodities. In that speech I stated in effect that the departments of government having to do with the making of reciprocal trade agreements had indicated about a year ago that they were going to hold meetings with some 14 other nations in which meetings they would discuss the trade treaties that would involve those commodities. Those meetings have not been held and no very plausible explanation has been given for the failure to hold the meetings.

In that speech I stated that there were intimations that the reasons the meetings had not been held were that it was feared that such meetings would work to the disadvantage of the British loan legislation then pending and that the imminence of the November election might have some influence on the matter of holding the meetings. I further stated in that speech that I had written a letter to the Committee on Reciprocity Information which letter I inserted in the RECORD as a part of my remarks.

I think it is only fair that I should now submit for printing in the RECORD a copy of the letter I received from Mr. Lynn R. Edminster, chairman of the committee, which was in reply to my letter. Mr. Edminster's letter is as follows:

JULY 13, 1946.

Hon. THOMAS A. JENKINS,
House of Representatives,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. JENKINS: I have received your letter of July 8, 1946, in which you state that you have been advised that the administration is planning to hold a conference with 14 other nations for the purpose of considering reduction or elimination of tariff rates on about 3,000 commodities manufactured in the United States and in which you urge that the list of commodities which will be considered at this conference be published immediately.

Before directly replying to your request, may I explain what I understand from the State Department to be the central facts regarding the development of plans for the trade conference.

Last December this Government published its Proposals for Expansion of World Trade and Employment, a copy of which is enclosed, and the Secretary of State urged the calling of a world trade conference to consider these proposals and the establishment of an international trade organization to take its place in the structure of the United Nations alongside of the Bretton Woods organizations, the Food and Agriculture Organization, and other economic agencies which might be created by the United Nations. These proposals contemplate, among other things, the reduction of tariffs and the removal of many other kinds of barriers to trade, including abandonment of discriminatory practices which prevent the expansion of trade on a multilateral basis. The Economic and Social Council of the United Nations, at the suggestion of this Government, has approved the calling of a trade conference and has appointed a preparatory committee of 19 nations to prepare an agenda for the trade conference and develop a draft charter for the proposed international trade organization. The Economic and Social Council has called a meeting of this preparatory committee for the 15th of October, at which views will be exchanged about the project for the world trade conference and the international trade organization, and at which plans for future meetings will be made.

Meanwhile, in connection with and in preparation for the trade conference, the United States has invited 15 other nations to negotiate trade agreements with us and with each other for the reduction of tariffs and other trade barriers. These negotiations will be held subsequent to the preliminary exchange of views at the October 15 meeting. No tariff concessions will be discussed at the October meeting. So far as the United States is concerned, the trade-agreement negotiations will be conducted under authority of the Trade Agreements Act. As you are aware, that act authorizes reductions of tariffs up to 50 percent of the rate in existence on January 1, 1945, and would not permit the elimination of the tariff on any item.

In view of the fact that the actual tariff negotiations are still necessarily many months away, publication at this time of the list of commodities which will be considered would be premature, even if such a list were fully prepared and ready for publication. Actually, however, much work still remains to be done; so that it would be impossible in any event to comply with your request at this time. In preparing such a list it is necessary to give preliminary consideration to relevant facts bearing on the inclusion or possible inclusion of many hundreds of commodities. Even the mere decision to list a commodity (quite apart from the subsequent decision whether to grant a concession and if so how much) involves a great deal of preliminary work. This work, for which the Tariff Commission has been called upon to supply the bulk of the information, is extremely laborious and time-consuming.

I am not unmindful of what you say in your letter regarding the feeling of apprehension which exists among various American industries by reason of uncertainty concerning the publication and contents of this commodity list. I should like to emphasize, however, that, after the announcement of negotiations has been made and the list of commodities to be considered has been published and given the widest possible dissemination, every opportunity will be accorded interested parties to prepare and present their case. Adequate time will be allowed for preparation of briefs; public hearings will be held as required by law; and the trade-agreements organization will carefully analyze and digest the testimony and collate it with other information available to it before arriving at a decision with respect to any product. No decision or commitment will be made with respect to any item until this process for obtaining and giving full consideration to the facts and views submitted by interested parties has been completed.

Sincerely yours,

LYNN R. EDMINSTER,
Chairman.

OPA Days Numbered

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. GEORGE B. SCHWABE
OF OKLAHOMA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Thursday, August 1, 1946

Mr. SCHWABE of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, back in April 1946, when the House of Representatives in Congress passed an OPA Extension Act, when many of us voted against it, the OPA was most unpopular. It attempted to control in peacetimes our every activity and to prevent natural laws of supply and demand from operating, and there is every reason to believe that the bureaucrats did not want to see a free market in America again.

It is sometimes good to look in retrospect to what has happened and what the people said before it happened. Therefore, I am glad to quote the following editorial from the Tulsa (Okla.) Daily World of April 5, 1946, entitled "OPA Days Numbered":

Since the close of the war, the OPA has been one of the most criticized of Federal bureaus. Price fixing, along with discharge of veterans, has created a condition that is more explosive than any other Federal function because it reached all of the people at some place. That Members of Congress are attempting to fix a time limit on its functions will come as good news to most people.

By and large the OPA has prohibited free interchange of commodities and is responsible for many of our current shortages. The national administration's policy of stopping inflation by controlled prices has not had the desired effect. Prices and wages, too, now that unions are pressing for major advances, eptiomize the typical uncertainties surrounding the free-market play of supply and demand that is the essence of peacetime business, as contrasted with a war economy.

In recent months business, more than ever, has had to rely on accurate reporting and intelligent interpretation of the rapid and sensitive changes in economics that determine the future of business. The OPA with its confusion of regulations and restrictions has not clarified a complex situation. The administration's wage and price policies has not been conducive to the widespread use of capital in industry. It has held to the tenet that substantial increases in wage rates will be permitted but prices for the most part will be maintained a present levels. This philosophy has been impracticable. A free labor and commodity market is not possible unless governmental controls are eliminated.

Address of Gov. M. Q. Sharpe to the Republican State Convention at Pierre, S. Dak., July 8, 1946

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. FRANCIS CASE
OF SOUTH DAKOTA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Tuesday, July 30, 1946

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, under permission to extend my remarks, I wish to include the address of the Honorable M. Q. Sharpe, of South Dakota, before the Republican State convention which was convened in Pierre on July 8, 1946. It was a most constructive address and there have been many requests for it. The address follows:

Mr. Convention Chairman, delegates of the Republican voters, and visiting friends, it seems good to see you here today, fresh from the Republican voters of South Dakota and engaged in your important work of forming the policies and selecting the candidates of our party for the coming election. The Republican voters themselves have aided greatly in your work by the selection of the Honorable George T. Mickelson, the present attorney general, for the office of Governor of South Dakota. We can all sincerely agree that they have made a good choice for that important office and that our candidate will lead our party to an overwhelming victory in the fall election.

WE ARE THE REPUBLICANS

It is interesting to note the atmosphere of seriousness and purpose which pervades this convention today. The speech of the Honorable JOHN JENNINGS, Jr., Representative in Congress from the State of Tennessee, must have had much effect in directing your thoughts toward the impressive history of our party and the challenging possibilities of its future. Much of the seriousness and purpose which pervades this convention, however, arises from the difficult trying times of the past 12 years. It arises also from the faithful and aggressive work which Republican precinct committeemen and women, county organizations, and our State central committee have been doing throughout these years in order to maintain the original direction and purpose of Republican thought and action. Having all this past history in mind we can look about us in this convention today and say with pride, we are the Republicans. We are the representatives of the party which for 12 years has challenged in national and State affairs every attempt to circumvent and distort the constitutional principles of our country; every attempt to devitalize the great spirit of free and independent action within the limits of law which has been so characteristic of our people since the earliest settlements in Virginia and New England until the present time. We can likewise say that we, the Republicans, are the people who in the State governments that we have controlled during the past 12 years have practiced these same principles of fidelity to the Constitution, efficiency, and economy in government, so that today as you look around you throughout the entire United States of American we find that all those States which have been under Republican administration during the past trying years are today in the best financial condition of all the States of the Union and are today the very bulwarks of safety and strength for our system of government. They are the States which have really practiced the principles advocated by the Republican Party since its inception and beginning with its able, honest, broad-minded leadership under Abraham Lincoln.

WE FACE A CHANGING FUTURE

Impressive as is all this past history of our party, it would not alone guarantee the future success and usefulness of our party nor would it alone be sufficient to win continually the support of the majority of the electors. We cannot live forever as a party upon the reputation of Abraham Lincoln. His fine character and personality and his majestic accomplishments in the field of government still impress and inspire us and will always be landmarks from which our future direction may be charted, but that alone would not enable us to meet these challenging opportunities nor to solve these difficult problems of government now looming up so plainly before us.

We should avoid the danger of sedulous reliance upon past accomplishment. We are in the age of great and marvelous change. In the field of travel, it is now possible to reach the remote sections of the world in a few hours' time. Travel has also been made cheap and convenient on land, sea, and in the air, so that more and more each year our people are getting into the habit of moving from place to place, from job to job, frequently and easily. If a little trouble or hardship confronts them at one place many people do not fight it out as was the old custom; they simply move and try something else or try some other place. This tends to make communities unstable and causes ever increasing numbers of our people to be losing their time and spending their substance in travel instead of production and frugality. The tendency to rove is plainly growing. It has much effect on our economy and sociology and contributes to the difficulty of administering government.

In the field of communication, we see the most isloated farm, ranch, mine, or work camp of any kind keeping in up-to-the-minute touch with all the important events of the world. The most humble citizen can now sit in the privacy of his room while the political demagog, or the agent of any organized special interest, through the magic of radio, pours into his ears all kinds of alluring promises, false representations, appeals to his appetites, passions, prejudices, cupidity, and indolence. The art of printing has made it cheap and easy to flood the mails, libraries, reading rooms, school rooms, club rooms, with all kinds of bulletins, brochures, essays, treatises, advertisements, propaganda, and all kinds of similar influence-producing materials. The ordinary rank and file of the public is kept in a dither and state of confusion about politics, business, government, foreign affairs, and social conditions. It all adds to the difficulties which a political party of the present day must face.

Mass production on an ever-increasing scale is complicating our economy and sociology and posing problems which a progressive and efficient political party must meet. Mass production can make so many engines, machines, facilities, and can assemble so much raw materials, from which we can quickly produce more automobiles, radios, refrigerators, stoves, furniture, shoes, clothing, food and gadgets, appliances, devices for our necessities, conveniences and pleasures than we can possibly use or even sell. Under normal conditions and with the production plants now built up in all continents we can soon surfeit the world with all these. This all affects our labor, agriculture, industry, capital, and other practices and customs of the past in a substantial and troublesome manner. One peculiar manifestation is the fact that farms are growing larger and farmers and farm owners growing fewer, yet at the same time industrial plants tend to grow smaller and more numerous or in other words to decentralize.

Our very habits of food and clothing are changing with the new discoveries and processes. Now we can process and preserve products of the tropics and transport them efficiently to the Arctic and vice versa.

With all these various changes have come great changes in the thinking, desires, and habits of the people.

Education has tried to meet these changes. The medical profession has been meeting them. The other professions, no. While education has contributed greatly to our professional, scientific, physical, and economic changes, it has induced no corresponding change in our personal habits of thought or action in economics or sociology sufficient to make a satisfactory general adjustment to these new physical changes which science, invention, mass production, improved transportation, and communication have brought. Government, statesmanship and politics, law are still lumbering along with the same old process, procedures, ideals, passions, and prejudices hugging to their breasts armfuls of outmoded theories, fallacious ideas, musty traditions, and either utterly ignorant of or else arbitrarily resistant to this great ubiquitous field of change, challenge, and opportunity literally knocking at the doors of all government, statesmanship, and political agencies today.

OUR PARTY'S CHALLENGE

What is this challenge that poses itself so defiantly before the major political parties of this and all other countries of the world today? Why, in broad and plain outline, it is the challenge to meet these changing conditions brought by science, invention, production, and education with progressive and liberal thought and action appropriate to the conditions which we see so plainly before us. It is the challenge of forming new instruments of government—new policies of government—which will be conservative and practicable and reasonable without becoming so conservative as to be static or reactionary. It is the challenge to progressive and liberal thought and action without also being so radical or degenerative of the people that it will destroy their natural instincts of industry and frugality and self-denial and restraint. It is the challenge to have an educational system which will give practicable attention toward teaching the oncoming generations the necessity for this kind of governmental, statesmanlike, progressive, liberal thought and action attuned to the changes of the era unfolding before us. It is the challenge to promote this quality of personnel in public office; this courage of thought and action so that all the people in the fields, mines, shops, stores, offices, the high places and low places, the rich places and the poor places will really enjoy this freedom of opportunity and in a measure all these great physical improvements, inventions, and gadgets and appliances which mass production and scientific achievement, chemical research and investigation are ever making more easily attainable—more pleasant and abundant for the use of all. It is the challenge in this great Nation, and especially in this great State of South Dakota, to take the many undeveloped natural resources and develop them practicably and intelligently with their benefits and new wealth and higher standards of living, conveniences, and pleasure spread out more equitably and abundantly and generously to all the people. It is the challenge of stepping forward fearlessly but at the same time carefully into these new fields of opportunity for the general public welfare.

ORIGINAL CONSTRUCTIVE THINKING IS REQUIRED

No political party can meet these grand opportunities, these ever-widening and challenging problems by being merely a party of opposition or criticism of some other party, or some other philosophy or idea of government or statesmanship. If we continue to orient our thinking around criticism when will we ever solve anything constructive from our own original thinking? The party that can rise to the opportunities of this century and the great changes that have been made and still greater changes that are apparently in the offing in all forms of life, thought, and action will have to be a party of courage and practicable analysis, original thinking and skillful courageous personnel and intelligent, carefully calculated decisions. It will have to do its thinking on a wholesome, long-range program of permanent benefit to the people instead of on the expediency of winning the next election. We are facing the time for carefully considered judgments, courageously formed policies and of broad-minded realization of the onward, upward march of progress of the whole human race. We cannot expect to participate effectively in promoting this great reformation of policies, character, and thinking which are clearly demanded because of the accumulated errors of the past 12 years and exigencies of the present day unless we do something more than talk about the mess we are in. Neither can we go on the great mission or destiny confronting us by trying to belittle, deride, or ignore beneficial improvements or policies which another party may have developed. If any party has developed anything of use or benefit or practicable good for the general public, every other party should welcome it and adopt it, try to maintain and improve it and make it still more generally applicable and beneficial for the public. The day of the petty, narrow party-minded politician is rapidly passing. Our people are intelligent and educated and getting more so every year. Government, statemanship, and politics are due for upward steps in which reason and logic and accurate conservative calculated statements and policies and ideas are going to be the order of the day instead of a lot of passion-stirring, prejudice-invoking, petty-party politics.

Neither can we meet these great opportunities and challenges by dodging or subterfuge, or delay, or stalling, or putting it off until the next election or until a more favorable time, from a political standpoint, may arise. We must, as a party, meet some of these problems head-on and give them a fair and frank analysis and a four-square decision, no matter if taking a stand for or against some of the things that are now beating ominously and continuously at the doors of both parties must cause us to lose an office occasionally or even for several elections in a row.

ORGANIZED MINORITIES AND SPECIAL INTERESTS

Some of the most apparent and troublesome problems are generated by organized minorities and special-interest organizations. Throughout the years we have seen growing in an ever-increasing number and size and activity organized minorities, labor groups, agricultural groups, professional groups, religious groups, nationality groups, who in turn divide into special trades groups, special professional groups, special religious groups, special public-service groups, and special social groups seeking attention, grants, doles, socialized medicine, socialized education, socialized play, socialized recreation, in fact, socialized or governmentalized everything. Each year more and more the people are being courted, trained, and urged to rely upon this invisible thing, this supposedly inexhaustible reservoir of money, and grants, and pleasures, and everything else called government. Neither of our major parties is entirely blameless in the propagation of this idea among the people. We have all been too prone to listen to the voice of expediency and salving the feelings of different groups by use of the Public Treasury. This problem we must meet head-on, because, as each year proceeds and more and more people commence to want more and more money, subsidies, grants, benefits, aids and improvements, conveniences, pleasures, security, and supervision, and everything else from the Government, the weaker and weaker and poorer and poorer will become the Government and less able to respond to the real sovereign obligations of all government. Today we are facing probably some $300,000,000,000 of national debt and an additional local indebtedness of varying quantities in different localities and a whole nation of people growing more and more accustomed to asking more and more kinds of aids of all kinds from the Government. Some party must have the courage and mental honesty, carefully calculated intelligent decision, and, above all, the faithful, honest, aggressive action to meet this growing tendency of organized minorities to beset the Government, Government officials, and legislators with their deals and their attempts to exert influence primarily for their own special benefit. I respectfully submit for your consideration that it is an epochal opportunity for our party and an ideal appropriate to its impressive history.

Organized minorities always have one primary purpose in view and that is to get everything possible that will benefit the particular organized minority interest or idea which they represent. The general public welfare is not their motivating influence. They do, however, use it as a public relations approach and engage in all kinds of propaganda, specious arguments, half-truths and various other public relations activities to prove that they are the guardians of the public welfare, the defenders of what they call the American way of life and other attractive ideals. Nevertheless the natural logical reason for their existence controls and directs all of their activities, all of their support of or criticism of political parties primarily toward attainment of their own position, business, social or other objectives. They resort to all kinds of name calling, passion stirring, and prejudice-creating tactics. Anyone who happens to go counter to their minority interest is a Communist, Socialist, reactionary, radical, petty politician or any other vague or indefinite name that may throw any shade or discredit upon his ideas or activities. The real fact is that organized minorities and special-interest groups trend toward taking the general public for a poor ride on a band wagon of fallacious ideas, selfish policies, misleading political activities while pretending to be the great unselfish forward-looking guardians of the public welfare, the American way of life, the free-enterprise system, and a lot of similar things which the people themselves evolved out of our great wealth of natural resources and our old fashioned habits of industry, frugality, honesty, and virtue. Some political party, some public officials must have the courage and intelligence to challenge the organized minority, special interest lobbying groups head-on, to expose clearly their activities, and then to assign them to their proper sphere of influence on the Government and keep them there. I hope it may be our party—our own duly elected officials. It is an opportunity plainly confronting us.

The American way of life, the free enterprise system, and similar well-known ideals, what are these but our great general public itself? Without people, without this great general public supporting a thing called government, none of these great ideals or policies would exist. The people evolved and established them. Organized minorities and special interest groups are merely byproducts. We must keep foremost in party policies, in election decisions, in government, two basic ideas: First, that there is an over-all general organization superior to all other organizations and that is the general public, and second: That its interests should always be first in the thinking of all the people and in the policies of all political parties and the activities of all public officials. This general public is entitled to an organization of its own working just as faithfully and aggressively for it as does the organization of any minority or special interest group work for its own special objectives. The only organization, however, which the general public has are the Congressmen and legislators and public officials whom the political parties select for it. The general public has to rely on them; they are its only chance and hope. Our party as the makers of Congressmen, legislators, public officials, and government should be the organization for the general public first, last, all the time, and only. We should specialize on its interests as distinguished from interests of organized minorities and special influence groups.

OUR OPPORTUNITY

This is the opportunity that confronts our party today. We cannot meet it by advertising some other political party with a continual barrage of criticism and nothing else. We cannot win the confidence of the general public by a lot of name calling based on vague, indefinite, and undefined terms which mean little or nothing to the public. I doubt if we can win many future elections through high sounding political catch-all platforms nor by timid, stalling political expediency activities, nor by relying on the plans of any group of career politicians with their noses forever turned into the wind of the next election. The ultimate result is what counts. The general public is commencing to look through forms, names, slogans, speeches with a critical and appraising mind. Modern government requires more accurate thinking, more courageous action, and a more daring approach to the problems of the future than ever before. It is time for our party to specialize in the same kind of accurate thinking, the same courageous policy which marked its beginning and to become more than ever before the strong, reliable progressive champion of the general public interest and ready to bat down any minority or special interest tending to obstruct it.

I hope our platform committees both State and National will commence to bring forth those kinds of policies so that we may meet this epochal challenge, this magnificent rendezvous with destiny with a sincere, well calculated, long perspective program plainly directed, primarily and only, toward the general public welfare in which all organized minorities and interests, capital, labor, agriculture, industry, education, social plans and ideas will receive just treatment but nothing more so far as special government favor is concerned. Let us bring forth policies for which we need no apology and for which we can all sincerely work Let us bring forth candidates who will faithfully, intelligently, and industriously carry out those policies for the general public good.

A World War II Veteran Blames the OPA for His Troubles on the Farm

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. GEORGE B. SCHWABE

OF OKLAHOMA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, August 1, 1946

Mr. SCHWABE of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I have many letters from the veterans censuring severely OPA and its operations, which have made it extremely difficult for them to get started in business and on the farms. There are so many regulations and directives that they are perplexed and discouraged. These veterans do not like regimentation. They had all of it they wanted while they were in the armed forces. They thought they were fighting to rid the world of dictatorship and regulated economy.

Some time ago I received a letter from a World War II veteran who explained how OPA had made it difficult for him to succeed since he had returned from the service and was back on the farm. This letter was dated June 16, 1946, and was written by one who had been a bombardier in the last war. He complained of the operation of OPA under the former act, which was in force until June 30, 1946, at midnight.

I quote from this veteran's letter, as follows:

The apples were the best on the market, but early apples this year, due to sugar shortage, just are not selling at all.

I come in contact with many people, both farmers and merchants, and I think the thing that people are most bitter with the Government about is the OPA. I have talked to several who get your literature, and they are very strong for your ideas against it (the OPA) and the New Deal.

The farmer is absolutely helpless because of the OPA. They have feed prices so high he cannot buy the feed if he can get it, and on the other hand, OPA has prices on livestock and poultry and eggs and milk so low he cannot afford to sell anything. Stores in this vicinity are handling one-fifth of the eggs they were 30 days ago, and the price of eggs has not gone up a bit, but the price of feed has gone up about 20 percent, which I imagine is all in line with OPA.

You cannot sell fruit, because people cannot get sugar unless they pay $30 a hundred for it, and it is plentiful at that price around here. You cannot sell a green bean on the market since people cannot get meat to season beans with, but thank gosh, the canneries are buying beans and wanting them badly. Of course, they probably get stuff to can with, as the beans will probably go to fatten the Germans for the next war.

Well, so much for the OPA, as I know you receive many, many complaints about it.

The above testimonial does not indicate that the veterans who returned to the farms had any love for the operations of OPA. They know what was stifling production and how the OPA adversely affected them. They know it discriminated against them by holding the prices of their products down and increasing the feed prices and farm equipment which they had to buy. They soon found that a farmer could not make a profit under OPA operations. He could not even make a decent living for himself and family. They see sugar selling, as this veteran said, for $30 a hundred pounds. They know that the black-market operators were operating on every hand and they knew that OPA was responsible for the black markets, for we did not have black markets before we had the OPA. Hence these veterans, back on the farm, have blamed the OPA for their troubles and they were glad to see the President veto the new OPA bill and the old OPA law expire. They are now even more jittery about what may be expected from operations under the new OPA law. They do not know what to do until after August 20, and are fearful that they may not know what to do at any time as long as the OPA law recently enacted by Congress is in force. All industry, the farmers included, is in a state of confusion, as many of us who voted against the adoption of the new OPA law predicted would come to pass.

Letter to Secretary of Navy James V. Forrestal by Hon. Thomas R. Amlie, Former Member of Congress From Wisconsin

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. ANDREW J. BIEMILLER
OF WISCONSIN
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Friday, August 2, 1946

Mr. BIEMILLER. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks, I include a copy of a letter sent the Secretary of the Navy by former Congressman Thomas R. Amlie, of the First District of Wisconsin.

Mr. Amlie's letter raises a very basic question, which I hope the Navy will endeavor to answer.

DEAR MR. SECRETARY: One of our local papers for March 29, 1946, states that you have appointed a civilian committee to advise with the Navy Department on naval practices "disapproved by the public." I hope that this letter will be referred by your office to the appropriate committee or department.

To begin with, I wish to state that I appointed more than 20 boys to Annapolis and West Point while I was a Member of Congress during the 1930's. I tried to keep in touch with these boys and also tried to keep in touch with the enlisted men that I knew. I have had considerable personal contact with the Army and Navy and now have three of my boys in the Navy.

I did not like the caste system in the First World War and I notice that my boys do not like it any better in World War II. I am not too much impressed by their gripes, for after all the Army and Navy cannot be greatly different from the social structure as a whole. Most of the boys do not object so much to the caste system as they do to discipline. Anyway, I feel that these things will be straightened out, for the caste system cannot be used in an army that will become increasingly an organization of scientists and technicians. The speech by Rear Admiral Bowen and Capt. M. J. Lawrence at St. Louis a week ago indicates that the Navy Department is aware at the top of the nature of the problems that must be faced in the future.

But I have a complaint that is much more fundamental than the gripes of the enlisted men about the social distinctions and discriminations that are inherent in a caste system: It is that Uncle Sam observes meticulously his contracts with officers but that enlisted men belong to a class that is so inferior as to have no comparable contractual rights.

When a boy receives his appointment to one of the service academies he is fully informed of just what he is to get. He receives just what he has been promised. If the Government were to fail in the performance of its side of the contract, an uproar would take place in Congress immediately. The same thing has been true of the various courses such as the V-12 courses offered in various colleges and universities during the war years.

But when a boy goes to a recruiting office and listens to the promises and inducements held out to him by the recruiting officer, it is as though the recruiting officer had no connection with the Army or Navy whatsoever. He is free to paint the most roseate prospects imaginable and when the boy is once inducted the whole matter is a closed incident. From then on it is a matter of the left hand not knowing what the right hand has done as far as the Army or the Navy is concerned. There is nothing that the enlisted man can do after he is once in. He very quickly becomes disillusioned. He learns that he has simply been hooked for a sucker and that there is nothing for him to do but to wait out his hitch. When he enlisted, he was given the impression that he would have the opportunity to learn a trade and come out prepared to take a job better prepared than if he had not gone in. Instead of this he finds that he has to spend most of his time in demoralizing idleness with other young men who are also largely demoralized and that the opportunity does not exist to go to school or attend classes or even read or study. The years spent in the Army or Navy are calculated to make bums out of good boys. The whole experience is for 90 percent of the boys, the very opposite of what it had been represented to be by the recruiting officer.

I shall be specific. I shall use the example of my own boys for I feel that they are representative types. I am also well acquainted with their friends of their own age who are in the Navy and what they have told me bears out completely what I have to say.

My oldest boy, Tom, was 20 years old 2 days ago. He is an ensign taking a training cruise and expects to be discharged around the 1st of July. He spent 2 years at the V-12 here at the University of Wisconsin and received his bachelor of science degree in mechanical engineering and his commission while still 19 years of age. The Navy performed more than 100 percent.

I have another boy, Bob, who enlisted in the Navy radar course almost a year ago. When the war ended the classes were discontinued. He waited around at the place where he was taking the radar course for 2 or 3 months doing nothing, and was then sent back to Great Lakes, where he spent the winter guarding a coal pile. He is now on board a ship in San Francisco that will perhaps not be called upon to sail again, and where he will perhaps be stationed until he is discharged. It has been rather disappointing for this boy to spend a whole year in complete idleness or in doing work that was merely devised as a means of filling in time for "surplus" personnel. He should have been discharged when there was no further use for him, but the Navy was up against the point system for discharge, and has undoubtedly followed the course that would lead to the least criticism. The Navy has been up against a tough problem since the war ended and on the whole I believe that the Naval Reserve have been handled about as well as could have been reasonably expected.

Our third boy, Frederick or Fritz, represents a situation of quite another kind. Fritz wanted very much to enlist in the Regular Navy when he became 17 largely because most of his friends were in there. His mother and I did not feel that we had any right to stand in his way, because he would at least get more training in the Regular Navy than in the Reserve. Had he gone into the Reserves later on and gotten killed, we should never have been able to have avoided a feeling of responsibility. But primarily there were the specific inducements that were held out to him by the recruiting officer who urged him to join the Regular Navy. I was in Washington during the summer of 1944, but Mrs. Amlie went with him to the local recruiting office on two occasions, while she also went down alone on one occasion in order to get a better picture of what he would be up against in the Regular Navy and what opportunities he would have. Mrs. Amlie tells me that the officer in charge was a very fine young man who was very convincing. While she would not be able to give an accurate account of everything that was said, the inference to be drawn was that every possible opportunity was afforded to men who would enlist and that the advantages of a 4-year term in the Navy would be equal to a college education.

During a period of war, a lot of boys get the idea that they want to enlist as soon as they are 17. Recruiting offices are not set up to dissuade them but to try to persuade as many of them to enlist as possible. The qualities that go to make a successful recruiting officer are the same that go to make a successful salesman. Sales techniques are utilized that would not and could not be tolerated by an established business organization. In a time of war, or of other great national emergency, the Nation can close its eyes to many things for it is better to get the matter over with as expeditiously as possible than to tolerate delay because of undue squeamishness.

Objection can properly be made against the sales techniques of the recruiting service on the ground that the exceptional is made to appear to be the general. It is perhaps true that some 10 percent of the boys who enlist in the Regular Navy are satisfied with the opportunity that is afforded by the Navy. They are boys who just naturally fit into life in the Navy, besides in any group there is bound to be a small minority that will thrive no matter what may happen to the larger majority. A good recruiting officer holds out to the average boy a glowing picture of what has happened to the most fortunate boys who have enlisted in the Navy in the past, and his ability as a salesman will determine whether he can make the particular boy believe that the same good fortune will be in store for him if he enlists. In fact it goes farther than this. It goes so far that the average recruiting officer holds out to the average enlistee the assurance that opportunities of every kind will be offered to him if he will join up. Mrs. Amlie is a mother of normal prudence as witness the fact that she went with this boy to the recruiting office on two occasions and then went down alone in order to be able to have a more frank discussion with the young officer in charge. She came away with the assurance that the glowing opportunities that had been pictured would be available to every boy that might enlist.

For the first year, while the war was in progress, the Navy did about everything that could have been reasonably expected. But with the defeat of Germany, Fritz was sent t San Francisco where he was kept for 7 months in a state of complete idleness and in company with other sailors who were also idle and largely demoralized. This could not have happened if the intention of the Navy had been to make good on the promises that had been made to get these boys to enlist for 4 years in the Regular Navy. It is the most convincing and conclusive proof that at the top levels, the people in control of the Navy have written off as nonexistent the promises and representations made by their recruiting agents to enlistees. When the Navy proceeds to treat the boys in the Regular Navy in the same way that they do the boys in the Reserve they are breaching their contracts with these boys, for there is a fundamental difference between the position of the boys in the Regular Navy and in the Naval Reserve. The boys in the Naval Reserve were of an age where it fell to them to serve their country during a period of emergency. If they should be called upon to spend 6 months or a year going through useless motions, this is perhaps the sacrifices that they must expect to make, and they should not complain if the people in control exercise reasonable judgment and attempt to compel equal sacrifices. But the boys in the Regular Navy signed up for a longer period of time in consideration of certain promises and representations that were made to them.

When Mrs. Amlie made three trips to the local recruiting office to talk the whole matter over, she did so under a complete misapprehension of the facts. She did not know that the Navy operated under a double standard of contractual morality. It was quite unthinkable to her that the Navy would so completely fall down on its commitments to a boy who had enlisted for 4 years as to compel him to spend 7 months in complete idleness with other men who were also idle and demoralized. She was well acquainted with the circumstances of the boys in the V-12 here at the University of Wisconsin, and while in the first district, she had met most of the boys that I appointed to Annapolis and West Point. Nothing like this had happened to any of these boys. What she did not realize, was that things of this kind are not done to boys on the officer level. Officers are gentlemen and Uncle Sam is a gentleman. Contractual obligations are scrupulously observed. But on the level of the enlisted man in the Regular Navy, promises are just so much sucker bait which can be disregarded once the boys have signed up.

* * * * *

I believe that your committee would have but little trouble in establishing to your own complete satisfaction that a contract was entered into by and between the Navy through its recruiting officers on the one side and the enlistees on the other. While this contract would vary depending on the mentality of the enlistee and the salesmanship or persuasiveness of the recruiting officer, it is nonetheless something sufficiently definite for your committee to get a hold of and reconstruct. Certainly there are several hundred thousand boys who thought that they understood the terms of such a contract as well as thousands of parents who tried to assist their boys. * * *

There can be little question but that there has been a breach of contract as far as the tens of thousands of boys who were promised opportunities of every kind and were then kept in complete idleness for periods of 6 months at a time. That this could happen is symptomatic of something basically wrong and the thing that is basically wrong is the fact that the people in control of the Navy do not regard the promises of the recruiting officers as anything but selling spiels by persons not having the power to bind the Navy. Hence the policy of treating boys in the Regular Navy just as though they were in the naval reserves.

If it is the intention of the Navy to do justice to the boys who have found such great disparity between promise and performance; this can be done only by treating the whole contract as having been voided by failure to perform on the part of the Navy. Boys in the Regular Navy should be treated as being in the naval reserves and be entitled to discharge on the same basis.

It is true that if such a policy were adopted, that it would increase the necessity for continuing compulsory military service. If the draft law were to be extended for another year, our youngest boy, Bill, would be called. But it would be much fairer that he should serve a year or two than that Fritz should be compelled to stay in for 2 years more under the circumstances that have been stated. Personally, I do not think that the average American wants his security to depend on a system in which the recruiting office partakes of the nature of a "shanghaiing station."

I must confess that I cannot get excited about the officer caste system and the resulting social discrimination in the manner that I might have 28 years ago. I find myself reminding my boys that perhaps it "does them well to be angry." But it is quite something else for Uncle Sam to secure 4 years of a boy's life on the strength of promises that are disregarded because the boy is merely an enlisted man, while promises to another boy are meticulously kept because that boy belongs on the officer level.

Very sincerely yours,

THOMAS R. AMLIE.

No Mourning Here Over Death of OPA

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. GEORGE B. SCHWABE

OF OKLAHOMA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, August 1, 1946

Mr. SCHWABE of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, in the great wide open spaces of the Middle West there was no mourning over the death of the OPA. The people out our way knew of the high-handed and arbitrary methods employed by many of the 34,000 people on the pay roll of the OPA. They took a fresh breath when OPA died. They knew America would go on. They knew that American business would follow the laudable and successful paths it had trod for over 150 years in this country before we ever had OPA. They knew it was to be tolerated during the war, but they wanted to be free from its domination and regimentation after the war was over. They do not want OPA during peacetimes. Hence, there was no mourning by freedom-loving Americans in Oklahoma when the President vetoed the OPA bill in the latter days of June and when the old law expired at midnight June 30, 1946.

I am pleased to quote the following from the editorial page of the Chickasha (Okla.) Star of July 4, 1946, as expressing the sentiments of the vast majority of the people of the Middle West immediately after the demise of OPA:

There was no mourning in Chickasha and Grady Counties over the death of OPA. The opinion of most of the folks was that if the critter was dead the best thing to do was to embalm it. Grady County farm folks have been hounded and harassed for nearly 4 years by the bunch of bureaucrats at Oklahoma City. They are tired of their injustices, their high-handed tactics. Back in New York the foreign-born leaders of the CIO may resolute and bombard Congress with telegrams telling them what ought to be done. Out here in Oklahoma the folks are not going to waste any money sending telegrams. They know the OPA as it has been administered was against everything that made for justice and right for the farm folks.

The milk producer will now quit getting his check at the ceiling price and then being handed a little cash on the side to make up for the unjust ceiling imposed by OPA. The poultry producer will not have to lie and say that he is selling his chickens for breeding stock. The farmer can sell his oats on fair market and not prevaricate by saying they were being sold for seed. The farmer who has a farm sale can sell his tractor for what the folks are willing to pay for it and not have to put in an old hay rake or mower on the side.

The OPA as administered by Chester Bowles and his gang has made lawbreakers out of 90 percent of the American people. Out here in the wide open spaces the merchants and the farmers are not going to take an undue advantage of death of the critter. The merchants of Chickasha know they will be in business when the OPA is finally long since gone and forgotten. They are not going to gouge their neighbors now. There is a sense of fairness and justice among farm folks that will save the day if there is never another OPA. Unfortunately there are some people doing business, in New York, Kansas City, and Chicago who have no such code of ethics. But to revive the OPA now would just postpone the evil day when America must finally get rid of bureaucracy and once more go along on its own. As one Grady County citizen put it, if we are going to hell the OPA can't save us. It must be finally the common sense and good judgment of the American people as a whole that will save the American way of life.

Biggs-Cantrell Democratic Machines Beaten in Tennessee Elections

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. JOSEPH W. MARTIN, JR.

OF MASSACHUSETTS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, August 2, 1946

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, under leave granted to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following telegram from Hon. JOHN JENNINGS, Jr., of Tennessee:

KNOXVILLE, TENN., August 2, 1946.

Hon. JOSEPH W. MARTIN, Jr.,
Member of Congress:

GI Republican ticket in Monroe County and GI ticket of Democrats and Republicans in McMinn County on Thursday this week won smashing victories over the Biggs-Cantrell Democratic machines, in both of which counties they have been stealing elections through the use of pistols, blackjacks, and fraud for the past 10 years. In McMinn County the Biggs-Cantrell machine thugs shot a colored citizen in the back as he turned to walk away from the polling place from which he was being driven. Attorney General Clark is belatedly investigating conditions to which I have been calling his attention since prior to the November 1944 election, which was characterized by the grossest frauds in McMinn and Polk Counties, Tenn. Please get me permission to extend my remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD and wire me if this has been done. Many thanks.

JOHN JENNINGS, Jr.,
Member of Congress.

We Need Americans in Washington

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF

HON. GEORGE B. SCHWABE

OF OKLAHOMA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, August 2, 1946

Mr. SCHWABE of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, back in February 1946, before the New Deal Congress had voted a loan to Great Britain of $3,750,000,000, plus another loan to cancel the lend-lease account owing us by Great Britain, a strong appeal was made by those who cherished the idea of preserving America for Americans. Among the expressions of those who were still willing to think of Americans first and were not sold on the give-away philosophy of the New Deal, Mr. Richard Lloyd Jones in his editorial appearing in the Tulsa (Okla.) Tribune of February 16, 1946 said:

WE NEED AMERICANS IN WASHINGTON

(By Richard Lloyd Jones)

Wanted: Some darn fool who is affluent and gullible enough to lend me a million dollars, without interest, on an unsecured promissory note on which I will promise to pay only when I want to and if I want to. I would like to have this million dollars without cost to me because I find a fellow who will borrow it from me and will pay me 5 percent interest thus netting me $50,000 a year income without effort or without obligation on my part.

J. Q. PUBLIC.

Now this is just the deal which our State Department sends to Congress for ratification, only the State Department is asking our representatives in Washington to ratify just such an unsecured and unpromised loan of four thousand times one million dollars and all for the accommodation of the British.

And what do the British want to do with the money? They want to lend it to other nations at a substantial rate of interest. And the nations that the British will so lend our money will pledge themselves to pay both interest and principal. And they will pay it. They will pay it to the dot and on the day or British guns will ask them why. That's the British way. It is high time we Americans told our Government at Washington to quit making gullible fools of us.

We Americans do not want to see England destroyed. But we do want to see an honest England. And the England that is asking us for this loan is not honest. England took lend-lease from us to the total of billions of dollars raised by the American people who bought war bonds. Much of this lend-lease money we put in England's hands in full trust in England's honesty. England sold to other countries a lot of the food, clothing, and machines we loaned her and put the cash in her own pocket. She took the credit for being generous to other countries by giving them the things we gave England.

We are willing to do anything to save England if we could only make England honest. England is dishonest. And we are not going to get very far in a peaceful world with dishonest neighbors. The question begins to concern the American people who have been trusting their Government at Washington. How much can we give away? We already have given away more than we have. We are the most in debt nation on earth. And it is both foolish, flippant, and dishonest for our spendthrift politicians to say, "Well, we owe it to ourselves, don't we, so what's the difference."

It is a lot of difference. We don't owe it to ourselves collectively, or anything of the kind. We owe it to the individuals who loved their country best, who went deep into their pockets to buy war bonds. We bought war bonds to save America, not to save the comic opera king at Buckingham Palace or the parasitic colonial system of England.

We are already so far in debt our college mathematicians can't calculate on the blackboard the burden we have put on our own backs. We tolerated confiscatory taxes to save ourselves from bondage to international hijackers and to save nations that were unable to save themselves, little England among them.

We have gone into astronomical figures. We are two-thirds of a trillion dollars in debt. Yet England expects us to toss over to her another $4,000,000,000, or such, with no security, none, no security at all. And with no intention of ever paying a dime of it back.

England expects to make a loan to Greece, with our money, and gets interest from Greece on our money, and we are the gullible goons whose elected Government is very jauntily putting this additional burden upon the backs of patriotic American citizens who bought war bonds and paid the tax bill for England.

Does England offer to give us a single island in the far-off seas which we fortified to keep us all free? Not England. It is time we began to clamp down on dishonest little England. Do a little sharp but honest Yankee horsetrading with her.

But England is not alone in playing us for a sucker. France demands $3,000,000,000. The French are treating our soldiers over there with insolence, and they are telling us that we had better give them all the money they ask for or they won't promise to behave.

And now comes Russia. Russia says to us, "You hand over $7,000,000,000 and hand it over quick or maybe we will some day sprinkle our own make of atomic bombs over your country." And the Russians warn us, "Don't think we can't do it. We have already sprinkled our communistic doctrines so effectively over your continent-wide country that we have paralyzed your industrial production. Our ideologies have called your strikes, have demanded wages that sales' prices cannot sustain. We are Russianizing you and you are too gullible to catch on. You Americans don't give a whoop for your freedom. Freedom was your heroic talk in 1776, but it became nothing but a scrap of paper that now can't even be found when the 'four freedoms' were broadcast from somewhere in the wide Atlantic.

"At Yalta and again at Tehran your Roosevelt had us where we were compelled to treat with him for the relief which he made you give us and which saved us. But you Yankees are not smart any more. At Tehran you could have nailed down the 'four freedoms.' But you did not do it. That was just talk. Now we have enslaved all of eastern Europe. The right of a people to determine their own government was good political speechmaking, but now we have told the little nations of eastern Europe and western Asia that they will feed us and we will rule them as we please. And you do nothing about it. You Americans have no foreign policy. We have. Now, hand over $7,000,000,000 and when that is gone you will give us more. You don't dare deny us."

That is the way Russia talks to us today. And our little Secretary of State, Jimmy Byrnes, a South Carolina court-house politician, takes it lying down. And our Senators ponder but do not perform.

In all this distressing revelation of our gullibility and our weakness we have produced but one diplomat of forthright American caliber. He is our former fellow townsman, Gen. Patrick J. Hurley. Among our pussyfooting diplomats he stands out like a giant. He is calling attention to our own failures by our pussyfooting. At San Francisco we agreed to trusteeships for dependent people, not by the United Nations, but by the colonial powers in violation of the commitments of the four big powers, America, Britain, Russia, and China.

"The colonial peoples," declares General Hurley, "should at least be allowed to keep the hope to aspire to self-government and eventual independence. And we finance the power nations that deny them this hope.

General Hurley is the only diplomat we have who is doing what American diplomats should do: Tell our State Department and the White House and the Congress that we are giving our financial and moral encouragement to the total repudiation of all the principles for which America was made. The principles for which we thought we fought. We are now helping to promote the very practices we went to war to defeat.

William M. Day

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF

HON. JENNINGS RANDOLPH

OF WEST VIRGINIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, August 2, 1946

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, it was with deep regret that I learned of the demise of William M. Day, who served 11 years in the office of the official reporters of the committees.

I feel that I speak for my colleagues when I say that he will be missed, not alone for the fine service he rendered us, but as a friend and fellow worker.

Mr. Day was a native of Pandora, Ohio. After studying shorthand and becoming a reporter in his native State, he went to Utah, where he was admitted to the bar. He practiced his profession as a court reporter in Utah, Colorado, and Kansas before coming to Washington in 1911, and engaged in shorthand reporting until 1930 when he lost his hearing and retired from that profession. During the period of his activity as a reporter he worked in the courts of the District, in hearings before the Interstate Commerce Commission, Senate and House of Representatives committees, and other Government agencies. During 1922 and 1923 he went to London to report the proceedings of the American Commission on Reparations which adjusted questions pending between Great Britain and the United States following the First World War. He also had charge of reporting the proceedings of the Nye Senate committee.

He was appointed to his position in the office of the Official Reporter to committees in 1934, where he had charge of the detail work of the office and performed creditable service and acquired an extensive acquaintance among Members of the House.

Grain and Sugar Products Needed for Food Should Not Go for Liquor

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. EDWARD H. REES

OF KANSAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, August 2, 1946

Mr. REES of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, on a number of occasions I have called attention to the amount of sugar and food containing sugar that has been and is being used by the distillers and the brewers of this country. I have also called attention to the millions of bushels of grain that have been consumed in the manufacture of liquor that ought to have been used for much needed food.

I received petitions containing hundreds of names of people from various parts of the country in support of my Resolution 354 that I introduced some time ago. I have today filed with the Clerk, petitions that contain the names of almost a thousand representative citizens of Philadelphia and Reading, Pa., together with lists of people from Ohio, California, and other States.

It is evident, Mr. Speaker, the people of this country are deeply concerned with regard to the tremendous waste of sugar and grains that are being used by the brewers and distillers when people in other parts of the world are starving for food.

PETITIONS SIGNED BY MORE THAN 1,000 CITIZENS OF PENNSYLVANIA, OHIO, AND CALIFORNIA IN SUPPORT OF HOUSE RESOLUTION 354

Inasmuch as our President has requested that we inform our Congressmen regarding our opinions on various matters, we urge you to use your influence against the worst enemy in our land, liquor, and help try to get the Bryson bill, H. R. 2082, passed; also House Resolution 354, the Rees resolution, to investigate part played by brewers in shortage of sugar.

A Plan To Meet the Crisis in Education

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. GORDON L. McDONOUGH
OF CALIFORNIA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Friday, August 2, 1946

Mr. McDONOUGH. Mr. Speaker, the education of returning veterans is of equal importance to the crisis we are facing in housing. All colleges and universities are crowded to the point of overcapacity. Many veterans returning now find no place to go, no opportunity to continue their studies which they left when they entered the armed service.

In southern California some of the universities have planned to take over abandoned Army camps and convert the barracks into classrooms and dormitories.

The following statement by Robert Hutchins, of the University of Chicago, is an excellent summary of the situation and a partial solution to this pressing but vitally important problem:

A PLAN TO MEET THE CRISIS IN EDUCATION
(By Robert M. Hutchins)

There is a pent-up demand for education as there is a demand for automobiles. The GI bill of rights has opened higher education to millions without regard to their ability to pay for it. In many cases the education of sons at Government expense has facilitated the education of daughters at parent expense. Increased incomes have enabled many more families to pay for higher education.

The supply of housing facilities and competent instructors is critically inadequate to meet the unprecedented demands for education. Boys and girls newly graduated from high school will find difficulty in entering college because the general policy is to give veterans preference. By emergency measures it will be possible to increase residence facilities. The great deficit of teachers will not be overcome unless salaries are raised considerably. In contrast to other countries, the United States pursued during the war the short-sighted policy of putting every able-bodied man in a uniform, thus losing a generation of physicists, chemists, doctors, and teachers.

Other factors of the problem are the provision of classrooms and laboratories, the distribution of students among the Nation's institutions, the question of desirability of establishing new colleges, and the need for local liberal education. The answer to the physical problem and to other problems of the colleges is dispersion. Local education below the graduate level should be made generally available. This would require a change in the organization and purpose of education. The solution in organization is a 6-year elementary school, a 4-year high school, and a 4-year college. The solution in purpose is a true liberal education, producing citizens able to understand, exercise, and cherish their freedom.

The role of undergraduate sections of universities would be that of pilot colleges, studying and experimenting with curriculum improvement, testing programs, and other matters, to contribute to the betterment of the local colleges. With responsibility for mass liberal education placed locally, the universities could improve their programs of professional and graduate study.

This organization and program would offer the utmost resistance to shock in the form of war, peace, or depression. Basic reorganization is necessary to enable education to meet the recurring problems which it confronts.

Veterans Need Housing

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. LOUIS C. RABAUT
OF MICHIGAN
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Tuesday, July 30, 1946

Mr. RABAUT. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I wish to quote from a letter which I have received from the General Russell A. and Colonel Frederick M. Alger Post, No. 995, of the Veterans of Foreign Wars of the United States Grosse Pointe, Mich.:

Mock attempts have been made to appease veterans by giving them building priority. This is all well and good, but falls short of accomplishing any benefit to the veteran. We know that a crucial curtailment of building materials has been caused for one reason or another. Due to these causes, of the thousands of priorities issued veterans, it is believed that less than 5 percent will be able to construct their homes within the next year. This certainly is a disgrace, a direct insult to the men who have sacrificed so much for their country.

This letter is not written to condemn or condone Government supervision or control of business and price control. It is written to bring your attention to the fact that action is demanded to overcome the shortages of homes, building materials, and the many loopholes by which builders and controllers of building supplies can so deviate from benefiting veterans.

This problem is now being discussed by all veterans' organizations, and it is our intention to see that some constructive action is taken. We represent a VFW post consisting of more than 1,000 members, and we intend, from this date to follow through in laying the groundwork in organizing the veterans of the city of Detroit, the State of Michigan, and the United States, if necessary, to support this purpose. This is not to be interpreted as a threat; we are interested only in remedial action.

Sincerely,

JULIUS A. STORK,
Commander.
R. T. SOLDAT,
Adjutant.

In my opinion, these veterans are justified in their complaint. I fully realize the difficulties which they are experiencing. I was among those who signed the petition to bring the Wagner-Ellender-Taft housing bill before the House for consideration, for I feel that some additional legislation is necessary to assist the veteran fully in securing the home he so rightfully deserves.

Also, I wish to insert the following editorial which appeared in the Washington Post:

HOUSING DEFEAT

One would have thought that the rush to cater to veterans which Congress has exhibited on so many occasions would have assured a favorable vote on the Wagner-Taft-Ellender housing bill. Unfortunately, although the Senate long ago approved the bill, the House never had a chance to express its views. On Monday the House Banking and Currency Committee, which had bottled up the legislation for 3½ months, refused to report out the measure on the flimsy ground that more hearings were needed. This was a naked, half-baked apology for nonaction. The committee's fumbling is a shabby answer to the pleas of millions of ill-housed and homeless families living in cellars or with parents and in-laws.

What is the result? The country still has no coordinated long-range housing program for overcoming the 17-year lag in providing adequate homes for our people. Mayor O'Dwyer, of New York City, estimates that one-half of that city's building program, including both private and public housing, is now stymied. Left to private interests entirely, whatever housing is built undoubtedly will be primarily in higher-priced fields beyond the needs of those most in need of it. Slum-clearance projects will be hindered by the fact that without the erection of public housing there will be no place for present residents of such areas to go.

Lobbies, especially the National Association of Real Estate Boards, did their work well. The Wagner-Taft-Ellender bill was misconstrued and taken out of context to make it sound as if the goal of 1,375,000 private housing units and 125,000 public units a year was socialistic instead of a program 90 percent concerned with private enterprise. But the lobbies had no vote in Congress. The dubious distinction of killing the housing bill belongs entirely to the Members of the House who gave the well-financed protests of small vested interests more consideration than the overwhelming need for action on a constructive, board national housing program now.

Housing Administrator Wilson Wyatt is reported to be optimistic over the chances of obtaining adequate congressional support for the housing bill if and when it is introduced in the next session. That obviously is the only course now left open. But meanwhile, thanks to the lack of courage and foresight on the part of the House Banking and Currency Committee, irretrievable time has been lost—time that is measured in terms of squalor and unrest for millions of Americans.

The Merchant Seamen's War Service Act—Merchant Seamen Relief and Rehabilitation—Justice Demands Immediate Passage of Pending Bill, H. R. 2346

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. SCHUYLER OTIS BLAND OF VIRGINIA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Friday, August 2, 1946

Mr. BLAND, Mr. Speaker, in the grim days of 1942 and 1943, when the world's freedom rested upon our ability to keep the men and materials flowing across the Atlantic, the necessity of a large, efficient, capably manned merchant marine was indelibly imprinted on the minds of all our citizens. Those of us whose job it was to foster such a merchant marine were looking ahead to the postwar shipping problems while doing all within our power to speed the war job at hand.

The postwar job was twofold. We had to put the shipbuilding and ship operating industries on a sound footing and we had to provide for the misfortunes of war heaped upon the seamen, aid in their postwar readjustment, and further the maintenance of a well-trained corps to man the postwar fleet. Congress has enacted ship-sale legislation which will provide for the orderly transition from wartime to peacetime operations. The Maritime Commission, under the authority of the 1936 act, is proceeding with the reestablishment of the American flag on essential trade routes.

In regard to the problem of postwar readjustment of seamen, little more than a beginning has been made. Minimum provisions to meet this problem have been incorporated in H. R. 2346, the Merchant Seamen's War Service Act. This bill was reported favorably by the Commitee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries on June 20, 1946, but has been lost in the shuffle to complete the major legislative program prior to adjournment.

It is my intention to revive this issue in the early days of the new Congress and to press for prompt action. Each day of delay subjects our war-service seamen to further injustices and hardships. So that the American people may be accurately informed on this issue it is time to take stock of the work in the seamen's behalf to this date, and to separate fact from fiction.

The Merchant Seamen's War Service Act does not grant veterans' status to men who saw war service in the merchant marine. Nor does it confer the rights, benefits, and privileges of veterans of the armed forces upon merchant seamen. It is a bill tailored to meet the problems raised by wartime service in the merchant marine. The benefits it would confer are essentially civilian in nature and limited in extent.

This is a point which needs strong emphasis because H. R. 2346 has been carelessly described and misinterpreted in newspaper stories and press releases.

An important stimulus to the present measure was a statement made by the late President Roosevelt on the occasion of the signing of the GI bill of rights. President Roosevelt said:

> I trust that Congress will also soon provide similar opportunities to members of the merchant marine who have risked their lives time and again during this war for the welfare of their country.

This statement was made on June 22, 1944.

On August 23, 1944, the War Shipping Administrator, Admiral Emory S. Land, submitted "general recommendations for the grant of recognition to merchant seamen for war service."

Admiral Land summarized his recommendations as follows:

> The program here outlined is considered as a minimum. It is designed primarily to protect the health, to aid in the employment, to provide educational and minimum business opportunities, and to alleviate insofar as possible the contingencies of death and disability resulting from war service of members of the merchant marine.

Representative J. HARDIN PETERSON drafted and introduced on February 26, 1945, a bill—H. R. 2346—embodying the program envisaged by Admiral Land. The Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries held extensive hearings on October 18 and 19, November 29 and 30, and December 4 and 5, 1945. Reports and testimony was had from 10 different Government agencies, as well as the Bureau of the Budget. Representatives of various seamen's organizations, the American Veterans' Committee, and several Members of Congress also testified. The committee received hundreds of letters and resolutions from all parts of the country and petitions containing in excess of 50,000 signatures.

On June 20, 1946, the committee reported H. R. 2346 favorably after substantial revision. Whereas the bill as originally introduced contemplated administration by the Maritime Commission of all benefits and contained benefits which were patterned after, although not identical to, certain veterans' benefits, H. R. 2346, as reported, places administration under the appropriate existing civilian agencies and recasts and pares all benefits so as to provide minimum benefits to meet the specific requirements of the merchant marine.

What are the benefits proposed in H. R. 2346?

First. Death and disability benefits: Serious gaps in the system affording compensation to disabled seamen and to the dependents of deceased war service seamen are met by the extension and liberalization of existing benefits. Disabilities incurred in or aggravated by war service and deaths resulting therefrom are compensated for under the United States Employees' Compensation Act. Since all merchant seamen were in a direct sense employed by the United States Government, it is simple justice to afford them the benefits accorded other Government employees.

This title will provide for the continued payments to survivors of seamen lost in the war effort. At the present time these survivors are entitled to $5,000 from war-risk insurance coverage. It is obvious that this sum is inadequate to carry a family more than a few years. Many of the families of seamen lost early in the war effort have reached the end of their financial resources and are being subject to deprivation and hardship.

This title will also permit the payment of benefits to a number of disabled seamen suffering from tuberculosis, heart disease, and other illnesses and injuries and to survivors of seamen who were washed overboard or died of what is believed to have been natural causes while rendering war service. At the present time these cases are not compensable.

These benefits are in no way similar to veterans' pensions. They are in essence what the Government does for any of its civilian employees. Surely this program has the support of the American people.

Second. Hospitalization and medical care: Existing rights of seamen to medical care and hospitalization at marine hospitals are extended to give lifetime coverage for service-connected disabilities, and for war-service seamen with non-service-connected disabilities who are unable to defray the expenses for necessary medical care.

At the present time seamen are entitled to medical care and hospitalization up to 60 days after the termination of a voyage. It is obvious that this right is inadequate to protect the seamen whose war-incurred illness may not manifest itself until months or years later or the seaman whose war-incurred disability reoccurs at some later period.

Marine hospital rights have been common to the maritime industry since 1798, and the benefits established by H. R. 2346 are in no way similar to veterans' benefits.

A technical change in the existing vocational rehabilitation program for war-disabled civilians is made in order to enable the war-disabled seamen to come under the program in any State rather than solely in the State of his permanent residence. This change is necessary because the nature of the industry frequently carries seamen far from the State of permanent residence.

Third. Education and training: This title alone bears resemblance to the rights provided for veterans of the armed forces. The basic outline of this title was advisedly patterned after the veterans' program on the counsel of the United States Office of Education, the Veterans' Administration, and other governmental agencies which cautioned against adding to the heavy burdens now upon our educational institutions by the creation of a new system. The program is to be administered by the Federal Security Administrator. The subsistence allowances are somewhat lower than those paid under the GI bill of rights. Emphasis in the educational program is laid upon maritime training so that our postwar merchant marine will have the well-trained and efficient personnel contemplated by the Merchant Marine Act of 1936.

The Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries in urging the adoption of this title was fully conscious of the fact that these benefits were similar to those granted to veterans of the armed forces but felt that the facts and the welfare of the Nation justifies them. The report of the committee states:

> The wartime maritime labor force was substantially drawn from the youth of the country. Of the more than 150,000 men trained by the training organization of the War Shipping Administration, approximately 65 percent were between the ages of 16 and 26. It is thus evident that a larger percentage of these young men had their education interrupted, delayed, or interfered with than was true of the members of the armed forces. It is further apparent that, in view of the youth of those trained for the merchant marine, a greater proportion of these men were drawn from secondary schools. In view of the value of an educated citizenry, it is to the interest of the Nation, as well as to the individuals, that provision for education should be made for those who served their country in the United States merchant marine.

This is the full extent of the readjustment aids contained in H. R. 2346. To those familiar with its provisions and with the justice of the case the commonly held misconception that this is a measure which grants veterans status to merchant seamen, a misconception which has done much to delay the enactment of this vitally needed legislation, seems unfortunate indeed. Those who have misconstrued the intent and provisions of this measure should in fairness to a heroic group of men familiarize themselves with this measure and lend their voices to correct the misinformation.

In addition to commonly held misconceptions concerning the nature of the Merchant Seamen's War Service Act, there are certain misconceptions about conditions of wartime maritime service interrelated with this subject which should be corrected.

One such misconception is that merchant seamen were covered by a $5,000 insurance policy without cost. War-service seamen were covered by a policy of $5,000 without cost, but it provided protection solely against war risk. Such coverage had been negotiated through collective bargaining prior to the governmental requisitioning of the fleet and was carried into the wartime governmental program. The war-service seaman did not receive any regular life insurance which would cover him in case of death or injury from causes other than those attributable to the war.

Mr. Edward E. Odum, solicitor of the Veterans' Administration, in his testimony before the committee pointed out that members of the armed forces were afforded similar war-risk protection free. He said:

> I do not need to tell you what the merchant seamen have by way of free coverage, and some contrast has been made to that with respect to those in the service having to pay for their own insurance. That is not literally correct. Those in the service pay premiums for coverage which is not due to war risk. In other words they pay for an unloaded premium based upon the American Experience Table of Mortality, the Government assuming the administrative cost and assuming all of the cost of the war hazard, so that no person in the service pays any premium for any war risk.

Unfortunately more of the debate on the Merchant Seamen's War Service Act both in Congress and out has centered on a comparison of merchant marine and Navy pay than on the more pertinent issues. A very constructive note in the discussion was hit by Mr. Odum, who told the committee:

> I also said that I did not think the question of pay was the sole criterion, or even a very important one, on which to determine what additional benefits, if any, these persons (the seamen) should have. It seems to me that it entirely goes beyond that.

However, the issue of comparative pay has been injected into the debate. Therefore the facts must be set right. Frequently wild statements about seamen earning $300 and $350 a month are contrasted with the $50 monthly pay of an apprentice seaman in the Navy. Fairness requires that nothing less than the full story be told.

The American Veterans' Committeee recently pointed out "that men in the merchant marine received no pay between voyages, that they likewise received no allotments or allowances for their families, and that they did not have the benefit of retirement pay, mustering-out pay, or similar benefits extended to veterans."

A true comparison requires a contrast between the average earnings of merchant seamen and average earnings of servicemen in comparable ratings. Thus it must be recognized that a merchant seaman is only paid while on an actual voyage and receives no pay while awaiting ship, in rest homes, while ill, or while on furlough. The merchant seaman, on the average, receives 9 or 10 months' pay per year, while the serviceman is paid for the full year.

Similarly it is not fair to take an isolated case of a particular seaman or group of seamen on a particular voyage in the maximum bonus areas and to use these figures to characterize wartime earnings of merchant seamen. Since the seamen did not know where his ship was going, but signed on to do the job anywhere on the face of the globe, and since his higher earnings in maximum bonus areas on one trip were offset by lower earnings on other trips, any true comparison must be on the basis of averages.

It is also unfair to pair the merchant seamen against the $50 a month apprentice seaman in the Navy. The lowest rating in a Navy gun crew was a seaman first-class. In addition to his base pay of $66 he received a sea pay allowance of $13. We must also take into account the average allotment which according to official Navy release was $51 per man per month over and above the amount deducted from the serviceman's pay. We must also take into account the larger income-tax deductions and the many other benefits which accrue to members of the armed forces.

Data compiled by the United States Bureau of Labor Statistics and the United States Maritime Commission and inserted into the record of hearings on H. R. 2346 show the wartime earnings of an able seaman in the period of highest war bonuses as follows:

Average annual earnings from wages, bonuses, and all other sources	$2,596
Minus income taxes	411
Net income	2,185

Comparable ratings aboard Navy-manned Liberty ships are boatswain's mates, first class or quartermasters, first class, both of whom had the following earnings:

Monthly base pay	$114
Monthly sea pay	23
Monthly average allotment	51
Total monthly earnings	188
Annual earnings	2,256

Because the monthly serviceman's allotment is tax-free, only about $10 in income taxes are due on the annual earnings of the Navy man. Thus the facts show that the men in comparable ratings in the Navy and in the merchant marine had similar net annual earnings.

Even if one compares an able seaman in the merchant marine, a rating which normally requires 3 years of sea service, with the lowest rating in the gun crews aboard merchant vessels, the difference in annual earnings is far less than commonly believed.

The earnings of the lowest paid man in the Navy gun crew are:

Monthly base pay	$66
Monthly sea pay	13
Monthly average allotment	51
Total monthly earnings	130
Total annual earnings	1,560

Because the seaman, first class, has virtually no income taxes, the difference in annual net earnings is approximately $600. The real difference is much less than the monetary difference in view of the fact that merchant seamen do not get free clothing, have additional expenses in awaiting ship in port, and pay full fares in traveling between ship and home.

Another example will further prove how very small is the difference in earnings of the merchant seamen and the Navy man. According to official Bureau of Labor Statistics and Maritime Commission data, the wartime earnings of a messman were:

Average annual earnings from wages, bonuses, and all other sources	$2,335
Minus income taxes	344
Net income	1,991

The earnings of a comparable rating aboard a Navy-manned Liberty ship, a steward's mate, first class, were:

Monthly base pay	$78
Monthly sea pay	16
Monthly average allotment	51
Total monthly earnings	145
Total annual earnings	1,740

Because the allotment is tax-free, the Navy man is not subject to income tax and the actual difference in net earnings is only $250 per year. This difference is more than overbalanced by free clothing, no work-connected expenses, and furlough train fares.

Thus a rounded and complete comparison of the earnings of merchant seamen and servicemen indicates that the annual income of the former was by no means far in excess of those of the servicemen. Once the facts are made known this issue should be ejected from discussion on the merits of a Merchant Seamen's War Service Act. As the American Veterans' Committee states:

> The question of compensation is not, however, pertinent where wartime service is involved Major generals are not denied the benefits of the GI bill of rights because they received more pay than privates.

The Merchant Seamen's War Service Act has received broad support throughout the land. The State Legislatures of Washington, Oregon, and California have petitioned Congress to enact this measure. The State of Connecticut has included members of the merchant marine in its State GI bill of rights.

The Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries has received communications from Governor Osborn, of Arizona; Governor Warren, of California; Governor Baldwin, of Connecticut; Governor Arnall, of Georgia; Governor Gossett, of Idaho; Governor Tobin, of Massachusetts; Governor Ford, of Montana; Governor Edge, of New Jersey; Governor Snell, of Oregon; Governor Williams, of South Carolina; Governor Sharpe, of South Dakota; Governor Wallgren, of Washington; and Governor Meadows, of West Virginia, endorsing the measure. In addition, innumerable city councils, mayors, and other local officials have urged favorable action.

Editorial support for H. R. 2346 has come from dozens of newspapers. Charles Hurd, veterans' editor of the New York Times, in a column entitled "Adequate and Fair Provisions Urged for Veterans of Merchant Marine," states:

> At least there should be an effort to recognize the dignity of the service and give to thousands of disabled merchant marine veterans some distinction from members of the civilian population who have taken no risk and suffered no injury connected with the war.

The San Francisco Chronicle, in a leading editorial, says:

> This is a bill intended to correct some inequalities among merchant sailors who, although technically in civilian employment, have performed war service of great hazard. With the support of Admiral Land and others familiar with the situation, the committee should strengthen the bill and report it out favorably.

The Gallup poll shows that a substantial majority of the American people favor readjustment aids for war-service seamen. It is regrettable that the Merchant Seamen's War Service Act was not passed in this session of Congress. This situation must be remedied at the earliest opportunity.

I expect in further remarks to expound these views.

"Truth crushed to earth will rise again."

Veterans' Housing Legislation, Including a 100-Percent Voting Record for All Veterans' Legislation

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF

HON. EVAN HOWELL

OF ILLINOIS
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, August 2, 1946

Mr. HOWELL. Mr. Speaker, veterans' groups are beginning to realize that it is impossible to legislate houses; that it takes more than blueprints and Government controls to produce the critically needed shelter required by veterans.

These veterans groups have become aware of a fact that apparently has been overlooked in the bureaucratic confusion of our various Federal housing bureaus and agencies; that to build houses you have to assemble: First a vacant lot; second, laborers; and third, some nails, lumber, cement, and so forth, for them to work with.

In the final days of the recent session of Congress, the administration and its public housing officials kept repeating the plea that the Wagner-Ellender-Taft long-range housing bill was essential to the veterans' emergency housing program. Such is not the fact; the Wyatt program has all the authority that is necessary for the immediate construction of adequate veterans' housing, but when this program broke down, its leaders tried to cloud the issue by crying for more legislation.

Last January, the President created the office of Housing Expediter and by Executive order gave him vast powers, amounting virtually to control of the entire construction industry. Then Congress enlarged the housing program by passing the Veterans' Emergency Housing Act of 1946, for which I voted on May 13, 1946, and in which $400,000,000 was approved for subsidy and incentive payments to stimulate the production of short-supply building materials for the construction of new homes for veterans. In the campaign for passage of the housing program it was claimed that the act would solve all building problems and result in the construction of 1,200,000 homes this year.

Veterans are awakening to the dismal facts—that construction is at a standstill.

Within the past few days, national officials of the Amvets, and VFW, as well as local units of the American Legion and VFW have taken cognizance of the complete break-down of the veterans' emergency-housing program and have issued requests for congressional probes and other action to end the bungling, poor planning, and mismanagement on the part of those in charge of producing veterans' housing.

For instance:

I. AMERICAN VETERANS OF WORLD WAR II

On July 27, the national commander of Amvets, Jack W. Hardy, charged that the veterans' housing program now suffers too much from government regulation for the successful operation of the free-enterprise system and too little "for the successful operation of the socialist system" (Times-Herald, Washington, D. C., July 29).

Mr. Hardy urged a "full, frank and critical public discussion" of the Wagner-Ellender-Taft bill before final enactment is considered, declaring that the veterans' housing program would be best served if NHA officials would concentrate on getting houses "under the ample legislation now existing, rather than devoting time and manpower to lobbying for additional legislation."

The Amvets further charged that veterans are being used as a front by "professional housing bureaucrats" to establish "a public housing industry, to maintain a big Government agency and to perpetuate themselves in office."

II. VETERANS OF FOREIGN WARS

On July 31, the Veterans of Foreign Wars urged that Congress investigate the "failure" of the veterans' emergency-housing program (Washington Post, July 31).

"The veterans' emergency-housing program has bogged down and failed utterly to produce homes for veterans," Omar B. Ketchum, director of VFW legislative service, declared in a letter to congressional leaders. The VFW urged creation of a bipartisan congressional committee, with adequate funds and authority, to "make an exhaustive investigation into and to report on the reasons for the failure of the veterans' emergency-housing program, and its implementing legislation, the Patman bill, to launch an adequate construction program of housing for veterans."

"Throughout the United States our posts and State departments have surveyed the housing scene," the VFW statement said. "All now report little progress and for innumerable reasons little hope for the foreseeable future."

III. AMERICAN LEGION, COOK COUNTY (ILL.) COUNCIL

The housing committee of the Cook County (Ill.) Council of the American Legion recently passed a resolution calling for the defeat of the Wagner-Ellender-Taft long-range housing bill, condemning the Wyatt program for failure and asking for a moratorium on all construction except housing for veterans or housing required for health and safety. This is another instance of a veterans' group realizing that the W-E-T bill and other legislative measures are not the answer to the housing problem.

IV. VFW, TULSA POST

In Tulsa, Okla., on July 25, the Tulsa Post 577, Veterans of Foreign Wars, adopted a resolution condemning the lack of cooperation and coordination among the various Federal agencies and bureaus (Appendix of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, p. A4625.)

The Tulsa incident is illustrative of the delays and confusion all over the country on the veterans' housing program.

For 4½ months, the Tulsa resolution pointed out, a series of veterans' temporary housing facilities has been in process of reconstruction and adaptation for use as veterans' living quarters. The city application to FPHA for housing units for war veterans was first approved in March and a contract let. The resolution described cooperative action taken by municipal and veterans' groups to assist in advancement of the program.

The VFW post finally appointed a veterans' emergency housing committee to investigate the delays. It reported:

1. That unless the materials set forth in the committee's report are found and made available, the war veterans' emergency housing project will be delayed indefinitely.
2. That the contractor had been told by Government agencies that the required materials for the projects would be procured through Government channels, as needed.
3. That there is no liaison between the various Government agencies and particularly between the Federal Public Housing Authority, Civilian Production Administration, War Assets Administration, Surplus Property Office, Army and Navy personnel in charge of war plants, camps, and cantonments.
4. That the materials have not been made available to the contractor.
5. That where the Government agencies, such as the CPA, have authorized and created local advisory committees recognized and established organizations of war veterans have not been consulted and do not have representation on such committees.
6. That materials suitable for use in veterans' housing projects, such as the one at Tulsa, have been disposed of by Army and Navy authorities.

It is obvious, therefore, that the Wagner-Ellender-Taft bill and other legislation is not the simple answer to the veterans' housing problem. You have got to do just the opposite—cut the red tape and unshackle industry from all this Government interference and control.

In 1925 the building industry constructed the equivalent of 1,800,000 housing units without Government help, and they can do it again if given the chance.

The whole theory of subsidies in the peacetime economy of the United States is intrinsically bad. The hidden costs to all taxpayers—a disguised bonus presumably just for GI's but actually favoring everyone who buys the product subsidized—are absolutely unwarranted in the housing program.

The tendency of subsidies is to foster inefficiency and preserve high costs. They may be a useful wartime expedient to encourage marginal production, but they have no place in our economy now.

Particularly are they unnecessary to the lumber industry. For not only do the general arguments against all subsidies apply with added weight to the lumber industry, but all lumbermen agree that it will be absolutely impossible to administer any subsidies for lumber.

The industry has more than 40,000 sawmills—and they are almost all different. They cut dozens of species of trees, into hundreds of grades and sizes. The impossibility of setting prices for the industry by administrative fiat already has been proved by the fiasco which OPA has made of lumber pricing. Any attempt to impose subsidies on the industry would be an administrative nightmare.

Therefore, the subsidy idea is also a delusion and a snare. What is needed is for the forces of private enterprise to be left alone and given an opportunity to demonstrate their tremendous producing power, which has made America the greatest country in the world.

It has always been my privilege to support veterans' legislation generally and especially veterans' housing legislation, as an examination of my record will disclose.

My complete record as compiled by the Legislative Reference Service of the Library of Congress, on all veterans' legislation since January 1941, is as follows:

SEVENTY-SEVENTH CONGRESS

All veterans' legislation voted unanimously.

SEVENTY-EIGHTH CONGRESS

November 16, 1943: H. R. 3356. Increases monthly rates of compensation or pension to disabled veterans for service-incurred disability to widows and children. On passage: Vote, yea.

November 17, 1943: H. R. 3377. Increases rate of pension of World War veterans. On passage: Vote, yea.

January 19, 1944: S. 1543. Mustering-out pay bill, 1944. On passage: Vote, paired for.

January 26, 1944: S. 1543. Mustering-out pay bill, 1944. On agreeing to conference report. Vote, yea.

April 17, 1944: H. R. 4115. Veterans' preference in Federal civil service. On motion to suspend rules and pass bill: Vote, yea.

May 18, 1944: S. 1767. GI bill of rights: On passage: Vote, yea.

June 13, 1944: S. 1767. GI bill of rights. On agreeing to conference report: Vote, yea.

SEVENTY-NINTH CONGRESS

March 7, 1946: H. R. 4761. Veterans' Emergency Housing Act, 1946. On motion to recommit: Vote, nay. On passage: Vote, yea.

March 14, 1946: H. R. 5455. Authorizes $250,000,000 for additional housing units for veterans. On passage: Vote, yea.

March 26, 1946: House Joint Resolution 328. Makes an additional appropriation of $253,727,000 for veterans' housing. On passage: Vote, paired for.

May 9, 1946: H. R. 4761. Veterans' Emergency Act, 1946. On motion to instruct the conferees to agree to the Senate amendment with an amendment providing $400,000,000 instead of $600,000,000 for subsidy payments in the production of housing materials: Vote, nay.

May 13, 1946: H. R. 4761. Veterans' Emergency Housing Act, 1946. On agreeing to conference report: Vote, yea.

You will especially note that while I did oppose the idea of subsidies, as I have consistently opposed them not only in connection with housing but other matters, that I supported the final passage of this important act because of the over-all importance of housing generally and my desire to provide the Government agencies with every possible incentive to build homes.

June 11, 1946: H. R. 4051. Payment of accumulated leave for enlisted personnel. On passage: Vote, yea.

Mr. Speaker, it should be obvious to anyone making a fair appraisal of my complete record that I have at all times had the best interests of our veterans at heart, but realizing as I do the tremendous sacrifices our fighting men and women made in the name of freedom and liberty, I certainly do not want to see that freedom lost in America as a result of communistic, crackpot schemes, or by the substitution of Government control for free competitive enterprise.

The Veteran Is Entitled to Higher Education

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. GORDON L. McDONOUGH

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, August 2, 1946

Mr. McDONOUGH. Mr. Speaker, here is a review of the great problem we are facing to meet the demands of educating our returning veterans and at the same time educate our younger boys and girls who were too young to go to war.

We must as a nation meet this challenge. We must as a nation provide every means possible to rebuild and restore the years of progress our veterans lost when they went to war.

We found a way to build an army for our defense and to provide that army with materials to defeat the enemy. Now let us find the way to give our veterans and our youth the education they need, and the Nation needs, to go forward to a peaceful, progressive future.

Following is a review by the Director of War Mobilization and Reconversion on this subject:

This fall over 2,000,000 young Americans, including 970,000 veterans, will apply for enrollment in the Nation's colleges and universities—the greatest number ever to seek higher education in any country. Within the next decade about 3,000,000 students—double the peak prewar enrollment—will seek admission to college each year.

Never before have economic barriers to higher education been removed for so many; and never before has the need for higher education been so imperative. Our national security and development depend upon the knowledge and skills with which we equip our youth.

Facing the Nation now is the problem of providing the facilities, housing, classrooms, teachers, books, and other equipment needed to enlarge the capacities of our institutions of higher education. The challenge can be met only by the best cooperative efforts of the Federal Government, the State governments, and the institutions. Unless far-reaching action is taken between 400,000 and 500,000 young people, including 270,000 veterans, will have to be turned away from colleges this year.

The Federal Government will make a down payment of over a billion dollars on the education of veterans during the coming fiscal year. The States will spend over $300,000,000 on higher education during the academic year. Clearly, a program of such magnitude requires the dovetailing of the programs of the Federal and State Governments and the institutions.

The Federal Interagency Committee on Veterans' Affairs, established by the Office of War Mobilization and Reconversion, has developed a nine-point program of joint action to meet the most pressing of the immediate problems.

Our responsibility to provide educational benefits to veterans is clear, but equally clear is our responsibility to provide educational opportunities for the large number of boys and girls who were too young to go to war. Long-range plans for higher education must be formulated and translated into action.

OPA Price Boosts Before July 1, Inflationary

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. GEORGE B. SCHWABE
OF OKLAHOMA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Friday, August 2, 1946

Mr. SCHWABE of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, it is most interesting to note that the OPA, just before the President vetoed the OPA measure passed by the Congress, and just before the old OPA law expired at midnight June 30, 1946, boosted the prices of many items under price control and was prepared to boost the prices of hundreds of others, if the old law had continued in force. All of this was brought out during the debates on various OPA measures while they were being considered in the House.

Representative DIRKSEN, in the Appendix of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, at page A4108, furnished a list of the items on which OPA had granted increased prices from March 1, 1946, to May 31, 1946. Included in this list are a total of 377 classes of items on which such increases were granted by OPA. These increases in many instances were very substantial. Prices on trucks were increased on some models as much as 42.9 percent, on automobile radios as high as 56.7 percent. Feedstuffs that the farmer and the dairyman had to buy to continue their operations were very substantially raised, and many of the items of daily consumption by the masses were substantially increased.

Representative DIRKSEN again inserted in the Appendix of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, at page A4252, a list of the increases granted by OPA from June 1, 1946, to June 29, 1946. The second list contains a total of 153 classes of items on which increases were authorized and approved by OPA during the last month of its operations under the old law. Many of these are quite substantial.

In addition to these items shown in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, totaling 530 classes of items, the OPA was prepared before its demise, to increase the prices on hundreds of other items, as was brought out in the debates during the month of June 1946.

In a letter addressed to me by Mr. Paul Porter, Administrator of OPA, under date of July 2, 1946, Mr. Porter said that:

> In World War II, wholesale prices advanced 41.2 percent. That is inflation. But 33.3 percent of the 41.2 percent rise came before the Stabilization Act was passed.

Later on in the same paragraph Mr. Porter said:

> We have inflation.

The greatest authority on prices and price controls at this time connected with our Federal Government is Mr. Paul Porter, the Administrator of OPA, the head of that Bureau. He said that there has been an increase in the wholesale price of goods of 41.2 percent and that one-third of it came before we had price controls under OPA. It follows irresistibly that two-thirds of this advance occurred during the operations of OPA and with OPA's full approval. Mr. Porter says, "That is inflation." Therefore, OPA was responsible for at least two-thirds of the inflation. Yet OPA, during the last 4 months of its operations under the old law, was increasing the prices of commodities in wholesale fashion, adding to inflation—pryramiding inflation.

When the facts are known, the administration has not prevented inflation. It has not retarded inflation. It has encouraged inflation and has been directly responsible for at least two-thirds of our inflation, according to Mr. Porter's own statements. Still they continue to inflate.

As OPA continues to operate under the new law, it is freely predicted that prices will continue to mount and that OPA will boost prices and that we will have further inflation. Some of the people are awake to what is going on. That is the reason they, in large numbers in my district, are opposed to the operations of this un-American and obnoxious bureau. That is why thousands of those in my district to whom I sent out a referendum recently asking whether or not they favored the continuance of OPA, answered decisively in the negative. To be specific, of all who answered, 33.17 percent said "Yes" and 67.83 percent said "No." Of the farmers of my district who answered 20.65 percent said "Yes" and 79.35 percent said "No." Of World War I veterans answering, 35.81 percent said "Yes" and 64.19 percent said "No." Of the defense workers, 32.67 percent answered "Yes" and 67.33 percent answered "No."

That is why the farm bureau organization of my district is opposed to price controls and the continuance of OPA and its operations which have been so detrimental to the farmers.

The Tideland Veto

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. LOUIS C. RABAUT
OF MICHIGAN
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Friday, August 2, 1946

Mr. RABAUT. Mr. Speaker, as one who voted against the so-called tideland bill, and as one who voted to uphold the President's veto of this measure, I am pleased to include in my remarks the following editorial from the Washington Post of August 2:

TIDELAND VETO

The President's veto of the tideland-oil bill was the act of a man sworn to uphold the interests of the whole American people. If the Nation actually has a right to the rich resources of the tidelands, then this right ought not to be relinquished to the States for the benefit of private and corporate exploiters. These resources, as Mr. Truman points out in his veto message, are vital from the dual standpoints of national defense and conservation. We think that he is on unassailable ground when he says that Congress is "not an appropriate forum to determine the legal issues now before the court" and that "the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court should not be interfered with while it is arriving at its decision in the pending case." In view of the enormous pressure which has been directed at the White House in respect of this issue, we think the President's veto must be heralded as an act of courage as well as of statesmanship.

In a recent comment on the tideland issue, we observed that "the Senate succeeded in making the bill a shade more hypocritical than it was when it passed the House" by tacking onto it an amendment asserting a national claim to the Continental Shelf. The charge of hypocrisy was aimed not at the amendment itself but at the assumption of piety on the part of those who used it to disguise a bill designed to give away the richest portion of the Continental Shelf. The sponsor of the amendment, Senator O'MAHONEY, who has consistently opposed the tideland-oil bill, could have had no such intention. And his amendment, standing alone is admirable. We think that the Senate ought affirmatively to endorse the Federal claim to the Continental Shelf which President Truman asserted months ago. But the claim should embrace the whole shelf, not merely the more remote portion of it.

Congressman Doyle Compliments President Truman and the Attorney General for Immediate Action in Cases of Georgia and Mississippi Murders of Negroes

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. CLYDE DOYLE
OF CALIFORNIA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Friday, August 2, 1946

Mr. DOYLE. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased that President Truman has already immediately sent Federal agents to hunt down the mob which lynched four Negroes in the State of Georgia the other day. Then comes the present news that a Negro farm hand had been whipped to death in the State of Mississippi the other day. It is good that men are already reputedly apprehended for this horrible murder. I hope this is the fact and that the State of Mississippi has conscientious, patriotic citizens who will see that justice is done regardless of the fact that the man who was murdered has dark-colored skin. The enforcement of law in the States of Mississippi and Georgia is on trial. I recognize, Mr. Speaker, that the FBI agents who were immediately ordered to these jurisdictions by President Truman can but efficiently and immediately supplement the ferreting out and gathering of evidence in these horrible and tragic cases. Two of these Negroes and their wives were shot to death near Monroe, in Walton County. One of them was a veteran with 5 years' service. Nor were they at all wanton, wayward or without economic support, for just a while before the incident one of them had been able to put up bond. The fact that he was charged with murdering the man he worked for was no justification for mob rule.

It is good, too, that Attorney General Tom Clark, on Friday, July 26, and as he says "as soon as the news of the crime reached Washington," immediately ordered a complete investigation. He says "The Federal Bureau of Investigation has a sufficient force of agents on hand to provide a thorough probe." This is as it should be, Mr. Speaker, for no matter what racial intolerance exists, this does not justify racial slaughter or racial mob rule.

Our able Attorney General further said, "The full facilities of the Department of Justice are behind this investigation. This crime is an affront to decent Americanism."

I agree and commend him and our President for immediate action. Such hideous crimes as these in or about the county seat of Walton County, Ga., and a further crime in the State of Mississippi will not be helped nor hindered by the preachment of any theory of supremacy of the white race. Granting that there are "sorry white folks" as well as "sorry Negroes," this fact should make allegedly sound-thinking, tolerant people more tolerant. Any preachment of hate or intolerance in any legislation or in the field of responsibility in governmental matters is tragic and contributory to the perpetuation of hate and intolerance in the minds of the ignorant class of whites or Negroes. I use these terms herein quoted from recent statement of residents of the State of Georgia in connection with these lynchings.

I have every confidence that President Truman and Attorney General Clark and their respective aides and assistants will run down and prosecute to the limit of the law, as the evidence may show, these perpetrators of these hideous crimes. I hope, too, that those who, by word or act or deed have contributed to these expressions of intolerances, hate, and fear, will now take these hideous offenses against mankind and will correct their attitudes, speeches, and actions so that they will be constructive instead of destructive in the progress of civilization.

A Citizen Writes

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. LOUIS C. RABAUT

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, August 2, 1946

Mr. RABAUT. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks, I wish to insert in the RECORD a letter I received from Mr. John Carson, who, for 30 years has had active service dealing in the affairs of Government. Because his wise counsel is respected by so many, and because of his splendid reputation for sincere and devoted interest in the common good, I am proud to include his letter:

THE COOPERATIVE LEAGUE,
Washington, 6, D. C., August 1, 1946.

Hon. LOUIS C. RABAUT,
House of Representatives,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR LOUIS: I am writing to you now as a citizen. I am still a legal resident of Michigan and I am just as much interested in the welfare of Detroit and Michigan as I was during my long service with Senator James Couzens.

You will agree that I know a bit about Congress and about Government and about public servants. After 30 years of very active service here as a newspaperman and as Senator Couzens' associate—30 years during which I have tried to be actively interested in the common good of all of our people in everything I have done—I am arrogant enough to believe that I know something about Government and public service.

There has never been a time in our experience as a Nation when we need men in official life with such high integrity. That is the prime requisite of public service now. Perhaps it always has been. Just before Senator George W. Norris died—you know he was my "father" for 25 years—he and I engaged in correspondence about one Republican candidate for the Senate from New England. He was opposed to the man, at the outset, but quickly agreed that the one prime requisite was "integrity" and he finally wrote to me and asked me to see if his letter could be helpful to this candidate. I have always been an independent in politics. I always will be, I think. I've worked for Republican candidates in Michigan as often as I have for Democrats. I have tried to support men who would serve the common good regardless of party.

I just felt obligated to write to you and to commend you for the high degree of integrity you have shown in your work here. I have not agreed with your conclusions on some occasions and if I were in the House at that time, I would have voted contrary to your decisions. But I had the utmost respect for your decisions. We need men like you in Congress. I want to urge you to continue to make the struggle you have made to serve the common good.

Yours sincerely,

JOHN CARSON.

The Streamline Congress Bill

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. GEORGE B. SCHWABE

OF OKLAHOMA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, August 2, 1946

Mr. SCHWABE of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, under leave granted me to extend my remarks in the RECORD on this subject, I simply want to say that there are many good things in this bill. But there are many theoretical and impractical provisions that in my opinion will not work. Many of the communistic and socialistic features have been eliminated.

I am convinced that this is a measure being passed shortly before we are due to adjourn, with its real implications not fully disclosed to the public.

I think it is a nice package, tied in pretty pink ribbon, with a lot of sweet sounding words and beautiful verbiage. It expresses noble aspirations and ideals. But let us look at what some think was the real purpose of the bill—to increase the salaries of the Members of Congress and to provide retirement benefits. The increases are to become effective after the new Congress convenes January 3, 1947. It does not benefit any Members of the House of Representatives during their present term of office. The retirement is based upon a service of at least 5 years, and will be applicable to present Congressmen, many of whom will not be returned after January 3, 1947.

Mr. Speaker, I voted against the passage of this bill. Although I favored many of the provisions to streamline Congress, I think some of the provisions on that subject will be found impractical and will have to be amended. But the principal reason why I voted against the measure was because of the provision for increase in salary of the Representatives and the retirement benefits' feature. It did not appear to me to be logical and consistent with the desires of our best people in their wish to hold down or retard inflationary tendencies. The administration has constantly warned against inflation. At the same time the President advocated enthusiastically the increase in the salaries of Members of Congress. Of course, in his messages to Congress he talked about benefitting everyone else, and then gave them the sugar-coated pill, calculated to get them to favor his legislation. In effect, he said, "Now, you Members of Congress take care of all these other people and then take care of yourselves, and you may not be criticized so much." That is an inflationary attitude of the worst sort and is not consistent with the preachment of the administration against inflation.

The Housing Bungle

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. GORDON L. McDONOUGH

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, August 2, 1946

Mr. McDONOUGH. Mr. Speaker, the housing shortage continues in every part of the Nation. Every effort on the part of the administration to provide a solution to this problem has met with failure. Systems of priorities, plans for mass production of prefabricated dwellings, limitation of cost, all have failed to produce the housing needed desperately by returning veterans and civilians alike.

Certainly there must be a solution. A Nation capable of producing all the materials necessary to win the war through its resources and industry has the potential ability to provide vital housing in the reconversion period. During the first year of peace, the administration has had the same powers to direct and control production and distribution as it had during the war. It has used these powers to make regulations intended to solve the critical housing problem. But the shortage continues.

Obviously something is wrong. It may be that the housing authority is making the wrong approach to the problem. Following is an interesting article which recently appeared in the Wall Street Journal. It presents a new slant on the housing problem and is worthy of careful consideration.

THE HOUSING BUNGLE

A man who buys an automobile expects it to wear out in a few years, after which he will replace it with another, improved and changed in style; indeed, he may be influenced by improvements or more attractive appearance of new models to scrap his car before it is worn. The same is true of other articles of mass production, such as washing machines, typewriters, and adding machines.

Also, an automobile which will carry a man from here to there in California will do the same in Massachusetts or Georgia. Regardless of the section of the country, a mass-produced article has equal utility to its owner.

These things are not at all true of homes. A man buying a home does not expect it to wear out in a few years. Very probably he hopes to live in it for his lifetime. He does not expect it to decrease in value; indeed, he buys with the idea of an appreciation. And if he lives in California, he will find useful a house of a different type than if he lived in another section.

All this is not to say that there is not a place—and very probably a growing one—for prefabricated building. Neither is it to say that we must forever cling to archaic building methods and to traditional materials. It is to suggest that any attempt to solve the house shortage on a basis of mass production of cheap standardized units neglects the fact that homes have not the characteristics of mass-produced goods. That suggestion is occasioned by a Washington news story in yesterday's issue of this newspaper reporting that such an approach is being contemplated in the office of Wilson Wyatt, Housing Expediter.

It was observed some time back that veterans lacked houses. It seemed a simple solution, at least it did to those with faith in the power of Government directives, to have houses built for veterans. So Mr. Wyatt was set up in business with a fanfare of publicity and a large appropriation. There were some sour-pussed people who predicted he would not do well and the record is that he has done at least no better than the worst predictions. The mass-produced homes idea is being offered to correct the situation. The flaw in it is that it has no relation to the difficulties.

The way to provide housing is to allow people who can and want to build houses to build them. They will thereupon occupy the new homes and vacate their present premises, whereupon others will move into them and still a third group will move into the places that the second vacated. Unless there is an overextension of credit, what the houses cost is of no concern to anyone except the buyers and the prevention of such overextension is a simple matter.

The way not to provide houses is to do what this Federal program started out to do. It started to direct all building activities into low-cost dwellings. Even at the low cost many veterans still could not afford them. Those who could did not want them in many cases and there was the added difficulty that builders were not enthusiastic about building them, even when the Government cajoled and threatened.

The result is that nobody is getting houses. Those who can build are prevented, or at least hampered, by a system of Federal priorities and the priorities are directed to people who can't build or whose good sense tells them that they are in no position to undertake the commitments attached to home purchase.

With due deference to Mr. Wyatt's zeal and good intentions, we suggest that the way for him to facilitate building is to get himself out of the way of people who want to build in getting together with the people who can do the building for them.

Timely Editorial by Long Beach Paper on United Nations Charter Signing on June 26, 1945

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. CLYDE DOYLE
OF CALIFORNIA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Thursday, July 11, 1946

Mr. DOYLE. Mr. Speaker, with the Paris Peace Conference in session, I thought it appropriate, indeed, to insert in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD the following editorial which appeared in the Lakewood News-Times, which is a splendid weekly newspaper published in my home city of Long Beach, Calif. Its content is self-explanatory, and I commend the worthy editor for the timely printing of this editorial at about the anniversary date of the meeting of the United Nations and the signing of the Charter in the city of San Francisco, Calif.

I think it is very strengthening and indicative, Mr. Speaker, that so many of the editors and owners of these so-called smaller newspapers are apparently energizing and activating the thinking of their readers too. In other words, Mr. Speaker, it is not only the metropolitan papers which are inspiring clear thinking and consecrated loyal devotion to our great Nation and to the domestic and world purposes with which we are concerned. These so-called smaller newspapers throughout my district are of great force editorially. Sometimes it is the case, is it not, Mr. Speaker, that we can fairly accurately state that there is, in some places in the news world, an apparent policy of news exclusion instead of news distribution. This is not soundly in the interests of making the people of America become informed as to the facts. Whatever the facts are, my colleagues, these facts should be gotten to the American people. Let the American people determine the destiny of America by being informed of all the material facts, but they will never intelligently determine the destiny if certain material facts are kept away from them for political or other reasons.

The writing and featuring of this editorial by this splendid newspaper in Long Beach is indicative of the fact that world news is not too important for a paper which is not a metropolitan daily to give appropriate emphasis to. The last paragraph of this editorial is especially timely for the reason that the next session of the United Nations will be held shortly in our own beloved Nation.

The editorial follows:

A year ago on June 26 the United Nations Charter was signed in San Francisco. On that occasion President Truman said, "Oh, what a great day this can be in history." What he obviously meant was that if the nations signing the Charter would live up to it both in spirit and in the letter, June 26, 1945, would mark the beginning of a new era in world relations.

But today the world is less united than it was a year ago. The Russian attitude, suspicious and stubborn, has made unity in the Big Four and in the United Nations unattainable as yet. Furthermore Russian influence is being felt in the industrial strife which has assumed world proportions.

On June 26, of last year, the world had a golden opportunity to move rapidly toward enduring peace. That opportunity is not yet lost. It will be, however, unless our Nation does its part in firmly resisting both the foreign and domestic dictators who would run roughshod over everybody and everything to achieve their ends.

The United Nations Charter embodies lofty principles. We must insist that they be lived up to, not only in world but in domestic affairs. Only in ths way can we have real peace.

Terminal-Leave Pay for Enlisted Men

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. GEORGE B. SCHWABE
OF OKLAHOMA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Friday, August 2, 1946

Mr. SCHWABE of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, the subject of terminal-leave pay for enlisted men has been a very controversial issue in Congress and in certain other circles.

Apparently the military authorities found an old law enacted by Congress many decades ago, which they considered ample authority for the making of terminal-leave payments to the commissioned officers of our military forces. I have always doubted seriously the legal justification for these payments. As a lawyer of 36 years' experience in the practice, it seems to me that the construction placed upon this old act was somewhat strained. I have made considerable inquiry as to whether or not terminal-leave payments were made to commissioned officers following the Spanish-American War and World War I. The best information I have obtained on the subject indicates that such payments were not made, except perhaps to members of the Regular Army or other standing military organizations. But in World War II, and following, the practice of terminal-leave pay to commissioned officers seems to have been general and universal.

Several bills were introduced during this session of Congress to provide terminal leave payments for enlisted men, on a comparable basis with the payments made to retiring commissioned officers. I cannot conceive of any equitable discrimination or differentiation between the payment of terminal leave to officers and enlisted men. Everyone must admit that the enlisted men are just as worthy as the officers. They are just as deserving of terminal leave pay. Hence on the grounds of justice and equity, if legal authority permits, the enlisted men should have been and should yet be paid their terminal leave, on a comparable basis with officers of our armed forces.

However, the military authorities contended that they had no right or legal authority to pay the enlisted men. Apparently they did not want legislation authorizing such payments. They offered many excuses against the adoption of such laws as would grant the authority for terminal leave pay to the enlisted men. The bills which had been introduced were not acted upon and their consideration was delayed, until a discharge petition was filed in the well of the House, and I was one of the early signers of that discharge petition. Then the committee in charge of the bills on the subject brought out a bill for the consideration of the House. It passed the House, with few or no dissenting votes. The bill as it passed the House of Representatives provided for cash payments to the enlisted men. It was amended in the Senate, and the President expressed his opposition to the passage of the measure. Finally the President insisted upon the payments being made in bonds, calling for small interest, nonnegotiable, and to run for a period of 5 years.

The administration's hue and cry was that if the payments were to be made in cash, the results would be highly inflationary. The New Deal administration was willing to make a loan, which perhaps will turn out to be a gift, to Great Britain of $3,750,000,000, without fear of inflation. They insisted upon, and with their substantial majorities in both branches of Congress, passed appropriations of many billions of dollars which would be much more inflationary than terminal leave pay to the enlisted men.

It is absurd and ridiculous to carry on the inflationary practices of which this administration has been so culpably guilty and then to come to the House of Representatives and say that it would either give the enlisted men nonnegotiable bonds, bonds on which they cannot get the cash for 5 years, or not give any terminal-leave pay to the enlisted men at all. Under such circumstances, we voted terminal-leave pay in bonds for enlisted men. I sincerely trust that one of the first acts of the new Congress after it convenes next January 3, will be the enactment of a law providing cash payment for these bonds in all cases where the boys want to cash them.

Just why every other proposition involving the appropriation of money, inflationary as it might be, was preferred and insisted upon, but the proper treatment of our veterans, the enlisted men, was frowned upon by the administration, is beyond reason. By the stretch of the wildest imagination it is inconceivable to understand why we should contribute to famine-stricken countries, to United Nations, to Great Britain, and to a lot of domestic pork barrel and inflationary projects, and put off the payment to these veterans of a small terminal-leave pay of approximately $165 per enlisted man. It simply does not make sense. I maintain that the care of these boys and the provision of terminal-leave pay to the enlisted men, comparable to that which already had been provided for the commissioned officers, should have been the first items of business to have been transacted by the Congress that is now about to adjourn.

I hope the President views with approval the act that Congress passed providing for payment in Uncle Sam's I O U's to the enlisted men, and that such bonds be made cashable by the first act that the next Congress passes.

Issues That Confront the Nation

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF

HON. CHARLES A. WOLVERTON

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, August 2, 1946

Mr. WOLVERTON of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, the issues that now confront this Nation are simple and clear. They are fundamental issues that seriously affect the welfare of America and its people. Among those that call for immediate solution are the following:

PRIVATE ENTERPRISE VERSUS REGIMENTATION

During the war emergency there was some justification for regimentation, controls, and curtailment of the private enterprise system. But there is no justification, except in a very few instances for a continuation of such restrictions at this time.

A continuation of wartime regimentation and controls, as a part of our economic structure in time of peace, will stifle, undermine, and eventually destroy the spirit of initiative which is the basis of our free private enterprise system. When that principle of freedom is destroyed then our American way of life will fall and we will become a prey to the evils of totalitarianism.

It is the duty of every citizen to make certain that personal liberty, individual rights, and a maximum of self-government are maintained. We must be continually on guard to prevent any weakening of our American system of government. Private enterprise is the keystone of this system. It must be strengthened, not weakened.

BALANCED BUDGET AGAINST DEFICIT SPENDING

For upward of 15 years our Government has constantly spent, each year, more money than it has collected, and has steadily added to the national debt until today our interest payments alone amount to $5,000,000,000 a year, which is more than it cost to operate the entire Federal Government for a whole year before the present administration assumed control.

The national debt today of more than $271,000,000,000 means a per capita debt of about $2,000—that is, a debt of $2,000 for every man, woman, and child in the United States. Yet, it is proposed by the administration, this year, to surpass even past records of spending. The Budget for 1947 calls for expenditures of over $35,000,000,000 — almost $4,000,000,000 more than the Government expects to collect in revenues.

Deficit spending such as we have experienced during the past 15 years must stop if we are to have any regard for the financial stability of our Government. Economy in government seems to have become a lost virtue. Waste and extravagance must no longer be the order of the day. Expenditures must be brought into line with income. Sanity and good old-fashioned common sense must take possession of our fiscal affairs before it is too late. Deficit spending must give way to a balanced budget. Let us never forget that in the world of today our Nation, above all others, must maintain a sound financial structure. Failure to do so will bring distress at home and chaos throughout the world. A balanced budget and a sound fiscal policy is a "must," the importance of which cannot be overemphasized nor overlooked without dire results.

LOW TAXES VERSUS HIGH TAXES

Taxes bear a direct relationship to the cost of government. Taxes are high when government spending is extravagant. Taxes are low when government spending is held to a minimum, based upon actual necessity only.

The present administration requires high taxes because of its extravagant and wasteful spending. Taxes during its control of our Government have risen repeatedly, and tax forms have become increasingly complicated. While taxes are paid in the labor and privations of all the people, yet, they bear most heavily upon people of low income.

Under the present administration there seems little, if any, likelihood of any substantial reduction in the taxes to be levied. This is unfortunate for the need, today, is for a tax program that will stimulate reconversion and prosperity by encouraging new business ventures and new investments of private capital in enterprises that produce new jobs. We must have a tax program that enables private industry to provide full employment, not a tax program that stifles private industry and then imposes heavy taxes to make jobs at public expense.

It is a matter of record that after World War I, when the Republican Party returned to office, taxes were reduced four times, and the national debt was reduced a billion dollars a year for 10 straight years. Today we need again the same type of sound business principles to save the Nation from the financial dangers that now confront us.

RESPONSIBLE GOVERNMENT VERSUS BUREAUCRACY

Our Government has become a gigantic bureaucracy. Under the present administration the number of Federal employees has risen constantly. A report by the congressional Joint Committee on Reduction of Nonessential Federal Expenditures, May 1, 1946, showed that there were 1,141 principal component parts in the Federal Government. Employment in the executive branch alone reached 3,649,769 by the end of the war, and since the war's end, practically the only reduction in personnel has occurred in Government shipyards, arsenals, and gun factories. Actually, the regular departments and agencies of the executive branch, exclusive of the War and Navy Departments, have increased their personnel steadily. For 1946, the annual pay roll of the executive branch was approximately $8,000,000,000.

The administration has pretended to reduce bureaucracy. But its so-called liquidation of agencies has commonly been merely transfers of emergency agencies to regular agencies, with no actual reduction in bureaucratic powers or personnel. Temporary activities have been made permanent, and artificial activities have been created to hold onto power and keep bureaucrats on the pay roll.

We need efficiency and responsibility in government. Bureaucracy, with its thirst for power and its arrogant contempt of congressional authority, must be brought under control. The Government should be made responsive to the people who elect the responsible officials of the Government, and not, as now, a monstrous and self-willed political machine.

CONSTITUTIONAL GOVERNMENT VERSUS EXECUTIVE RULE

Today we have a government by men instead of government by law. Administrative agencies, politically controlled by the administration, have taken over the functions of making laws and dispensing justice. The right of citizens to fundamental safeguards, such as judicial review of arbitrary decisions, has been curtailed and in many instances denied. None of the officers or personnel of these administrative agencies are elected by the people.

The Senate Judiciary Committee has reported that 130 Federal bureaus and agencies are empowered to issue rules, regulations, and directives that have the force of law. It found that in the first 10 years of Democrat rule at least 107,980 such laws were issued and printed in the Federal Register. How many more such laws were issued that were not printed in the Federal Register could not even be estimated. The committee noted that it would require 18 months' work by a staff of experts to analyze only the most important classes of Executive orders and regulations to determine whether they had any statutory authority and whether they provided necessary safeguards to the citizen.

The need, today, is for the American system of constitutional government, with the Congress, elected by the people, making the laws, the executive branch administering the laws, and the Supreme Court deciding cases under the laws. Powers which the Federal Government has seized from the States should be returned to the States in the interest of effective home rule.

FOREIGN POLICY: DEFINITE VERSUS INDEFINITE

Today, we have a foreign policy of confusion, inefficiency, and drift. Even Democrats themselves describe the administration's foreign policy as contradictory and chaotic. Senator J. WILLIAM FULBRIGHT, Democrat, of Arkansas, for example, has charged the administration with "drifting about in a fog of indecision." Sumner Welles, former Under Secretary of State in the Democrat administration, has assailed the present administration repeatedly for the disastrous damage which its policies have caused to the inter-American system.

Under the foreign policy of the present administration, the so-called Atlantic Charter has repeatedly been violated, and the rights of small nations have been deliberately ignored or crushed. We have been committed to secret dealings, secret pacts, secret agreements, which have come to light only by accident and against the wishes of the administration. The assurances of the administration that there are no more secret agreements have come to be meaningless.

We need open diplomacy at home and abroad. The American people should be honestly and fully informed about foreign relations. There should be an end to secret dealings which become binding upon our country and breed distrust and misunderstandings in all international relations.

Furthermore we should put an end to confusion and contradiction in foreign policy and the cross purposes that have wracked our State Department despite its repeated "reorganizations." Our foreign policy should be conducted through experienced and capable men.

AMERICANISM VERSUS RADICALISM

We Americans have many grave problems to solve, many threatening evils to fight. We must soberly set to work to find out all we can about the existence and extent of every evil, and must then attack it with unyielding resolution. There are abroad in our land those who do not honor and revere the flag. Men who are seeking to undermine our institutions. They advocate change in our form of government. They seek to overthrow American institutions. They seek chaos and ruin.

We need an aroused America, awake to the dangers that threaten us from within as well as from without. The call goes forth to all patriotic citizens of our beloved country to make certain that the democracy and liberty our arms have sought to gain for the world shall not perish in our own land and show to those who would destroy this "government of the people, by the people, and for the people" that the spirit of America is not dead but liveth.

Critical Shortage of Hospital Facilities

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. WALTER B. HUBER
OF OHIO
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Thursday, August 1, 1946

Mr. HUBER. Mr. Speaker, it is gratifying to know that both the House and Senate have passed S. 191, a bill to alleviate the critical shortage of hospital facilities existing throughout our Nation, and that it has been sent to the President for his signature. In support of necessary hospital legislation, it was my pleasure to make the following statement on March 12, 1946, before a subcommittee of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, House of Representatives.

The conditions which exist in Barberton and Summit County, Ohio, are also found in the other counties of my district, Lorain, Medina ,and Portage.

STATEMENT OF HON. WALTER B. HUBER, MEMBER OF CONGRESS FROM THE STATE OF OHIO

Mr. HUBER. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, it is very encouraging to me to know that your committee is giving consideration to H. R. 5628 and S. 191—bills to amend the Public Health Service Act and authorize grants to the States for surveying their hospital needs and for planning construction of additional facilities and authorizing grants by the Federal Government to assist in such construction. This legislation if enacted will be of tremendous value to the people of all of the States of the Union. It is impossible in many instances, no matter how dire the need, for States and local communities to raise the necessary funds and provide ample hospital and public-health facilities. Many communities have been most forward looking in this behalf and have raised large sums of money with which to make contributions for the erection of additional facilities to take care of the needs of their citizens.

Unfortunately, due to rising construction costs, increases in the prices of hospital equipment, and other expanding prices, the funds raised locally ofttimes are not sufficient to pay for the kinds of hospitals needed in certain localities.

I am mindful of the efforts of the citizens of Barberton. This is a large industrial community in Summit County, Ohio. It has an antiquated, outmoded, small hospital built many years ago in what is now a noisy, congested business area of the city, and its citizens some months ago in a widespread community effort in which industry, the merchants, unions, churches, clubs, and institutions of all kinds wholeheartedly participated, raised approximately $432,000 through local contributions for a new hospital, which is so badly needed by the community. In addition, it also owns, free and clear of all encumbrances, the present Barberton citizens' 50-bed hospital, together with the parcel of land on which the new hospital and health center is to be erected, so that it has available through its own efforts assets in excess of $500,000. It will not be possible to raise further funds locally, and it is my hope and belief that through the enactment of H. R. 5628 and S. 191, or a substitute measure upon which the two Houses of Congress can agree, Barberton may have an opportunity to have the funds raised by such united community effort and participation, matched with Federal funds, so that a hospital and health center of proper size, convenience, and facilities may be erected in what is one of the most enterprising and forward-looking industrial cities in northeastern Ohio.

Old-Age Pensions

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. GEORGE B. SCHWABE
OF OKLAHOMA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Friday, August 2, 1946

Mr. SCHWABE of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, the subject of old-age pensions is still before us. The method of handling disbursements to our aged and the qualifications which the recipients should possess, can be greatly simplified. I have long maintained that there should be only two qualifications requisite for persons to receive old-age assistance. First, the applicant should offer satisfactory proof that he or she is a citizen of the United States. Second, they must have attained the required age. It would be a very simple matter to ascertain the facts about these two prerequisites. This would do away with all of the snoopers. It would relieve the taxpayers materially. The many thousands of case workers, clerical people, and the like, who are now getting the money that the old people should receive, would be dropped from the pay rolls and the aged would benefit materially by having their allowances increased.

Why should the people who have been in many instances hard working, enterprising, good citizens, who have helped make this country great and who have been the taxpayers of the past generation, be forced to go before unsympathetic, untrained political appendages and puppets of any administration, and be required to answer questions and fill out forms that are so disgusting? This is so embarrassing that many worthy old people will not make application for old-age assistance. They do not want to be classed as paupers. They do not want to have some political snooper call regularly and find out whether or not they have received a Christmas present of $5 from a friend or a son or a daughter. Naturally they want to help make their own living. The way the problem is handled today, in many instances, there is a premium put upon indolence and loafing. They are penalized if they do anything for themselves or if they receive help from a child or a friend. That is certainly not the American ideal. But it does promote New Deal regimentation of the people.

The more I have considered the problem, the more I am convinced that old-age pensions or old-age assistance should be paid entirely out of Federal funds, or entirely out of State funds. The payment should be made directly to the one entitled to receive the assistance. This would eliminate the maladministration now all too prevalent. Simplify the qualifications of the applicant and make the payments out of either Federal funds or State funds directly to the recipient. Take old-age assistance out of politics and away from the politicians, and the stooges and camp followers of the administration would have to find a method of earning an honest livelihood for themselves, instead of preying upon the public and being paid out of funds that should be paid to the aged.

The idea of the States matching the Federal Government in the payment of old-age assistance is not wholesome. There are so many, entirely too many, instances of Federal-State or Federal-local matching of funds. Uncle Sam is broke. He is financially embarrassed. Many of the States and localities are in good financial condition. We must come to the point where the localities can assume their responsibilities as they did in the early history of this country. We should get away from so much of this matching business. It is conceivable that a readjustment of this program would be more economical by far than the present system and would be eminently more satisfactory to the oldsters.

During the dying days of this session of Congress there has been an amendment passed to the social-security law which is very misleading. In some instances it will result in an increase of the monthly checks to the older people not to exceed $5. In other instances it will not increase their payments. By and large the new law provides for additional payments out of Federal funds to the States. But it is left to the States to determine the distribution, the qualifications, and the allocations of these funds to the older people. It is doubtful if the older people will be materially benefited. In these days of inflation they need additional help and Congress should have been more considerate. But the administration insisted that we do everything before we helped our young patriots and the old people. They were willing for us to spend money for everything else, but these two classes of people were the last to be considered before adjournment of the Seventy-ninth Congress.

May the day soon come that old-age pensions will be taken out of politics and the political camp followers removed from the public pay roll and the vast sums being paid to these snoopers be added to the payments made monthly to the old people.

America's Duty to Poland

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. CHARLES A. WOLVERTON

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, August 2, 1946

Mr. WOLVERTON of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, the duty America owes to Poland in its hour of distress cannot be too often emphasized, nor too strongly expressed. Therefore, in accordance with the permission of the House granted to me, I herewith set forth extracts from an address delivered by me upon the occasion of the installation of officers of the St. Joseph's Post of Catholic War Veterans, in the Parish Hall of St. Joseph's Church, at Tenth and Atlantic Avenue, Camden, N. J.:

Today there is unrest and uncertainty throughout the world. The peace and tranquillity that was expected to come with victory has not materialized. This is due to the fact that the big nations have not been willing to recognize and abide by the principles of equality, freedom and democracy for which we fought. Russia and Great Britain want their respective spheres of influence. Each of them assert their right to be greater than the nations which they seek to dominate. All of this is contrary to the principles of the Atlantic Charter—the "four freedoms"—for which we fought and sacrificed.

Although victory has been accomplished the darkness of the night has not passed. The dawn of the new day has not brought a fulfillment of their hopes and ambitions to the smaller nations. It has not brought the freedom and security that was promised. The principles for which we fought are fast becoming nothing but a memory—ideals that have died under the pressure of power politics.

To be specific, victory has meant disappointment to the people of Poland. No nation of Europe can better illustrate the hopes and ambitions of a people whose heart and soul yearned for liberty and freedom. For centuries the Polish people fought and died for the cause of freedom. Time and again they felt the iron heel of oppression. But the Polish people did not cease to exist. Conscious of a national heritage extending back to the tenth century, they rejected foreign influences imposed on them by their conquerors, and every year, on May 3, they have remembered their first great constitution, adopted more than 150 years ago. A constitution which patriotic Poles still rank with our Declaration of Independence, Britain's Magna Carta, and France's Declaration of Rights of Man.

In the tragic days of 1939 the Poles fought with valor and courage against the overwhelming power of Hitler's legions. They fought with the zeal and desperation of men inspired. They were inspired. They remembered those memorable words of their first great constitution: "More than life and personal happiness we value external independence and internal freedom." Though Polish arms failed in this unequal struggle, yet, in defeat, they were honored. They had shown the spirit that gives men the right to be free. A spirit that has never been conquired. The sacrifices endured and the spirit displayed give Poland the right to be free again.

There should be no doubt, question, or uncertainty as to whether Poland shall have the return of its territory and full sovereignty. There is a particular obligation upon our Nation and all the Allied Nations to see that this is done. Not to do so is to break faith with those who have suffered and died to make liberty and freedom certain and secure throughout the world. The future treatment accorded Poland may well be taken as a symbol of what may be expected by smaller and weaker nations at the hands of the stronger and more powerful nations. For this reason America, actuated as it is by the desire to sustain and support the principles of liberty and freedom with respect to all peoples, must be alert and insistent in demanding that the rights of Poland be acknowledged and honored by all the Allied Nations, as well as by others.

Unless the territorial integrity and sovereignty of Poland are respected, the Atlantic Charter becomes a meaningless document and a failure. The first three points in the Atlantic Charter, as promulgated on August 14, 1941, are plain and understandable. They are not susceptible to equivocation or double meaning. The Allied Nations, in adopting the Atlantic Charter, unreservedly agreed:

First. Their countries seek no aggrandizement, territorial or otherwise.

Second. They desire to see no territorial changes that do not accord with the freely expressed wishes of the people concerned.

Third. They respect the rights of all peoples to choose the form of government under which they will live; and they wish to see sovereign rights and self-government restored to those who have been forcibly deprived of them.

Apply these rules to Poland and the people of Poland will be satisfied.

The duty of America is plain. We will not do our full duty to Poland unless we openly, wholeheartedly, and unreservedly, and, with all the strength and influence we possess, demand that the principles laid down by the Atlantic Charter shall apply in full force and effect to Poland, and that Polish sovereignty and freedom be thereby fully reestablished. To do otherwise would be to betray that nation, who, in our war of independence, showed its interest and its faith in the cause of liberty by giving to us the services of those outstanding military leaders, Gen. Thaddeus Kosciuszko and Count Casimir Pulaski.

As a Member of Congress, having the honor and privilege of representing the First Congressional District of New Jersey, I feel it is my duty, and, in fulfillment of that duty, I shall do everything within my power to bring America's influence and its every effort in support of the reestablishment of the Polish Republic. Free Poland, in a free Europe, may well be considered a symbol of the world's emancipation from the power of aggressor nations.

Members of the Judiciary Committee Who Are Retiring From Congress

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. EARL C. MICHENER
OF MICHIGAN
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Friday, August 2, 1946

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, when the Eightieth Congress convenes in January, the faces of a number of the outstanding Members of the Seventy-ninth Congress will be missing. This is especially true of the Committee on the Judiciary. Some months ago five members of that committee announced they would not be candidates to succeed themselves in the Congress. Another member did not receive sufficient votes in his primary. Therefore, this one committee alone is losing six splendid members.

The best known, and the one who has served the longest, is our distinguished chairman, the gentleman from Texas, HATTON W. SUMNERS. As chairman ever since 1933, he has piloted through Congress much legislation of world-wide importance. This has been no easy job, yet he has always risen to the occasion, and the times are few and far apart when the legislation which he fathered was not written into the statute books. A natural orator, he is a philosopher seasoned with enough humor, diplomacy, and practicability to make him exceptionally effective as a chairman. Judge SUMNERS, we shall miss you much, and may you trod only a path strewn with flowers down through the years.

The ranking Republican member is the gentleman from New York, CLARENCE E. HANCOCK, who, if the political polls and the trends are to be believed, would be chairman of the committee in the Eightieth Congress. Notwithstanding this fact, Mr. HANCOCK retires of his own volition. Possessed of one of the best legal minds in the Congress, endowed with plenty of courage, he commands the respect and confidence of all of us. Never offensively partisan, he is a good Republican, believing thoroughly in the American way of life. When he speaks in Congress, people listen because he says something worth while. He is never a demagog. Many a law is a better law because CLARENCE HANCOCK helped write it, and in his retiring we lose a most valuable member of the committee and one whose service the country can ill afford to lose in these trying days. The country is safe with men like Mr. HANCOCK at the legislative helm. We all wish him well in any line he may pursue in the future.

One of those with longest service on the committee is our good friend and earnest worker the gentleman from North Carolina, ZEBULON WEAVER. His service in the House has been so successful and so long that it was generally assumed his constituents realized his worth to his district and to the Nation. Always devoted to his congressional duties and invariably on the job, ZEB WEAVER has been a wheel horse in Congress. He should not be leaving us; however, he will retire to that splendid North Carolina district where there is so much joy and comfort in living. ZEB, may you live for many, many years blessed with good health, peace of mind, and the realization that you have assisted in guiding Congress through the most unusual years of our national existence. May peace and happiness follow you everywhere.

When the gentleman from California, JOHN H. TOLAN, informed the committee that he would not seek reelection in the coming fall, no one took his statement seriously. JOHN TOLAN has been in Congress so long that it seems that it could not function without him. Ever alert in the interests of his own district, when his own State was involved, and always conscientiously watchful in behalf of the country as a whole, he has been a worthwhile legislator. Ever cooperative but never yielding when principle was involved, he was naturally outstanding. He believes thoroughly in the Democratic Party, of which he is an adherent, and is always dependable. To know JOHN TOLAN is to like him. His place will be hard to fill.

Mr. Speaker, as one of the newer men on the committee, the able gentleman from Connecticut, JOSEPH E. TALBOT, occupies a unique position. Previous experience in State government brought him to us with special qualifications for congressional service. Few new Members of Congress are accorded a position on the Judiciary Committee. JOE TALBOT came here with the right kind of a reputation, and he has lived up to the expectations of his most ardent admirers. Capable, industrious, and likeable, he is today a leader in this great committee, and his ability is recognized by all of his colleagues. We regret to see him leave us; however, his friends have made him a candidate for Governor of his State, and we all know that his public service is just beginning and not ending. Good luck, JOE.

The committee is also suffering the loss of one of its ablest, most conscientious, diligent, and personable members, the gentleman from Texas, SAM M. RUSSELL. Judge RUSSELL was in Congress because most of the people in his district wanted him here. As a prosecuting attorney and as a judge, he had won the confidence and affection of his constituents. They sent him to the halls of Congress and he has performed in a manner bringing credit to himself, honor to his district and his State, and benefit to his Nation. SAM RUSSELL believes in certain fundamental principles. He is always for the right against the wrong, and no one ever has any doubt on which side of a question he stands. Judicial in temperament, with the energy of a prosecutor, he has brought to Congress the type of leadership that counts. I am sure he likes his work in Congress as much as his colleagues like him; however, I do not blame him for preferring the dry Texas climate to the hot, humid weather so common in Washington. SAM RUSSELL will make good and serve his native State of Texas in some capacity for years to come. Success to you, SAM.

The British Loan

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. GEORGE B. SCHWABE
OF OKLAHOMA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Friday, August 2, 1946

Mr. SCHWABE of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I doubt if any appropriation or act of Congress was ever passed which is more unpopular in the Middle West than the appropriation by this Congress of $3,750,000,000 to Socialist England.

The people of my part of the country are growing very impatient with the New Deal giving away ships, airplanes, and no telling what else. Now, they have insisted upon our making this British loan, which I think should be called a gift for, judging the future by the past, England will never repay the loan. They called us Uncle Shylock because we even talked about charging them a little interest after the fifth year. The administration settled the multiplied billions we had lent England during and after World War I and in lend-lease during World War II, for a mere pittance, and they have not paid that pittance yet, and perhaps never will.

The taxpayers' money is being lent to foreign countries and given to them without the taxpayers' consent. Persistent rumor on good authority is to the effect that Russia will soon expect a loan from the United States. France has already obtained one out of funds chiefly contributed by this country, and other countries are to follow suit. Where will it end?

England has a much smaller per capita indebtedness than this country. Russia has a smaller per capita indebtedness than the United States. We have perhaps the largest per capita indebtedness of any of the great countries of the world. The worst part of it all is that we do not have the money on hand. We are spending more than we are taking in. That means we have to borrow from our own citizens. We are operating on a deficit spending basis. It is a spending spree on which the New Deal administration has embarked, and the people do not like it.

Sometime ago I sent out a referendum to 40,000 of my constituents. One question I asked was, "Should our Government continue to borrow money from its citizens to lend and give to foreign countries before paying its debts to homefolks?" There is no place that our Government can borrow except from its own citizens. If the money is taken from the banks, it is the depositors' money. If it comes from the building and loan associations, it is the money of the people who own stock and have deposited their funds with the association. If the life insurance companies purchase Government bonds, the money that is used is the fund that is being held to pay the beneficiaries under the policies issued by the company. It belongs to the policyholders. The seven-billion-odd dollars accumulated to pay social-security benefits belong to the future beneficiaries of that fund, the people, and this money is practically all represented by Uncle Sam's I O U's. Hence, Uncle Sam, whenever he borrows any money, in one way or another borrows it from our citizens.

The several thousand people who answered the above question showed definitely that they were opposed to making the British loan. Of all who answered this question, only 5.56 percent said yes, and 94.44 percent said no. The farmers of my district who answered the question answered decisively in the negative; 3.35 percent said yes, and 96.65 percent said no. Of the World War I veterans who answered, 8.52 percent said yes and 91.48 percent said no. Among the defense workers, 4.65 percent answered yes, and 95.35 percent no.

Personally, I am in favor of allowing every American citizen who wants to lend money to Britain to show his sincerity by subscribing his individual funds to the loan. I am morally sure that the loan would fall far short of full subscription. But this would show the attitude of the people. They are not willing to be taxed to make the loan. The veterans certainly were opposed to the loan, and they are opposed vigorously to the give-away policy of this New Deal administration. But the New Dealers have a substantial majority in both Houses of Congress, and with the insistence of the President, the measure passed, with my vote in the negative.

The Duty We Owe to Our Heroic Dead

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. CHARLES A. WOLVERTON

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, August 2, 1946

Mr. WOLVERTON of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, in accordance with the permission granted, I herewith extend my remarks by the inclusion of extracts from an address delivered by me at the dedication of a memorial monument to World War II veterans on Sunday, November 18, 1945, at Veterans' Memorial High School, Camden, N. J.:

Today we honor those who so valiantly served their country in the Second World War as we unveil this beautiful and lasting monument erected in their memory.

This memorial will stand here through all the years to come as a constant reminder of their heroism, courage, and sacrifice in the cause of their country.

Great credit is due to all who have had a part in the erection of this memorial to be a lasting tribute and expression of appreciation of the service that was rendered by those in whose honor it has been erected.

I trust that this monument will always be a constant inspiration and encouragement to all who look upon it, to give of themselves in peace or war the same high measure of devotion to their country as was rendered by those whom it honors.

Let us not think, however, that our duty to those who died in the service of their country is completed by erecting here a monument as a memorial. Our duty to them requires that each of us shall make certain and sure that the principles of freedom for which they fought and died shall ever remain the basic principles of this Nation, and, that the peace of the world shall ever be the objectve toward which this Nation must strive.

It is our further duty to make equally certain and sure that the dependents left by those who died in the service of their country, and for whom our deepest sympathy goes out, shall be adequately cared for according to their several necessities. This and no less, we owe to them as a grateful nation. No greater duty do we owe to anyone as a nation than the duty to care for those who suffer as a result of their loved ones having made the supreme sacrifice, and, likewise we owe a duty to help, aid, and assist those who have survived but whose future is made harder or more difficult because of physical handicaps or ailments resulting from service to their country.

Although victory has crowned our efforts and our enemies have been defeated, yet, there is much to be done before the peace for which we fought becomes a lasting peace. Already there are signs that indicate that some of our allies are not actuated by the same high ideals that prompted our participation in the war. Let us not forget that in World War I we fought for ideals and won the war. But, in the years that followed, the ideals for which we fought were ignored or forgotten, and, World War II was the result. This time it is the duty of this Nation to utilize the prestige and strength it now has to insist that the principles of freedom for which we fought, that make for peace and security, shall be observed. Without this the future holds no better prospect than the past.

Freedom for the Philippines: Fact or Fancy?

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. HUGH DE LACY

OF WASHINGTON

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, August 1, 1946

Mr. DE LACY. Mr. Speaker, under the leave granted me, I should like to call the attention of the House to the following statement sent to me by the Philippine Lawyers Guild. It presents a remarkable picture of events in the Philippines.

America must be alert to see that the plain people there are not subjected to a new dictatorship of Falangists and ex-collaborationists.

The president, officers of the National Lawyers Guild, and delegates to this national convention, we of the Philippine Lawyers Guild take great pleasure in conveying to all of you our most heartfelt greetings. This 4th day of July must be one of great rejoicing in your country. Ten thousand miles away in Manila, we, too, are celebrating our one big day in history—the final grant of Philippine independence.

To the Filipino people this independence is freedom justly earned through a bitter struggle since the days of bondage under Spain.

Justified misgivings, however, disturb us as we become a free nation. Enemies of peace and of freedom in both your country and ours have already taken steps to emasculate Philippine independence. Clear indications that confirm these misgivings include (1) plans for a thorough exploitation and complete economic domination of the Philippines through the Bell Act, and undue pressure to compel Philippine approval of the act; (2) the unjustified presence of large United States military, naval, and air forces in Philippine territory, and the turning over of United States arms and war equipment to the Philippine Government through bills presented in the United States Congress for no justifiable purpose; and (3) the installation into power of a Fascist administration in the islands and the consequent persecution and bloody suppression of democratic forces.

I

The policies and actions of the High Commissioner's office and the United States Army in the Philippines cast serious reflections on American world prestige and jeopardize Philippine-American good will. Through their chief agent and spokesman in these islands, High Commissioner (now Ambassador) Paul V. McNutt, American business interests succeeded in railroading the Bell Act through the United States Congress. This law, falsely labeled as "reciprocal" is so onerous that if carried into full effect, it will inevitably reduce the Philippine Republic to nothing better than its Jap-puppet predecessor.

On the very day that local newspapers had reported the unexpected news that President Truman had signed the Bell bill, a mammoth parade and demonstration of protest against it was being held in Manila. It was attended by 50,000 peasants and city workers and members of some 23 civic organizations including the Philippine Lawyers Guild. One of the resolutions unanimously adopted by the demonstrators demanded the immediate recall of High Commissioner McNutt from the Philippines because he was "unfriendly to the Filipino people."

The act lays down, unilaterally, tariff and quota procedures under which the Filipinos are to carry on trade and commercial relations with the United States for the next 28 years. The act is to become finally effective upon its approval by the Philippine Congress and a national convention or plebiscite. Practically every provision of the measure is a nail in the coffin of Philippine independence. Shockingly humiliating, for instance, is the so-called equal-rights provision, section 341, which provides that "the disposition, exploitation, and utilization of all agricultural, timber, and mineral lands of the public domain, waters, minerals, coal, petroleum, and other natural resources of the Philippines, and the operation of public utilities shall, if open to any person, be open to citizens of the United States and to all forms of business enterprise owned or controlled, directly or indirectly, by United States citizens," and which requires the Philippines to amend its constitution.

Although equal rights to exploit are provided to all, the setting in of powerful American owned or controlled syndicates, with their far-reaching holding companies, will necessarily leave the average Filipino and American investor out in the cold.

The measure authorizes 8 years of "free trade" upon achievement of Philippine independence, and a levy of a gradually increased tariff over the succeeding 20 years. While on the one hand United States goods are absolutely free to enter the Philippines with no restrictions as to amount (quota) or kind during the 8 years of free trade, the only major and exportable products that we hope to be able to export to the United States after a few years (the war has destroyed our industries) are limited by restricted quotas fixed in the law.

Whatever hope there is left for Filipinos to develop their own economy by producing native goods for the home market and for export to the United States or any other country has been dampened by the provision in the act which restricts by quota not only the seven major Philippine products but also any other goods, should it be found that "they are coming, or likely to come, into substantial competition with like articles which are the product of the United States" (sec. 504). Having removed all initiative to produce goods likely to come into competition, the Philippines becomes a perfect dumping place for all United States surplus goods. Native production to carry on normal trade relations with other nations—the privilege of a truly independent country—has been made impossible by this provision. It shatters all hopes of industrializing the country to relieve the masses of our people from the extreme poverty that is inherent in our present feudal economy.

By exclusively allocating quota rights to prewar exporters and by discriminately assigning them on the basis of the quota right they had over a particular period before the war, the law has obviously been designed to protect and benefit exclusively the interests of particular individuals or of a class. The full import of the provisions becomes evident when it is remembered, as in the case of sugar, which was our prewar major export, that approximately only 23 percent of quota rights were in the hands of Filipinos. Americans owned the greater part of the right with the Spanish and other foreign interests coming next. Filipinos cannot be expected to enjoy the full benefits of the law, because their limited government resources preclude full benefits of banking and other credit facilities.

The other bill concurrently enacted into law by signature of President Truman is the Tydings war-damage bill (S. 1610). Ownership of productive property was mainly in the hands of foreigners with a few Filipino big businessmen holding a small share. The measure, therefore, does not benefit the broad masses of the Filipino people. The Filipino middle class, with property-damage claims can avail themselves of only $500 each. This rehabilitation measure, although it grants some benefits to some people, essentially rehabilitates only the big landlords, factory owners, and industrialists, and most of them are foreigners.

Apprehensive of the opposition to the Bell bill by the Filipinos who would eventually realize that they are being swindled out of their own patrimony, United States big businessmen, reportedly through McNutt, found it necessary to blackmail the Filipino people into accepting the Bell bill by inserting into the provisions thereof a new section (sec. 601), which makes availability of the benefits of the rehabilitation bill contingent upon the acceptance of the Bell trade bill.

II

The economic structure of the Philippines, predominantly agricultural, is based on our peasantry. From Spanish times the country's economy has been designed mainly to produce raw material for the colonial power, and the "free (one-way) trade" relations during the brief period under America before the war only served to intensify the peasant's feudal subjugation. Sublevel standards of living resulted in recurring social unrest and baby revolutions, often bloody, occurred at the rate of 1 every 10 years.

A survey report on Philippine labor conditions before the war by the Philippine Bureau of Census and Statistics estimates that the average peasant, who usually cultivates from 1 to 2 hectares of rice land, earns an annual income of from ₱80 to ₱125 ($3.33 to $5.02 monthly). Particularly in central Luzon, the rice granary of the Philippines, seasonal demands for rice-crop cultivation allows him only 3 months of actual work in the fields, and leaves him without employment for the rest of the year. During cultivation time he works the field from early dawn to sunset for his own landlord and should consider himself fortunate working someone else's land on a wage basis. This enables him to earn 50 centavos (25 cents) for the day's work. The rest of the year the peasant lives on odd jobs, such as carpentry, river or swamp fishing, backyard vegetable raising, and on usurious loans from his landlord. He is at the complete mercy of his feudal master, who owns the land as far as the eye can see.

The Japanese invasion brought about great and sudden changes. Landlords flew to cities and towns for safety. Not having the means to go anywhere, the peasant was forced to stay behind and to ward off as best he could the brutal incursions of the Japanese patrols. Under the circumstances, he had but one choice to make—resist. He soon found himself in the forefront of the world movement against the enemies of peace and democracy.

The valiant and effective resistance that the peasant guerrillas of Central Luzon had put up against the enemy has drawn the respect and praise even of the United States Army. The People's Anti-Japanese Army (Hukbalahap), the military arm of the PKM, militant peasant sharecroppers' union of 500,000 members in central Luzon, waged a bitter and unrelenting battle with the Japanese forces. Many big landlords who had flown to Manila for safety from the Japanese invaders remained there to engage in the lucrative business of dealing in war material with those they had so lately feared. Left in complete control of the territories they had liberated or areas which had been unoccupied by Japanese forces, the peasant union established autonomous local democratic governments. For the first time in their lives the peasants enjoyed the benefits of the democratic processes that had been the exclusive patrimony of the privileged few. Village councils of from seven to nine members were elected by the village peasants, and similar town officials were likewise elected by the town folk. The fields were cultivated and the rice harvest hidden away to avoid capture by the enemy.

These democratic gains of the occupation period that the peasants had fought for with their lives are now being taken away from them; and the methods that are being used are much the same as those employed by the landlord-aided Japanese. A private army, financed and supported by landlords, has been organized and turned loose on the peasants; well-prepared propaganda has endeavored to discredit the peasant cause both here and abroad; and the Philippine Army military police, composed mainly of the puppet constabulary force under the Japanese, with old feuds to settle with the peasants, are being given a free hand to crush the peasant movement. Behind the scenes, acting as liaison officers and arms providers, and in many cases actually directing the offensive, are officers of the United States Army. The American high command here from the very first sought to crush the peasant movement. It interned the two leaders of the People's Anti-Japanese Army, despite the help—unequalled by many and surpassed by none of the other guerrilla organizations—that this army had given them; and it refused full recognition to the peasant force. This, of course, is merely a result of the over-all attempt to keep the Philippines a colony in fact, if not in name.

III

The most bitterly contested elections in Philippine history were held on April 23, 1946. The two candidates for presidency were young, former Brig. Gen. Manuel A. Roxas, who stayed in the Philippines during the occupation and served as a member of the puppet cabinet; and old, conservative Sergio Osmeña, who had gone to the United States with former President Quezon, just before the fall of Corregidor.

Roxas was supported by the party he created, a self-styled "Liberal" party composed in the main of men who, like him, had occupied positions in the puppet government of Laurel, or who were disgruntled at Osmeña for one reason or another. Osmeña was supported by a coalition of the remnants of the old guard Nationalista Party, the prewar Popular Front and the new, progressive Democratic Alliance, which had banded together, not so much to support Osmeña, as to fight Roxas whom they feared because of his Fascist inclinations and support.

Roxas, who controlled the Philippine Army and well-armed guerrilla bands throughout the islands had predicted a revolution should he lose, and guerrilla chiefs running for Congress under his ticket threatened the people that, should Osmeña win they would "march to Malacanan (the presidential palace) and take over the reigns of government." Senator-elect Pendatum, a Roxas man, openly admitted that his guerrillas in Mindanao had arms and ammunition to last them 2 years should things turn out the wrong way. The Eighty-sixth American Division despite previous GI protests was dispatched to Central Luzon and alerted 24 hours a day, and United States Army patrol planes incessantly patroled the skies over central Luzon.

Roxas won the elections by a plurality of slightly more than 200,000 of the 2,500,000 votes cast, but his supporters scored a clean-cut victory in Congress.

Immediately after Roxas' victory became certain, his "Liberal Party" laid down plans to consolidate the power necessary for the execution, among other things, of the all-important and urgent party commitment—the approval of the Bell Act. The existence of a strong liberal-progressive opposition, however, was something to be reckoned with. The execution of a two-way strategy was therefore necessary: (1) Crush the minority opposition in Congress or at least dominate the voting power, and this was to be effectively done by ousting all the seven central Luzon representatives and at least three senators of the minority in the senate; (2) military drive on the peasants in central Luzon.

Just as soon as the gavels in both houses called for business after the chamber presidents had been chosen, the majority filed resolutions excluding the seven Democratic-Alliance representatives and three coalition senators.

In disgust at the ruling of the senate president on a point of parliamentary nature further curtailing minority rights, the minority senators walked out of the senate halls.

In their absence the resolutions ousting them was approved, despite the absence of a quorum. In the House of Representatives the same procedure was in progress, but superior tactical maneuvers by minority leaders has successfully delayed approval of the ouster resolution. The seven Democratic Alliance representatives, however, have been denied the right to speak or vote on normal House business.

The first step of the majority campaign was accomplished. Succeeding steps followed with breath-taking rapidity. Three majority representatives-elect under indictment for treason in the People's Court were allowed to sit. Similarly, three hold-over senators who are likewise facing treason charges for having collaborated with the Japanese, and who also belong to the Roxas party, were admitted, despite challenges, into the senate. Meanwhile, a technical interpretation removing the Bell Act from the category of a commercial treaty which requires three-fourths vote was secured, and new rules have been adopted whereby only a plurality vote would be necessary to approve the act instead of the two-thirds vote required by the old rules for ordinary legislation. Other steps include, a bill introduced in Philippine Congress providing for outright abolition of the People's Court and the Office of Special Prosecutors; a move for a general amnesty grant to all "political and military collaborators"; the filing of an unconstitutional bill by the senate majority floor leader to cut down the membership of the Supreme Court, a bill designed to coerce the judiciary into submission to Roxas' Liberal Party's orders; labor regimentation through a Government-sponsored union called the Philippine Confederation of Labor and Peasantry (PCLP), designed to break the back of the CLO (Congress of Labor Organizations) and the PKM, the two powerful genuine labor unions in the country; and, the creation not only of a state police, but of a civilian police force, responsible only to the President, reminiscent of the hated Kempitai and Hitler's SS troopers.

The Philippine military police, which later is to constitute the state police, is part of the Philippine Army, under the Department of National Defense. The national budget for 1947–48 submitted to Congress by President Roxas appropriates the amount of 84,122,715 pesos for the maintenance and operation of the Department of National Defense. This represents the biggest outlay of the budget and consists of 33.15 percent of the total proposed appropriation—this, of course, in addition to the arms of all descriptions and other equipment worth 75,000,000 pesos that is now being turned over to the Philippine Government, and other arms and equipment yet to be transferred to the Philippine Government by the United States Army, free of cost, as proposed in bills lately introduced in the United States Congress.

In the meantime, the military offensive in the Central Plains of Luzon proceeds according to plan. The MP commands in the entire area have been enormously reinforced, and, despite agreements initiated by the Government limiting the activities of the MP's as a part of the so-called "bloodless pacification" campaigns, villages and towns are constantly raided by them, and peasants have been arrested on mere fancy and almost invariably are never heard of again. Grave and widespread violations of civil rights and liberties have developed into such an incurable social cancer that ordinary redress to the Government and the courts of law seem inadequate.

It is not even a secret that the United States Army has thrown its weight on the side of the landlords. Charges that are made in the Philippine press that the American Counter-Intelligence Corps has issued licenses to members of private landlord "civilian guards," while peasants found with arms are severely treated, have never been denied; nor has the Army denied that its insistence on a strong MP force in central Luzon has been sabotaging peace efforts that has been initiated by the Government between the peasants and the landlords. When Provost Marshal General Federico Oboza, who has been lately relieved, was asked by newspaper reporters why he was not going to abide by a peace talk agreement providing that the MP force assigned to the Central Plains would be lessened and its command reshuffled because of the officer's prolandlord bias, they were answered, "I don't have to stick by it. I have just seen General Styer (commanding general, AFWESPAC), and I am getting more reinforcements from the Visayas."

The attempt to secure complete economic domination of the Philippines through the Bell act, the United States Army cooperating in the drive to crush the peasant movement, the maintenance of unjustifiably large armed forces here, and the plans to build and establish not only naval, but military and air bases here are inexplicable—unless the United States is preparing for a third world war.

We ask, therefore, that the National Lawyers Guild take initiative in demanding: that the principles of the Atlantic Charter be extended and applied to all subject peoples in Asia; that the United States Army command in the Philippines be instructed to abstain in pursuing interventionist policies; that all United States troops be withdrawn, except those absolutely needed to maintain surplus equipment and property, and plans to maintain air and naval bases in the Philippines be abandoned; that our absolute repudiation of the Bell act be voiced and the way opened for a fair American-Philippine trade and other agreements, and that recently-named Ambassador Paul V. McNutt be immediately recalled from the Philippines, because his continued presence in the new republic will further prejudice the best interests of the Filipino people, and will be an impediment to Philippine-American trust and good will.

CARLOS P. RAMOS,
Executive Secretary,
Philippine Lawyers Guild.

The Bitter With the Sweet

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. GEORGE B. SCHWABE
OF OKLAHOMA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Friday, August 2, 1946

Mr. SCHWABE of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, while we were considering House Joint Resolution 390, the seventh deficiency appropriation bill of this Congress, I stated:

This is just another instance where we are required to take some of the bitter with the sweet. I am in favor of that portion of the bill which allows cash payments to enlisted veterans, the same as the officers received, but I am against the $26,000,000 to OPA.

I was then given permission to revise and extend these remarks.

This seventh deficiency appropriation bill provided, among other things, for an appropriation of $2,479,663,210.45 with which to pay terminal-leave payments to enlisted men, to place them upon a comparable basis with the commissioned men who had received terminal-leave pay during and subsequent to World War II. This provision was laudable and praiseworthy and every Member of the House was in favor of terminal-leave payments to the enlisted men.

However, the same bill contained other provisions which were not so popular. In fact, many of us were opposed to appropriating the additional sum of $26,000,000 to OPA. Many others were opposed to other large items in this deficiency appropriation bill, including the $600,000 to the Department of Commerce.

This is an illustration of many instances where certain features or items in an appropriation bill were not controversial, but others were extremely controversial. This administration has had a habit of giving us the bitter with the sweet. We have been forced to take the undesirable with the desirable, or not get the desirable at all, and that is certainly what happened in this instance. That is what happens when the New Deal majority in both Houses of Congress, with the backing of the President, sees fit to force the passage of appropriation bills to provide for and keep alive the unpopular, obnoxious, and in some instances un-American bureaus. That is the way the New Deal crowd has kept alive many of the bureaus that otherwise would have gone out of existence for lack of appropriations to maintain them. We will not be rid of these bureaus which the people so much want abolished until we are not forced to take the bitter with the sweet. We should have the privilege of voting separately upon these subjects and the appropriations for each bureau and each operating agency of government. But they know that this would spell the doom of many of these bureaus. It would be their death knell. It would take too many political appointees off the pay rolls.

Terminal Leave Pay Should Be Made In Cash to GI Veterans

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. GORDON L. McDONOUGH
OF CALIFORNIA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Friday, August 2, 1946

Mr. McDONOUGH. Mr. Speaker, the purpose of H. R. 4051 which provided for terminal leave pay for enlisted GI personnel was to guarantee equality of treatment to enlisted and officer personnel and remove discrimination.

As finally passed by the Congress, the terminal leave pay bill falls far short of its objective by providing only part cash payment and the balance in 5-year, nonnegotiable, nontransferrable bonds on which no loans can be obtained. Officer personnel receive terminal leave pay in cash, and enlisted personnel should be entitled to the same cash payment now when many of them need it during their readjustment to civilian life.

Terminal leave pay is not a bonus. It is pay for men who stayed on the job and did not take leave to which they were entitled during their service with the armed forces. They should receive this pay in cash because they earned it, and Congress should amend the terminal leave pay bill to give the veteran the right to payment in cash if he wants it.

Following is an excellent statement of the case for cash payment to the GI veteran as presented by Harold G. Stagg, editor of the Army Times:

ARMY TIMES,
Washington, D. C., July 22, 1946.
The Honorable G. L. McDONOUGH,
Member of Congress,
House Office Building,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR CONGRESSMAN McDONOUGH: The proposal of the Senate Military Affairs Committee to pay accrued, unused leave to enlisted and former enlisted personnel of the armed forces in nonnegotiable 5-year bonds instead of in cash, as voted overwhelmingly and unanimously by the House of Representatives on June 11, is, in our opinion, unnecessary, unjustified, and unfair.

The Senate Military Affairs Committee, in amending H. R. 4051, states that it seeks to lessen the inflationary effects of contemplated payments to enlisted and former enlisted personnel by providing for the issuance to them of 5-year, nonnegotiable, nontransferable bonds on which no loans can be obtained.

The report of the committee states that "sentiment has been widespread, both in the Congress and in the country, that justice and fairness require equality of treatment of officers and enlisted men with respect to their leave rights and benefits."

Nonetheless, the committee failed utterly to provide that "equality of treatment" when it recommended that payment of the obligation to enlisted and former enlisted personnel be, in effect, postponed for 5 years.

Terminal-leave pay to officers was justified during and since the close of World War II under the provisions of an act of May 8, 1874, which authorized "in the discretion of the Secretary of War," leave of absence without deduction in pay or allowances up to a maximum of 120 days. Pay for unused leave has been made to officers in cash.

For Congress to countenance, on the one hand, the removal of price controls; substantially higher wages in Government, industry, and the armed forces; reduction of taxes, increased public-works spending; and then defer for 5 years—through the issuance of nonnegotiable bonds—pay for earned but unused leave to enlisted and former enlisted personnel on the grounds that it lessens the dangers of inflation is, in our opinion, indefensible. It is neither economically sound nor morally justifiable.

Terminal-leave pay is not a bonus, either for officers or enlisted personnel. It is not a wage increase. It is not a sop to politics. It is a debt now owed to the enlisted and former enlisted personnel of the armed forces. It was earned in the same way that officers earned the leave for which they were paid in cash upon separation. It was earned in large part on the battle fronts and under other wartime conditions that made it impossible for earned leave to be used as earned.

There is justification for paying officers for unused leave in cash, and there is the same justification for paying enlisted and former enlisted personnel in cash. There is a very real justification for treating officers and men alike.

While the enlisted personnel of the services was earning the terminal-leave pay which they have not received, civilians patriotically poured billions of dollars into negotiable war bonds and today are cashing in those bonds at will.

During the war the officers and enlisted personnel of the services also poured a huge percentage of their earnings—especially while fighting overseas—into war bonds, and unless the terminal-leave pay so long overdue to enlisted personnel is paid in cash, they, too, may have to cash in their war bonds. Payment of terminal leave in cash will not adversely affect the Nation's economy any more than the day-to-day cashing in of war bonds by civilians and former service personnel.

The committee agrees that sentiment in favor of granting terminal leave to enlisted personnel is widespread. The fact that 380 Members of the House of Representatives voted unanimously to make payment for unused leave in cash is further evidence of that sentiment. To substitute a 5-year nonnegotiable bond-payment plan at this late date is inequitable in the extreme and makes a mockery of the committee's own statement that justice and fairness require "equality of treatment."

If terminal-leave pay is to benefit enlisted and former enlisted men, it should place the money in their hands when they need it most; that is, in the first crucial months of readjustment to civil life—not 5 years from now, when they will have had time to reestablish themselves. Certainly if they are paid in bonds, such bonds should be negotiable war bonds.

If Congress is to place enlisted men on equality of treatment with officers, as the committee sets forth, then provision should be made for payment in cash. That is the form in which officers have been and are being paid, and it is not recalled that the President, the Budget Bureau, or the Congress made any comments on the inflationary aspects of such payments.

Apart from the equities of the case—and there are many—it should be realized that not all enlisted and former enlisted men would spend their terminal leave pay immediately upon receipt of it. Those who have no real need will bank the money, or otherwise save or invest it. Furthermore, cash payment will result in considerable reduction of Federal disbursements for unemployment compensation by making it unnecessary for many former enlisted men to claim jobless pay.

It is hoped very earnestly that the Members of the Senate and the House will give consideration to the justice and the equity of the points outlined above. We would very much appreciate receiving from you an expression of your opinion on the merits of the case for payment in cash instead of 5-year, nonnegotiable, nontransferable bonds, for publication in an early issue of Army Times.

Sincerely yours,

HAROLD G. STAGG,
Editor.

What Is the Hold-Back

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. GEORGE B. SCHWABE
OF OKLAHOMA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, August 2, 1946

Mr. SCHWABE of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, the following editorial appeared in the Oklahoma Farm Journal, March 1946. The reasoning therein set forth is still good. What is the hold-back? I quote the article:

WHAT IS THE HOLD-BACK?

Never were more Americans anxious to buy more things than right now. People clamor for stockings and shirts; they want automobiles and houses.

They have more money than ever before, ready to lay on the counters of the stores.

The manufacturing capacity of the Nation was never higher than it is now. Factories and machines are ready to make things. Banks full of money are anxious to lend credit.

The farms, the forests, and the mines are still able to yield forth rich supplies of raw materials.

More people than ever before are trained in the skills of production and in the know-how of management.

Inflation's explosive danger looms ahead unless production soon pours out the goods to match the demands.

What is holding us back? Why are not the stockings and shirts and automobiles and houses forthcoming?

Do strikes explain the delays in production? Or are they a result, a mere symptom of the deeper causes which hold us back?

The real trouble is not strikes. They are only temporary set-backs. Some of them may result in healthy adjustments.

The real hold-backs are the Federal monkey wrenches in the national machinery.

Behind the delays in production are ceilings, restrictions, controls, and ponderous Government agencies which deprive the producer of his freedom to make the decisions necessary if he is to serve the public. There is no scarcity of raw materials, no misunderstanding with labor, and no idle wheel behind which the rigid hand of overgovernment may not be found.

The No. 1 offender is OPA. Necessary during war, price control in peacetime prevents production.

Whenever applied, it upsets the delicate, self-adjusting mechanism of price balances.

No industry will produce at a loss. No industry can long survive competition that can undersell. No machine can be assembled for the consumer if no supplier is making the parts.

Looking to the far future, Americans will need to decide soon whether they want their abundance in goods or in government, in freedom or in authority. It is one or the other.

Close up the OPA now. Goods will be made. Jobs will multiply. The country will rise to its feet and work.

Report of the United States Education Mission to Japan

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. GORDON L. McDONOUGH
OF CALIFORNIA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, August 2, 1946

Mr. McDONOUGH. Mr. Speaker, the reshaping of the system of education in Japan is one of the major tasks of the Supreme Allied Command.

Here is the report of the result of a survey of the United States education mission outlining the steps necessary to take to bring about a system of education which will give the people of Japan a better and more thorough system of education so that all her people may obtain the benefits of better education.

Following is the report:

REPORT OF THE UNITED STATES EDUCATION MISSION TO JAPAN

Early in January 1946 the Supreme Commander for the Allied Powers requested the United States War Department to send to Japan a group of American educators to consult with and advise general headquarters and Japanese educators on problems relating to education in Japan. In view of long-range planning then in progress in Washington concerning the reeducation and reorientation of Japan, the War Department requested the Department of State to select the personnel of the proposed mission. Twenty-seven persons were chosen, and Dr. George D. Stoddard was appointed chairman. After engaging in various studies and conferences in Japan during the month of March, the mission has presented this report.

The mission recognizes the necessity for the original negative directives, such as those eradicating militarism and nationalistic Shintoism from the schools, but it has concentrated chiefly upon positive proposals. Some of these are the following:

AIMS AND CONTENT OF EDUCATION

Decentralization of educational control in order that teachers may be freed to develop professionally under guidance without regimentation. Development and practice of morals in the various activities of the democratized school, rather than as a separate study. Adoption of a more objective viewpoint in textbooks and reference materials. Inauguration of a basic program of health instruction. Emphasis on vocational education.

LANGUAGE REFORM

Institution of the use of the Roman alphabet. Appointment of a commission of Japanese scholars, educators, and statesmen to devise a comprehensive program of language reform including the introduction of some type of Romaji into the schools and the life of the nation.

ADMINISTRATION OF PRIMARY AND SECONDARY EDUCATION

Creation of educational agencies elected by popular vote, at both local and prefectural levels. Upward revision of compulsory education in schools to be tax-supported, coeducational, and tuition-free.

TRAINING OF TEACHERS

Formulation of a program for the reeducation of teachers to further the adoption of democracy. Modification of normal schools to provide the kind of teachers needed.

ADULT EDUCATION

Fostering of adult education through evening and extension classes for adults, and the use of school buildings for a variety of community activities. Establishment of public libraries, particularly for use in adult education.

HIGHER EDUCATION

Establishment of additional colleges and universities according to a considered plan, to make higher education available for the majority.

Once a Water Boy, Always a Water Boy?

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. GEORGE B. SCHWABE

OF OKLAHOMA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, August 2, 1946

Mr. SCHWABE of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, several years ago I was called upon to address a group of Boy Scouts and their friends. I was requested to base my talk upon an actual experience of my boyhood, which would illustrate the importance of obedience to the orders given by our seniors and those in authority. They wanted my narration to emphasize the fact that young people are frequently put to the test when they are not aware of it, and that the way in which youth responds to such tests frequently enables an employer or the one giving the orders to determine the character of the boy. Hence I chose an actual experience from my own life with a moral that I considered most wholesome. I spoke to those boys on the subject Once a Water Boy, Always a Water Boy? The following is what I said on this subject:

Were you ever a water boy? Have you ever had some menial task to perform, which was not altogether to your liking? During our youth, I dare say, the majority of us have been called upon to perform some tedious or irksome act, which we, for the moment, considered nonessential, unimportant to us or our superiors.

In the summer of 1908 the director of admissions of one of the largest State fairs in the Middle West, after I had consummated a business transaction with him, asked me how I would like to sell admission tickets at the State fair that fall. I assured him I would appreciate the opportunity. He informed me that all of the ticket sellers were men who had worked in a bank. They were tellers in the large banks or officers in small country banks. At any rate they were supposed to have had considerable experience in handling money, making change, and the like.

At that time I had been in college 4 years and I thought the association and experience would be beneficial to me. I considered it somewhat of an honor, as well as a privilege, since I had never worked in a bank, to be associated with such men and put on a level with them. Truly, I felt flattered, and it is not so difficult to flatter youth, and particularly college students, who have come to think that they really know enough to take a position by the side of experienced and seasoned men. Later they come to realize that their scholastic attainments alone do not qualify them for many positions for which they had hitherto considered themselves eminently fitted.

I appeared on the opening day of the fair, and went immediately to the administration building where the director who had promised me the job had his headquarters. He greeted me cordially, but told me he was too busy just then to talk to me, and requested me to see him an hour later. When I returned to his office, he said he would like for me to rustle some galvanized buckets and tin cups and see that a cup and bucket were placed in each ticket-selling booth, and that I should get some ice and fill the buckets with water and keep them filled for the ticket salesmen and money changers. About 2 hours later I returned, and, in answer to his question as to how I had gotten along, I told him that I had all of the men supplied with ice water. He expressed approval and remarked that it was rather warm in those booths and that he wanted me to see that the men were kept supplied with ice water all day. At the close of that day's work, he ordered me to report at 7 o'clock the next morning. Upon my arrival, he directed me to continue my services as water boy the second day. At the close of the second day's work, the director asked me how I liked my job. To be sure, I wanted to say that I didn't like it, but I had been trained from earliest childhood to do the tasks that had been assigned me, and do them well, without complaining. Hence, I replied: "It is all right. But, of course, it is not what I thought I was going to do when I came over here. Nevertheless, I am willing to do whatever you want me to, since I am already on the ground." His only remark was: "Very well. You see that the boys all have ice water again this morning and come back to the office when you shall have supplied them on your first round." Again, I obeyed orders.

Upon my return to the administration building, the director gave me a badge to pin on my coat lapel, which read "Collector of admissions," and told me in very few words that he was placing me in charge of all the ticket sellers at the fair. He explained that I would be responsible for seeing that the salesmen had tickets, the money changers ample change, and that I would be provided with a conveyance to transport me from one ticket-selling booth to the other and to the office, with two plain-clothes policemen and a private detective who would accompany me everywhere I went.

We had twenty-odd ticket salesmen at the entrance gates and the grandstand. These men were all my seniors, and for fear they might resent my occupying a position superior to theirs the director cautioned me not to disclose to any of them the fact that I had never worked in a bank. It was my duty to give out the tickets to the salesmen, take their receipts therefor, collect the cash from them every hour during the day and bring it to the administration building and turn it over to the treasurer of the fair, and at the close each evening require the return of the tickets that had been distributed, or the balance of the cash therefor. A horse show was scheduled for that night, and the director told me that I would be in charge of the admissions to the horse show and to manage for ticket salesmen at the gates and doors.

Nothing more was said to me about supplying the men with drinking water. But I quickly observed that a substitute had been provided to render that service. When the fair officially closed the director of admissions asked me to approve the time for all of the men who were working under me and wait until they received their money, before filling out my voucher. He then handed me a voucher to sign for the full period of the fair, at the rate of $7.50 per day, whereas the ticket salesmen were paid only $5 per day, which he had promised me the summer before. As he handed me the voucher he said: "How did you like being water boy at the fair?" I merely smiled. He said, "I wanted to see what kind of stuff you had in you, whether or not you would obey orders, submit to discipline, and be willing to do any little task that was to be done. You satisfied my curiosity in that respect, and I was convinced by the thoroughness with which you performed the duties of water boy, that you would make good anywhere I placed you. For that reason I put you in charge of the ticket salesmen. I would like for you to be with us next season in the same position."

This incident cannot be appreciated fully, without knowing something of the character of that director of the State fair, in charge of admissions. He was a man past middle age, very active. A positive character with a commanding personality, unassuming, but serious minded, and considered an excellent judge of human nature. He had held public office one or two terms in his home county. He owned, or controlled a string of 10 or 12 country banks in his part of the State. He was a practical farmer, owned more than 1,000 acres of the most fertile land in the Mississippi River Valley, and an island in the Mississippi River of some 800 acres. He was a livestock and grain farmer on a large scale and an astute businessman, who enjoyed the confidence and respect of all who knew him. He was eminently fair and of mild and placid manner, but determined to win against all odds, when he considered his position proper and tenable. He had very little scholastic training, but was well educated in the "University of Hard Knocks." He was a man of comparatively few words, but when he spoke, all who knew him understood that he meant what he said.

Again I was flattered. I left the fairgrounds that closing night feeling more important than I have ever felt since. But I had had a lesson. Fortunately, I had followed my early training, of doing cheerfully, or at least without complaining, whatever was to be done. I had been taught to adapt and adjust myself to the circumstances, and make the best of them, with the faith that eventually we may be rewarded for doing well the little things that need to be done, although they are not altogether just what we might prefer to do.

It was indelibly impressed upon my mind, then and there, that, being a water boy once, does not necessarily mean that one must continue always to be a water boy. Often it is a step to greater possibilities. The biographies of most great people witness this fact.

Frequently our employers, especially the older generation, in dealing with the younger, use such methods as a test to determine our character, our attitude, and our faith. In some instances we are prone to become impatient and intolerant, which leads to our own undoing. Ordinarily youth does not realize at the time that in such cases he is being put to the test. Occasionally he will revolt, and without his knowing it, such revolt is the cause of his not being promoted, and ultimately of his losing his position and finding it ever more difficult to obtain another chance. I have known instances where employers have said, after it was too late, if you had not acted as you did, I would not have discharged you, for I had in mind, if you went ahead and did well whatever work was assigned to you, that I would promote you to a position of greater responsibility, carrying more substantial emoluments. We have all known of occasional instances of melancholy and discouragement which follow in the wake of such experiences. Youth is prone to give up too quickly. We are inclined to underestimate the value and importance of such tests of humbleness. After all, in many instances, the little things of life are the ones that count most. Small services well performed, although they may appear to us insignificant and unimportant, frequently convince the employer that eventually the employee will capably and faithfully perform the larger tasks when the responsibility is his to shoulder.

Of course, no one, with ambition, wants to be a water boy always. Much less does one who has had several years of college training, feel that he would like to be a mere water boy at a State fair when he thought he was to be and had been promised that he would be put on a level with experienced bank clerks and officers. His vanity shrinks. He is humiliated. But humbleness and swallowed pride, with a determination to make good at whatever task is assigned him, will almost always be followed by a promotion to a position of responsibility that will call forth the greatest possibilities of which one is capable.

Hence, once a water boy always a water boy? No. Not necessarily so. It depends upon the individual, his early training—his breeding, if you please. The answer to the question depends largely upon the individual's own reaction. The future is generally measured by the attitude and disposition with which we go about the performance of any duty that lies before us, the thoroughness and determination with which we attack the problems which confront us in everyday life, be they large or small, and the faith within us that we are measuring up to the responsibilities of our positions. The future is, after all, just about what we make it for ourselves. After having run the gamut of human experiences, will we not have to admit, we have been to a very large extent the authors of our own destinies?

Usually we cannot appreciate fully our opportunities until it is too late. In retrospect, we are inclined to think and say that if we had, or had not, done thus and so, things would have been different. We are all good at making excuses for our failures. It does seem at times that fate prevents our advancement, and there are external influences which play a liberal role in molding our futures. But, by and large, he who is faithful in the performance of the smaller tasks of life is undoubtedly better qualified to perform the larger responsibilities, and in no other way can one expect to become successful in the greater spheres of activity. The Great Teacher once said, "* * * he that shall humble himself shall be exalted"; again, in the parable of the talents, "Thou hast been faithful over a few things, I will set thee over many things"; and, on another occasion: "He that is faithful in that which is least is faithful also in much."

The Problem of German Political Revival

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. GORDON L. McDONOUGH

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, August 2, 1946

Mr. McDONOUGH. Mr. Speaker, the revival of Germany as a respected nation among the other nations of the world is no easy task for the United States and her allies.

The cancerous roots of nazism must be uprooted. The better and finer principles of democracy and the right and freedom of men to rule themselves rather than be ruled by a dictator must be implanted into the minds and hearts of the German people. There is no open sesame to this process. There is no easy formula, no quick and sure plan to bring this about. It will take time, patience, and much public education in Germany.

There is, no doubt, a resistance to any plan to change the political thinking of the German people even if the change is for their own good. All phases of German life must be understood and dealt with in the process. Their social and economic life must be thoroughly understood. Their political and religious history must be studied and understood. Their personal and national pride must be taken into consideration. They must be made to realize that what we are doing is for their present benefit and the future benefit of their children.

Following is a review of this problem by Leon W. Fuller from a Department of State Bulletin which indicates the difficulties which must be overcome to revive the political life of Germany:

THE PROBLEM OF GERMAN POLITICAL REVIVAL

The United States and her major associates in the governing of Germany look forward increasingly to the reconstruction of German political life on a peaceful and democratic basis. Involved in the process are the eradication of the Nazi Party, the encouragement of democratic political parties, elections, and the establishment of a decentralized political structure. No central government is planned for the near future, except for departments of finance, economy, and transport.

The reactivation and reformation of the political life of the German people is particularly difficult because of their advanced cultural development, strong nationalism, and lack of a genuine democratic outlook. The last-ditch resistance and complete collapse of the Nazi regime left the Germans in political apathy, yet presented the danger that this political void would be filled with traditional antidemocratic and nationalistic attitudes. Liberals who had escaped Nazi liquidation generally were of advanced age and offered little except a return to pre-Nazi days. Middle-aged and younger groups were largely miseducated, disillusioned, and politically disinterested. Up to the present, few constructive political ideas have emerged from the general chaos.

American policy does not seek to restore any earlier regime; it attempts rather to "encourage the indigenous revival of sound political elements." It is considered that this can best be done by permitting the Germans to gain experience in the conduct of local affairs so that they can gradually assume higher responsibilities. The grass-roots approach is favored because (1) it gives the Germans practice in self-government, on the only level at which they have had some experience; (2) it exemplifies the flow of authority from the people rather than, as traditionally, from above; (3) it is consistent with the decentralization necessary for security reasons; and (4) it will not dictate the kind of economic system which must emerge.

In the American zone, political reactivation has progressed by stages. At first, rigorous restraints upon freedom of speech, press, assembly, party, and trade-union activity were required. In August 1945, however, these restrictions were relaxed and local administrative agencies were reconstituted. As conditions became more stable, German administration was recreated at the district and state (land) levels. In October a council of ministers of the three länder was organized; it has been successful in coordinating policies, particularly in economic matters. Political parties were finally authorized on a state-wide basis in November 1945.

The four major parties in Germany as a whole now are the Communist, the Socialist, the Liberal Democratic, and the Christian Democratic (or Social) Union. The Communists are not numerous, but are well organized and aggressive, particularly in the Russian zone, where they are backed by the Soviet authorities. Their chief strength lies in urban labor, and they have won control of many trade unions and shop councils. Their program is for economic socialization, land reform for the small peasant, and the elimination of Junker, militarist, and industrial ruling elements. The Socialists, heirs to the former Social Democrats, share the Communists' objectives, but prefer more gradual methods. Their strength lies in the conservative wing of labor; their leaders are largely veteran party or trade-union officials. The CDU (or SCU in Bavaria) embraces the following of the former Catholic Center and Bavarian People's Parties—middle-class, clerical, peasant, and some business elements. CDU leadership stresses Christian individualism and morality, but is not opposed to limited state socialism. The Liberal Democratic Party is the most conservative group, representing mainly business and propertied classes. It emphasizes property rights, free enterprise, and the restoration of strong state authority.

American officials took the lead, in instituting elections in Germany by having polls taken in January 1946, for city councils of communities of less than 20,000. The most striking results of these elections—held in the more conservative rural areas—were the majority of the CDU in North Baden and the large pluralities of the CSU in Bavaria and of the Socialists in Greater Hesse. Further elections are scheduled in the United States zone, progressing from larger towns, to cities, to state constitutional conventions, and finally to popular votes on state constitutions, diets, and officials.

Inevitable drawbacks of zonal administration are the variations in the application of even agreed principles. The Soviet attitude is the most direct and aggressive. It calls for the socialization of wide sectors of industry, the partition of large land estates, the dissolution of antidemocratic social groups, delegation of large authority to anti-Nazi Germans, and active support of the Communist Party, and other parties that would form a bloc with it. British policy has emphasized the restoration of an orderly economy and nonpartisan administration. Denazification and encouragement of political activity have been pursued less rigorously than in the American and Russian zones. French aims seem to be for a weakened and decentralized Reich, with the Rhineland and the Ruhr permanently detached from central German administration. The French have not encouraged autonomous political activity until very recently, have preferred conservative and Catholic elements in administration, and have sought to foster separatist movements in their zone.

There are certain dangers in the resuscitation of German political activity: (1) the possibility that Germans may capitalize Allied differences and play off one power against another. (2) the Allies may compete for German favor; (3) a strong nationalistic mentality may grow from brusque or short-sighted policies; (4) the Allies may withdraw their controls prematurely; and (5) extreme economic duress, brought about by world food conditions, war damage, and reparations and demilitarization policies, may prove unfavorable to the inculcation of democratic ideas.

Among the emergent problems are: Can Germany be democratized without a thorough-going reform of the socio-economic structure? Can war criminals be punished without creating a new martyrology? And how can reparations be exacted without unduly weakening the foundations of a wholesome economic life prerequisite to democratic reformation? Despite inter-Allied differences, the area of agreement is being slowly but continually enlarged. The rebuilding of the German state can proceed, however, no more rapidly than the habituation of the Germans to democratic practices.

American Veterans Committee in Politics

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. MAX SCHWABE
OF MISSOURI
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Friday, August 2, 1946

Mr. SCHWABE of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, inasmuch as the American Veterans Committee, commonly called AVC, is actively engaged in this year's political campaign and is vigorously opposing certain conservative Members of Congress, it would be interesting to review some of the background of this organization as well as opinions of officers of long-standing, recognized veterans organizations.

It has been found that the AVC is not much interested in veterans legislation. It frankly admits that its main interest is in furthering the more extreme socialistic New Deal legislation. This is a natural outgrowth to be expected from the kind of people who are leading AVC. Col. Evans F. Carlson is a citizen with a distinguished war record, but he has been active in numerous Communist-front organizations. On the west coast is June Orr. She is a well-known Communist in Los Angeles and is of Rumanian birth. Mr. Lewis C. Frank, Jr., a member of the national planning committee of AVC, is also public relations director of the National Citizens Political Action Committee, a well-known Communist front. Mandel Lieberman was suspended from the University of California because of participation in radical activities on the campus. The Communist Party report on party policy in the veterans' field published in January of this year brags on the American Veterans Committee and brands the American Legion and the Veterans of Foreign Wars as reactionaries.

The AVC is generally regarded as a veterans' auxiliary of the CIO-Political Action Committee. Scores of the membership of the two organizations overlap. It has joined with the Communist Party and with the CIO-PAC in sponsorship of various parades, meetings, and propaganda stunts.

Only about 60,000 of the 12,000,000 veterans of World War II permit themselves to be associated with the AVC. The Communist Party magazine devoted to Marxism, Leninism, and Stalinism, published in New York City, has these kind words for the American Veterans Committee. It says:

> The progressive character of the AVC holds great significance for the future of the veterans in the United States. Its policy constitutes a minimum program on which progressive veterans can collaborate to preserve the peace, and stands in fundamental contrast to the reactionary imperialist program of the American Legion, the VFW, Catholic War Veterans—

And so forth. This same Communist magazine advocates active participation in coming elections, with AVC chapters to concentrate on getting out the veteran vote and setting up so-called independent veterans' committees to campaign for progressive candidates.

Warnings have been issued about the AVC from authoritative sources. A front-page editorial in Stars and Stripes told of the AVC convention at Des Moines, Iowa, and said that whether the delegates were moderately left-wing, extra left-wing, radical, Red, Communist, or left of center, as they were variously described, it is apparent that too many of them were too far to the left to suit the sensibilities and patriotic instincts of most of the men and women who gave so much to save America from its enemies.

Recently Commander in Chief Joseph M. Stack, of the Veterans of Foreign Wars, calling attention to the operation of hosts of persons and organizations hewing to the Communist line, said:

> Earl Browder has just returned with advice from his Russian friends and we ought to watch his future activities very closely. Communists don't approve of our form of government and when they advocate its overthrow by force and violence, that's treason. If there aren't sufficient laws under which to prosecute them, then let's promote laws under which we can stop them.

Referring to AVC—American Veterans Committee—Commander Stack said:

> They're not a veterans' organization. Their membership includes nonveterans and many of their members are so far to the left that a survey should be made to determine just what they do stand for. One thing I am convinced of—the AVC does not and cannot speak for the veterans of World War II. The organization which I have the honor to represent—the Veterans of Foreign Wars—stands today as the organization selected above all others by more than 1,750,000 men who fought overseas in the struggle against the Axis Powers. I object strenuously to any organization not composed of veterans and not dedicated to the principles of Americanism, national security, and veterans' benefits, setting itself up as a spokesman for the veterans.

In a recent speech before the twenty-fifth State convention of the Wisconsin VFW, Louis E. Starr, national senior vice commander in chief of the Veterans of Foreign Wars, said that the newly organized AVC is not a veterans group. He referred to it as a Communist organization and said:

> It is apparent that funds for its support come from sources outside this country.

Mr. Speaker, the Committee on Un-American Activities of the House of Representatives has quite a file on the American Veterans Committee, its background and its activities. These un-American, imported ideas heretofore used only by the Communist party and the CIO-PAC, are showing up all over America. The various chapters of the organization are instructed in the technique most successful in making life miserable for a Congressman. Among the 23 suggestions, one is to swamp newspapers with "Letters to the Editor." Another is to picket Congressmen's homes and places of business, another to telephone Congressmen and get others to call incessantly. Another is to put out leaflets distorting his voting record and to make him appear ridiculous or as an inflationist Congressman. Another is to hang him in effigy. They point out that it is good publicity to slow burn a Congressman. Another is to round up disabled veterans for parades, put them in barrels, etcetera. Another technique is to publicly challenge Congressmen to come out to a public questioning on the issue "Did you or did you not vote to smash price control?"

If the people are wise to the purpose of the AVC, the voters of America are not and will not be fooled by the American Veterans Committee which is neither American nor a committee of veterans. Our people today resent the veteran being used as a shield for such activities. The people want to put an end to the controls, confusion, corruption, and communism which 16 years of New Deal majority in Congress have brought us.

Policies for Education in American Democracy

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. GORDON L. McDONOUGH
OF CALIFORNIA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Friday, August 2, 1946

Mr. McDONOUGH. Mr. Speaker, certain definite and specific responsibilities rest upon the Government, the public, and the school teacher in order to instill into our youth the proper and fundamental truths of democracy and knowledge of how this Nation may remain free and thereby set the example for other nations to follow.

Too little attention has been given to the public school system by the public as a whole. Too much trust has been placed in the hands of some of the directors of our public schools who may have been influenced by new ideas and ideals which on the surface look good but which lead away from fundamentals and eventually become popular and attractive, but are not good for instilling good education in our youth.

These new and attractive ideas and ideals are the channels through which communism, fascism, and other undesirable beliefs and philosophies find their way into the impressionable minds of our young people.

We must guard against these invasions of our school systems. Here is the result of study on this subject by the National Educational Association, which should be read and studied by all Members of Congress and the citizens of the Nation:

POLICIES FOR EDUCATION IN AMERICAN DEMOCRACY

To each party involved in the conduct of public education—the Government, the educational profession, and the people—belong appropriate responsibilities and obligations.

The fundamental responsibility of democratic government is to establish the framework and the broad conditions for the education of freemen. The Government should guarantee to the educational profession freedom and opportunity for the intelligent and loyal discharge of its duties. The responsibilities of government are:

1. To establish a special authority for the general conduct of the public school.

2. To provide generous and sustained financial support of the educational undertaking. (The loyalties of a people to the democratic faith can perhaps be most readily and effectively measured by their efforts to equalize the opportunities of organized education.)

3. To provide for the broad, thorough, and democratic training of teachers.

4. To safeguard the integrity of the teacher and encourage him to grow to his full stature.

5. To restrain the use of governmental power affecting the educational program.

In order that the teacher (every member of the educational profession) may discharge his responsibility in the education of freemen, he must:

1. Maintain a steadfast loyalty to the democratic faith.

2. Achieve and sustain high professional competence.

3. Participate actively in shaping educational policy and providing educational leadership for community, State, and Nation.

4. Establish and maintain a condition of mutual trust, understanding, and sympathy with the people.

The people—the public, the citizens, the parents—quite apart from their relations to government, have heavy responsibilities in the establishment and maintenance of a program of democratic education. The major obligations of the people are:

1. To achieve a more adequate understanding of the nature of the problem of rearing a generation in the democratic faith.

2. To guard public education against the attacks of powerful minorities seeking to control the schools.

3. To establish and maintain a condition of mutual trust, understanding, and sympathy with the teacher.

(The chairman and members of the Educational Policies Commission are appointed by the National Education Association of the United States and the American Association of School Administrators.)

OPA, Its Friends and Foes

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. GEORGE B. SCHWABE

OF OKLAHOMA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, August 2, 1946

Mr. SCHWABE of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, it is doubtful if any other subject, both during and since the cessation of actual warfare, has caused as much discussion as price controls, the New Deal personification of planned economy, commonly referred to as OPA. The reason for such universal concern and interest is not surprising. The former OPA Administrator, Chester Bowles, used to boast that there were more than 8,000,000 items under his price-control system. Therefore, it affected the production, distribution, and prices of almost everything the people had to eat, wear, and use for shelter. Hence OPA and its multiplied thousands of orders and directives came home to all of our citizens and determined their varied activities. Naturally OPA had its friends and foes.

Let us classify and name some of its friends and its enemies. Let us see to which group we belong. Let us see which group we like best and whether we would prefer to live with and claim as our ideal friends and most intimate associates the friends or the enemies of OPA. What are the principles underlying the thinking and the arguments of the friends of OPA? What are the fundamental reasons of those who oppose price controls? Which is the American way?

First, we might say that there are two general classes of OPA friends. There are the conscientious believers in a system of price controls and there are those who have ulterior motives for advocating such a system of economy.

Among those who conscientiously believe the system is sound may be mentioned the theorists, the brain trusters, and the like. Then there are the low-salaried and the white-collared groups. The theorists and the brain trusters are not practical. They have never had to meet Saturday-night pay rolls. They do not know how to conduct a successful business. They are not experienced in that line, but usually spend their lives concocting some scheme or pretty theory, and they are not to be censured too much, for they usually are conscientious. The low-salaried groups and the so-called white-collared army are more practical. They have felt the squeeze. They are generally between the nether and the hether millstones. They are deserving of sympathy and serious consideration. When their money is cheap and commodities are high, they and their families are deprived of many of the blessings of life. They likewise are conscientious and speak because they have experienced the pain and the pangs of economic maladjustment and upheavals.

Among the friends of OPA, we have the planned-economy group. By and large, they are the New Dealocrats, the bureaucrats, and those who want to do our thinking. They are death-bent upon directing all of our activities and circumscribing our possibilities. They want to tell us what we can and cannot do, which is un-American. In an article, Mrs. Roosevelt, in her syndicated column, My Day, of April 30, 1946, said:

It has been a long fight to put the control of our economic system in the hands of the Government.

This group is apparently determined that the American system of representative government, which has made us the greatest nation on earth, shall revert to some form of planned economy and regimentation of the people. This would be a reversion, for the kings and tyrants of old gave the orders which their subjects must obey. In this country, under our system, our forefathers were determined that we should have no kings, tyrants, or dictators, and that there should be no subjects. They were determined that the law should not come from the ruler down to the people but should go from the people up to their officers who should be their public servants, and not their dictators in any sense of the word.

Mrs. Roosevelt further said in referring to Chester Bowles, then Stabilization Director, and Paul Porter, then Price Administrator, and the present head of the OPA, that they were "doing their best," and that "without the support of the people these two men will be defeated by the representatives of the people."

In other words, Mrs. Roosevelt and her planned economy group advocate a form of government and the rule of the people in this country by persons appointed by the President, by bureaucrats like Chester Bowles and Paul Porter, instead of by representatives elected by the people.

Among the friends of the OPA, we must not overlook the socialistic and the communistic minded. Those in Congress who apparently fall into this classification, are almost unanimously in favor of planned economy and therefore of price controls and OPA. Likewise, that group of our citizens who have never been satisfied with the American principle of government, but would substitute some form of socialism, communism, or statism for our plan, strongly befriend OPA.

Then, we have the New Deal puppets and the administration ballyhoo boys and the camp followers of the New Deal administration. As might be expected, they champion the New Deal program, and especially the OPA, as does their leader, the President. Many of these are bureaucrats from the word go. When OPA legislation was pending there were pressure groups at work in Washington. On every hand the Members of Congress were besieged by the bureaucrats. The high salaried and the low salaried among the 34,000 employees of the OPA, and the employees and representatives of other bureaus, packed the galleries of the House of Representatives and called the Members by telephone, insisting upon continuation, extension, and revival of OPA. In fact, the only pressure groups in evidence here were these bureaucrats.

We must not forget the gullibles, those who prefer not to think for themselves but to follow the thinking and the leadership, blindfolded, goose stepping as it were. They are the type who generally make up the mob, and mob psychology is always dangerous. It is never dependable, except to make bad matters worse.

We cannot forget the credulous. They are conscientious. They always want to think that whoever is in control is right and has a proper motive for everything that is done. They are more to be pitied than condemned.

Among the leading advocates of price controls and of OPA were the labor racketeers and union bosses. They are generally selfish and do not consider the welfare of the rank and file of the members of their organizations as much as they do of their own personal interests and self-aggrandizement. They always boast of being able to deliver the votes of their members on election day. Of all people who should be most seriously opposed to a planned economy, it is the rank and file of labor. Where they already have had planned economy, such as in Russia and Germany, we have seen slave labor and not a system of free labor such as laborers have enjoyed throughout the history of this country, until the New Deal, and planned economy programs have sought to put labor in a strait-jacket.

But perhaps the truest friend and the most insidious and ardent supporter of the OPA was the black-marketer. The OPA created the opportunity for the black-marketer, and he walked in boldly and took charge of the situation. He heartlessly profiteered off of the people. He enriched himself at the expense of the public. He seized upon their depravity created by the New Deal philosophy of scarcity and supplied the wants of the people at outrageous prices. The black-marketer reveled and prospered when the people were subjected to the consequences of the New Dealirium as expressed in the planned economy of price controls.

But thanks to the American spirit and principles of free and competitive enterprise, those who cherish the American ideals of government and business, may well be classed as the foes or enemies of OPA. They want to be let alone. They tolerated regimentation, OPA, and a lot of other things, while the war was in progress. But during peacetimes, they cannot be made to believe that the system of government devised by our forefathers was wrong or is now outmoded.

Principles are immutable. They do not change. They are the same yesterday, today, and forever. If a representative government was sound in 1776, it is sound in 1946, and will continue to be. If this country prospered and its citizens were the happiest people on the face of the earth and the standard of living was higher than in any other country in the world, it must have been due largely to the American principle of government and economy. If we have been successful in war and in peace, as we have been, why clamor for a change? If our people have enjoyed a greater measure of freedom than any other people, why rob them of this heritage? If our citizens have thought for themselves, depended upon their own initiative, and have gone about their own business, without intricate, befuddling, and bureaucratic and dictatorial controls and regimentation, to the envy of the rest of the world, why try to persuade them to change their course?

In a word, the enemies of price controls, OPA, of planned economy and all the whole New Deal program of restriction and regimentation, including bureaucracy gone to seed, are those freedom-loving Americans, those patriotic boys who were told that they were fighting in World War II against the very principles that the New Deal is trying to foist upon us. The enemies of OPA are the farmers and the businessmen who want to conduct their own affairs, without having to obtain a permit from some bureau every time they undertake to do anything. They want to produce what their own ingenuity suggests. They want to market the products of their labor in an open and competitive market. They know that there is no man nor set of men who can devise a scheme for handling the business of every individual. They know more about how to handle their own affairs than some hair-brained theorist appointed directly or indirectly by the President. By experience they have learned how to solve their own problems. They don't want snoopers and political parasites and tax-eaters interfering with them at every turn. The enemies of OPA demand American freedom from governmental intervention and control.

Railroad Retirement, Disability, and Unemployment Benefits Under Crosser Bill, H. R. 1362

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. CHARLES A. WOLVERTON

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, August 2, 1946

Mr. WOLVERTON of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, the question of what shall be our future policy with respect to social security is one of the outstanding questions of today. Already forward steps have been taken. In no field of industry, however, has there been so great a forward movement as in the railroad industry. The Railroad Retirement Act and the Unemployment Compensation Act provide benefits for railroad workers far in advance of benefits provided for workers in any other industry. I am happy in the thought that, as a member of the House Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, I have had a part in the drafting of such legislation, and an active participant in its passage.

During the present session of Congress much time and effort have been expended by the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee in the consideration of additional benefits for railroad workers.

NECESSITY FOR FINANCIALLY SOUND RETIREMENT AND DISABILITY FUND

Before creating additional benefits, or, determining the exact amount of taxes to be levied on workers and their employers, it was necessary and proper to determine whether the existing retirement fund, out of which present benefits are paid, was actuarially and financially sound. This is a matter of prime importance. It was all the more necessary because on two separate occasions the Railroad Retirement Board in annual reports stated that the retirement fund was not actuarially sound from the standpoint of the future. Every actuary, whether representing the brotherhoods or the employers, was of the same opinion. It was, therefore, agreed by representatives of men and management that it would be neessary to raise existing rates to insure the solvency of the fund.

I gave deep and serious study to this important matter. I felt, in the interest of the men and women who looked forward to the benefits of retirement in their old age, that there should be no doubt left as to the solvency of the fund out of which their benefits were to be paid. This, in my opinion was too serious a matter to leave in doubt. Workers should not be put in the position of contributing to a fund for old age, disability or other benefits only to find, when the time arrived for them to reap the benefits that the fund was insecure and payments of benefits doubtful or impossible.

I was not as sure as I would like to be with respect to the future effect on the funds, out of which payment would be made, under the provisions of the Crosser bill—H. R. 1362. I therefore gave my wholehearted support to committee amendments as I was convinced after careful study that the taxes, with limitation of benefits, as provided for in the committee amendments would certainly and surely provide strong, sound, and sufficient retirement, unemployment, and disability funds under all foreseeable conditions.

REDUCTION OF RETIREMENT AGE FOR WOMEN

Another improvement over existing law which I favored was that lowering the age of retirement for women workers. Under existing law both males and females at age of 65, irrespective of length of service, and, at age 60–65 after 30 years of service, but with a cut-back of one-eightieth for each month under 65, are entitled to retirement benefits.

Under the new law women may retire at age of 60 with full benefits and without any cut-back. Under the Crosser bill, representing the viewpoint of the representatives of the several brotherhoods, the reduction of the age of male workers was left without change at this time.

VAST IMPROVEMENT IN DISABILITY RETIREMENT PROVISIONS

The new law provides a considerable change with respect to disability retirement. The existing law provided for disability retirement for persons with 30 or more years of service who become totally and permanently disabled—occupational or otherwise—regardless of age. If the worker, however, had less than 30 years of service he could claim a pension at age 60, subject to a reduction or cut-back for each month under 65.

Under the new law individuals disabled—occupational or otherwise—for work in any regular employment after age 60 or with 10 years of service are entitled to retirement with no cut-back, and, individuals disabled—occupational or otherwise—for work in regular railroad occupation after age 60 or with 20 years of service, and who have a current connection with the railroad industry—not less than 12 months' service during last 30 consecutive calendar months—are likewise entitled to retirement for disability. Of course, it is to be understood that rights to compensation under existing Federal and State employers' liability laws continue in effect for disabilities incurred in performance of duties.

MINIMUM RETIREMENT BENEFITS INCREASED

The new law also provides an increase in the amount of minimum retirement benefits. Existing law provides for $40 per month, except that if monthly compensation is less than $50, the pension shall be 80 percent of the monthly compensation. If such 80 percent is less than $20, the pension shall be $20 or the same amount of the monthly compensation, whichever is less.

Under the new law the minimum is fixed by multiplying $3 by the number of years of service, or $50, or the monthly compensation, whichever is the least. Individuals must have a current connection with the railroad industry and not less than 5 years of service. The Crosser bill, H. R. 1362, as passed by Congress and approved by the President made no provision for an increase in the maximum amount of pension.

IMPROVED SURVIVOR AND DEATH BENEFITS

The new bill provides another improvement over existing law, which I favored, and, which was especially desired by the railroad workers, namely, provision for survivors, annuities, as a matter of right, to widows, dependent children and dependent parents of deceased railroad employees. To fully appreciate the increased benefits provided this class of survivors a comparison of the provisions of the new law with those of the old law will prove most helpful.

Under existing law the retiring employee had the option of converting his prospective pension into a so-called joint and survivor pension. Under this arrangement the employee by accepting a somewhat reduced pension payable to himself for life, could assure a life pension thereafter to his surviving widow. The combined actuarial value of the two pensions being the same as that of his own basic pension. If the employee should die before or after retirement a cash refund would be made to his beneficiaries of all the pay-roll taxes paid by him, plus an allowance for interest, less the sum of any pensions paid to him to the date of his death. This provision for survivor benefits in the old law has not been popular, or, considered desirable by the workers, if we are to judge by the small percentage of them who accepted its provisions.

The new law as passed by Congress eliminates both option of joint survivorship annuity and the cash death benefit refund of the old act. It substitutes in lieu thereof a system of benefits to surviving widows, dependent children and dependent parents, similar to such benefits now provided by the Social Security Act, but increased by 25 percent above those provided by that act, and a lump sum death benefit about 50 percent greater than provided by the Social Security Act.

UNEMPLOYMENT BENEFIT PAYMENTS INCREASED

The new law provides additional unemployment benefits. Under the old law the maximum benefit period for unemployment was 20 weeks; the maximum weekly benefit was $20; and, the minimum weekly benefit was $8.75. Under the new law the maximum benefit period has been increased to 26 weeks; the maximum weekly benefit has been increased to $25; and, the minimum weekly benefit remains at $8.75.

SICKNESS AND MATERNITY BENEFITS

The new law changes the concept of unemployment as embodied in present law by expanding it to include individual unemployment by reason of sickness or accident in no way caused by or related to railroad employment. Disability from pregnancy and maternity is provided for. These benefits would be paid in the same amount and for the same duration as the liberalized benefits for occupational unemployment. Both unemployment and sickness benefits can be drawn in successive periods of the same benefit year.

It will be readily understood that increased benefits such as I have outlined, as provided for in the new bill, will cost more money, considerably more. And that increased taxes over and above those now paid, will be necessary. However, representatives of the railroad brotherhoods insisted that the members of their organizations wanted the benefits the bill provided for and were willing to pay for them with increased taxes.

During the consideration of the bill in the committee, and on the floor of the House there was considerable discussion and difference of opinion as to whether the taxes provided for in the Crosser bill, H. R. 1362, were sufficient to meet the additional expense incident to the increased and expanded benefits. These differences of opinion were not based upon the favorable or unfavorable attitude of the Members expressing them as to the desirability of granting increased benefits. Even those Members who voted against certain provisions in the Crosser bill did so because of a firm conviction that the taxes provided for in that bill would not and could not produce sufficient revenue to make certain and sure that the benefits provided for would always be paid. These Members, and I was one of them, voted in the first instance for the committee bill as a substitute to the Crosser bill, H. R. 1362, because, in our opinion, after a most careful study, the committee bill gave greater security and assurance of payment of the benefits.

In view of the fact that the House did not accept the committee amendments, I sincerely hope any doubts that I, or others, may have had with respect to the future security of some of the benefits provided in the bill will be found mistaken.

I voted for the Crosser bill in the form it finally came before the House, although I was of the opinion that the bill could and should have made more certain the stability of the funds out of which the benefits are to be paid. However, in any event my continuing interest in the welfare of railway workers is such that any future conditions that may require new, or, different treatment other than that provided for in the new bill, will have my thoughtful and sympathetic interest and support. It is my constant desire that the welfare of our railway workers may be given every possible consideration, and, that they may be adequately cared for whenever disability prevents their continued employment, or, age enables them to relinquish their employment.

Bullies of the Ballot Box and Thieves of Elections in McMinn and Monroe Counties, Tenn., Beaten and Routed in Battle for Honest Elections and Fair Count—Returned GI's Triumph in Pitched Battle in Defense of Their Right To Vote—When Blackjacked, Gunned, Their Comrades Thrown in Jail, the Ballot Boxes Seized and Carried to the Jail and Courthouse by the Biggs-Cantrell Sheriff, Pat Mansfield, and His Armed Deputies, and by George Woods, Speaker of the Democratic House of Representatives, and by State Senator Paul Cantrell, the Veterans Fought and Won the All-Night Battle of August 1 and 2 for Law and Order and Honest Elections

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. JOHN JENNINGS, JR.

OF TENNESSEE

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, August 2, 1946

Mr. JENNINGS. Mr. Speaker, there is no finer citizenship in the land than the vast majority of the people living in McMinn County, Tenn. McMinn is a great stock-raising, farming county. The people are cultured, law-abiding, and God-fearing. It is traversed by the Southern and Louisville & Nashville Railroads and by fine systems of Federal and State highways. Athens, the county seat, is the home of Tennessee Wesleyan College. There are prosperous manufacturing plants in Niota, Englewood, and Athens.

The people of the county are passionately devoted to their country and in all wars have exceeded their quota in men sent to the battle fronts.

The county is traditionally and strongly Republican. Ten years ago, the five Cantrell brothers, who in one way and another have grown rich, by their control of the election machinery, force, and fraud, put Paul Cantrell in the sheriff's office. This was accomplished with the aid of the notorious Burch Biggs, the brutal, corrupt boss of neighboring Polk County. Biggs alternates with his two sons, Broughton and Burch, Jr., in the sheriff's office. Biggs and the Cantrells are part and parcel and high ranking members of the Tennessee Democratic machine. They control the judge of the State criminal court in these counties. They have for the past 10 years packed all grand and trial juries and have been able to shield themselves from prosecution and to give complete protection to all of their confederates and partners in crime. These outlaws now are and have been in complete control of the election machinery in McMinn, Monroe, and Polk Counties for the past 10 years.

In McMinn County, Ruel Webb and John Gate, stooges of the Cantrells, were the two Democratic election commissioners until in 1942, I, with the help of Attorney General Beecher Witt, drove them from office on an ouster suit. They were succeeded by the present two Democratic election commissioners, George Woods and Pat Mansfield. In every county in Tennessee, the Democratic controlled State board of election commissioners appoints two Democratic election commissioners. The Republicans have one commissioner in each county. These two Democratic commissioners in each and every voting precinct in these counties have always appointed a partisan of the Biggs-Cantrell machine as officer of all elections. This officer controls the election. He places all ballots in the ballot box. When the polls close, it is his duty to take the ballots out of the box and call aloud the names of the candidates in whose favor the voter has marked his ballot. The two Democratic election commissioners always appoint two of the three judges and one of the two clerks at each precinct. It is thus seen that the Republicans have only one judge and one clerk. To make certain that the returns would be brought up in favor of the machine, it has habitually appointed as election officers, deputy sheriffs, policemen, justices of the peace, bootleggers, ex-convicts, and men who have committed murder, who through long experience have become expert election thieves.

These men, while holding elections, have been armed with pistols and blackjacks. Despite the fact that the Tennessee law gives the electors of a precinct the right to enter the polling place to witness the count, these armed election officials have prevented by armed force any citizen from witnessing the count of the ballots. They have forced, at pistol point and with bludgeons, the Republican judges to stand back 10 feet so that they could not detect the machine judge when he called Republican votes in favor of Democratic candidates. These armed Democratic election officials have repeatedly carried the ballot box from the polling places in Athens and Etowah to the jail, the courthouse, and the private banking houses of the Cantrells, where with guns they held the Republican officials and watchers on the outside of the building while they switched stuffed ballot boxes for the ones used to receive the votes cast by the voters. They have also stuffed the boxes with thousands of fraudulent votes on the pretext that they were the ballots of voters unavoidably absent from their homes on business on the day of election. These fraudulent ballots have been cast in the names of dead men, convicts in the penitentiary, nonresidents, and men who never even existed on this earth.

In Polk County the two Democratic election commissioners are Broughton Biggs and his cousin, Hoyt Lillard. Free elections in that county for more than 10 years have been a thing of the past. The Russian-controlled elections in Poland and the Balkans are models of the democratic process compared to what goes on in Polk.

In Monroe County, J. W. Bayless and J. B. Watson are the Democratic election commissioners. I have put a crimp in their style. In 1942, I put their boss, W. O. Brakebill, out of the sheriff's office for his open bribery of voters and for his conspiracy with these two men and others, in the wholesale violation of the election laws. Two brothers whose votes were stolen by these men while the two boys were serving in the Pacific have sued Bayless and Watson in the United States District Court at Knoxville, Tenn., for robbing them of their votes in the November 1944 Presidential and congressional election.

The returned GI's on Thursday, August 1, last week led the people of Monroe County to a sweeping victory in which a full slate of Republican officers was elected.

During the war, while more than 3,500 boys from McMinn County were serving, fighting, being wounded and killed all over the world, the Biggs-Cantrell machine, bloated with official graft running into the hundreds of thousands of dollars, drunk with power and emboldened by the absence of the young men, kicked, cuffed, slugged, shot and robbed the fathers and mothers of these boys in every election held from 1940 to and including the November 1944 election.

To make the stealing easier, the Cantrells in 1941 redistricted McMinn County reducing the civil districts to three and abolished ten rural voting precincts, reducing the voting precincts from 22 to 12, thus forcing the Republicans who resided in the remote county precincts to travel over mud roads from 10 to 15 miles to Etowah to vote where their votes could be more easily stolen.

THE BATTLE OF ATHENS OF AUGUST 1 AND 2

The Biggs-Cantrell machine was all set to repeat previous steals against the GI ticket for county offices on Thursday, August 1.

The returned members of the armed forces had nominated five candidates for county offices:

First. For sheriff, Knox Henry, 33-year-old veteran of the European campaign, a Republican.

Second. For trustee, Frank Carmichael, 29-year-old son of a farmer who rose from the ranks to become a major in the European theater. He wears the Purple Heart. He is a Democrat.

Third. For county-court clerk, George (Gump) Painter, a 33-year-old Democrat, a Pacific veteran of 30 months' service.

Fourth. For circuit-court clerk, William (Bill) Hamby, 29-year-old Democrat, former captain in the Army.

Fifth. For register of deeds, Charlie Pickle, 52-year-old veteran of World War I, a Republican.

These boys "shelled the woods." They waged an active campaign. Paul Cantrell, who had served three terms as sheriff from 1936 to 1942, and as State senator from 1942 to 1946, was again a candidate for sheriff to succeed Sheriff Pat Mansfield, who, along with George Woods, comprised the Democratic majority of the all-powerful election commission. Woods was a candidate to succeed himself as representative in the lower house of the legislature, and Pat Mansfield was a candidate for the State senate.

Beginning prior to the November 1944 election until July 24 of this good year, I had placed in the hands of the United States Department of Justice 1,000 affidavits of McMinn County citizens establishing a conspiracy to violate the Federal laws protecting the elective franchise on the part of George Woods, Pat Mansfield, and the election officers appointed by them to hold the November 1944 Presidential and congressional election. I had repeatedly stressed the facts of said conspiracy and its consummation in conversations, and correspondence with representatives of the Department of Justice and in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. Though almost 2 years have elapsed, no indictments have ever been prepared and submitted to a Federal grand jury.

I pointed out in the Appendix to the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of this year, on pages A4368 and A4369, the fact that George Woods and Pat Mansfield had appointed men with criminal records, who were experienced election thieves and gunmen, to hold the August 1, 1946, election to select county officers.

They appointed old offenders, "studied in the arts of hell, in wickedness refined" to hold the election in Etowah, in Athens, and all over the county. They had the aid of the State officials, armed members of the highway patrol and Horace (Biscuit) Ferris, foreman of a State prison camp, was among the appointees. More than 200 armed thugs, some of them imported from other counties and States, swarmed around the polls in the polling places and intimidated the voters, Republican election judges, clerks, and watchers. GI veterans who had lost arms, who had been wounded, and who had faced death on the battlefields had shotguns and pistols stuck in their stomachs and pistols jabbed in their ribs, and others were beaten with blackjacks until they were insensible. These outrages were perpetrated by the armed satellites of the machine while Pat Mansfield, Paul Cantrell, and George Woods were in command of this planned rape of the ballot box and murderous assault on veterans.

Leslie Dooley, ex-soldier, who lost his left hand in the fighting in Africa, on August 2, in GI headquarters, shocked a group of out-of-town newspapermen with his recital of how a McMinn County deputy beat up his fellow worker at the polls on August 1.

It was about 1 p. m. and in the little Dixie Cafe, twelfth precinct voting place, when Deputy Minis Wilburn slugged young Bob Harrod, Dooley said.

Bob was election judge in that precinct for the GI ticket, and I was the appointed watcher. We had watched all day while they voted them without poll-tax receipts, boys too young to vote and everything else. But we had only one challenge because we wanted to avoid trouble.

Then in came a woman who told Wilburn (election judge for the precinct) that "I haven't got my poll tax." He replied, "That's all right; I know you're on the certified list and I know you got a poll-tax receipt for I gave it to you myself."

Bob ran down the registration list and couldn't find this woman's name. The woman went on marking her ballot, gave it to Wilburn and he started to drop it into the box. "Now wait a minute," Bob said, grabbing at Minis' hand.

Wilburn yelled, "—— you, you been giving us trouble all day." He wrapped the strap to his blackjack around his wrist and hit Bob so hard in the head with it that it just split his head open. He hit him several times in the face with the blackjack as he went down and then when he was down he kicked him in the face.

Wilburn turned on me then, backed me into a corner and said, "You want some of this?" I said, "No, sir." Then they threw Harrod into the jail.

Other former soldiers in the room chimed in to say Wilburn was the "bully of the force" and had picked on ex-GI's repeatedly.

Wilburn's throat was slashed near the jail soon after the deputies' surrender this morning. The cut was not serious.

Tom Gillespie, a respected Negro farmer, was driven away from the polling place in Athens where he had gone to vote and was slugged and shot in the back by a Cantrell thug, Windy Wyse, armed and hired to help steal the election.

Three GI election officers and watchers were put in jail because they sought to inspect a ballot box before the voting began and endeavored to challenge open violations of the law by the Cantrell armed election officials. These are the vets thrown into jail, held all day and refused bond: Felix Harrod, clerk; Tom Dooley, judge for the GI ticket; and Walter Ellis, watcher for the GI's. The deputy sheriffs, led by State Senator Paul Cantrell and Sheriff Pat Mansfield, threatened to kill these boys unless their GI buddies called off their effort to stop the steal; but the boys were out to stop election stealing once and for all and kept up the fight.

During the day, a band of seven armed, imported thugs attacked Republican Election Commissioner Otto Kennedy and his two brothers, J. P. and C. O., both of Knoxville. The Kennedy boys do not know fear; they disarmed and sent these thugs out of town. When the battle broke, Otto Kennedy, a grandfather, directed the GI's in their night long victorious fight for free, honest elections.

The armed thugs commanded by Paul Cantrell and Pat Mansfield drew no distinction between the Negro farmer Tom Gillespie and the GI's and their mothers.

[From the Chattanooga (Tenn.) Times]

WOMEN IN MCMINN ARE ORDERED OUT—OFFICIALS REFUSE TO ALLOW THEM TO SEE COUNTING

ATHENS, TENN., August 1.—McMinn County women's committees who went to the polls at closing time were refused (not politely, they said) their request that they be allowed to witness the count of the ballots.

Mrs. H. A. Vestal led a group of parent-teacher members and representatives of other clubs to the eleventh precinct, located in the city water commission's office on Jackson Street, just off Courthouse Square. She reported that the five of them voted near closing time, then asked to remain for the counting. Carl Neil, she said, bluntly told them to "get out." She identified Neil as "an election official and Cantrell henchman, who received the ballots from the voters and put them in the boxes."

TOLD TO GET OUT

Mrs. Vestal said she asked Neil: "Do we not have the right as citizens to see the vote counted?" Neil, she declared, did not answer her on this point, "but very impolitely told us to get out."

Mrs. Vestal declared she wanted to stick it out, but saw that this would cause "her baby," a GI election clerk, to start a fight. Her baby is 25-year-old James Ed Vestal, who an hour later crashed his way out of the locked voting place when, he said, he was denied the right to witness the counting.

Mrs. Vestal explained she and other Athens women this morning organized an effort to witness the counting. "We knew we'd be thrown out," she said, "but we thought it might be useful to show in a possible trial about this outrage that we were denied this right."

With Mrs. Vestal to the eleventh precinct voting place went Mrs. Bill Cook, Miss Mabel Brown, Mrs. A. D. Toomey, and Mrs. Bill Harrell.

In this travesty on elections, they were equally brutal in their abuse of the leading white women of Athens and their soldier sons. They did not like the presence of the Republican clerks and women who were witnessing the count. They embarrassed the professional election thieves.

Election Judge and Deputy Sheriff Carl Neil, pistol on hip, ordered Mrs. H. A. Vestal and five other women to leave the polls.

"Get out," said Neil.

The women stood their ground. "We have a right to watch you count the ballots," one said.

"Go on, get out of here," shouted Neil, and the women filed out, protesting.

This was not enough. Four GI's remained to keep the ballot thieves in line. They were James Edward Vestal (Mrs. Vestal's son), Charles Scott, Jr., Charley Hyde, and J. P. Cartwright. The machine had six of its bigger biceps boys there, three wearing sidearms. The GI's later told the following story:

Deputy Neil then ordered Cartwright and Hyde to "go up in the front and sit down."

COULD NOT SEE THE COUNT

They said they could not see the count from there. "Go on up front and sit down," snarled a muscular thug, "you don't have to see us count 'em."

Cartwright said he would not stay if he could not witness the count, so he and Hyde left.

When they emerged, a roar of anger went up from the hundreds of citizens across the street. The eight or nine deputies in front of the waterworks office fingered their weapons. Charles Scott, Sr., sent word in to his son and Vestal to "come on out. We don't want you boys alone in there with those gangsters."

The two veterans told the six Cantrell men they were leaving. "Sit down, you're staying right here," they were ordered.

They sat down. A few minutes later, Scott told the machine politicians again that they were leaving. At this, the machine men barricaded the ex-GI's behind a counter and locked the door.

"We jumped on the counter, climbed over it and tried to get out. The door was locked," Vestal said, "and Charlie hit it with his shoulder. They were right at us and trying to slug us with knucks and their guns. He broke the glass and we stumbled through. Charlie was cut around the shoulders. I got cut a little, too, and fell down coming through the door."

The door was a sheet of plate glass set in a wood frame.

As the veterans fell in the street, Wyse—trying for his second knockout of the day—drew a bead on Vestal's back. Women screamed and the crowd fanned back. Only the intervention of a saner deputy prevented further bloodshed.

Meanwhile, the deputies made menacing gestures with their weapons and kept the crowd at bay.

"Throw down your damn guns and we will give you a fight," yelled one GI. And a deputy countered, offering to "fight anybody" with his fists. But behind him the cannoneers still waved their weapons.

Several citizens broke from the crowd shouting, "Get your guns, boys, get your guns!"

But further activity was forestalled when Chief Deputy Boe Dunn drove up and six men piled out. The deputies formed a cordon from the precinct to the door of the car and Dunn himself went in and stole the ballot box. At least 15 pistols were trained on the citizens of Athens as the deputies rolled away with the ballot box. They went straight to the county jail.

There was another ballot deportation. After the affair at the Essankay Tire Co.—described elsewhere in the Times—Sheriff Mansfield and some of his bottle-washers—armed with shotguns—convoyed the twelfth precinct's ballot box from the Dixie Cafe to the jail. It was 6:35 p. m., and McMinn's incumbents went to work on the ballots to make very, very certain that there will be no changes made.

Vestal's wounds were treated by Dr. C. O. Foree in the physician's clinic. Two stitches were required to close the slash on his ankle. He also suffered a cut hand.

Vestal was a first lieutenant in the Third Combat Engineers, Twenty-fourth Division. He was overseas 30 months, was hit by a Jap hand grenade once and wounded by artillery fire once.

"How did today compare to fighting overseas?" he was asked.

He was quiet for a minute. "Well, today it made you madder than it did over there. And it was closer range."

The sight of the bleeding Vestal and Scott coupled with the fact that Sheriff Mansfield and his armed hoodlums seized and carried the ballot boxes from the polling places two to the jail and one to the courthouse where the gang had carried them for the past 10 years to switch the boxes in which the ballots of the citizens had been voted for boxes stuffed by the machine with fraudulent ballots, set off the fireworks.

Then the shooting started. All day long citizens and GI's had been slugged, gunned, and bulldozed. Forebearance had ceased to be a virtue. The Governor had turned a deaf ear to their appeal. The United States Department of Justice had refused to act. The State criminal court was in the grasp and under the control of the Cantrells. When the firing ceased, Sheriff Mansfield and his boss and owner, State Senator Paul Cantrell, had fled down an alley deserting their armed forces.

Ralph Duggan, Republican lawyer and veteran naval officer, in the nick of time, by his coolness and presence of mind and understanding character, restored order. The GI's took over, policed the county and maintained order until Monday when for the first time in 10 years an honest count of the ballots was had in McMinn County. Sheriff Mansfield resigned, the county court, heretofore dominated by the Cantrells, elected Knox Henry, the newly elected GI candidate, sheriff. In the meantime, the GI's had cleaned up the county, raiding the Cantrell-protected bootlegging and gambling joints, and bringing to the courthouse in Athens thousands of dollars worth of whiskey and slot machines.

The Biggs-Cantrell machines sowed to the winds; they reaped the whirlwind, and at long last decency and honesty, liberty and law have returned to the fine county of McMinn and its neighboring county of Monroe.

The Seventy-ninth Congress

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. WILLIAM W. LINK
OF ILLINOIS
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Friday, August 2, 1946

Mr. LINK. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I would like to include the following comments concerning the Seventy-ninth Congress:

The Seventy-ninth Congress is adjourning, and in the ears of its Members are still ringing the criticisms that were heaped upon it. It convened on January 3, 1945, when our military fortunes were not so bright in Europe. The Battle of the Bulge was raging, but within a few months victory was ours, and with it came new problems. A few months later, the Japanese surrendered—and more problems were added. Peace brought reconversion difficulties. History offers no parallel to the conditions that have prevailed; yet, in the face of all of this, I would like to point to some of the high lights in the matter of legislation effected by this Congress—all of which was in spite of the opposition from the Republican side.

The Seventy-ninth Congress voted the United States into the United Nations; it provided UNRRA with billions of dollars to aid the starving peoples in countries devastated by war; it approved loans to the nations that fought by our side during the conflict. Perhaps its crowning glory was the establishment of an atomic commission for the control of atomic energy. This action has practically outlawed the atomic bomb. In the home field, the Full Employment Act was passed, which, for the first time, committed the Government to the task of maintaining high-level stability in employment. This Congress also had the nerve to streamline itself; that is, to consolidate many of its committees and in many other ways to make Congress a more efficient body. In doing this, many Congressmen subordinated themselves for the good of the entire legislative body. It was surprising—and to the everlasting credit of those of this Congress—that the reorganization bill was passed by an overwhelming vote on both sides. The Seventy-ninth Congress also set up the machinery for a just and lasting peace. It must be borne in mind that this Congress saw the end of fighting but not the beginning of peace.

Truly speaking, this Congress has slowly been starting the wheels of progress toward that acceleration that will eventually bring prosperity and peace, not only to our own people but to the world.

I am thankful and proud that it was my good fortune to have been a Member of this, the Seventy-ninth Congress of the United States.

Unsound Railroad Retirement Legislation

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. CLARENCE F. LEA
OF CALIFORNIA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Thursday, August 1, 1946

Mr. LEA. Mr. Speaker, in the early part of this Congress H. R. 1362 was introduced by Congressman CROSSER, proposing amendments to the Railroad Retirement Act, the Railroad Unemployment Insurance Act, and the Internal Revenue Code. Thirty-one days of hearings were held upon this measure, and almost an equal number of executive sessions in considering the matter by the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee. This bill was signed by the President and became a law on the 31st day of July 1946.

It may be worth while to review some phases of this legislation, particularly from the standpoint of the beneficiaries, the employees of the carriers and their dependents.

Early consideration of the bill disclosed that it was so involved, so technical, and so faulty in draftsmanship that proper preparation for enactment required much patient effort if we were to have a properly constructed measure.

The basic need of a retirement system is that it should be financially sound. The railroad retirement system is based upon the theory of a level payment plan of contributions, shared jointly in equal amounts by the carriers and their employees. This policy, to be soundly carried out, requires current contributions that in the long run will carry the plan as a self-supporting enterprise. Such a plan would assure railroad workers and their dependents a long-time and certain security, according to the promises of the act.

The early study of our committee soon revealed that the Railroad Retirement Act, and that act as now amended by the Crosser bill is not actuarily sound. In other words, the contributory payments for its support would not equal the ultimate obligations to its beneficiaries.

One of the most undesirable developments of insurance plans and of retirement plans has been that unsound systems have developed unwarranted confidence in their early years, when in subsequent years their contributions proved insufficient and had to be greatly increased or payments to the beneficiaries correspondingly reduced to keep the plan solvent.

Two actuarial boards, created under the Railroad Retirement Act, each composed of a representative of the public, the employer, and labor, have agreed as to the insufficiency of the contributions under the Railroad Retirement Act to meet its liabilities on a level premium basis.

The Crosser bill, as proposed and as enacted, provides a tax of only 1½ percent for this purpose. On a basis of the present pay roll of over $4,000,000,000, the annual deficit under the operations of the Crosser bill as now enacted, so far as the retirement fund is concerned, would amount to about $60,000,000 a year.

To this deficit we must add about $40,000,000 a year due to the increased liabilities created against the unemployment insurance fund without any comparable increase in taxes. This will make a total annual deficit of about $100,000,000 a year based upon sound actuarial estimates.

In the early days of our consideration of the measure the committee determined that our first duty was to impose a tax sufficient to place the measure on a sound financial basis.

The committee proposed, but failed to secure approval by the House of the necessary provisions to accomplish this purpose, with the result that the retirement system as embodied in this act is on an unsound basis. The act will some day disappoint its beneficiaries by imposing upon them a higher tax or a reduction of their benefits or the assumption of the deficit by the Federal Government.

The Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee as authorized by Congress, hired its own actuary to make an independent survey. His report sustained the conclusion that a levy of 3 percent, one-half payable by the employees and one-half by the employers, was necessary to balance the fund and its liabilities. The committee so recommended to the House. Had this action been taken it would have raised the tax on the employees under the old law to 5 percent with a like tax on the carriers in order to support the benefits contained in the old law.

The actuary employed by the committee was Robert J. Myers. The fairness, integrity, and ability of Mr. Myers are unquestioned by the actuarial profession of the country. He was a member of the actuarial board selected by the Railroad Retirement Board which last reported upon the financial condition of the retirement fund. An effort was made before the House to make it appear that Mr. W. R. Williamson, the actuarial consultant of the Social Security Board gave his support to the soundness of the Crosser bill. In a letter to me under date of June 21, 1946, Mr. Williamson wrote:

I should therefore like to make it clear that I believe the position taken by Mr. Myers to be essentially the sound position in this analysis; that the position which has chosen a single potential cost in Dr. Latimer's testimony of last year is a more speculative one and a less sound one than that taken by Mr. Myers.

The committee undertook to readjust the benefits under the Retirement Act so that the total tax on employees and the carriers would not exceed 6 percent on each including expanded benefits.

Within that level of taxation we found we could adopt the most important and deserved benefits proposed by the Crosser bill, but not its questionable and excessive benefits.

We proposed the adoption of the minimum retirement annuity the same as in the Crosser bill.

We proposed a retirement age for women as proposed in the Crosser bill.

We proposed the liberalization of disability pensions after 10 years of service as provided in the Crosser bill but qualified that provision by confining disability benefits to sickness or accidents incurred in relation to the employment. Otherwise the provisions for unlimited disabilities were not to apply with less than 30 years of service.

We provided for survivorship payments as a matter of right, to widows, dependents, children, and dependent parents of deceased railroad employees.

We proposed no reduction from the benefits due the employees on account of giving survivor benefits to their beneficiaries as was done in the Social Security Act. The Crosser bill provided survivor benefits on an average of about 25 percent greater than are allowed under the Social Security Act for employees in general industry.

The committee proposed survivor benefits at the same rates as under the Social Security Act. One reason for this proposal was to keep costs to employees and employers within the level above mentioned. Another reason was the belief that these survivor benefits should be substantially the same under the Social Security System and the Railroad Retirement System.

The Crosser bill made no proposal for increased maximum pensions and neither did the committee recommendation.

In an issue of Labor, the official publication of the Railway Labor Executives Association, under date of May 11, 1946, following the report of the Crosser bill by the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee, the following statement appeared:

The extremely modest amendments proposed by the railroad unions are very briefly, but accurately, stated:

(1) Widows of railroad workers are to have pensions as a matter of right. Such a provision is to be found in practically all modern social-security legislation. Nothing revolutionary about that.

(2) A minimum pension of $50 a month is fixed for low-paid railroad workers who have devoted their lives to the industry. Thousands of them are now getting pensions of less than $50 a month.

(3) The totally disabled railroad worker—the man who, because of what he gave to the industry, is no longer able to hold a job in the industry—is treated somewhat more generously than at present.

(4) Finally, the tax is increased so as to make the railroad retirement system, as well as the railroad unemployment insurance system, absolutely sound. The figures in every instance are based on the advice of the most competent actuaries in this country.

These are essential amendments. There are other slight changes, but they are not important.

The above quotation can with more scrupulous accuracy be applied to the substitute bill proposed by the committee than to the Crosser bill. The bill proposed by the subcommittee meets the above statement in every particular. The proposed substitute of the committee included all of what are declared to be the essential amendments to the retirement system.

What the above quotation does fail to include are the objectionable features of the Crosser bill, the unwarranted burdens on the employees and the employer, and a failure to disclose the unwarranted taxes necessary to supply the unusual and extravagant burdens of the Crosser bill.

The Crosser bill creates those burdens but lacks the candor of providing the necessary taxes to meet them.

The additional taxes proposed to be eliminated by the committee substitute bill would have meant elimination from the Crosser bill of the large tax liability that will finally result from granting of disability benefits not in any way connected with the service of the employees; survivor benefits 25 percent in excess of those allowed in the Social Security Act; sickness benefits in no way connected with employment on an equality with unemployment as a charge against the unemployment fund; maternity benefits for 16 weeks regardless of whether or not the beneficiary was in the employ of the carrier at the time of the pregnancy and at a rate higher than is payable under unemployment; and disability benefits in no way connected with the service and even where due to the fault or misconduct of the employee.

The committee proposal would have applied merit rating on a graduated scale tax rate for unemployment insurance in order to afford the railroad companies the same principle as to unemployment liability as are applied to other employers in 45 of the State unemployment insurance systems of the country.

A careful study of the history of this legislation will show that those who supported the committee position voted for a sound, well-planned, and liberal retirement system for the railway employees of the country. They supported the most essential benefits, they proposed to cut out some of the most burdensome and unwarranted benefits and in doing so would have reduced costs proportionately. Time will demonstrate the merit of the position taken by the committee and the unsound and unnecessary burdensome policy embodied in the Crosser bill as now enacted into law. Time will demonstrate the wisdom of a good sound policy rather than an unsound extravagant one.

The committee substitute proposed increased benefits for the beneficiaries, of the most desirable character and at the lowest practicable rate of taxation to themselves and their employers. We did not want to kill legislation, but to provide a good bill for what many of us thought was a poor one; we tried to write a bill that would be dependable for the employees and just to the employers, a bill that would prove satisfactory through the years.

Some examples of the defects of the Crosser bill as it passed the House are as follows:

First. The increased tax was made retroactive on the employees and employers alike to July 1, 1945. This would have placed an average obligation on each railroad employee of more than $50 in back taxes.

Second. The bill as approved by the President provides benefit payments for pregnancy and maternity for women who may have been separated from railroad employment for as much as 2 years theretofore and regardless of their financial need.

Third. The unemployment insurance fund is charged with benefits for sickness and accidents however incurred for employees who might have been separated from the railroad service for nearly 2 years prior to sickness or accident. That charge is solely against the employer.

Fourth. The committee bill provided for an actuarially sound retirement and pension system with funds to meet its obligations to employees and their survivors. The bill as passed calls for a higher tax on employees than the committee bill and has so enlarged its scope and scale of benefits as to accentuate instead of relieve the existing financial unsoundness in the Railroad Retirement Act. In other words, the unsound and unwarranted provisions of the Crosser bill, as now enacted, create burdens without comparable benefits to the average hard-working and faithful employee. These charges are due for causes which Labor, in its issue of May 11, did not deem as essential.

My judgment is that the time will come when farsighted railway labor will recognize that the improvements of this legislation that the committee proposed were more desirable than the unwarranted burdens assumed in the legislation that has now become a law.

Legislation as embodied in the Crosser Act, does not bear the proper relation to practical general social-security legislation of the country. It is improvident in its burdens and its excesses of reasonable legislation and in the end it will bring disappointment to its beneficiaries because it is based on special-privilege legislation that cannot fit into a practical general social-security program for the country.

The Crosser bill, as enacted, places a tax on railroads nearly three times that imposed upon the average employer of the country subject to social-security taxes. This is a gross inequality in taxation as compared with all other employers of the country.

The railroads are in a serious financial situation. Notwithstanding the large volume of traffic, the average railroad is now running in the red. Their regulatory rates have not moved up in proportion to inflated labor and material costs. Increased rates will, in the end, tend to reduce traffic and intensify their competitive situation. Every unwarranted burden on the carriers tends to bring about a decline in income and eventually the possibility of increased abandonment of lines, reduced employment and a return of more mileage to court control. This is a case where the employees' own welfare is tied up with that of the carriers. A sound, fair retirement and unemployment system is desirable and commendable. Beyond that it may become destructive of the best interests of the employees themselves.

In my judgment the Crosser bill, as enacted into law, imposes excessive burdens seen and unseen that in the long run are not to the best advantage of the railway employees and that are not consistent with our general national social-security system.

Should There Be a Free Palestine?

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF

HON. ANDREW J. BIEMILLER

OF WISCONSIN
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, August 2, 1946

Mr. BIEMILLER. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I wish to include the following radio discussion by Howard Y. Williams, entitled "Should There Be a Free Palestine?"

Should there be a free Palestine? Emphatically, yes, and for the following reasons:

First, the international decision. Following World War I, the Allied and associated powers faced the world-wide problem confronting Hebrews and made a decision to provide a homeland for Jews within a free and independent Palestinian republic. This action was later approved by the League of Nations and territories taken from the Turkish Empire, such as Syria, Lebanon, Iraq, and Palestine were set up as class A mandates to be supervised by Great Britain, with the definite promise of full independence. This independence has been granted to every one of the other class A mandates, with the exception of Palestine. Why? A growing public opinion in the world is now insisting that Great Britain keep her word and give freedom to the Holy Land.

The British white paper issued in 1939, limiting immigration of Hebrews into Palestine to 75,000 for the next 5 years and forbidding the purchase of land by Hebrews in the greater part of the country, was not approved by the Council of the League of Nations, nor by the United States, which had entered into an Anglo-American agreement supporting the provisions of the mandate. The present actions of the British Government, therefore, in carrying on a state of war in Palestine, in limiting immigration, in denying habeas corpus and other civil rights, in using deportation, concentration camps, strict censorship, etc., are illegal. The decision of the nations made in 1920 to give freedom to Palestine as a solution to the problem of anti-Semitism and to meet the need of homeless and stateless Hebrews in Europe should be carried out at once.

Secondly, there is the historical and legal reason why Palestine is entitled to freedom. For thousands of years the Hebrews have occupied this territory. When Nebuchadnezzar ordered Jerusalem razed to the ground, the survivors were carried off into captivity. But 50 years later, in 539 B. C. the Jews returned under the Persian Cyrus to rebuild their country. When again in the second century B. C. a new conqueror had arisen in the person of the Syrian Greek Antiochus, the Maccabaean brothers led a furious resistance that nonplussed the invader and stopped him dead in his tracks. Rome attacked in 63 B. C. and slaughter ensued. For years a policy of dispersion was carried on. Goaded to desperation, the Jewish people rose once more in insurrection, a rebellion the most desperate of any in recorded history. Large numbers of Jews who had escaped the destruction sought asylum in various parts of the world.

But even these catastrophic losses failed to break the Hebrew spirit. Scarcely a generation had passed when the revolt broke out again, more tempestuous than ever, in A. D. 116. Leading them was one of the most stirring figures in all the records of man, a new Hannibal risen to plague the Romans. Bar Kochba accomplished the impossible. He drove out the Romans, held the Empire at bay, and set up a Hebrew state. It took Emperor Hadrian four years to devastate Judea and again drive out the Jews. Yet the will of the Jews for a free Zion has remained unbroken. Under the reign of Constantine in the fourth century A. D. they erupted again, only to be slaughtered by a powerful army. But under King Benjamin, of Egypt, with a Hebrew Army of 30,000 men, they reconquered the greater part of Palestine and held it under Jewish administration for 14 years. Then Byzantium exacted swift vengeance, every human right was taken from the Jews, they were hunted down like animals, or they escaped to Egypt and the Mediterranean. But they defended to the last their land.

Dr. William E. Blackstone, the greatest interpreter of British and American law, in 1891, citing the foremost authorities on international law, points out that since the Jews never gave up their title to Palestine, the general law of "dereliction" could not hold in their case, "* * * for they never abandoned the land. They made no treaty, they did not even surrender. They simply succumbed, after the most desperate conflict, to the overwhelming power of the Romans and were captured and enslaved. Since then, having no sovereign nor political head through whom they could speak, they have disputed the possession of the land by continued protest through their literature and their public and private worship."

Historically and legally, therefore, I insist that Palestine should be free.

The third reason for Palestine freedom is the moral one. Under the Hitler scourge, 6,000,000 Hebrews have been murdered. Only a million and a half remain in Europe. Most of them are homeless and stateless. Ninety percent of them desire to go to Palestine. They should not be compelled to stay in those countries where they have seen the members of their families and their friends tortured and killed, and where many of those who committed these acts of infamy still live. I insist that these people have a priority above all other people. So-called civilization has committed atrocities against them, has left them maimed in body, mind, and spirit, and nothing that we can do for them will fully make up for what has been done. The least that we can do is to see that they get to a free Palestine where they desire to go and where they have an international, historical, legal, and moral right to go.

Further, a democratic republic in that area of the world, with first-class citizenship for Arabs, Christians, and Hebrews would be a great stabilizing influence for peace in our world.

I insist that a free and democratic Palestine with equal status for all would work no injustice to the masses of Arabs. They have benefited tremendously by the increased prosperity and higher standard of wages created by the remarkable development of that country in these last years by the Hebrews.

In 1920 there were half a million Arabs in Palestine. Today there are 1,200,000, the increase due largely to Arabs who have come in to take advantage of the higher standards of living and the opportunity for better medical care. There is no quarrel between these Arabs and the Hebrews. They will get along peacefully together. The opposition is from the wealthy Arab feudal lords who wish to continue their exploitation of the masses and who have kept them during the centuries in ignorance, poverty, and disease. These exploiters know that their special privileges will be removed under a democracy and so they oppose the freedom of Palestine.

My opponent tonight represents the Arab League, speaking for the ruling classes of seven states—Egypt, Saudi Arabia, Iraq, Yemen, Syria, Lebanon, and Trans-Jordan. The monarchs of these countries are largely dictators with no interest in democracy, as revealed by the recent decision of the Arab League to appropriate funds to promote a boycott against the products of Hebrew industry. Then the Arab League also voted to support the return of the Grand Mufti to Palestine. He was an Axis collaborator, worked with Hitler, caused the loss of American lives in north Africa, helped organize the massacre of Jews in Europe and of Moslems in Yugoslavia, was the guest of Hitler during the war, and by every law of justice should be tried as a war criminal. This support of the Mufti by the Arab League is a blow against the "four freedoms" which the United Nations have underwritten. It is quite logical, therefore, that a representative of the Arab League should be here tonight to speak against a free and democratic Palestine. The masses of exploited Arabs, however, if they were able, would be here tonight to support a free Holy Land.

Informed observers state that there is plenty of room in Palestine for those homeless and stateless Hebrews of Europe who desire to go home, as well as for the Arabs and Christians. The population today is 2,000,000. The distinguished American soil conservationist, Dr. Walter Clay Lowdermilk, of our Department of Agriculture, in his recent book, Palestine, Land of Promise, declares that in addition to the present population, at least 4,000,000 Hebrew immigrants could find a self-sustaining living in this sparsely populated area. This is more Hebrews than would ever need or want to migrate there. He proposes an ambitious Jordan Valley Authority, and ends his book with this paragraph:

"Once the great undeveloped resources of these countries are properly exploited, twenty to thirty million people may live decent and prosperous lives where a few million now struggle for a bare existence. Palestine can serve as an example, the demonstration, the lever, that will lift the entire Near East from its present desolate condition to a dignified place in a free world."

This is an unequal fight between British and Arab imperialism linked together by oil on the one hand, and a handful of Hebrew patriots on the other hand, fighting today for freedom just as our sires did in 1776. We can help achieve freedom for Palestine by supporting the repatriation movement of Hebrews from Europe to Palestine, pressing for the admission of 100,000 Hebrews now. It costs our American League for a Free Palestine on the average $250 for every refugee rescued. You should support this cause.

Then, Americans must try to understand that the actions of the retsistance forces are part of the conflict between British imperialistic policy and the people of Palestine, and an inevitable consequence of that conflict.

Of course, we deeply deplore the loss of life. Human life is sacred, and the needless destruction of a single life is a crime. But we must regard this as applying equally to all human beings, be they British or Hebrew. The world must realize that scores of Hebrews are dying needlessly every day in concentration camps in Europe and in pogram-ridden Poland as a direct consequence of Britain's oppressive policy in closing the doors to Palestine. Scores of Palestinians are mercilessly shot down by British troops. The Hebrew casualties in the camps, the Hebrew casualties in Jerusalem this week, as well as the British casualties there, are all tragic victims of Britain's usurpation of authority in Palestine and the ruthless and inhuman practices there. The responsibility for the tragic loss of life falls on this policy and not on the herioc young men and women of Palestine who are risking and sacrificing their lives in the desperate struggle that has been thrust upon them against their will.

People must understand that what is going on in Palestine is a national fight for freedom which is as justified as any in the world's history, like that of the Americans, the Boers, and the Irish in the past.

Finally, freedom can come by the recognition of a free Palestine by the United Nations, in its September meeting. Public opinion everywhere must press for this just action. Then we shall have a democracy like the United States out there in the Middle East, dramatizing new life for all the people of that part of the world.

Howard Y. Williams is a man with a distinguished record of political action, both as a campaigner and a strategist. In 1940 he polled 305,000 votes as candidate of the Democratic Farmer-Labor Party for lieutenant governor of Minnesota, and as Midwest director of the Union for Democratic Action, he was instrumental in the defeat of Gerald Nye in North Dakota, and in the successful election of many progressive candidates in Illinois, Minnesota, Indiana, and other Midwestern States in 1944.

In World War I he served as a captain in the Tenth United States Engineers, and was decorated by the French Army and cited by General Pershing for conspicuous gallantry in action. He has remained in touch with veterans' problems by service from 1936 to 1940 as director of the Minnesota Division of Soldier Welfare which administers $1,000,000 a year in benefits to disabled veterans.

He recently resigned his position as State director of the Independent Voters of Illinois to go with the American League.

The Relation Between Employee Production and Incentive Plans

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. CLARE BOOTHE LUCE
OF CONNECTICUT
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Tuesday, July 30, 1946

Mrs. LUCE. Mr. Speaker, as additional evidence supporting my resolution, House Resolution 481, to authorize and conduct a survey of experiences in profit sharing in industry, I call attention to the following group incentive plan for the retailing industry as outlined by Mr. Joseph J. Thursh, vice president and controller of Macy's Department Store in New York City, which was given before the Controllers' Congress of the National Retail Dry Goods Association at Chicago, Ill., June 18, 1946:

THE RELATION BETWEEN EMPLOYEE PRODUCTION AND INCENTIVE PLANS

GROUP INCENTIVE PLAN BETTER FOR RETAILING INDUSTRY

The subject matter of this presentation is probably the most important single problem facing commerce and industry today. The bald truth is that since VJ-day, production per man-hour has been dropping steadily in many branches of our economy at a rate which is little short of alarming. Unless this destructive trend is checked in the near future, a drop in our living standards is inevitable.

We here are concerned primarily with those aspects of the problem which affect retailing. While broader aspects which embrace our entire economy inevitably affect what happens at the retail level, the limited scope of this presentation compels us to confine our discussion to some of the more important elements of the problem from the retailer's point of view.

During the last 4 years, we retailers have enjoyed a level of prosperity which exceeds anything we ever dreamed was possible. Sales have skyrocketed to unprecedented heights, and the expense ratio has dropped steadily. There have been resulting increases in operating profits, comparatively large increases in relation to prewar standards. Our economists tell us that we are now on the threshold of an era of prosperity compared to which even our wartime performance will seem small. What have we got to worry about? Even though production per man-hour is going down, our sales are going up by leaps and bounds and so are our profits. So who cares?

A little sober thought will bring to light the crucial soft spots which exist already and which are bound to grow rapidly to the point where they can undermine our entire structure—unless we act now. The "termites" of inefficiency are busily at work boring from within, and unless we have the foresight and the courage to fight our way down to their nest and exterminate them, the consequences may be grave indeed.

Let us examine some of these soft spots and try to evaluate the possible consequences of our neglecting them.

If we analyze our sales increase, what do we find? Using the year 1940 as a base, we discover that by far the largest single factor responsible for these increases is the increase in the average gross sale. By comparison, the increase in physical volume, which we call transactions, seems relatively puny. How many of us realize that this increase in average sale contributed many times more than any other factor to the important reduction in expense ratio which we are enjoying? If you have any doubts regarding the truth of this statement, multiply your 1945 transactions by your 1940 average sale and then relate your 1945 expense dollars to this revised sales figure. The results will shock you.

While we are patting ourselves on the back for the remarkable expense showing we have made in terms of ratio to sales, how many of us are aware of what has happened to our expense cost per transaction? If you want another shock, compare this cost in 1945 with 1940, and see what five short years have done to you.

Too few of us have studied the relationship between the expense ratio and the price level. A careful examination of this relationship over a reasonable period of time will disclose that the two factors are tied together inseparably. In fact, I can state unequivocally that the level of prices exerts more influence on both our sales and our expense ratios than all other factors combined.

This leads us to our next question. What is likely to happen to our average sale in the foreseeable future? It is almost unanimously agreed that, for the next year or two it is not likely that prices will decline from present levels. If anything, they will likely go higher. But what will happen when the supply of consumer goods about balances demand? To contend that there will be no decline from the present level of prices is to say that, in terms of technological and scientific progress, we have gone as far as we can go. Does anyone here believe we have reached the end of that road? If you do, you are in effect saying that the Gethsemane of human progress is at hand. Our engineers and scientists tell us just the reverse. They have the unshakable conviction that the greater part of scientific progress by far still lies ahead of us. This being true, it is inevitable that sooner or later the level of prices will tend downward.

Still another shock awaits us if we recast our current profit-and-loss statements on the basis of a 15- or 20-percent decline in average sale and, in addition, adjust for a return of services to prewar levels. Try it, and see what happens to your expense and profit ratios.

In recent years, we have heard a great deal about the break-even point. In retailing that is the point at which our sales volume throws off just enough gross margin dollars to cover all expenses. To get a clear picture of the road that lies ahead, compare your 1940 break-even point with that for 1945—and, in the process—hold on to your hat.

Another basic truth which most of us tend to ignore is that, with the possible exception of the public utilities, the break-even point in retailing in normal times is at a higher percentage of actual sales than in any other industry. This does not by any means connote that we are the least efficient segment of our economy. This condition is brought about by the nature of our business. We are required to maintain huge plants and huge stocks of goods to satisfy the wants of Mr. and Mrs. Consumer. We must stand ready at all times to serve them when they choose to be served. Our range of flexibility between the peaks and valleys of our sales volume is strictly limited. We cannot close down one-half or three-quarters of our plant during slack periods, as manufacturers can do. Perhaps, someday, department stores will be designed in such a manner that much greater flexibility in physical plant will be possible. As things stand now, we are stuck with a very high break-even point.

What has gone before points up clearly the necessity for a realistic approach to the problems which lie ahead. If the American people want to continue to enjoy an ever-rising standard of living in a manner consistent with our way of life, then we must do everything in our power to encourage the one condition which alone can make this possible. There is only one way we can produce the additional things which make for a higher living standard, within the framework of a free, capitalistic economy, and that is by an increase in productivity per man-hour. That alone can give us the wherewithal to enable all of our people to enjoy more of the things they want.

Here we have the heart of this presentation. It seems so simple, doesn't it? Yet we cannot dodge the stark reality that productivity per man-hour is tending downward steadily in many branches of our economy.

There is little point in continuing this presentation unless we have a reasonable hope of reversing this trend. Likewise it would serve no useful purpose for us to indulge in recriminations against either management or workers. The fundamental questions we must ask ourselves and find satisfactory answers to are:

1. Is there no common ground upon which management and workers can meet?

2. Is there no formula which will work to our mutual advantage?

The conviction that there is such common ground, and there is such a formula, is the justification for what follows.

Our first step is to define just what we mean by an incentive. For the purposes of this presentation, an incentive may be defined as follows:

An incentive is a payment to a worker of extra financial compensation for plus effort.

This definition compels us to conclude that before we can identify that portion of a worker's total effort which is plus, we must establish first what we recognize as a normal performance.

The previous speakers have given you a comprehensive picture of how standards are set to determine normal performance. The point I want to stress is that until we have defined clearly what we regard as a normal performance, we have no yardstick for measuring plus performance, and hence we have no basis for incentive compensation.

One of the most troublesome aspects of incentive compensation is the determination of what constitutes normal performance. Unfortunately, there is no rule of thumb that can be applied generally. Each type of work has its own par which must be determined independently. However, there is one broad aspect of this question which, it is believed, is the major impediment to a wider use of incentive compensation.

No matter how hard we try, a portion of the workers whom we desire to include in an incentive plan, will perform at levels which are considerably higher than a fair par. So that, were we to install an incentive plan, this portion would in effect be getting a "free ride." In our efforts to minimize this free ride, we tend to set standards so high that the major good we could derive from an incentive plan is destroyed.

It is believed that the primary reason why we have permitted this factor to impede the progress of incentive compensation is our failure to analyze carefully the objectives of such a plan.

To begin with, we know that our premium workers are relatively scarce. It is rare indeed when they exceed one-third of the working force of any segment of our store. It cannot be denied that this one-third would get what amounts to a free ride. However, this should not deter us from installing an incentive plan so long as the potential increase in the productivity of the remaining two-thirds is more than enough to offset the cost of this free ride. Our primary objective is to get the lower two-thirds to produce at a rate which will enable all our workers to earn more money and at the same time yield a plus to management. A clear understanding of this basic principle should go a long way toward laying to rest one of the major impediments to a greater utilization of incentive compensation. Let us center our attention on the marginal and submarginal workers, and the premium worker will take care of himself.

Another misconception which blocks the path of a wider use of incentives can be best illustrated by quoting from Professor Lyle's Wage Incentive Methods, as follows:

"Fallacious thinking by employers about incentives is usually due to too much thought of direct labor-unit cost and too little thought of total unit cost—that is, failure to consider a department as a whole. Selling price must include overhead as well as labor cost. Therefore, total cost per unit is the only true criterion of company results. Total cost per unit is inclusive and in no way misleading. The fact that for a given overhead total costs per unit decrease as production increases is the foundation of the philosophy that low wages do not mean low final costs. Were it not for this overhead volume relationship, the lowest earning curve would be the best plan.

"When one incentive plan succeeds in holding the average production response at a higher efficiency than another incentive plan, the nearly constant overhead is distributed over more units and the overhead per unit is reduced. Consequently, the total costs per unit between two such plans may be:

"(a) Equal despite different direct labor costs per unit; or

"(b) Less in the case of the one having the greater direct labor costs per unit.

"From this it follows that it is always cheaper to pay higher wages to the workmen when the output is proportionately increased, the diminution in the indirect portion of the cost per piece being greater than the increase in wages.

"From the foregoing paragraphs it is evident that this total cost per piece is the thing to which we must give major consideration, not direct labor cost per piece.

"We will not find it unreasonable to confine management gains to this overhead reduction or lowered total cost per unit and concede all the saving in wages to employees, that is, give a piece rate."

Here we have a direct application of our contribution theory. Note that this type of industrial incentive plan sets out to encourage an increase in the labor cost per unit. This is done because it is realized that if the number of units produced is sufficiently high the decrease in the overhead costs per unit will more than offset this increased unit labor cost, resulting in a lower total cost per unit.

The same principles apply to our operations. That is the essence of our contribution approach. What we are interested in primarily is dollars of contribution.

The gist of the above is that we are permitting our fanatical worshipping of ratios to blind us to the cold reality that we pay our salaries and earn our profit in dollars. What does it matter if the ratio of a particular salary cost to sales goes up, if the total dollar cost per transaction goes down? When will we recognize that if our salary cost per transaction goes up 5 cents and our other costs per transaction go down 7 cents per transaction, we are earning 2 cents more per transaction, regardless of what happened to the salary cost ratio to sales? When are we going to learn that our store is an integrated whole, and unless we look at the over-all picture, we cannot make rational decisions regarding any segment? Until we use this approach, there is little likelihood that we will make much progress in spreading the use of incentive compensation, because such thinking is an essential part of evaluating this instrument.

We are now ready to discuss the basic characteristics which must be present if an incentive plan is to operate efficiently. These are as follows:

1. Top management must be sold on the plan. Unless they give the plan full support, there is little likelihood of success.

2. The supervisor of the division in which the plan is to operate must be sold on it. He must be trained thoroughly regarding the principles of the plan and must have complete knowledge of how the plan operates.

3. The workers affected by the plan must be sold on the plan. They must understand it thoroughly and feel that it is fair and just. It must be simple enough for them to keep a running record of about where they stand for any given period. Also, they must understand that if there is any change in the nature of their work, such as mechanization, functional elimination, change in method, etc., the plan must be revised to conform with these changed conditions.

Briefly, the technique for setting up an incentive plan is as follows:

(a) Make a thorough analysis of present methods to determine whether we are employing the "one best way" to do the job. This analysis involves time and motion studies whenever they can be used effectively.

(b) Satisfy ourselves that the supervisory organization of the division under review conforms with accepted management principles. This point cannot be emphasized too strongly. The plan will be as strong as your supervision, no more and no less.

(c) Determine the yardstick you will use to measure production.

(d) Using this yardstick, actually measure production for a representative period of time. Here is where we make some of our most serious mistakes. In our anxiety to install a plan quickly, we shorten this vital measuring period. The usual result is an incomplete or inadequate plan. We all know it is one thing to have a good idea and quite another to put that idea to work. Experience has taught us that the minimum measuring period is usually from 3 to 6 months, depending on the nature of the operation under consideration.

(e) On the basis of the above, establish pars which represent normal performance.

(f) Set incentive compensation for over-par performance. It is important that incentive payments be made at frequent intervals and as soon after they are earned as possible.

(g) Lastly, it is essential that the plan be reviewed at regular intervals. Any inequities or "bugs" which are disclosed by the review should be adjusted promptly.

We come now to a critical question, i. e., what kind of incentives can be used effectively in an industry as complex as retailing? Should we use individual incentives or group incentives? Let us analyze the problem from the point of view of the integrated whole and see if we can arrive at a firm conclusion.

First, we have seen that:

(a) in every division of our store, our workers' efficiency ranges from poor to excellent,

(b) speaking generally, the relatively marginal worker forms an important part of any group, particularly in this type of labor force.

(c) the greatest potential plus stemming from incentive compensation lies in raising the level of productivity of this relatively marginal segment of our workers.

Second, the greatest single asset of any store is its good will. The successful store is the one which enjoys the highest possible good will of its customers, its suppliers, and its workers. This is the essence of the integrated whole approach.

In the past, an important obstacle to a more widespread use of incentive plans for individuals in department stores has been our inability to resolve the conflict between the individual's desire to earn maxmum income and the store's desire to preserve its good will. This is true particularly of individual selling incentives. Customers resent being high-pressured. The individual desire to grab everything in sight tends to push to one side the store's primary interest, whch is its good will.

Third, the nature of our business demands that we operate along functional lines. Thus our receiving department services all of our selling departments. The same is true of delivery, packing, control, etc. To operate in any other manner would be much too costly. Only in this way can we obtain the flexibility required to operate efficiently.

Fourth, we have learned that as regards incentive compensation, supervision alone cannot sublimate the urge of the individual to place his own immediate interests above the store's long-range interest. If it could, the use of individual incentive plans would be much more widespread than is true now.

Fifth, try as we will, we cannot find a practical device for overcoming the inequality of opportunity which exists in many of our divisions, particularly in the selling division. The flexibility demanded by the nature of our business makes this aspect of the problem a "reef" on which many an individual incentive "ship" has been wrecked.

We can conclude, therefore, that, while it cannot be denied that in some respects there is no substitute for the drive generated by a well-conceived and well-executed individual incentive plan, the group approach has tremendous possibilities. It is a solid, practical alternative to no incentive plan at all, the choice many of us have made in the past. I submit the time has come when we must reverse that decision, and harness our energy to the task of devising sound group-incentive plans for every division of the store where they can be applied, both selling and nonselling.

I might add that within the framework of a group plan, there is room for recognizing outstanding ability. The common pool can be divided in a manner which gives due consideration to superior performance, and at the same time can exclude the chronic, incurable drones from participating until such time as they deserve it. By the same token, it gives everyone in the group a much wider opportunity to earn something immediately. No, I am not implying that such a plan will do "all things for all people." What is contended is that the group-incentive approach offers a wide variety of possibilities for attaining our over-all objective, i. e., more earnings for both the employee and management. In addition, let us be ever mindful that we still have the other incentive such as promotion, greater recognition, etc., for our outstanding people.

In conclusion, it is my firm conviction that the surest way we can continue to enjoy a steadily rising standard of living within the framework of our democratic way of life is for us to continue to produce and consume more and more useful things. The only way this can be accomplished is by means of a steadily rising productivity per man-hour. A powerful tool for helping us attain this desirable objective is a well-conceived, well-executed incentive plan. For the retail craft, the group-incentive approach holds great promise.

Let us not delude ourselves. What is proposed is by no means an easy task. Many obstacles lie in our path. However, I am convinced that none of them are insurmountable. It can be done because it must be done.

I solicit the cooperation of all forward-looking controllers and store principals to pitch into this all-important problem. Turn your researchers loose. Let them draw upon the accumulated experience of the production end of our economy. Believe me, it is a gold mine of valuable data. Encourage experimentation. Let's try many varieties of plans. In due course, we will arrive at those which are best suited to meet our needs. A department store is such a complex organism that it is likely we will require a variety of plans to fit into our great variety of needs.

One thing is certain. No one store has a monopoly on brains and talent. All of us must contribute to the common cause, not in money but in ideas, in techniques. If we succeed, our reward can exceed our fondest hopes both for our stores and for our coworkers. If we fail—if we do not recognize the potential of the tremendous force which now lies dormant and put it to work, we will be passing up what I believe is the greatest opportunity for constructive accomplishment ever offered us. We must not fail.

Legislative Record of the Seventy-ninth Congress and the Role of the Committee on Rules and Its Chairman, Hon. A. J. Sabath, of Illinois

---

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. ADOLPH J. SABATH

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, August 2, 1946

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, you and the Members of the House of Representatives are aware of the heavy burdens and the grave responsibilities which are mine as chairman of the Committee on Rules, especially during the last two sessions of Congress, when Congress has been rent with political conflict as we attempt to chart the course of this, the most powerful nation in the world, and the only surviving democracy, through the dangerous days of world reconstruction and reconversion from war to peace.

APPRECIATES WORDS OF PRAISE

All of you, on many occasions, and from Republicans as well as Democrats, have been kind in praise of me on various occasions in the past—notably on March 4 of this year, when I began my fortieth year of public service in this distinguished body, and on April 4, my eightieth birthday. I shall treasure to the end of my days those golden words and the memory of the standing ovation you gave me.

TIED TO OFFICE BY DUTIES

But it naturally follows that those arduous duties have tied me to my Washington office with bonds stronger than steel; and I have been deprived of all opportunity to be in Chicago for a single day, even during our brief recesses, and of the privilege and pleasure of personally seeing and talking to my many friends and neighbors.

Therefore I avail myself of this opportunity of setting forth briefly a report on my activities, my accomplishments, and my duties, necessarily touching on only the highlights of this busy Congress. In the House of Representatives alone, in the Seventy-ninth Congress, almost 10,000 public and private bills and resolutions have been introduced, and we have enacted into law, after due consideration, some 700 of them.

TRIUMPHS AND DISAPPOINTMENTS

As a party leader in the House, and a member of the informal steering committee, I share with you, Mr. Speaker, and with the distinguished majority leader and majority whip, Mr. McCORMACK and Mr. SPARKMAN, the triumphs as well as the disappointments of this Congress. If the disappointments were bitter, the triumphs are of world significance.

As you know, I have supported, urged, and advocated, with all the resources at my command, all the recommendations and requests of the President of the United States for progressive legislation in the interests of our country.

I have opposed, on the other hand, with the same strength, all efforts on the part of the Republicans, aided by a few reactionary Democrats, to pass legislation that tended to weaken or destroy existing laws beneficial to labor and the common man, to consumers, and to small business.

INTERNATIONAL RELATIONS

As chairman of the Committee on Rules, I am proud and pleased to be able to state that I succeeded in having my committee grant rules which sent to the House floor for passage, and in the face of bitter opposition from both sides of my committee table, legislation in the field of international relationships of world importance, all designed to help lead the world to universal peace and prosperity.

It is impossible to list all of these. The most important were: the Civilian Atomic Energy Control Act; United States participation in the United Nations and the World Court; approval of further contributions to the relief of starving, helpless people all over the world through UNRRA; United States leadership in the International Monetary Fund and the World Bank, to discourage the kind of competition and economic despair that leads inevitably to war; approval of the United Nations Educational, Scientific, and Cultural Organization and United Nations Food and Agricultural Authority; rehabilitation loans to foreign governments; and the final and complete independence of the Philippine Republic for which I have so long worked; implementation in many ways of the good-neighbor policy in the Western Hemisphere; and many acts of lesser importance.

ON THE HOME FRONT: OPA

To my mind, the most important single measure we considered on the home front was extension of the Price Control Act.

Though we passed a Price Control Act at long last, it has been so weakened and emasculated that the President signed it as I voted for it—with regret.

I have pointed out repeatedly that without strong and fair price controls the cost of living will go sky high. This was proved in the 30 days in which we had no price-control law. Food prices went up more than 20 percent in a single month. Under the flimsy law we passed prices continue to climb.

Yet, this law was the best we could gain in the face of almost solid opposition from the Republicans.

I feel that when Members return home and find how everyday items of living are going out of sight, and hear from the consumers, they will realize the mistake they have made in murdering OPA in plain defiance of the wishes of 90 percent of the American people.

Republicans will offer as an excuse that we did pass a Price Control Act; but they will not be honest and admit that to obtain passage most foods and articles of everyday household use were removed from control.

LOBBYISTS MUST REGISTER

Failure to pass a strong Price Control Act, like the failure to pass the Wagner-Ellender-Taft housing bill, the new minimum-wage bill, and the Wagner-Murray-Dingell national health bill, was due to a vicious, high-pressure propaganda and lobbying campaign, such as I have seldom seen in my long service, financed and directed by avaricious, profit-hungry industrial czars and their high priests of special privilege, including the food processing and textile industries.

I introduced and fought for a resolution calling for a full-scale investigation of legislative lobbying, intending to expose the millions of dollars put into such work in the Capital, and why all that money was spent, and another to investigate the meat industry, especially as represented by the monopolistic American Meat Institute.

In that I was unsuccessful; but, in the congressional reorganization bill we not only improved the legislative machinery of our National Congress, we also included a strong provision which requires all legislative lobbyists to register and to expose to public gaze full details of their work—for whom they act, who employs them, in whose interest they are working and to what end, and who provides the funds. This is a monumental victory for the common people who cannot afford such lobbies in their own interest.

OTHER PROGRESSIVE VICTORIES ON THE HOME FRONT

This was not the only victory.

We strengthened and improved the Social Security Act, although we did not go as far as I advocated; we strengthened and bettered the Railroad Retirement Act; we passed the Hospital Act. We passed the anti-poll-tax bill in the House, though it lost in the Senate again. We passed the governmental reorganization bill and approved two of the President's wise and helpful reorganization plans to make the Federal Government more efficient. We passed the school-lunch bill, and in the District of Columbia Child Care Center Act we set a pattern I hope we can follow in the future for other metropolitan centers where such centers are vitally needed, such as Chicago. We gave to the Secretary of Labor long-needed high-level assistants, and made it possible to reorganize and modernize the Department of State. And we passed a Full Employment Act, far from the great administration measure I plead and battled for, but a long step in the right direction. We gave Federal workers, including the post-office employees, much-needed pay increases help them keep up with a runaway cost of living. We passed the Strategic Minerals Stock Piling Act, and many other laws to improve Government service, defend our country, and decrease the cost of Government.

Some of the progressive victories were in the form of defeats for vicious anti-labor legislation, such as the May-Arends bill which, disguised as a repeal of the oppressive Smith-Connally Act, would have been worse than the law it repealed. The vicious Case bill, passed over my bitter opposition after an underhanded parliamentary maneuver, was fortunately vetoed by President Truman. In my position as chairman of this committee, I was able to detect and defeat other raids on the rights of citizens and on the public purse.

ON THE HOME FRONT: HOUSING

Though the real-estate lobby blocked the Wagner-Ellender-Taft general housing bill, we did pass an Emergency Housing Act which, though not as strong as the President asked for, is enabling the energetic and capable Wilson Wyatt, the President's Housing Expediter, to provide homes for thousands of Americans. I battled for the full administration measure; but the Republicans, under the lash of party discipline, subservient to the fabulously wealthy and incredibly greedy real estate and construction lobbies, drove through crippling amendments which slowed down the program and reduced its effectiveness.

We enlarged the Lanham Act to provide an additional $100,000,000 for FHA home loans, and otherwise liberalized the Federal housing program.

A Republican filibuster in the House Committee on Banking and Currency killed the Wagner-Ellender-Taft general housing bill, which would have provided the machinery for producing 1,250,000 homes for homeless Americans every year for the next 10 years, with special emphasis on low-rent homes. The Republicans and the hidden lobbies for whom they acted cannot escape direct responsibility.

The same lobby, working in the dark, armed with unlimited funds for propaganda and "contacts," beat the President's plan for consolidating all the housing activities of the Federal Government in one permanent housing agency.

My own part in this battle is in the RECORD of this Congress. I spoke, wrote, pleaded, and voted for the people.

ON THE HOME FRONT: SET-BACKS

President Roosevelt sent to me his last personal message on legislation received by any Member of Congress.

While this inspired and inspiring leader of the world was quietly ending his days at Warm Springs, his personal emissary was in my office, telling me that the President had his heart set on passage of the permanent Fair Employment Practice Act. President Truman also asked for its enactment.

Yet, though I used every resource I was unable to get this bill reported by my committee.

Neither was I able to send the 65-cent minimum wage amendment to the floor.

TO PRESS THROUGH IN NEXT CONGRESS

The Wagner-Dingell health bill died in legislative committee, as did increased unemployment benefits, the St. Lawrence seaways project, consolidation of War and Navy Departments, and some other good legislation.

Such legislation is needed and demanded by the American people.

When the new Eightieth Congress convenes I shall demand that they be taken up immediately, and also that we strengthen OPA as much as seems necessary at that time.

PERSONAL ACCOMPLISHMENTS

To my regret, Mr. Speaker, the rigor of my official duties has made it impossible even to answer all of the hundreds of telegrams and letters from all over the world which reached my desk daily; I hope during this recess to make up for that.

Even so, I was able to accomplish things for Chicago.

Everyone knows of the successful campaign I waged, against all odds, to fill the 42,000 dwellings and the empty office buildings found by the Chicago Real Estate Board in 1940, by obtaining a Presidential order transferring nonwar agencies away from Washington, and later of how, almost single-handed, I forced the procurement agencies to utilize existing plants in the Chicago area for war production, and to bring new manufacturing plants there; and how, when not only were all dwellings filled but running over I successfully fought for additional housing projects to shelter the workers who helped win the war on the industrial front. Chicago's present prosperity is founded on my wartime fight for a fair share of war work.

More recently I gained thousands of temporary dwelling units from the Federal Public Housing Authority to relieve the acute distress of veterans in Chicago without a place to live; I protested successfully against the Navy's plan to reduce Great Lakes Training Station; led the fight to retain the Navy's Lake Forest torpedo plant; restored funds for the Federal contribution to Chicago's housing projects, which have replaced the old dark and hateful slums; and won the city's right to retain the Douglas airplane plant and field as a city airport. It would be immodest of me to go further in any listing of what I have done for my own city; the record speaks for itself.

FOUGHT AGAINST BIGOTRY

Similarly, I have fought for freedom of conscience, freedom of religion, freedom of speech, and against every kind of intolerance and bigotry. I have said before, and I repeat: There is room in America for every kind of opinion; there is no room for racial or religious hatreds. I shall continue to fight against the Ku Klux Klan and other real subversive organizations whether Fascist or Communist trying to undermine our democratic way of living.

VETERANS' LEGISLATION

Because I am reporting more fully in another place on veterans' legislation we enacted in this Congress, Mr. Speaker, I shall mention but briefly that we liberalized the GI bill of rights by increasing educational allowances and making loans easier to get and repay; we increased all pension and disability payments by 20 percent; we passed the bill to give amputees automobiles especially fitted out for safe driving; we passed the Terminal Leave Pay Act; increased Army pay; appropriated billions for the Naval and Military Establishments; improved the system of dependency allowances and made appropriations for medical care of servicemen's wives and children; liberalized pension provisions for veterans undergoing hospitalization, and made the National Service Life Insurance Act broader and easier to follow; and we made veterans' preference in purchase of surplus property mandatory.

Inflation on Way?—It Is Here Already

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. ADOLPH J. SABATH

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, August 2, 1946

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, when I have repeatedly risen on the floor of this House to plead for a strong Price Control Act, and to denounce the profit-hungry industrial despots who, by their lobbies, have opened the door to disastrous inflation, I knew I was speaking for the people, the consumers, the workers, the small businessmen of my congressional district, and of the Nation as a whole, and especially for 20,000,000 Americans who have to live on small fixed incomes.

LAWNDALE NEWS

I knew, because I read the neighborhood newspapers of my home district. Of the big dailies in Chicago only two supported price control; but the lively and energetic neighborhood papers never wavered.

Two of those newspapers are the Lawndale News and the West Side News, both published by Morris Kaplan. I am inserting an article on run-away living costs from the Lawndale News of August 1, 1946, because it is an example of enterprising journalism; because it illustrates what my Republican colleagues will find out about prices when they reach their home districts; and it forecasts all too well what we can expect in the future.

PRICES UP 250 PERCENT

Note this, Mr. Speaker: This article shows that a market basketful of groceries which cost $6.69 in 1940 would cost 2½ times as much on August 1, 1946, or $15.57.

Is it any wonder, Mr. Speaker, that the people are crying out against the Republicans and those few reactionary and shortsighted Democrats who aided them in the murder of OPA?

The article from the Lawndale News follows:

INFLATION ON WAY? IT'S HERE ALREADY!—MARKET BASKETFUL THAT COST $6.69 IN 1940 NOW TAKES YOU FOR $15.57!

Mrs. Average Housewife, who went to market in 1940 and '41 for her week's supply of groceries, spent $6.69 for a well-filled basket. When she goes into the stores today and buys the same items, she pays the cashier $15.57.

This increase of almost 135 percent in the price of family necessities during the past 5 years has far outpaced raises in pay given Mrs. Average Housewife's husband at his factory, store, or office job.

NEWS MADE MARKET SURVEY

These are the facts—many of which are overlooked completely by commentators in the present fight to throttle price ceilings—that were learned by the Lawndale News in a survey made this week. To make the comparison, prices quoted in advertisements in the papers 5 and 6 years ago were set alongside prices for the same items being quoted at present in neighborhood stores.

It matters not whether the shopper is buying groceries, meats, or fruits and vegetables. All have swooped up into the stratosphere, with lard taking the prize, selling now at 37 cents per pound, as against 5 cents back in 1940.

ORANGES UP 300 PERCENT

Not far behind, however, are fruit items, which have gone up and up, selling nowadays for much more in season than they did in prewar times out of season.

For example, two dozen oranges that once cost 25 cents may now be obtained for a mere 70 cents. That's almost triple. Grapes are luscious, but who would blame anybody for thinking them sour at 45 cents a pound when the one-time price of 10 cents is recalled.

CHERRIES, 42 CENTS A POUND

Not many big cherries can be eaten by the children when they're retailing at 42 cents a pound, almost three times the 1940 price of 15 cents. Even apples, that staple of the fruit counters, have gone the way of all foods. A very poor quality is now available at 5 pounds for 25 cents. Six years ago one could get 5 pounds of the rosiest, tastiest apples at 19 cents.

You can remember when it was common to buy three bunches of carrots—because they sold for only 10 cents—yes, all three. Nowadays you plunk out 11 cents for a single bunch. Potatoes are no better, commanding a cool 66 cents for 10 pounds, whereas in 1940 you could buy them for 19 cents.

Beets and lettuce have both doubled in price, the former going from 4 bunches for a dime to a nickel a bunch, and the latter shooting from 10 cents a head to 20 cents.

Tomatoes right now don't cost as much as they did a few months back, but at 15 cents a pound it's still three times the nickel of 1941.

FLOUR DOUBLED IN PRICE

Canned goods and other groceries have fared no better. A couple of cans of sauerkraut nip the household budget for 29 cents, compared with the 15 cents of yesteryear. The 10-pound sack of flour which could be carried out of the store for 30 cents now bears a 61-cent price tag.

Do you use sugar—as who doesn't? Well, the 5-pound bag tears 50 cents out of the expense money; but it was only 23 cents in 1940. That old standby of 4 cans of milk for a quarter is long forgotten; now it's 48 cents for the same quantity. The same story can be told for coffee and tea: 2 pounds of the former retailing now for 72 cents, 27 cents more than the 1940 price; a half pound of tea at 37 cents once and 58 cents now.

EGGS IN SKY

Strangely enough, spaghetti has not risen so much; only from 14 to 20 cents for two packages. Jello has also stayed in sight, going from 13 cents for three packages to 18 cents. But eggs! The dozen that cost 17½ cents now goes home with you only if you pay 41 cents.

In recent weeks the prices of butter and meats have been getting the most publicity, so let's examine what a lapse of 5 to 6 years has done to the dairy and meat departments.

Well, butter has risen from 32 cents to 79 cents a pound; packaged cream cheese from 6½ to 15 cents per package.

CHICKEN TAKES WING

That small 4-pound chicken which two members of the family can finish with little assistance from the others, brings $1.80. You used to be able to buy it for 98 cents. So you try pork chops instead. Bad choice, because the chops that sold at 57 cents for 3 pounds are handed across the counter only if you shell out $1.65.

And you can't do a Marie Antoinette and say let them eat steak. T-bones have gone from 28 cents a pound to 88 cents. Bacon is another luxury at 60 cents, compared with the 20 cents of 1940.

PAY DOES NOT KEEP PACE

So when Mrs. Average Housewife buys her normal needs of these items, as outlined below, she finds herself confronted by a bill for $15.57, a far cry from the $6.69 she could plunk down for the same articles 6 years ago.

Has her husband's pay gone up by the same percentage? Well, if he is the average worker he's lucky if his pay envelope is 50 percent larger than it was in 1940. Paying out the other 80 percent in increased prices explains why families in the lowest third bracket of wage earners have practically no savings.

Always remember, also, that prices had already done some climbing in 1940 and 1941 on the strength of war orders from the British and preparations for our own entry into the war. The contrast would be even greater had we chosen 1939 as the date with which to compare.

HIGH PRICES TARGET OF VETS' STRIKE

To present to the people a true picture of the effects of the emasculation of OPA powers, and to create a west side buyer's strike on articles whose prices have gone too high, the greater west side council of American veterans will conduct a mass rally tonight at 8 o'clock in front of the Douglas Park boathouse.

Speakers will include Sidney Ordower, executive director of the American veterans committee, a representative of the regional office of OPA, and delegates from various veterans' organizations. Irving Gold, chairman of the council, will officiate as master of ceremonies.

The Council of American Veterans is an association composed of delegates from veterans' clubs, among which are the Amvets, American Veterans Committee, Jewish War Veterans, Veterans of Foreign Wars, and the Mexican Veterans' Council.

Why Rock the Boat?

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. CLARENCE CANNON

OF MISSOURI

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, August 2, 1946

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, there is an old Spanish saying, "If a man fools you once, shame on him. But if he fools you twice, shame on you."

We were fooled after the last war. Everybody had a job. Prices were high. The country was prosperous. We had won the war. But people said they were dissatisfied. They wanted a change. So they voted out the Congress that had won the war. Hogs went from $24 to $2; corn from $1.75 to 15 cents; eggs from 70 cents to 8 cents. Nobody had a job. The banks went broke, and farms were sold under the hammer. The voters were dissatisfied. They asked for a change. And they got it.

Now they are trying to fool us again, and again they are talking about being dissatisfied and wanting a change. We have won the most terrible war in history. America is better off than any other nation in the world. Everybody has a job at the highest wages ever paid and hogs and corn and eggs are selling for the highest price since Columbus discovered America. Will we let them fool us again? The farmer—and every businessman dependent on farm patronage—has more at stake in this election than we have had since 1920. The next 2 years will decide whether we will keep good times or drop back into bankruptcy as we did after the last war. Would you rather risk your business and your future prosperity in the hands of the people who have built up this country in the last 12 years or in the hands of the people who wrecked it in the 12 years they had it? It is just a matter of horse sense—of cold business judgment. Do you want politics or do you want prosperity?

Pay no attention to political talk about the American people wanting a change. That is what we were told in 1932 and 1934 and 1936, 1938, 1940, and 1942. That is exactly what they told us 2 years ago. The American people are not going to be swindled a second time. They know good times and good prices and good wages when they see them. They can pay their taxes and their grocery bills. And that is what counts. Think it over.

Veterans of American Armed Services Gain Recognition From Democratic Congress and National Administration

---

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. ADOLPH J. SABATH

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, August 2, 1946

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, this Nation owes to its heroic veterans of all wars every possible consideration consistent with an enlightened public interest, and they deserve at the hands of Congress the opportunity of catching up, now that they have returned to civilian life, what they lost in the service of their country.

That is why I have supported, without reservation, and with all my strength, those legislative measures approved and advocated by the veterans' organizations.

REPUBLICANS BLOCKED HOUSING

Veterans are first of all American citizens. They have fought for the right to jobs, homes, and a decent living.

That is why I did everything in my power to pass the President's Emergency Housing Act just as the President had requested it, in the effort to get as many homes for veterans as we could in the shortest possible time. The Republicans managed to weaken that bill under pressure from the shameless real estate lobbies; but even so Wilson Wyatt, the President's Housing Expediter, is doing a remarkable job with the limited powers and resources we gave him.

REPUBLICANS KILLED HOUSING BILL

Again, I did my utmost, as did every Democratic leader, including President Truman, to get the Wagner-Ellender-Taft general housing bill, designed to provide more than 12,000,000 homes for veterans and other Americans at rentals they can afford to pay, out of the House Committee on Banking and Currency, where the Republican members filibustered the bill to death.

That should be proof to all alert veterans, Mr. Speaker, that it is in the Democratic Party that veterans will find the warm human sympathy and understanding of their needs and problems.

What kind of treatment veterans could expect from the Republican side was thoroughly demonstrated in that filibuster, which placed human greed higher than human need.

They will remember, too, the remark of one of the gentlemen from the Republican side of the House who told us, during debate on the Emergency Housing Act, that American veterans were looking for a hand-out. Veterans will remember, too, how the Republicans killed the national cemeteries bill.

REPUBLICANS CUT THE VALUE OF MONEY

But if that is not proof enough, let the veterans contrast the battle of the administration and its congressional leaders for a strong and adequate price-control act to help us over the reconversion period with the Republican effort to scuttle the entire price-control program.

It is true that we have finally passed a price-control act of sorts; but it is a weak law, and prices have climbed and climbed. The effect is a 50-percent reduction in the buying power of pensions, disability allowances, mustering out pay, terminal-leave pay, bonuses, and in the pay and dependency allowances of those still in the armed services.

TERMINAL-LEAVE PAY AUTHORIZED

Even against these unfair attacks by the Republican Members, Mr. Speaker, this Democratic Congress enacted beneficial laws affecting veterans' rights.

We enacted a bill which puts enlisted men on a parity with officers in terminal-leave privileges, and authorizes payment of about $3,000,000,000 in retroactive terminal-leave pay for former enlisted men who were unable to get their authorized leave while in service.

AUTOMOBILES FOR AMPUTEES

Over violent opposition from Republican Members who have consistently opposed recognition to veterans for their sacrifice and service, we passed the bill to give automobiles, specially equipped for them, to veterans who sacrificed arms and legs in the service of our country.

We raised Army pay and retirement benefits to make such service more attractive and increase volunteers, appropriated billions for national defense and liberalized the District of Columbia Veterans' Readjustment Act.

PENSIONS INCREASED 20 PERCENT

We granted a straight across-the-board increase in pensions amounting to 20 percent. Of course, that won't cover the increases in the cost of living under the emasculated OPA Act; but it will help relieve acute suffering. We liberalized pension provisions in regard to disabled veterans undergoing hospitalization.

INSURANCE ACT LIBERALIZED

We also authorized a liberalization of the National Service Life Insurance Act; wrote veterans' benefits into the Social Security Act; made it easier for alien fiancées of members or former members of the armed services to enter this country and marry their American fiancés; and made veterans' preference in purchase of surplus property mandatory on the War Assets Administration.

FORMER BENEFITS STAND

As every veteran and every soldier knows, the Congress has, for many years past, enacted legislation to give special benefits to the brave men who sprang to their Nation's aid in time of peril.

The GI bill of rights may not be perfect, but it, is so far as I know the most liberal veterans' legislation ever made into law in any country. Thousands and thousands of young men are completing their college work at Government expense, are starting into business, or buying homes with a GI loan under the liberalized provisions we wrote into the Veterans' Readjustment Act in this Congress, or they have returned to their old or to better employment under the protective clauses. For years we have given veterans employment preference in the civil service, and now, for the first time, we have given special legal rights in private employment.

One of the brightest spots in the legislative record of the Congress just closed has been the recognition of the responsibility of the Nation to the men and women who served in the armed services.

TWO HUNDRED VETERANS' LAWS PASSED

Congress has approved in the last 6 years 200 laws directly affecting the rights and privileges and interests of veterans.

These have been compiled in one volume, which I shall be glad to send to any veteran or veterans' organization on request, together with other useful and attractive material.

Veterans everywhere know of my long fight to get a fair system for bringing home our boys who served through the war and of my attacks on special privileges for noncombat officers.

This, briefly, gives information on what I have done and what the Democratic administration has done in behalf of veterans.

Minimum Wage Bill

REMARKS
OF
HON. ADOLPH J. SABATH
OF ILLINOIS
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Wednesday, July 24, 1946

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from West Virginia called attention to the fact that I stated in answer to the gentleman from Pennsylvania that both these bills, the Wagner-Ellender-Taft bill and the so-called minimum-wage bill, are still in the committee. I did not intend to say that the minimum-wage bill is still in the committee. It has been before the Committee on Rules for a long time. I have tried my utmost to get a rule reported for that bill so that it could be considered, but I have been unable to convince the majority of the members of the Committee on Rules to act favorably on it. I do not want to be blamed by anyone because a rule has not been granted. I have tried to get that rule reported out.

Great Britain—Palestine Policy

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. WILLIAM T. GRANAHAN
OF PENNSYLVANIA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Friday, August 2, 1946

Mr. GRANAHAN. Mr. Speaker, of late many people have criticized America's so-called interference with British policy in Palestine. These well-meaning people have sought to justify their position on the premise that Palestine is a British problem and, as a consequence, of little or no importance to the peoples of the United States and other democratic nations. That is a paradox. The recent war was fought for the dual purpose of liberating people from human bondage and to stave off that threat from our own shores. We cannot acknowledge that fact and yet justify noninterest in the tragic plight of our Jewish brethren in Palestine as well as with those who would make it their homeland.

More than 2 months ago the Anglo-American Committee of Inquiry recommended the immediate immigration into Palestine of 100,000 European Jews. Despite the overwhelming tide of world opinion favoring Palestine as a haven for Europe's displaced Jews—the heritage of Nazi oppression—Great Britain has remained steadfast in her determination to ignore one of the most vitally important problems facing the postwar world.

British policy in Palestine is untenable with a democracy that outwardly professes deep concern for its people and yet pursues a course diametrically opposed to the well-being of its citizens. Persistence in such a policy can only result in future uprisings, violence, and bloodshed. Thoughtful Americans of every race, creed, and color can ill afford to disregard the far-reaching implications inherent in Britain's policy in Palestine. It strikes at the very roots of the liberty which all freedom-loving people throughout the world hold sacred, and thus Palestine ceases to be exclusively a British problem. It is a world problem. If we are to preach tolerance, let us practice tolerance.

I have sought to utilize every power at my disposal to bring America's influence and prestige to bear on Great Britain in this crisis. I am determined that Britain's failure to act shall not be America's failure to impress upon our neighbor across the sea the importance of immediate action that the Jews may live as a nation in Palestine. I assure you that it is not a one-man job. The present situation in Palestine is a challenge to free people everywhere; it is particularly a challenge to American public opinion. For my own part I have been heartened by the unstinted support given me by my constituents in my efforts in behalf of a free Palestine. I shall continue to do all within my power to see to it that the outrages borne out of Great Britain's vicious Palestine policy are brought to an end and that such Hitlerite tactics will not be repeated. Now is the time to let our voice be heard that true freedom may live throughout the world.

Republicans Pledge To Cut Individual Income Taxes 20 Percent Beginning January 1, 1947

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. HAROLD KNUTSON
OF MINNESOTA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Friday, August 2, 1946

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Speaker, the issue on individual income taxes for 1947 has been made very clear. The Republican leadership in the House has pledged a 20-percent reduction in individual income taxes for the year 1947 if Republicans win control of the House in November. The Democrats insist there can be no reduction in taxes for 2 or 3 years.

The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CANNON], in his capacity as chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, defends the excessive appropriations for the current fiscal year and pays tribute to the administration for a program of "incomparable retrenchment" and "an all-time record for retrenchment and economy in the history of this or any other nation." So speaks the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations and inasmuch as all appropriations must originate in this body and the gentleman will continue as chairman of the Committee on Appropriations unless the Republicans take over in January, the taxpayers should know what to expect by way of appropriations next year unless there is a change. The simple truth is that appropriations and taxes will never be reduced by this administration. It is too much the servant of the bureaucrats and the wastrels.

After sponsoring every conceivable crackpot scheme of pressure groups to pile additional costs on the backs of the taxpayers, and when the appropriations have been made and the money turned over to the bureaucrats, the President comes forth with much fanfare and pleads with the heads of departments not to spend the money they have just been given for the next 12 months. Instead of ordering drastic reductions in the Budget and appropriations, he offers this belated and idle gesture as evidence of the so-called determination of this administration to economize. And the would-be Government experts, whose standing has sunk to an all-time low during the past year because of their tendency to juggle facts and figures to serve political expediency of the moment, come forth with revised estimates by way of making the excessive appropriations a bit more palatable to the American people.

But the American people are not being fooled. During the expansion of New Deal bureaus throughout the country in the thirties and the unnecessary and unbelievable squandering of money by this administration during the war, the people have seen the Federal Government handling public money in their home communities. They know of the hordes of useless Federal employees with whom they have first-hand contact. These personal experiences by the man in the factory, on the farm, or running a grocery store are associated quite easily with the crushing income-tax burden they are being asked to bear in peacetime by this administration.

There is only one sure cure. Cut off the source of much of the Federal Government's income by reducing taxes and compel the Government to retrench, live within its income, and at the same time start paying off its debt. The first step is the election of a Republican Congress in November and individual income taxes will be reduced 20 percent beginning January 1, 1947.

Vital Problems Before the American People

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. ALEXANDER WILEY
OF WISCONSIN
IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES
Friday, August 2 (legislative day of Monday, July 29), 1946

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President. I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the Appendix of the RECORD a statement by me entitled "Vital Problems Before the American People."

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Mr. President, as the Seventy-ninth Congress' second session ends, the following, I believe, are some of the principal problems before the American people:

1. The lifting of wartime Government controls from the lives of our citizens.

2. The demobilization of the Federal bureaucracy and the balancing of the national budget.

3. The writing of a lasting peace with justice for victor and vanquished alike.

4. Achievement of all-out production in order to curb the menace of inflation.

5. The eradication of internal frictions, hatreds and intolerances in our land—between classes, religions and races.

6. The maintenance of peace and harmony in industrial relations between management and labor.

7. The revitalization of the American spirit of self-reliance, private initiative, thrift, industry.

8. Speedy and adequate disposal of war surplus.

9. The assurance of a square deal for our Nation's veterans, stimulating the fullest use of the great talents of our 15,000,000 ex-servicemen.

10. The restoration of the concept of government as a servant rather than as a master of our people.

NEED FOR POLITICAL CHANGE

Mr. President, it is my personal belief that our people will best be able to meet these 10 problems and other vital issues by a change in political administration—the removing of the so-called New Deal from power. I believe that they will vote for such a change in the November 1946 elections, and that they have already indicated their desire for a change in the primaries which have been held to date.

In this connection, I should like to recall some pertinent words of the late President Roosevelt. He delivered them on November 3, 1932, and they consisted of a quotation, in turn, from former President Coolidge's statement of October 31, 1920. This is what Calvin Coolidge said, as quoted by President Roosevelt:

"For one reason or another even a wisely led poltical party, given a long enough tenure of office, finally fails to express any longer the will of the people; and when it does so fail to express the will of the people, it ceases to be an effective instrument of government. It is far better for such a political party—and certainly better for the state—that it should be relegated to the role of the critic and that the opposing political party should assume the reins of Government. This condition appears to have arrived in America."

ABOLITION OF OPA

As indicated above, I believe that the No. 1 problem before the American people is the lifting of Government wartime controls over the lives of our citizens. The most damaging of such controls now regimenting America are those of the OPA. There follows beneath a statement which I intend to issue shortly on the subject of this agency and its harmful effects upon our Nation.

LET THE EIGHTIETH CONGRESS ABOLISH THE OPA AND INVESTIGATE ITS RECORD

Although it is only 2 weeks since the restoration of OPA, it is apparent that the chaos in industry, the revival of OPA Gestapo tactics, the OPA's ignoring of Congress' directives which the opponents of OPA predicted, have now unfortunately come to pass.

The case for the outright abolition of this agency at the convening of the Eightieth Congress has been proven once more. But the damage that OPA will do to our country between now and then is incalculably great.

Only the primary and election victories of conservative candidates can help put fear into OPA's heart and to reduce the damage that it will do. The American people can and should show at the polls that they will not be fooled via the OPA subsidy route which raids the Treasury of the taxpayers' money.

Based upon OPA's record in these last 14 days, I make these charges against this agency:

1. It is being used now more than ever as a political football by the New Deal administration in this election year to punish and to regiment business, in order to placate the PAC collectivists, in order to hold prices below their natural levels, which will give business a fair return on its investment. The unholy alliance of the present administration with the PAC and the corrupt city machines is seen in the Missouri election. What could be expected of an agency in this administration, allied as it is with these forces, except an anti-American attitude and policy such as that of OPA?

2. The OPA and the New Deal are employing the old familiar tactics of smearing producers and business. This technique is first, to force business to operate at a loss. Then, when businessmen curtail production rather than sustain these losses, the smear artists of the New Deal proceed to condemn business as conspirators. The only conspiracy is that of the New Deal against our system of private enterprise.

3. The price decontrol board which will begin hearings next Monday will reap the same miserable failure to get production, similar to that of OPA's failure, if it is infected by the New Deal synthetic philosophy. That philosophy is one of punishing and regimenting business in order to hold the price line rigidly.

4. Those cases wherein OPA has recently granted price relief to business merely serve to emphasize the fact that in hundreds of areas, no price relief has yet been given. This only serves to point up the crazy-quilt inequalities, the favoritism, the catering to chosen sons, which have characterized the present administration.

ELIMINATION OF OPA

When a Republican Senate and/or a Republican House of Representatives are elected in the November elections, the No. 1 item on the agenda of the Eightieth Congress should be the outright abolition of OPA. It should be the restoration of a true system of supply and demand by which prices can rise to their natural level and by which business can get into all-out production and thus combat the menace of inflation. Abolition of OPA would be a death blow to the state-socialist trend in our country.

Halfway measures, compromise measures, such as the present OPA law, have proven their inadequacy again and again. While Congress is away, apparently the OPA wiseacres mean to play, to make the most of legalistic interpretations of the OPA law and to violate both the letter and the spirit of that law. This is evidenced by OPA's inaction and wrong action in the hide and leather industry.

OPA MALADMINISTRATION OF LEATHER INDUSTRY

The American hide and leather industry is in chaos and is faced with an imminent shutdown resulting in mass unemployment in shoe factories and related establishments because of OPA ineptitude.

Already, shoe factories are rightfully wiring in bitter protests against OPA misrule. Reconversion Administrator Steelman stated that there was a conspiracy on the part of business to withhold hides from the market until OPA revises its price ceilings or consents to decontrol hides and leather. I know of no such business conspiracy, and from all indications, I believe this Steelman statement is a typical New Deal smear.

Steelman attempted to pass the buck to Congress, saying OPA had no authority to decontrol hides and leather. Yet, the OPA law enacted by Congress delegates more than adequate authority to decontrol items as fast as possible.

Why should businessmen in this industry be forced to operate at a loss? We know that under OPA 80 percent of the meat industry operations were in the black market. We know the damage this did to the hide and leather industry. We know that during the 3-week emancipation period from OPA, hide and leather prices rose to more natural levels but definitely not as high as previous black-market levels.

I recommend now that there be immediate decontrol of hide and leather products. Such decontral should be for a minimum testing period of several months. I believe that results during this period will demonstrate the fundamental merit of permanent decontrol, and that such permanent decontrol should be enacted once the case for it has been proven.

THE PATTERN OF OPA RULE AND RUIN MUST BE ENDED

The basic failure of OPA has been the failure of its officials to comprehend the fundamental problem: Namely, to reach full employment through all-out production. Instead of OPA starting at the point of smearing business leaders it should start at the point of how to keep the shoe-making employees of the country employed, how to get shoes to the American public by insuring all-out production of shoes, which will mean shoes at fair prices and of high quality. What happens if the American shoe industry comes to a halt, as is imminently possible?

1. There will be mass unemployment in the shoe and leather industry.

2. There will be importation of foreign shoes, with resultant permanent irreparable damage to the American domestic shoe industry.

3. The bureaucrats will state that since there is mass unemployment in America (created by themselves, although they won't admit it) there is need for more and more unemployment relief, more and more taxpayers' money to be spent in Government projects.

4. Because of the lack of production and because of unemployment there will be loss to the Government in taxes.

This is the pattern of rule and ruin, and these are four of the results of OPA maladministration.

Instead of complicating their problem, if they are at all sincere, why don't they simplify it and get it down to its basic essential—full employment and all-out production through a reasonable profit to business?

NEED FOR INVESTIGATION OF OPA

When the Eightieth Congress convenes, with, I hope and trust, Republican majorities in both Houses, after completing the No. 1 item on its agenda of abolishing OPA outright, it might well set up a special investigating committee to review thoroughly the OPA's record during the war and postwar years.

I believe that the findings of this committee will give a permanent lesson to the American people of the danger of state socialism in our land, the danger of vesting slide-rule theoreticians, long-haired men and short-haired women, in Government bureaucracy with life and death power over free enterprise. The scandals of OPA maladministration could be fully exposed by such a committee.

The United States Treasury Silver Operations—I

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. COMPTON I. WHITE

OF IDAHO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, July 30, 1946

Mr. WHITE. Mr. Speaker, for the information of the members of the Senate Appropriations Committee having a bill to fix the sale price of the Treasury silver under consideration, a careful research of the records of the Treasury has been made for the purpose of determining the facts in connection with the Treasury's silver transactions.

These records are somewhat complicated due to the fact that the Treasury is acquiring silver all the time and only using a part of this silver for money. Then there are the items of silver loaned to foreign governments and silver sales made under the provisions of the original Green bill, together with a separate item of returned worn silver coin. This latter item of worn coin has been omitted in making the computations submitted here.

To judge from the fluctuations in figures showing the Government gold and silver reserves in recent months, it is apparent that a thorough investigation should be made of the Treasury manipulations of both gold and silver and this investigation should cover the price fixed by the OPA and the restrictions imposed under provisions of war-power legislation by the Department of State, together with money manipulations of the fiscal directors of the Army and Navy in paying the members of the United States armed forces serving in foreign countries.

If there is anything the American people should know about, it is the value and integrity of their money. In preparing and submitting the record of the hearing of the Senate Appropriations Committee, having under consideration the bill to establish the price of the Treasury-owned silver, it is to be regretted that the time required to attend committee meetings and House sessions did not permit the preparation of this material in time to secure the necessary printing estimates prior to adjournment.

The presentation is made, therefore, in a series of extensions of remarks, the first installment of which is submitted herewith for the consideration of my colleagues:

STATEMENT OF HON. COMPTON I. WHITE, A REPRESENTATIVE IN CONGRESS FROM THE STATE OF IDAHO

HISTORY OF LAWS AFFECTING PRICES ON SILVER

Congressman WHITE. I might preface my statement, Mr. Chairman, by saying that when this Government was established and the first mint was set up and the first monetary law was passed, there was no price put on silver and no price put on gold. The Government simply decreed by law that 416 grains of silver and 27 grains of gold was $1; this ratio was changed later and all other commodities were adjusted to the value of the dollar. There never was a commodity price put on silver until the Bland-Allison Act was passed in 1878. It was passed in the House as a remonetization measure, and when it came over to the Senate it was there amended. They bought the silver at $1 an ounce and proceeded to monetarize the silver at $1.29.

In 1890 the law was amended. The Bland-Allison Act provided that silver would be purchased at the rate of 400,000,000 ounces a month at $1 an ounce. Under the provisions of the later Sherman Purchase Act, silver was bought at $1 an ounce to the extent of 450,000,000 ounces per month. That raised the amount 50,000,000 a month and paid for it not with silver certificates as we are doing now, but paid for it with Treasury notes. The joker in this transaction was that the financiers of the country bought these Treasury notes which were being paid out to purchase silver and demanded that they be redeemed in gold. That brought on another act of 1893, when President Cleveland called the Congress into session in the early months of that year, and they were here all summer wrangling over the appeal of the so-called Sherman Purchasing Act.

EXTENT OF GOLD MINING IN THE UNITED STATES

Senator MCKELLAR. Let me ask you, if I may, is gold being mined in any considerable quantities in the United States?

Congressman WHITE. They are just getting under way. I believe the Homestake mine, one of the biggest mines in the United States, is now back into production. Idaho has produced a great amount of gold. The United States Geological Survey gives credit to the State for producing $300,000,000 in gold, since gold was first mined.

LIFE OF GOLD OR SILVER DOLLAR

Senator MCKELLAR. Let me ask you a question, and then you can go ahead with that. What is the life of a gold $5 piece, or a silver dollar? How long would it last?

Congressman WHITE. Senator, that is a very interesting question. I have in my hand a well-worn dollar that was minted in 1879.

Senator MCKELLAR, May I see it?

Congressman WHITE. Yes, sir. I think this is extremely important for the record and for the Congress; I was curious to know if that dollar was mined and handed back to the miner, and went into circulation, how much the circulation of that old dollar had saved the American people in interest.

INTEREST SAVED THROUGH CIRCULATION OF OLD DOLLAR

I asked the Federal Reserve to check on it and calculate the interest saved by that old dollar, and I have the information here with me. I keep it with me all the time. It amounts to about $44. That old worn dollar has saved the American people, in circulating interest free, more than twice its weight in gold.

Senator GREEN. You mean, the holders for the time being have paid that amount to the Government?

Congressman WHITE. I mean, if it had been a Federal Reserve dollar it would have had to have been supported by Government bonds or commercial loans called eligible paper. It would have been compounded, as each man brought in his money and paid his notes with interest and another man borrowed the Federal Reserve dollar again. That $1 has saved the American people in interest over $40.

Senator GREEN. However, it cost holders of the dollar the same amount, because that money came from somewhere. They got that much less.

Congressman WHITE. You mean the dollar came out of a silver mine, and that dollar did everything money can do.

Senator GREEN. The holders, in the aggregate, of that silver dollar lost that amount of money.

Congressman WHITE. No; they got value received.

Senator GREEN. They lost the money they would have had had they been holders of the silver certificate. That $44 came out of somebody's pocket.

Congressman WHITE. The miner brought his silver in, got the silver minted and handed back to him; he proceeded to put it in circulation; it passed from hand to hand and did all the functions that money does. It transacted the business of the country, and it did not cost anybody anything to use it as long as somebody did not lend it to somebody else. If it had been in the form of a Federal Reserve note someone would have to pay interest on it to keep it in circulation.

Senator GREEN. Somebody got $44 less. If the Government got $44 more, somebody got $44 less.

Congressman WHITE. I mean to say that somebody got $44 less if it had been a Federal Reserve dollar, but I mean it saved the people $44, and I do not believe any sophistry can change that fact.

Senator GREEN. It saved the Government $44 and cost the people $44.

Congressman WHITE. You may draw any conclusions you please, but you cannot change a fact. The thing that was saved was the item of interest.

Senator GREEN. The fact is that the people paid $44 less than they would have otherwise.

Congressman WHITE. That is right; $44 they would otherwise have paid to the banks. I will proceed with my statement, and I will be very happy to answer any question anybody can provide.

In considering the provisions of the Treasury appropriation bill to authorize the sale of the Government-owned silver, I desire to present for your consideration the facts concerning this silver and its use as money.

TREASURY SILVER ACCUMULATIONS ON MAY 6, 1942

By consulting the Treasury publications we find that the Treasury, operating under the provisions of the Silver Purchase Act of 1934 and the act of 1939, as shown by the Treasury statement of May 6, 1942, without counting worn and subsidiary coins, had an accumulation of 2,895,667,983 ounces of silver, a monetary reserve composed of 1,530-199,545 ounces in coined dollars and silver bullion that had been revalued and held as security for outstanding silver certificates and other monetary uses.

* * * * *

Congressman WHITE. It is all here for your convenience, Mr. Chairman. There are the additions there for the two pages.

AMOUNT OF UNOBLIGATED AND UNREVALUED SILVER HELD MAY 6, 1942

The balance of the silver in the Treasury on that date was an item of 1,365,468,438 ounces of unobligated and unrevalued silver held in the Treasury as a silver surplus.

Senator MCKELLAR. What date was that?

Congressman WHITE. The date is there, Mr. Chairman.

Senator MCKELLAR. May 6, 1942?

Congressman WHITE. Yes. That is the date of the highest accumulation of the Treasury, both in revalued silver that was used for money and the unrevalued silver held as a surplus reserve.

Senator MCKELLAR. That figure is 1,365,-468,438 ounces?

Congressman WHITE. Yes. The balance of the silver in the Treasury—you will see that checked in red. Here is the special Treasury report on that, and I will put that in as our exhibit No. 2.

Senator MCKELLAR. You have not added that last item.

Congressman WHITE. I added the three items. First, as shown by the Treasury statement of May 6, there was the silver held in the silver fund, to which I added the coined money and uncoined silver to make an item of 1,530,199,545 ounces, and then in addition there was an accumulation of 2,895,-667,983 ounces.

AMOUNT IN MONETARY RESERVE

The monetary reserve is composed of 1,530,-199,545 ounces in coined dollars and silver bullion that had been revalued and held as security for outstanding silver certificates and other monetary uses, and that is shown on the statement. Down in the lower general fund you will find that there was 1,365,-468,438 ounces of unobligated and unrevalued silver held as a surplus in the Treasury.

TREASURY ACQUISITIONS OF SILVER SINCE MAY 6, 1942

Since that date the record discloses that the Treasury has purchased an additional 68,818,-238 ounces of silver, making a grand total of silver accumulated by the Treasury of 2, 964,-486,221 ounces (exhibit No. 2, Special Treasury Report).

You will find that report in the Treasury statement handed to you and bound in that book before you.

TREASURY SALES OF SILVER BETWEEN MARCH 6, 1942, AND MARCH 6, 1946

Since that date, between March 6, 1942, and March 6, 1946, we found that the Treasury disposed of 298,412,791 ounces.

Senator MCKELLAR. That was the silver that was sold to manufacturers.

VALUE OF SALES IF USED AS MONEY

Congressman WHITE. It was sold, and that made a reduction of almost 1,000,000,000 ounces. If it had gone into money, it would have a value of about $1,000,000,000.

Since that date the record discloses that the Treasury has purchased an additional 68,818,-238 ounces of silver. You have here the March 6 Treasury statement.

Senator MCKELLAR. Do you want to put it in the record?

Congressman WHITE. No, I want to show the source of this information. It is an official statement from the Treasury.

BREAK-DOWN OF TREASURY SILVER ON HAND MARCH 6, 1946

Now, 3 years later, on March 6, 1946, we find, according to the Treasury statement, there was on hand in the Treasury, without counting worn and subsidiary coins, a total of 1,979,623,655 ounces of silver composed of 1,681,210,864 ounces of revalued silver held as security for outstanding silver certificates and other monetary uses and the item of unrevalued and unobligated silver in the Treasury reserves which we find has been reduced to 298,412,791 ounces. The reduction of 916,-044,328 ounces of silver from the total silver on hand in the Treasury, as shown by comparing the Treasury statements for May 6, 1942, and March 6, 1946, does not disclose all the silver which has been taken out of the Treasury.

FORMER SECRETARY OF THE TREASURY REFUSED TO COIN AS MONEY THE UNOBLIGATED SILVER

The day that the Green bill was enacted, we had that much silver in the Treasury. When the Green bill went into operation we had over 1,000,000,000 ounces. We had 1,500,000,000 ounces of silver in unobligated silver in the Treasury which Mr. Morgenthau refused to put into use as money, although he had authority to do so under the provisions of the Silver Purchase Act of 1934.

Senator MCKELLAR. What was the reason?

Congressman WHITE. We would have to guess at that. I have been a member, since I came down here to Washington, of the Coinage, Weights, and Measures Committee. We had Mr. Morgenthau up before our committee many times, and if he would have used that silver for coining it into money he could have saved the people of the United States a great amount of money in interest. It was over 1,000,000,000 ounces.

COINAGE VALUE OF TREASURY SALES OF SILVER BETWEEN MAY 6, 1942, AND MARCH 6, 1946

By going back and adding the total of the revalued silver to the total of the unrevalued and unobligated silver on hand in the Treasury on May 6, 1942, to the silver purchase, according to Treasury figures, since that date we have a grand total of 2,964,486,-221 ounces. Of this amount, according to the Treasury statement, we find there was on hand in the Treasury on the 6th day of March this year, a total of 1,979,623,655 ounces, both monetary and unobligated silver, showing the Treasury silver stocks have been reduced by 984,862,566 ounces of silver that had a coinage value of $1,273,357,372.59, as computed by a Treasury official (exhibits 1, 2, 3, Treasury Statement for March 6, 1946).

They have not minted any dollars to amount to anything since 1934, but they are from time to time coining and striking subsidiary silver, which is half dollars, quarters, and dimes.

LIFE OF SUBSIDIARY COINS

Senator MCKELLAR. What is the ordinary life of this subsidiary silver?

Congressman WHITE. I have handled and seen many silver coins, some very old, dating before the Civil War. I would say on the average 50 years—the Treasury can furnish more accurate figures.

Senator MCKELLAR. That may be, but I do not recall ever having seen any money that was coined before the Civil War.

BREAK-DOWN OF TREASURY SILVER ON HAND JULY 12, 1943

Congressman WHITE. Now, coming to the Treasury operation under the provisions of the original Green bill, by taking the Treasury statement on the date of the enactment of the original Green bill, we find that on July 12, 1943, there was, without counting worn and subsidiary coins, an accumulation of 2,777,855,640 ounces of silver in the Treasury. This reserve was composed of 1,525,455,-641 ounces of revalued monetary silver and 1,252,399,999 ounces of unrevalued and unobligated silver.

TREASURY ACQUISITIONS AND SALES SINCE JULY 1943

Since that month in 1943, according to Treasury figures, there has been purchased 1,665,611 ounces of silver. During this period the Treasury decreased its silver stocks by putting 204,345,553 ounces of silver dollars and subsidiary silver coins into circulation.

Money just disappears. People move out and go to other countries, and then there is hoarding and hiding, and it is just for that reason that the Government issues paper money in lieu of circulating coins.

GOLD CERTIFICATE ACT PASSED TO STOP ABUSES WITH GOLD

We passed the Gold Certificate Act because there were so many abuses in handling gold. Some Chinese used a leather bag that they sloshed back and forth in their laps and they would sweat the gold, coming out some times with two or three times a day's wages.

Also among the abuses was the practice of the banks who would give you, when you exchanged your certificates for gold, just so many gold coins for the certificates, but when you brought your gold back they would weigh it and if it did not weigh as much as it should have, then you took a loss.

The Chinese had a trick in San Francisco of putting a $20 gold piece in a vise and by the use of a small drill they would drill a hole and leave a little collar by diverting the drill in several directions and they would run some lead in the hole and then plug it with gold, then Congress passed a law that gold certificates would circulate in lieu of gold coins. In that way we saved a substantial amount of metal from abrasion. If a ship blew up or was sunk, or if a train was wrecked, or if clothes caught fire, we saved the metal. It was always on deposit.

The Treasury statements show a lot of gold being held against national bank notes and gold certificates that are still expected to come in some day.

The United States Treasury Silver Operations—II

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. COMPTON I. WHITE

OF IDAHO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, July 30, 1946

Mr. WHITE. Mr. Speaker, this is the second installment of my remarks in presenting the facts concerning the Treasury silver transactions to the Senate Appropriations Committee having under consideration the bill to establish the selling price of silver, and is inserted for the information of my colleagues:

VALUE OF SILVER ON HAND SINCE ENACTMENT OF GREEN BILL

Taking the silver on hand in the Treasury on the date of the enactment of the Green bill and adding the silver purchased since then, we have a total of 2,779,521,251 ounces. There we have, gentlemen, over 2,750,000,000 ounces of silver which is worth over $3,-000,000,000.

Deducting from this amount the 1,979,-623,655 ounces, which was the total silver on hand in the Treasury on March 6, 1946, and the 204,345,553 ounces which have been taken out of the Treasury and added to the outstanding silver coinage making a total of 2,183,972,208 ounces, we find the silver disposed of by the Treasury since the Green bill was enacted amounts to 595,549,043 ounces—almost 600,000,000 ounces went out (exhibits 2, 3, 4, July 12, 1943, Treasury statement; circulation statements June 30, 1943, and February 28, 1946).

Amount of silver lend-leased to England

When we deduct from this figure the 300,-000,000 ounces of silver lend-leased to England we find there is still 295,549,043 ounces to be accounted for by the Treasury; silver that, if converted into dollars as calculated by Mr. Timothy Quirk, of the Mint, would have minted $382,123,928.62.

INDUSTRIAL CONSUMPTION OF SILVER IN PAST AND FUTURE YEARS

The testimony of the silver fabricators before this committee reveals that in peacetime the industrial consumption of silver per year in this country was between twenty-five and thirty million ounces of silver. See testimony of Judson C. Travis, of Handy & Harman (p. 158 of the hearings). In this hearing the silver fabricators estimated the future annual silver consumption at 35,000,-000 ounces per year (some said 125,000,000 ounces for the first year—see testimony of Travis, p. 152 of hearing); see statement of Ray C. Wilcox on page 161 of the hearing (exhibit No. 5, hearing, Senate Appropriations Committee).

COMPARISON OF TREASURY DISPOSITIONS WITH FUTURE NEEDS OF INDUSTRY

By dividing the 25,549,043 ounces disposed of by the Treasury since the Green bill was enacted by the estimated annual consumption of 35,000,000 ounces, we find—without counting the silver loaned to England—that the Treasury has already disposed of enough silver to supply the silver fabricators in this country at this rate of consumption for over 8 years.

Senator MCKELLAR. You gentlemen will have to excuse me. I have to go up to the Senate, and Senator HAYDEN will take the chair.

(Senator HAYDEN assumed the chair.)

SOURCE OF SUPPLY AND USE OF SILVER IN WAR YEARS

Congressman WHITE. In determining what has gone with the silver reserves of the Treasury, it develops from the testimony of the fabricators that during the war the use of silver for civilian purposes was sharply curtailed (see testimony of Mr. Travis, of Handy & Harman); that of the 140,000,000 ounces of silver used for industrial purposes in 1945, 28,000,000 ounces was bought from the domestic mines, and 50,000,000 ounces was imported, the balance, or an estimated 70,000,000 ounces, came from the Treasury; and of the 140,000,000 ounces used in 1945, 70 percent, or 98,000,000 ounces, was for military purposes.

I think you will recall that the war industries were very heavy consumers of silver and they actually were consuming and had consumed 95,000,000 ounces for war purposes.

In considering the source of supply for the industrial use of silver, it develops that the silver users obtained in that year a supply of 50,000,000 ounces of foreign silver, 28,000,000 ounces of domestic silver, and 70,000,000 ounces from the Treasury reserves. That is the peak. How does the Treasury account for the disposal of all the silver that the record discloses has gone out of the Treasury since the Green bill has been enacted?

Aside from the silver lent to England, if we take 295,549,043 ounces of silver the Treasury has disposed of since the Green bill has been enacted, and divide this amount by 70,000,000 ounces, the peak figure supplied to the silver fabricators, the silver that has been taken out of the Treasury would supply the domestic users for over 4 years.

SEIGNIORAGE PROFITS

The loss to the Government by the disposal of silver under the Green bill is shown by the Treasury in another way. Turning to page 71 of the Treasury Bulletin for July 1943, the silver seigniorage table discloses the Government made a substantial profit in the way of seigniorage on minor coins of $280,100,000 and the seigniorage on other silver revalued for monetary use, dollars, and silver certificates, totals $820,500,000.

In addition to the actual seigniorage, the figure in the last column of the table in this report gives the potential seigniorage on the unrevalued silver bullion then in the reserves of the Treasury and is shown at $1,029,500,000, which would have increased the Treasury monetary reserves by that much if all the silver on hand had been revalued and used for money (exhibit No. 6, Treasury Bulletin for May 1942).

By referring to this Treasury Bulletin you will find that the Treasury gets out a very complete list. Here is the seigniorage table and there is the figure mentioned. It is shown there, and that is the potential seigniorage. All the figures are there.

Turning to the February Treasury Bulletin of this year, by referring to the silver seigniorage table on page 71, we find that the potential seigniorage on unrevalued silver bullion reserves has shrunk to $333,200,000. This is a falling off of $696,300,000, a loss in seigniorage which might have been a profit if the silver had been converted into money in the same manner the other silver was revalued and placed in circulation (exhibit No. 7, Treasury Bulletin, February 1946).

Here is the seigniorage table that shows those identical figures on seigniorage. There are some other figures in there.

PRESENT VALUE OF SILVER IN FOREIGN COUNTRIES

As to the present value of silver in other parts of the world, in checking with the British Empire Unit of the Department of Commerce, the Research Division of the Federal Reserve Bank, and the Monetary Research Division of the United States Treasury, we find that the bullion value of silver is considerably above a dollar per ounce as is disclosed by the following reports obtained from these governmental departments.

I have checked on this very carefully with the British Empire Unit of the Department of Commerce, with the Research Division of the Federal Reserve Bank, and with the Monetary Research Division of the United States Treasury.

	Per ounce
As reported by the Department of Commerce:
Bombay, Jan. 9, 1946	$1.10
Baghdad, September 1945	1.06
As reported by Federal Reserve System in Washington:
Greece	(1)
Argentina	(1)
Chile	(1)
Alexandria, Feb. 4, 1946	1.16
Bombay, Feb. 7, 1946	1.16
Iraq, September 1945 (bwt.)	1.03, 1.11
As reported by United States Treasury:
Bombay, March 1946	1.16

No silver quotations reports from other countries.

ACT REDUCING PERCENTAGE OF GOLD SECURITY ON PAPER MONEY

Gentlemen of the committee, the Congress has by recent enactment reduced from 40 to 25 percent the gold security for the paper money in circulation in the form of Federal Reserve notes. This has been done at a time when the statements of the Federal Reserve and the Treasury disclose the money and credit of this country is supported by a total of $107,700,000,000 in Government bonds, held by the banks as security for the money and commercial credit supplied by the banks and in everyday use to finance business in this country (exhibit No. 8, p. 48, Treasury Bulletin, February 1946).

Would you turn to that, Mr. Chairman? It is on page 48 of the Treasury Bulletin for February 1946. You will see it indicated there.

Senator HAYDEN. I have it.

AMOUNT OF GOVERNMENT BONDS HELD BY INSURANCE COMPANIES

Congressman WHITE. In addition to this the very heart of our national financial security is at stake in the Government bonds held by the insurance companies—bonds which represent the security of the dependents and loved ones in every city, town, hamlet, and community in America and totaling, according to the report made in the Treasury Bulletin for March, $22,400,000.

AMOUNT IN TRUST FUNDS

But that is not all. We have in the Treasury as shown in the February 15, 1946, Daily Treasury Statement, a sacred trust for those that labor in this country, the funds that have been gleaned from the laborers themselves and their employers in industry, $15,357,949,486.13. This amount is composed of:

Old-age survivors trust fund	$7,137,583,177.55
Unemployment trust fund	7,497,917,024.83
Railway retirement funds	722,449,283.75

Practically all of these trust funds are represented by Government bonds now on deposit in the Treasury. Less than 1.2 percent of this total amount is cash, which amounts to—as shown for all three by the Treasury statement—$187,342,056.13, and this cash itself is simply another form of Government credit (exhibit 9 on p. 17, exhibits 10, 11, p. 18, Treasury Statement, February 15, 1946.)

We know that with all the Treasury gold obligated as security for the paper money in circulation (exhibit 12, Treasury Statement, March 6, 1946), we have a pitifully small reserve of silver that today is worth its monetary value in most all parts of the world.

SALE OF SILVER AT MONETARY PRICE WOULD HELP SECURE GOVERNMENT OBLIGATIONS

Gentlemen, if these silver industrialists must have the Treasury reserves of silver, let them pay the monetary price for it, dollar for dollar, and thereby preserve a part of the small security we have for our Government obligations, bonds held in sacred trust on behalf of the toilers of our Nation for the security of their dependents and loved ones. Let us keep these reserves either in silver or its equivalent in good American dollars that these bonds may not depreciate into mere pieces of paper.

The insurance companies are holding their accumulations of premiums paid in, and they have converted into bonds and are holding $22,000,000,000 of Treasury bonds for the security of everybody that holds an insurance policy

Now, gentlemen, I would like to read to you a letter which I received from Mr. H. D. White, the moving spirit of Bretton Woods and Assistant Secretary of the Treasury, concerning the exchange value of silver.

Before I read it, there is one little matter I would like to call to the attention of the committee. I have had, for the information of the Senators, Elmer Lewis compile in the document room a list of all the Federal Reserve acts, and you will find in the files the Thomas amendment which gives the President the authority to set the price of bullion, and then we have the Gold Reserve Act; we have the Silver Purchase Act of 1934; and we have the Domestic Silver Purchase Act.

NO STATUTORY FIGURE SET FOR 71.11 CENTS

I might say in passing that with all the talk about 71.11, there is no statutory figure set for 71.11 in any of our laws concerning silver.

When the act was passed and signed on July 6, 1939, after 66 years, Congress in this country remonetized silver. It was demonetized in 1873, but by the act of July 6, 1939, domestic silver was remonetized, and it has remonetized today the domestic silver of the United States of America.

SILVER HAS BEEN REMONETIZED

If you are a producer you must provide an affidavit that the silver that is being brought in is newly mined silver and not old silver. Silver has been remonetized after 66 years, and the law provides that when a miner brings silver into the mint, the mint will take 45 percent for seigniorage and give the miner back 55 percent for himself coined into money.

Booker T. Washington

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. THOMAS A. JENKINS
OF OHIO
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Saturday, July 27, 1946

Mr. JENKINS. Mr. Speaker, those who are responsible for calling special attention to Booker T. Washington in a recent session of Congress are to be congratulated for their thoughtfulness.

At that time I made a few remarks with reference to this distinguished man but at that time I had made up my mind that at a later date I would speak at further length on the subject. At that time I stated that Booker T. Washington had not only left a great impression on the people of his own race but he had left a great impression on the white people of America.

While Booker T. Washington and Dr. Carver have achieved great distinction, we must not forget that there are literally hundreds of other very prominent Negro men and women in the United States who have rendered distinguished and outstanding service for their own people and for humanity in general. They have engaged in all the various fields of social and economic activity. Likewise, they have entered the professions and many of them have become great artisans and technicians.

In the field of the ministry and music more of them have achieved distinction than in any other of the various fields for the reason that Negroes have always shown great love for music and many of them have become very proficient musicians. Likewise, the colored man is distinctly religious and the colored ministers of the Nation have guided their people with grace, devotion, and ability.

If I were to sum up the most outstanding trait of character of the Negroes, I would stress their fidelity to those with whom they are associated and their patriotism for the American Nation. No group of people have been more faithful and loyal to their private duties and obligations and no people have been more patriotic for this great America for they have known no loyalty to any other country but America.

Recurring to Booker T. Washington, I want to say that I have read his autobiography with entrancing interest. He showed the marks of genius from a very early age and he grew into his fine character and fine service naturally and consistently. Booker T. Washington was not only a leader of his own race but he was truly a great American. His was not a hyphenated allegiance. He was for America from beginning to end and without apology.

The Negroes of America have every reason to be proud of the accomplishment of their people. I have the honor of representing a large number of Negroes who live in the six counties which comprise my congressional district. They are truly American and represent and typify the finest American ideals. I am proud and glad of this opportunity to make this public statement out of respect for their distinguished leader, Booker T. Washington.

Judge James P. McGranery

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. ABE MURDOCK

OF UTAH

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES

Friday, August 2 (legislative day of Monday, July 29), 1946

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. President, recently Hon. James P. McGranery, of Philadelphia, was appointed as United States District Judge from the Eastern District in Pennsylvania. As a member of the Judiciary Committee of the Senate I had the privilege and honor of voting to report favorably Mr. McGranery's nomination to the Senate, where it was confirmed unanimously and with no objection whatever.

I first became acquainted with Mr. McGranery when both of us were serving as Members of the United States House of Representatives. Immediately upon becoming acquainted with Mr. McGranery and observing his work as a legislator, I was thoroughly impressed with his great ability, his honor, integrity, and the fact that he was a fine American gentleman. He served for many years with distinction in the House of Representatives and then accepted the position as Assistant Attorney General in the Department of Justice where he continued to serve his country well and added to the wide host of friends he had made in the House. While he was in the Department of Justice, and owing to the fact that I was a member of the Judiciary Committee of the Senate, I frequently came in contact with Jim McGranery, as he is affectionately known to all of his friends. I always found him enthusiastically willing to cooperate, to be helpful, and to serve. All of his friends will miss him here in Washington, but our good wishes will attend him in his high position as Federal judge. It is my hope that he will be able to come to Washington frequently and continue his associations with us.

I have here, Mr. President, an editorial from the Philadelphia Record, an outstanding newspaper of Jim McGranery's home State, which very eloquently pays tribute to him. I ask that it be included in the Appendix of the RECORD.

There being no objection, the editorials were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

JUDGE JAMES P. M'GRANERY

President Truman's appointment of James P. McGranery to a Federal judgeship brings a man of great experience and ability to the court in this eastern Pennsylvania district.

He is coming home to Philadelphia, to an honored place on the bench, after serving the Nation so well in Congress and, since 1943, as the assistant to the Attorney General.

Jim McGranery is a liberal—the real article. Liberalism in its judges is one of the greatest assets a court can have.

McGranery began his career as an electrotyper. He has climbed the ladder of personal success. Unlike many others, he has retained sympathy for less fortunate people and understanding of their problems.

He still carries his union card.

Not once that we can recall did McGranery fail to fight for the liberal side of an issue during his 7 years of service in the House of Representatives.

House Democrats early recognized the stature of this man Philadelphia first sent to Congress in 1936. They named him to the powerful House Ways and Means Committee, a post seldom given one so young.

In 1943 President Roosevelt chose him to be the assistant to the Attorney General—to supervise the FBI, the Bureau of Immigration, the United States attorneys and marshals throughout the country.

Jim McGranery, his talents again acknowledged by Presidential favor, is coming home.

Welcome home, Jim. Best wishes, Judge.

Lynching in Georgia

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. WILLIAM T. GRANAHAN

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, August 2, 1946

Mr. GRANAHAN. Mr. Speaker, the lynching of four Negroes in Walton County, Ga., on July 25, demonstrates the immediate need for the most stringent of antilynching laws carrying the supreme penalty for those perpetrating such crimes.

In a civilized country it seems hardly necessary that antilynching laws be written into the laws of the land. However, that need becomes very real in the light of recent events which undermine the orderly process of law in the community. The bigotry and hatreds which have given rise to lynching—the most flagrant abortion of justice—are crimes which we must not and will not tolerate. We cannot have order without law, and disorder is inevitable when our laws are transgressed.

Even a cursory examination of root causes of such an outburst of violence reveals that it stems out of the denial of the civic rights of minority groups Americanism is not measured in terms of race, creed, or color, and yet in Georgia and elsewhere in the South we witness the deliberate denial of human rights granted all Americans under our Bill of Rights. So long as the wholesale subjugation of minority rights is allowed to continue we will have terrorism and violence. And in Southern States where the oppression of the Negro is the rule rather than the exception, democracy is a myth.

The forward step which democracy took in Georgia with the election of Ellis Arnall to the governorship was banished in the nomination of Gene Talmadge to that office. Unless the liberal element in Georgia makes its voice heard above the rabble of the Ku Klux Klan the chasm between order and disorder will be deepened until Federal intervention is an absolute necessity.

I am happy to commend President Truman's prompt response to an appeal for action in a matter of transcending importance to the well-being of all minority groups, be they in Georgia, Tennessee, or in any other State where rights are threatened.

America is an amalgamation of minority groups and as a consequence our rights are one and indivisible. I strongly urge Congress and all Americans to demand that those rights be enforced. The rights of the Federal Government supersede State rights, and it is therefore of the utmost importance to the Nation that those guilty of the lynchings in Walton County be apprehended and brought to justice.

Speak Up for Democracy

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. CHARLES A. WOLVERTON

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, August 2, 1946

Mr. WOLVERTON of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, today, as different foreign ideologies and philosophies of government are being urged, it is appropriate and necessary for patriotic Americans to speak up for democracy. It is a matter of vital importance to every American citizen that the American system of government shall be preserved.

Abraham Lincoln once declared, "This Government cannot endure permanently half slave and half free." In speaking up for democracy we are simply speaking up for that spirit of freedom which Abraham Lincoln declared is vital to the security of America. It is our duty, as patriotic citizens, to work for the cause of Americanism in times of peace as well as in times of war. The democratic form of government as we know it in America, is the best form of government in existence today.

What does democracy mean to us? We often think of democracy as a political abstraction or a figure of speech. Actually every American benefits by it 24 hours a day. Striking contrasts between living in a democracy and under a dictatorship, are set forth by Edward L. Bernays, noted author and publicist, in his recently published book Speak Up for Democracy, a blueprint of action for all patriotic Americans.

Here in America, we read our morning newspaper and know that our news comes to us uncensored by the Government. Freedom of the press exists. This is guaranteed to us by article I of the Bill of Rights. It may be an outspoken attack on the President or other person high in the Government for some action which does not meet with the approval of the writer. Or we read that the defendant in a sensational trial is tried openly in court before his peers. That is guaranteed by article VI of the Bill of Rights.

We turn on the radio. Again we know that what we hear has not been censored by your Government with respect to the opinion expressed. It is again article I that assures us this privilege. We call up a friend on the telephone. He is free to express himself as he desires. He knows that no secret police, such as the Gestapo, NKVD, or the GPU, is listening. Again the right of free speech prevails—under article I. We get a letter uncensored—our right under the constitutional amendment on freedom of expression—article I. The doorbell rings. We are not terrified. We fear no Gestapo, GPU, or other secret policeman. We are protected by article IV. We take our children to public schools, where they come in contact with other children from different walks of life. We go to work and carry on our business. We buy and sell to whomever we want, restricted only by law arrived at through democratic processes. We may go to a meeting of employer and employees. Men are free to create a union to bargain with their employer. During the day we express ourselves freely about a proposed Government tax. We get appeals in the mail for funds for two political parties, and we send a contribution to the one of our choice, or throw them both in the wastebasket.

On the way home from work, we may listen to a soap-box orator praising a political party not in power. We may not agree with the speech or the views expressed by the speaker, but we are glad we had the right to listen in. Article I says that is our privilege.

In the evening, we hear a radio forum. Two sides of a highly controversial question are discussed by men of opposite convictions. Before we go to bed, we send a wire to our Congressman urging him to do something about a specific law—article I. We go to sleep without fear that during the night secret police will invade our home and carry off a member of the family to a concentration camp. No policeman can enter our home without a warrant issued by a court through due process of law—a court order—article IV.

In a dictatorship government, the day has a different character. Let us look for a moment at a typical day in a country where that form of government is in power.

When a person in such a country gets up in the morning, there may be a knock at the door. It may be the secret police to arrest a member of his family, who may never be heard from again. The telephone rings. Who knows what threat there may be in the voice at the other end of the wire, or who may be listening in for something to be used against him? A man reads his newspaper, a government-controlled publication. It is censored, offers no real news, no real contact with the world, plenty of propaganda. He turns on the radio; again government regimentation. And no listening to foreign short-wave broadcast under threat of arrest or even worse.

He gets a letter. Of course, the letter has been censored by the dictatorship government. The man who wrote did not dare to say what he wanted to anyway.

He walks to the office. Every time somebody looks at him in the street, he wonders if it can be the secret police waiting to pick him up. Finally he gets to his desk, furtive, worried, and knows that he is being watched even here by his associates, knows he is subject to any arbitrary edict put out by the man in power in his district. He pays his taxes, heavy ones, but has no voice whatever in his government. His business and social contacts are restricted; he dare not be seen with the wrong people. His spiritual life is restricted. The state tells him what he may say and hear and think and do and believe, or suffer serious consequences. He goes to lunch at his favorite restaurant, but it is closed. The proprietor has vanished—no one knows where or why. But he suspects it is because the poor fellow failed to comply with some rule of life as fixed for him by the government. Perhaps he failed to obey some instruction from a government underling.

On the way home from work he is met by a party solicitor. He contributes more than he can afford because he has to. He would like to read some foreign newspapers or literature, but that is forbidden. And so he picks up one of the propaganda sheets prepared under government supervision, reads what he knows to be lies.

These two ways of life are opposite. They show fundamental differences in the two systems of living—one, democracy, giving every man opportunity for free expression; the other—tyranny, making him the slave of the state and of the dictator who rules. The liberties under democracy spring from the fundamentals of the system itself, the Constitution. The Bill of Rights, the first 10 amendments, create the groundwork for our mode of living. The writers of the Constitution also wrote into the document itself several broad delegations of power which have taken on increased importance in recent years, due to their interpretation by the United States Supreme Court. The Court has given these clauses broader meaning. This, in turn, has widened the power of Congress to deal with present-day situations not envisioned at the time the document was written. In this way, too, the Constitution has remained a flexible document, making the Congress, as the representative of the people, able to deal with the increasing needs of the people, as in social welfare legislation.

In dictatorship countries there are no guaranties of the civil rights of the citizen or subject of the state. The individual does not count. Universities teach in a prescribed manner only those subjects sanctioned by the government. Research of scientific laboratories is censored. Even science must square with government doctrine. The policy of the communications media is dictated by the government. For instance, all books, whatever their literary merit, or renown, which do not express the official attitude of the government may be publicly burned, their authors hounded into concentration camps, exile, or death. In some dictatorship countries labor is forced to organize by the state, and is controlled by the government, instead of controlling itself. Labor organizations are an instrument of the state, not of the workers.

No political party is permitted except the government party. No criticism of the government is tolerated. Opposition is quashed by confinement in concentration camp or death.

Freedom of religion, when it exists, is only nominal. The persecution of religions is drastic. It is aimed at Protestants, Catholics, and Jews.

Dictator countries have large standing armies, a dictator's powerful weapon. These armies are conscripted at all times, not only in case of emergency. The liberty of civilians is never allowed to interfere with the army.

A dictatorship government has no scruples against ransacking a man's possessions on a trumped-up charge, or on no charge at all, and carrying off anything found which may be used against him, to prove anything the government cares to make it prove. Looting is a secondary and common result. This puts a man at the mercy of despots and personal enemies.

In dictatorship states, groups and individuals not liked by those in power, have been deprived of their property without any compensation at all.

Under a dictatorship, a man against whom some government official bears a grudge may be snatched from his own home, on some mysterious charge of which he is not informed, and without benefit of counsel, and brought to trial.

The verdict is almost certainly determined beforehand—before a prejudiced judge in a secret court. He may not even be permitted to state his own case. He may be condemned and sentenced to a concentration camp or to death. The secrecy of the whole procedure may be so despotic that the world, perhaps even his own family, never learns what has happened to him.

It is interesting to observe that the forms of constitutionalism are often preserved in dictatorship states, but they are meaningless. Due process of law does not function. A dictatorship state is based upon two principles, the opposite of our democratic principles: First, the all-importance of the state, the belief that the state exists over and above the will of the people, with a complete disregard for the individual's rights or needs; second, the absolute authority of the dictator, the one individual in whom all the powers of the state are vested and who alone makes all decisions.

It is vital for each and every one of us to know what democracy means to us in our daily lives. We must also realize what the alternative to democracy—dictatorship—means to those who are subjected to it. This knowledge will put a stop to the short-sighted and loose talk of those who would choose a dictatorship in preference to our own American way of life. The advocates of the "ism" philosophies—and there are too many of them among us—can be stopped if all of us speak up for democracy.

It is the duty of every patriotic citizen of America to speak up for democracy whenever and wherever they have an opportunity. This is what each can do, as an individual citizen, to protect our Americanism and the glorious heritage of freedom entrusted to us by our ancestors. In memory of those great patriots who all through our history as a Nation have helped to establish the America we love, speak up for democracy.

The United States Treasury Silver Operations—III

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. COMPTON I. WHITE

OF IDAHO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Saturday, July 27, 1946

Mr. WHITE. Mr. Speaker, this is the third installment of the record of the hearing of the Senate Appropriations Committee considering the bill to establish the selling price of Treasury-owned silver.

The record of the Treasury silver transactions is deemed so important in connection with the stability of our monetary system that I have inserted it in a series of extensions, the last installment submitted herewith for the information of my colleagues:

LETTER FROM ASSISTANT SECRETARY OF THE TREASURY ON COINAGE VALUE OF SILVER IN FOREIGN COUNTRIES

But referring to the letter from Mr. White, it reads as follows:

"DEAR MR. WHITE: In further reply to your letter of March 16, asking for the coinage value of silver in Baghdad, Cairo, Greece, and Argentina, the following information is submitted:

"In Greece, silver coins were withdrawn from circulation in 1940 and 1941 when, as a result of the inflation, it appeared that their face value would be less than the value of the silver in the coins as metal. As far as is known to us there are no silver coins in circulation at the present time.

"In Argentina, no silver has been coined since 1884. No old issues of Argentine silver coins are reported to be in circulation.

"In Egypt, the coinage value of silver, in terms of United States dollars at the current exchange rate, for Egyptian pounds maintained by the Egyptian foreign exchange authorities, is $1.103 per fine ounce. In addition to Egyptian coins, silver coins of other nations circulate in Egypt.

"In Iraq, the coinage value of silver, in terms of United States dollars at the current exchange rate for Iraq dinars, is $1.396 per fine ounce.

"It is regretted that our previous letter to you gave rise to a misunderstanding. We understood you to desire information on the open market price of silver rather than on the coinage value. Our use of the term 'coinage value,' in this letter refers to the face value of the coins that can be made up out of an ounce of fine silver, under the statutes of the particular country."

TREASURY AUTHORITY TO SELL SILVER AT COINAGE VALUE OF METAL

I want to say in conclusion that if the OPA ceiling price on silver were removed the Treasury has the authority, under existing law, to sell silver at the coinage value of the metal. To quote from one section of the Silver Purchase Act of 1934, section 4:

"Whenever and so long as the market price of silver exceeds its monetary value or the monetary value of the stocks of silver is greater than 25 percent of the monetary value of the stocks of gold and silver, the Secretary of the Treasury may, with the approval of the President and subject to the provisions of section 5, sell any silver acquired under the authority of this act, at home or abroad, for present or future delivery, at such rates, at such times, and upon such terms and conditions as he may deem reasonable and most advantageous to the public interest."

Senator HAYDEN. The object of that statute was to prevent a wild rise in the price of silver.

Congressman WHITE. Well, Mr. Chairman, we passed the Silver Purchase Act, and it did not come to our committee due to the fact that there was a tax feature included in it, and it went to the Ways and Means Committee. When the act was passed it contained a license provision.

SILVER-TAX PAYMENTS

I was surprised to find the statement of the silver fabricators that they are paying a bullion tax. I know that the miners are paying a tax.

Senator HAYDEN. The statement was that there was a 20-percent excise tax on manufactured silver, such as silverware.

Congressman WHITE. The Treasury gets two cuts out of this silver. They get the bullion tax that the producer pays, and they get the excise tax that the silver people pay.

I want to correct the impression that was left by the silver fabricators. There is a ceiling on flatware, and I think this hearing will bear me out. The evidence given here the other day was that flatware constituted about 40 percent of the silver fabricated by the manufacturers. Flatware is tableware, spoons and things like that. Anything else is hollow ware, such as trays, urns, cake stands, etc. Then we have on top of that jewelry.

Mr. Chairman, I am prepared to demonstrate to this committee the silver situation here in Washington, in the District of Columbia, by an actual demonstration by the Bureau of Standards.

It is now 12 o'clock, and I would like for that part of my presentation to go over until it can be demonstrated here and some of these men can get an illustration of what the silver situation is, and I would be very happy to answer any questions about silver, because if there is anything that I made a study of since coming to Washington 12 years ago to represent the people of the great State of Idaho it is money.

Senator HAYDEN. Let me ask you: Is there anything else you desire to have included in the record?

Congressman WHITE. I think, Mr. Chairman, that that is sufficient. I have made these citations in preparing this article, and anybody that is disposed to can investigate and check on the entire situation, commencing with the laws under which the Treasury operates, and the going through the daily Treasury statements and then going to the monthly circulation statements, and from that to the Treasury monthly bulletin.

SILVER DOLLARS ON HAND AND IN CIRCULATION

It might surprise some people to find that for a long period the Treasury has had $500,000,000 in silver dollars, and of that half billion there is only about 50,000,000 of those silver dollars out in circulation.

SILVER RETIRED FROM CIRCULATION

I would like to say this to the members of the committee. There has been a good many fallacious statements put out about money and silver; you might call those statements "misrepresentations," if you please. They harp on the fact that silver is unpopular and that nobody wants to carry it. The English have demonstrated over and over again, in India and in other places, that it is mighty easy to retire silver from circulation.

When the trader, store owner, or bazaar keeper comes to the bank with his deposits of silver coin, the next day when he comes to withdraw his money he gets it in paper, and it is true in the United States and in every section of the United States except in the West. When a man brings in his silver money and deposits it, he never sees the silver dollars again. It is mighty easy for the bank to take silver out of circulation and shout that nobody wants silver and that it is unpopular. I think that is one of the biggest fallacies that has been put over on the people of the United States. Silver is the most popular coin we have, and everybody likes to have it. Out West, if anybody doesn't carry at least five silver dollars in his pocket he would be called a sissy.

CURRENCY PRINTED AT GOVERNMENT EXPENSE

I would like to call to the attention of the committee that for practically all the small paper currency, small bills, and silver certificates, are printed at Government expense, there is an object in the banks wanting to have it that way. The Government itself has to stand the cost of reprinting and reengraving silver certificates, and the small ones circulate with accelerated rapidity, they wear and they tear and as a result of that, the Government has to stand the huge cost of reprinting. The banks pay for printing the bills of larger denominations.

I am told in the old days, before we got into this big bond production, that the cost of operating the Bureau of Engraving was $10,000,000 a year, and about half of that was for printing small bills, so the banks said "If you will circulate silver certificates, circulate small ones."

INCIDENT OF CURRENCY EXCHANGE

One amusing incident that happened the other day over in the office of the Sergeant at Arms comes to my mind that I would like to tell you about. One of my colleagues laid down a $20 bill, a brand new Federal Reserve note. He asked for change and he got back three 5's, five 1's, all silver certificates. I asked the cashier, "Do you know that Uncle Sam just made $10 on that transaction?" He looked at me in surprise and I said, "You know, there is only silver behind the silver certificate that costs Uncle Sam only $0.50 an ounce. You have put out $20 in silver certificates in exchange for a Federal Reserve note that cost the owner 100 cents on the dollar, so Uncle Sam made $10 in the trade."

I just cite that illustration to show what is going on with money.

Senator HAYDEN. Are there any questions anyone would like to ask Congressman WHITE?

Senator GREEN. There are a few things I have in mind, but just now there is one question I would like to ask of Congressman WHITE.

Senator HAYDEN. All right.

FOREIGN SILVER PRICES

Senator GREEN. You spoke of foreign silver prices on page 5 of your written memorandum. Do you mean by foreign silver prices "coinage prices"?

Congressman WHITE. I want to say this to you. The price of silver in foreign markets is higher than the coinage value.

LEGAL-TENDER FEATURE IN INDIA

Now, there is something I want to tell you that happened in May 2 years ago. The English Government for India withdrew the legal-tender feature from the pure silver coin and put out instead, and made legal tender, a coin of 500 fine, which meant that half of that alloy was pewter metal, and the silver coin is no longer legal tender in India. As a result, when India comes to us to buy, or when any of these orientals come to buy with this alloyed coin we take it on a pure silver basis, but the English, by reducing the silver content, cut the purchasing power of this money to our disadvantage in the Orient and in India. Thus they reduced the purchasing power by half of the current face value of the coin in domestic use. That should be interesting to you and there was a similar situation at the end of the First World War.

SITUATION ON ENGLISH DEBASED COINS

When the English debased their subsidiary coins by melting it down and reducing it from 9.25 fine to 5.00 fine, they extracted 90,000,000 ounces of silver from the pockets of the people by melting down this coin and replacing the silver with alloy, and they marketed this silver extracted from their coinage and got away with it without breaking the market. That worked so fine that pretty nearly all of the other countries followed suit.

CONDITIONS SUBSEQUENT TO INDIA'S REESTABLISHMENT OF CREDIT

When this 200,000,000 ounces of silver that was taken out of our Treasury and sold to save the credit of England in India under the Pittman Act, when they finally got their credit reestablished in India, the first trick that they did was shift India from old gold-exchange basis to a gold-bullion basis. That did not seem of much significance to us, but what happened was that later on when an Indian came in with his rupee note and wanted redemption they said, "If you can come in with $8,000 we will redeem it." There were very few Indians who had $8,000, but when a few in a syndicate got together and brought in their rupee notes and presented them to the bank, the banker simply went to the vault and brought him out an ingot of gold bullion and handed it to him. The poor Indian was helpless. He could not circulate it. He could not cut it into anything, so they very effectively put India on a fictitious gold standard. Further, they retired silver as fast as it came in from circulation and replaced it with these paper rupee notes and they said. "We have a surplus of silver that is needless. Let us sell it." So they proceeded to sell that silver on the market and they broke the price of silver to $0.25 an ounce and then what happened? If anybody was reading the papers at that time, they read a report from China that the wharves and docks were filled with wheat and flour, imported from this country and it could not be moved to the interior, and there was no market for wheat as you know 60 percent of our wheat is always to be found in an outlet for export. We had the wheat left on our hands and the price dropped to $0.19 a bushel in the country out of adjustment and that was the starting point of the depression.

SILVER AN IMPORTANT FACTOR IN ECONOMY AND FOREIGN TRADE

Silver is a tremendously important factor in our economy and in our foreign trade.

If Mr. Hoover and Mr. Mellon had had the sense to do the thing that was done by the succeeding administrations in supporting the price of silver, we would have been spared much of the disastrous effect of that depression.

MEANING OF FOREIGN SILVER PRICES

Senator GREEN. My question still is: By foreign silver prices you meant foreign silver coinage prices? That is my question.

Congressman WHITE. That has been very clearly answered by Mr. Harry White as to what he meant in making that report. The reports state it is the bullion value of the silver. I went to the British Empire unit and had them analyze the reported price because a question was raised by a banker in California and the head of the mining association who came back for an explanation said that the bankers there scoffed at the figures I gave them. I can bring in those people who made the analysis. They work in the British Empire unit, the Federal Reserve Bank Research Section, and the other, to prove to you that I quoted the bullion value of silver in the foreign country.

Senator GREEN. My question still is: In order to know their significance, we have to know what you mean by that when you say "foreign silver prices."

Congressman WHITE. I mean very distinctly and emphatically the bullion value of silver in those several countries, and if you want further verification, I will be happy to go to the British Empire Unit of the Department of Commerce, to the Monetary Research Division of the Treasury, and to the Research Division of the Federal Reserve Bank and lay the thing on your table.

Senator GREEN. You do not mean then "market prices"?

Congressman WHITE. "Bullion price" and "market price" are one and the same, the way I understand it.

Senator GREEN. If that is so, how do you explain this letter that was written to you by Mr. White?

Congressman WHITE. That is supplemental to the original report, I would say to the gentleman from Rhode Island.

COMMENTS ON LETTER FROM ASSISTANT SECRETARY OF TREASURY CONCERNING VALUE OF FOREIGN SILVER

Senator GREEN. In his letter to you of March 29, 1946, he says:

"Coinage value of silver in Iraq, coinage value of silver in Egypt—and no silver has been mined in Argentina, and there was no coinage in Greece."

Then he goes on to say:

"It is regretted that our previous letter to you gave rise to a misunderstanding. We understood you to desire information on the open market price of silver rather than on the coinage value."

So, apparently, in his first letter, he gave you the open market price of silver?

Congressman WHITE. That is correct.

Senator GREEN. And in this letter he gave you the coinage value?

CONTENTS OF SILVER IN COINS

Congressman WHITE. That is correct. But the alloy of silver is a much larger percentage of this coin. There is no place a 9.25 fine coin. Further, in some countries there is less than 10 percent silver in the coin. That was where the confusion was that I wanted to clear up. I can bring that letter and make it available to you to show you what little portion of silver is used in the subsidiary coinage of those several countries, and with that information it is very difficult to get the actual bullion value.

Senator GREEN. These figures are not the market prices because he corrects them and says that they are the coinage prices; is that right?

Congressman WHITE. That is the way I interpreted the letter. You are free to interpret it as you see it.

Senator GREEN. I have no further questions.

Senator HAYDEN. Are there any further questions?

(There was no response.)

Senator HAYDEN. If not, we thank you, Congressman WHITE.

Congressman WHITE. Do I understand that we will have the Bureau of Standards make this demonstration at some other time?

Senator HAYDEN. Yes; we will be glad to have them.

Senator GREEN. What is the nature of the demonstration?

Congressman WHITE. It will show the weight of silver in the dollar.

Senator GREEN. Does anyone have anything further?

Speech of Hon. Carroll Reece, Chairman of the Republican National Committee, Before the Executive Committee of the Young Republican National Federation, at the Statler Hotel, Washington, July 20, 1946

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. RALPH A. GAMBLE

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, August 1, 1946

Mr. GAMBLE. Mr. Speaker, permission has been granted me by the House for insertion in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of a speech of the chairman of the Republican National Committee, the Honorable CARROLL REECE, before the executive committee of the Young Republican National Federation, meeting in Washington on July 20, 1946:

I am delighted to have this opportunity to meet today with representatives of Young Republicans from the various States, and to give to you my assurance that the Republican National Committee will do everything within its power to encourage political activity on the part of the voters of the younger generation. It is essential for the welfare, both of the party and of the Nation, that all young Americans take an active and informed part in politics. Politics, in its proper sense, should be the concern of all citizens. It is not something which should be left to a few political bosses, interested more in promoting their own selfish interests than the welfare of the Nation.

Self-government is the basis of our representative Republic. But self-government involves obligations as well as rights and privileges. It is not an automatic system. To make it work, the citizens must work at it. If they do not do so it is not too much to say that they are not worthy of self-government. We have bad government today because for 14 years we have been appointing bureaus to govern us to escape the responsibility of self-government.

The Republican National Committee looks upon Young Republican groups throughout the Nation not only as the training schools for the leaders of the Nation of tomorrow, but as the medium through which millions of veterans and young voters will be brought into the Republican ranks. We believe that by operating as integral parts of the regular Republican organizations in the various States, members of the Young Republican groups will obtain knowledge of the principles and the techniques of political activity which will enable them in the not too distant future to take over management of the affairs of the party. We believe that members of these groups should be given responsibilities and opportunities commensurate with their demonstrated abilities in the party organzation. In this way we can make certain of the constant flow of replacements so necessary to party success. Constant infusion of youthful recruits with the enthusiasm and ideals of youth is an absolute necessity for any political organization if it is to continue to be a vital force in directing the affairs of the Nation.

As an indication of the national committee's interest in encouraging participation by youthful voters in party affairs, I would like to mention that we have appointed a director of young Republican activities in the national headquarters. His responsibility is to encourage and coordinate the activities of young Republicans in the various State organizations and the national committee itself. We are all on the same team. We will all win or lose together. If we work together, I have no doubt that we will win; I have no doubt that we will win in the congressional elections this year, as well as in the Presidential election of 1948. In that connection, however, I would like to point out that first things come first. By that I mean that 1946 comes before 1948. We can't elect a Republican President in 1946, because there is no Presidential election this year. But we can elect a Republican Congress. If we win in 1946, the Presidential nomination in 1948 will be worth a great deal more to the candidate, whoever he may be, than it will be if we allow ourselves to lose this year.

It would be difficult for us to lose this year, even if we tried to do so. But one thing which, in my opinion, would greatly impair our chances this year would be for us to allow ourselves to become involved in maneuverings looking toward the selection of a Presidential candidate 2 years from now. This is no time to divide our forces.

The group which you represent is, generally speaking, composed of those who fought and won World War II. I know of no group which has a greater stake in the preservation of our free, representative, republican form of government. If it is preserved, you will live under that form of government much longer than those of us of the older generations. By the same token, if we allow it to be replaced by some form of government based upon an alien philosophy, you will have to suffer under that form of government much longer than the rest of us.

And regardless of what else may happen, yours is the generation which will have to pay a major part of the bill for the senseless extravagance and waste and maladministration under which we have suffered for the past 14 years. We now have a national debt of astronomical size. That debt must be paid. It cannot be paid during the lives of my generation. Indeed, it is improbable that it can be paid in the lifetime of your generation. But it must be paid unless it is to be repudiated—a course which would wreck our entire system of government and our entire system of economics. Therefore, since you will have to pay most of this debt, it behooves you to see that it is handled as efficiently and economically as possible. And, above all, that there be no needless increase in that debt for you and your children to pay.

A considerable part of the debt, of course, was incurred during the war. That could not be avoided. However, a Senate investigating committee during the past few weeks has been producing evidence indicating that at least some of our wartime expenditures were wasteful, to say the least. Doubtless there will be many more revelations of a similar nature.

But, quite aside from wartime expenditures, the Democrat administration increased the national debt by more than $34,000,000,000 during the eight peacetime years from 1933 to 1941. Furthermore, this same administration's budget for the present fiscal year contemplates additional increases in the national debt and expenditures of approximately five times the amount ever spent in any peacetime year before. Mr. Truman's predecessor in office was not noteworthy for economy in the spending of public money, but now we are presented with the question as to whether Mr. Truman is such a desirable luxury that he is worth five times as much as his predecessor.

This tremendous increase in the national debt, based upon deficit spending and necessarily involving the issuance of billions of dollars in currency, is really the basic reason for the high prices which we are now called upon to pay for many of the necessities of life. There is, however, an additional reason for these high prices, and it is one for which the Democrat administration is also responsible. I refer to what has been aptly termed the economic cannibalism of the Democrat administration, illustrated by its destruction of a considerable part of the tools of production. Leaving out of consideration war plants built for special wartime purposes, and completely useless for peacetime production, the value of our production facilities has declined many billions of dollars since the Democrat administration came into power. It will take years of hard work to bring these plants back into condition to produce the commodities which we need. That situation, of course, contributes to the shortages in essential commodities so noticeable today. The administration has accomplished this result by its policy of discouraging productive enterprise and encouraging labor disputes which impair the use of such plants as are still capable of operation.

This situation, because it exposes us to the danger of unrestrained inflation, has serious possibilities in the political, as well as in the economic field. We all know that Hitler's rise to power in Germany was facilitated by run-away inflation there. The same kind of a situation set the stage for Mussolini's rise to power in Italy. When the people lose confidence in the economic stability of their government, they also develop doubts about the integrity of the government itself.

That makes it easy for a plausible demagog to rise to power. Usually he does so by promising the people economic security in exchange for personal liberty. We have seen indications of that process in the United States during the past few years. The only way to halt this trend is to make sure that we retain our economic stability, and the only way to do that is to entrust the direction of our Government to a party which really wants to maintain economic stability and knows how to do it. We have had sufficient proof, I believe, that the party in power at the moment does not know how to do this, and we have had considerable proof that some highly placed representatives of that party are not interested in doing so.

One of the diabolical devices employed by those who seek to change our form of government is the use of words which have pleasant meanings, but very unpleasant connotations. We have been told for years that the program of the present administration is based upon the liberal philosophy of government. It has been liberal with other people's money, to be sure—liberal with your money and mine, and with the money which your children and grandchildren will be earning many years hence. But, in every other respect, it has been just the opposite of liberal. Liberalism is not a form of radicalism. Liberalism means a system of government under which individual liberties are safeguarded. A liberal is one who is willing to fight for the preservation of individual freedom against encroachments by government, whether that government be a monarchy or an overgrown and arrogant bureaucracy.

Radicalism has reached its full fruition in Russia today. I take it no one will want to argue that individual liberty exists in Russia. Thus radicalism and liberalism are completely antagonistic one to the other. I have said before, and I will repeat it frequently in the future, that there is no group in the United States which has fought harder or more consistently against the encroachments of government upon individual liberties than the Republican Party.

Therefore, the Republican Party is actually the liberal party in the United States. The opposition has objected to my statements along this line, and their frenzied denunciations constitute the best proof I know of that they object to my efforts to expose their misappropriation of the liberal label. There is an old adage which says that the feathers fly where the shot hits. You will see a great many more feathers flying before this campaign is over.

By way of evidence that the present administration is tainted with radicalism, and that there is a real drive to subvert our form of government, I wish to cite a recent statement by the Attorney General of the United States, Mr. Tom Clark. Speaking in Chicago before the Chicago Bar Association, Mr. Clark within the past few weeks declared:

"We know that there is a national and international conspiracy to divide our people, to discredit our institutions, and to bring about disrespect for our Government."

He added that it is "the method of communism and fascism to shackle democracy by indirection." He said further, that "no one but a complete crackpot can be deluded by what we see going on today." It was in that same address that Mr. Clark remarked that he saw no difference between fascism and communism. Neither do I.

It is encouraging, of course, that one official of the present administration has had the intelligence to see this danger to our form of government, and the honesty to admit it publicly. But the people want to know why this administration has allowed this radical infiltration to proceed unchecked for so many years. The fact that it has been allowed to proceed is conclusive evidence that it cannot be checked effectively so long as the Democratic Party remains in power.

We Republicans—young Republicans, middle-aged Republicans, and old Republicans—have a grim task to perform. We must throw out of power the administration which has permitted alien influences to subvert our Government, and which has all but wrecked our economic system. It is a task which we can perform if we all pull together. It is a task which must be performed if our American Republic is to be maintained.

Prosecutions Begun in Black Market Transactions in Lumber

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. ADOLPH J. SABATH

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, August 1, 1946

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, for many months, and at frequent intervals, I have called attention to the outrageous black-market operations of some lumber manufacturers, and I have demanded a thorough investigation aimed at putting a stop to this gouging of the American people, which also has had the effect of cutting off lumber for construction of houses.

I urged that the Department of Justice proceed against these criminal practices just as I urged the Department to proceed against tobacco and cigar manufacturers who fleeced smokers, and from whom millions were recovered by the Government in fines and penalties.

That I was justified in making these charges is shown by a section of the July report on the veterans' emergency housing program submitted by Mr. Wilson Wyatt, which I am inserting in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD to substantiate what I have said so often to the membership:

LUMBER BLACK MARKET

Following investigation by OPA, the Government on June 27 filed suits for $9,044,000 in treble damages against 40 lumber companies in Washington, Oregon, California, and Arizona for overceiling sales involving 65,469,000 board feet of lumber—enough to build some 6,500 VEHP homes.

While more publicized than most of the procedure of which they were a part, the suits filed in these cases were only 40 of several hundred similar but usually smaller cases, involving sales of lumber and other materials, filed during the same period throughout the country, but concentrated in producing areas in the West and South.

Types of illegal operation charged included: diversion of lumber to the shipper himself at a fictitious address, to be held fo resale; resawing without regrading; refusing to produce standard-size and turning out exclusively oversize lumber commanding a higher ceiling price and requiring remilling for construction use; upgrading; charging for more lumber than was delivered; cutting and delivering short lengths; illegal wholesale selling at retail prices, and plain overceiling sales, accomplished through on-the-side cash payments and similar common devices.

The Exorbitant Price of Manufactured Silver

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. COMPTON I. WHITE

OF IDAHO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Saturday, July 27, 1946

Mr. WHITE. Mr. Speaker, so much has been printed and so much has been said in testimony before congressional committees about the price of silver that, as chairman of the Coinage, Weights, and Measures Committee, I have arranged to put the matter to a test by going into the best jewelry stores of Washington and buying genuine sterling-silver articles of the three classes of silverware with the original price tags attached—first, flatware that is under an OPA price ceiling, and hollow ware and jewelry that is not under a price ceiling.

Then I enlisted the assistance of the Bureau of Standards who kindly sent their experts with a set of official balances that we might weigh and determine the true silver contents by weight and value balanced off with standard silver dollars and standard silver minor coin.

The record of the demonstration before the Senate Appropriations Committee is presented in a series of Extensions of Remarks, and the first installment is inserted herewith. This is made necessary by the rules limiting insertions to two pages and the press of work in committees and on the floor that did not allow the necessary time to prepare and submit the material to secure the required estimate before Congress adjourns.

STATEMENT OF HON. COMPTON I. WHITE, A REPRESENTATIVE IN CONGRESS FROM THE STATE OF IDAHO

PURPOSE OF SILVERWARE DEMONSTRATION

Congressman WHITE. Senator, in discussing the price of silver and silverware, there has been much testimony presented here that bears on the profits made from making and marketing sterling silverware. There is a matter before the committee of giving the committee a demonstration. I have taken it upon myself to go into the silver stores of Washington and buy sterling silverware at the retail price and bring it to the committee so that they may be informed as to the price of manufactured silverware. Also, I would like to introduce Mr. L. B. Macurdy, of the Bureau of Standards, and Mr. A. F. Beck, also of the Bureau of Standards, who have brought with them their balances, or official scales. It is our purpose to weigh the silverware that we have bought and balance each piece with silver dollars and fractional silver coins.

CLASSIFICATION, PERCENTAGE MADE, AND EXTENT OF CEILING PRICES ON SILVERWARE

There are three classes of silverware: First, there is plate. That is the rolled silver that is made into spoons and tableware. Next is the hollow ware which includes cake stands and all kinds of little silver service for tables and ornamental uses. The next is jewelry.

It is my information, from what I can learn of these silver dealers here in the city of Washington, and talking to the representatives of the International Silver Co., that flatware is only about 40 percent of silver goods made, and 60 percent is hollow ware and jewelry, and there is no ceiling on hollow ware and jewelry. The only ceiling is on plate. All plate is fabricated from processed silver, which is only 0.925 percent fine.

ELEMENT OF PROFIT IN PROCESSING SILVER

It might be explained, according to the testimony presented here, that the chief dealers in silver, Handy & Harman, take pure silver and process it into standard silver, which is 0.925 percent fine. There is quite an element of profit in that operation, because 10 percent of process silver is represented by copper. In fact, 10 percent copper goes into all our coinage.

Senator MCCARRAN. Does that mean that 12-cent copper is sold at $1.29?

Congressman WHITE. Processed into silverware, it is much higher than that.

Senator MCCARRAN. We get 12-cent copper and process it into silver and then sell it at whatever Handy & Harman can get for it. Is that it?

Congressman WHITE. I only want to present the bare facts to the committee.

SILVER DOLLAR IS 10 PERCENT COPPER

Senator MCKELLAR. Here is a silver dollar of 1890. Is 10 percent of that copper?

Congressman WHITE. Ten percent of every piece of silver, according to law, is 10 percent copper. According to law, every piece of standard silver is 10 percent copper.

FINDINGS IN DEMONSTRATION WITH FLATWARE (TEASPOON)

We will start the demonstration with a piece of so-called flatware, a spoon. I have a receipted bill which shows, "One teaspoon, $2.19; tax, 44 cents." The total is $2.63.

The representative of the Bureau of Standards, Mr. Macurdy, can give us the exact weight of that item in troy ounces.

STATEMENT OF L. B. MACURDY, CHIEF, MASS SECTION, WEIGHTS AND MEASURES DIVISION, UNITED STATES BUREAU OF STANDARDS

Mr. MACURDY. The teaspoon weighs 0.90 troy ounce.

Senator REED. Is that silver in that spoon?

Mr. MACURDY. The weight of the spoon is 0.90 troy ounce with 0.825 pure silver content, 0.83 of a troy ounce is pure silver.

COST OF TEASPOON

Senator MCKELLAR. What does that spoon sell for ordinarily?

Congressman WHITE. $2.63, the total, is made up of the base cost of $2.19 plus tax of 44 cents. This article was purchased from Woodward & Lothrop.

Senator MCKELLAR. How much would that be for a half dozen?

Senator TYDINGS. Is that retail?

Congressman WHITE. That is the retail cost, downtown.

Senator MCKELLAR. Is that 0.9 silver?

Mr. MACURDY. It is 0.925 silver.

Senator HAYDEN. Multiply that by 12, please. How much would a dozen of the spoons cost?

Mr. MACURDY. That comes out 10 ounces.

Senator MCKELLAR. How much would it cost?

Congressman WHITE. They are $2.63, minus the tax.

Senator MCKELLAR. Include the tax, because we have to pay the tax.

Senator HAYDEN. Multiply it by 12.

Senator TYDINGS. I think you ought to leave the tax off, because that has nothing to do with it, primarily.

Senator MCKELLAR. I would pay it if I went out and bought it.

COST OF DOZEN TEASPOONS

Congressman WHITE. $31.56 is the computation.

Senator TYDINGS. How much of that is Federal taxes?

Mr. MACURDY. That would be $5.28.

Senator TYDINGS. The Government takes $5.28 in taxes off of a dozen ordinary teaspoons.

Senator HAYDEN. Please proceed with your statement.

WEIGHT AND VALUE OF PURE SILVER IN TEASPOON

Mr. MACURDY. With 0.9-ounce silver, that will be 0.83 ounce of pure silver in the spoon. If silver is worth 71 cents, that will be 59 cents' worth of silver.

Congressman WHITE. Fifty-nine cents' worth of silver is turned into $2.63 by fabricating it and adding the tax.

Senator TYDINGS. Give me those figures again. If there is 59 cents' worth of silver in the article, and silver costs 71 cents an ounce, at $1.25 an ounce, how much would the silver in the article be worth?

Mr. MACURDY. That would be $1.04.

Senator TYDINGS. What are the other alternative propositions for the price of silver that have been suggested at this hearing?

Congressman WHITE. The price of silver in coinage value is $1.29. The compromise price has been suggested of $1.03.

Senator TYDINGS. At $1.29, how much would be the value of the silver?

Mr. MACURDY. That would be $1.07.

Senator TYDINGS Therefore, 59 cents is to $1.07 as $2.63 is to X. How much, therefore, would the spoon cost if the whole thing went up in proportion? That is, 59 cents is to $1.07 as $2.63 is to X. You know what the law of extremes and the means is. How much would that cost the consumer, assuming that the taxes and profits of the wholesaler, retailer, manufacturer, and transportation all went up as well? How much would it cost?

Congressman WHITE. The manufacturer claims——

Senator TYDINGS (interposing). What I want to know is the relationship of 59 cents worth of silver to $1.07 worth of silver, and $2.63 to X if the whole thing went up.

Senator MURDOCK. You have one constant in there, Senator, and that is the tax.

Senator TYDINGS. The tax would vary according to the selling price. There would be no constant at all.

Senator REED. It would be 1.8 to 1.

Senator MCCARRAN. Your ratio will not work out, because your expenses and wages and everything come into the thing. You cannot run a ratio on it.

Senator TYDINGS. I could not say the ratio will be absolutely constant, but I do say the ratio will be clearer in giving us an indication of how the increase of cost on silver will pass itself on with taxes and everything else. For example, if you pay 44 cents tax on the 59-cent-cost unit of silver, you will probably pay nearly twice that much on the $1.07 silver in taxes.

Senator MCCARRAN. However, you prove nothing by it, Senator.

Senator TYDINGS. I have shown the cost goes up and the consumer pays the bill.

Senator MCCARRAN. What is the cost of production?

Senator TYDINGS. Just let me get this information for which I have asked.

Mr. MACURDY. It would be $4.77.

PROPORTIONATE ADVANCE IN COSTS OF SILVER SPOON WOULD BE REFLECTED IN COSTS TO CONSUMER

Senator TYDINGS. So that, if all costs in the manufacture of that spoon at $1.07 for raw material in it were to advance proportionately as the cost of the silver has advanced at $1.07 over 59 cents, the price would be $4.77. If we were to subtract $2.63 from that, we would get a constant of almost 100-percent increase, provided all the factors went up in that ratio. They will not go up in that ratio, but at any rate, it proves that the increased cost of the silver content reflects itself in the increased cost to the ultimate consumer and that, I understand, was the burden of this exhibition here.

FINDINGS IN DEMONSTRATION WITH SILVER DOLLAR

Congressman WHITE. There is silver that cost $2.63, manufactured, and here is a silver dollar. They just about balance on the scales. The silver in a dollar at 71.11 amounts to 55 cents. That is only flatware. That is only a very small part of it.

Discussion as to cost of producing the silver

Senator MCCARRAN. Before you drop that subject, what is your cost of production and where does that figure into it?

Senator TYDINGS. What do you want to know?

Senator MCCARRAN. I want to know what the cost of production is, if that, as you say, went up on the ratio used by you.

Congressman WHITE. I will assume, for the sake of this illustration, that the cost of production is the same whether you pay 59 cents for the silver or $1.07.

Senator MCCARRAN. You cannot do that, because you will not get the silver under those conditions.

Congressman WHITE. Do you mean the cost of production in the shop of the silversmith or in the mine?

Senator MCCARRAN. I mean the cost of producing the silver in the first instance, the raw metal.

Senator MURDOCK. You also have the situation, Senator MCCARRAN, that your wages and nearly everything else has been up, and here we are on a silver basis of 71 cents, antedating 1939, whereas, throughout the world today you cannot buy silver at less than $1.15 or $1.20 an ounce.

Senator MCCARRAN. I want to show that you cannot work a ratio and a slide rule on it.

FINDINGS IN DEMONSTRATION OF AN ALLOY TEASPOON

Congressman WHITE. A very practical optical demonstration can be made: I have here a very well-made alloy spoon.

Senator MCCARRAN. You are now talking about the cost of production, in the processing of a spoon?

Congressman WHITE. Yes. This spoon is bought at a local five-and-ten store for 15 cents. I would like to pass this alloy spoon around the table for the members of the committee to see the fine workmanship it contains. There is the workmanship on this 15-cent spoon which you can compare with the workmanship on this $2.63 sterling silver spoon.

Senator MURDOCK. The point you are making here is that the alloy spoon, as far as workmanship and design are concerned, can compete with the silver spoon.

Congressman WHITE. That is right, Senator MURDOCK.

Senator MCCARRAN. In other words, the design and the workmanship does not change the situation; is that it?

Congressman WHITE. That is it. Also, it is stamped on the back. There is every mark of workmanship on that spoon that is on the silver spoon.

Senator GREEN. Mr. Chairman, in view of Senator MURDOCK's remarks about the cost of silver, I would like to state that I have evidence that silver has been sold or is for sale at much less than the price named. As evidence, I would like to put in one letter now from the Industrial Trust Co., Providence, R. I., dated April 12 of this year. It is directed to the president of the Gorham Manufacturing Co., Providence, R. I. I offer the letter in evidence.

(The letter referred to was read to the committee and is as follows:)

LETTER FROM INDUSTRIAL TRUST CO., PROVIDENCE, R. I., ON SILVER PRICES

INDUSTRIAL TRUST CO.,
Providence, R. I., April 12, 1946.

Mr. EDMUND C. MAYO,
President, Gorham Manufacturing Co.,
Providence, R. I.

DEAR MR. MAYO: At your request we cabled Mexico on April 11, 1946, asking for a firm price on silver for export from Mexico. We have received this morning a cablegram from our Mexican friends that a firm in Mexico City offers 500 kilos silver for spot delivery for export at $27.33 United States currency per kilo f. o. b. Mexico, provided they receive our reply not later than April 12. The cable further requests us to inform them if we are interested at the price quoted for an additional amount.

The price above stated works out according to our figures at about 85 cents, United States, per troy ounce.

Very truly yours,
W. G. MEADER, Vice President.

STATE OF RHODE ISLAND,
Providence, ss:

Then personally appeared before me W. G. Meader, to me personally known and known by me to be a vice president of Industrial Trust Co. and the person who signed the above, and he made oath that the above statement is true.

Before me:
WILLIAM M. KELLEY, Notary Public.
APRIL 12, 1946.
My commission expires June 30, 1946.

FINDINGS IN DEMONSTRATION WITH SILVER ASHTRAY

Congressman WHITE. The next article to be weighed is a silver ashtray, and the price is marked right on it, $6. It was purchased at Harris & Co., here in Washington.

Mr. MACURDY. The weight is 0.91 ounce.

Congressman WHITE. That article cost $6. That is the price to the public. You will note there is no art work connected with the fabrication of this article.

Senator TYDINGS. These are all retail prices; are they not?

Congressman WHITE. Yes.

Senator TYDINGS. These men are in the position of being manufacturers. There is nothing to stop me from buying a piece of silver for $1 and putting a $6 tag on it if I am avaricious.

Congressman WHITE. We have an Office of Price Administration that is established to protect the consumer and this is the price the consumer has to pay.

Senator TYDINGS. Do you mean to tell me that the Office of Price Administration has put a ceiling price of $6 on that ashtray?

Distribution of profit

Congressman WHITE. No. The contention is made here by these silver fabricators that retail prices of silverware are all right. I want to show that they are not. There is a demonstration. There is a $6 item weighing less than an ounce. If they get silver for 71.11 cents, there must be quite a lot of profit.

Senator TYDINGS. We do not know whether the wholesaler is getting it, the retailer, or who.

Congressman WHITE. The public is paying; we know that.

Senator TYDINGS. Until you show that the fabricator is making these profits, we have nothing to go on. We just cannot indict them.

Congressman WHITE. Senator, might I suggest that this committee has the power to bring in these retailers and analyze this problem and bring it out just as to where the profit is being made. I am unable to do that by going into the silver business. I have gone into it and made these purchases to the tune of about a hundred dollars.

Senator TYDINGS. This is very interesting, but the point I want to make is, we are here at the request of the silver manufacturers and not at the request of the silver retailers nor the wholesalers. The point is that the evidences as to what the retailers are doing may or may not be appropriate here as to the position of the manufacturers.

Congressman WHITE. The brides and the consumers want to buy silver. These are the prices they must pay. The analysis along the line of who gets the difference between 71.11 cents and $1.29, or who gets the benefits of that 58 cents on an ounce of silver that they want the Treasury of the United States to bear, that will be up to the committee to decide.

Tests of the Atomic Bomb at Bikini Lagoon

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. DEAN M. GILLESPIE

OF COLORADO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, August 2, 1946

Mr. GILLESPIE. Mr. Speaker, several Members of Congress were privileged to witness recent tests of the atomic bomb at Bikini Lagoon. At the request of the Appropriations Committee, and with your approval, Mr. Speaker, I was among this group. Having recently returned from the 40-day trip, I think it appropriate to make this report of my observations to my colleagues.

Leaving Washington June 22, aboard an Air Transport Command plane, we arrived at Kwajalein Friday, June 28, having stopped in Topeka, San Francisco, and Honolulu. We boarded the U. S. S. Panamint at Kwajalein and proceeded to the target area where we boarded many of the target ships to inspect materials, scientific instruments, and animals to be used in the test.

From our ship 20 miles away we viewed the terrific explosion of the July 1 test and steamed in to inspect the damage soon afterward. The target vessels were not boarded, however, as radio activity had not yet dissipated itself. Five ships in the target area were sunk, and eight others wrecked. One ship 2 miles from the center of the target area was set afire.

Damage resulting from the underwater atomic explosion July 25 is not yet entirely known, nor will a full report be possible until more scientific data is received. We know, however, that destruction was greater than in the first experiment.

I believe everyone who witnessed the destruction caused by these terrific explosions is of the opinion that this device must not be used in warfare. In fact, the fearful potentialities of the atomic bomb should serve as the best argument against the possibility of a future war. It is conceivable that two warring nations might entirely destroy one another in a short time if use of the atomic bomb is permitted in warfare.

The lull in activity between the tests afforded scientists, military and naval personnel, and Members of Congress the opportunity to tour neighboring points of interest. With Congressman JACK ANDERSON, of California, I made a trip to the new Republic of the Philippines, where we were graciously received by President Roxas, General Romulo, and Mike Elizalde, the newly appointed Ambassador to the United States.

Manila's population is vigorously clearing the debris from a completely devastated area where the old Manila stood. Their ambitious efforts should result in a new city rebuilt on the ruins of the old.

I found the Filipinos extremely friendly to Americans. They are proud of their recently acquired independence, but they are conscious of the great responsibility that goes with it.

We found United States military and naval personnel in good humor and doing a good job in the Philippines. Some of the boys are homesick, but most of them are well satisfied. From the Philippines our group flew to Shanghai, China.

From interviews with several UNRRA officials in Shanghai, I concluded that the organization was badly demoralized. Millions of dollars in goods from the United States are reaching China, but apparently they are not being distributed. Large quantities of foodstuffs and machinery can be seen spoiling or deteriorating on the docks. To prevent this waste, I am told UNRRA Director LaGuardia has ordered shipments to China stopped, except food.

An American machinery dealer in China told me of another incident involving UNRRA. He had sold an expensive item of heavy machinery to a Chinese industrialist who had paid in advance for his order. Several days before the shipment from the United States was to be made the industrialist canceled the order. When questioned he reluctantly admitted UNRRA had promised to deliver him identical machinery without cost.

A former UNRRA employee in Shanghai opined that no more than 2 percent of the foodstuffs reaching China were actually reaching starving Chinese.

If the American taxpayers could see what is happening to relief shipments in China, I am sure they would demand an investigation to stop the wanton waste of American money and property.

Despite inflation, Shanghai seems fairly prosperous. Skilled workingmen are paid about $10,000 a day in Chinese money to compensate for the fantastic prices. The standard of living has improved considerably, however, and most of Shanghai's population lives better now than it ever has before.

Before returning to Bikini, we spent several days in Tokyo interviewing United States military and naval personnel and Japanese officials.

We found the poor people of Japan well satisfied with the military government and in many cases living better now than before the war. They seemed to respect and admire Americans in general and many of them confided in us that they thought that within 5 or 10 years living conditions would be the best Japan had ever known and that their country would again become a useful nation in the world.

Although some real hunger exists in Tokyo, the people are struggling to better their lot. I believe they will work out their own salvation, if given a chance. Our own military government under General MacArthur is doing an excellent job.

Communists in the State Department, Like Mark Twain's Funeral, Are Greatly Exaggerated

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. ADOLPH J. SABATH

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, August 1, 1946

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, there are always a few willing to make any kind of charge, no matter how wild, unfounded, or dangerous in order to gain publicity. Some months ago I heard with concern some very sweeping statements to the effect that the State Department was honeycombed with communistically inclined employees who had pro-Russian sympathies; but I did not see any proof.

Having known the Honorable, the Secretary of State, Mr. James F. Byrnes, of South Carolina, for many years, and having known the Honorable Cordell Hull and the Honorable Edward Stettinius, former Secretaries of State, it seemed to me unreasonable to believe that any one of them would permit the employment in the State Department of any person whose fundamental loyalty to the United States could be, in the least degree, questioned.

COULD BE SMOKE SCREEN

It seems to me, in fact, that the loose charges being made might in truth be coming, indirectly, from sources which might be very much interested in throwing up a smoke screen of Red-baiting in order in hide a movement of growing strength to forgive our defeated enemies, the Germans, and to force out of the State Department individuals who would not view with favor the restoration of Nazi power.

To any pro-German groups or individuals who would favor soft treatment for the Nazis any kind of antifascism or antinazism would be assailed as procommunism, for people like that cannot understand nor appreciate the democratic foundations of the American way of life, nor believe in loyalty to America first, last, and always.

ONLY 40 TERMINATED

To ascertain the true facts, therefore, in fairness to all Government employees and to the State Department, I wrote to the Secretary of State making inquiry about these charges, and his reply is so illuminating that I am impelled to place his letter as well as my letter to him in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD for all to read.

Please note, Mr. Speaker, that the Secretary reports that out of 3,000 individuals whose records have been carefully scrutinized, not hundreds, but only 40 have been terminated for security reasons.

For the same security reasons, Mr. Byrnes does not specify the precise nature of the reasons for discharge, but he gives no evidence that anyone was "communistically inclined," and as I have said many times, these wild and reckless statements made on the floor and in newspapers are to be regretted. They were made, in my belief, to create prejudice in the public mind, and to discredit the administration; and I have no doubt that many of the cries of Communist infiltration actually came from individuals who had been turned down because of their German Nazi or Fascist connections.

MAY 24, 1946.

Hon. JAMES F. BYRNES,
Secretary of State,
Department of State,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. SECRETARY: It has been charged freely on the floor of the House by some Members that hundreds, if not thousands, of employees have been eliminated from the State Department by the screening committee because of communistic leanings or activities or membership. In the interest of fair play, I most respectfully request that you inform me on these facts:

1. How many employees actually were examined and their records and applications reviewed?

2. How many were separated from service and for what reasons, by categories?

3. Of those separated, how many actually were found to have political disability, and of what nature, strong enough to be the principal basis of their separations?

4. Specifically, how many were found to have Communist or communistic affiliations, and how many Nazi and Fascist affiliations, and was any investigation made of pro-Nazi or pro-Fascist sympathies or allegiances?

5. Who were the members of the screening committee, how were they designated, and, in broad terms, what were their criteria?

I ask this information in the interest of the thousands and thousands of hard-working Government employees in whom I have every trust and confidence, and of whom I believe at least 99 percent are loyal American citizens. Some recent statements that have been made to create resentment and prejudice and reflect against the Department of State have actually had the effect of casting reflections upon the loyalty of employees and former employees most unfairly and unjustly, and I think a full statement of the true facts will correct many general misapprehensions.

Respectfully yours,

A. J. SABATH,
Member of Congress.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, July 26, 1946.

DEAR ADOLPH: I have yours of May 24 expressing your concern with respect to certain allegations made on the floor of the House to the effect that "hundreds if not thousands of employees have been eliminated from the State Department by the screening committee because of communistic leanings or activities or membership." Such statements are incorrect and do a grave injustice not only to the employees of the Department but to Government employees as a whole, the great majority of whom are loyal American citizens. I therefore welcome this opportunity to answer your specific questions in the order in which they are presented.

(1) Pursuant to Executive order, approximately 4,000 employees have been transferred to the Department of State from various war agencies such as the OSS, FEA, OWI, OIAA, etc. Of these 4,000 employees, the case histories of approximately 3,000 have been subjected to a preliminary examination, as a result of which a recommendation against permanent employment has been made in 285 cases by the screening committee to which you refer in your letter.

(2) Of the 285 individuals who have been the subject of adverse recommendation as indicated in (1), above, the services of 79 have been terminated.

(3) Of the 79 actually separated from the service, 26 were aliens and therefore under "political disability" with respect to employment in the peacetime operations of the Department. I assume that factor alone could be considered the principal basis for their separation.

(4) With respect to the 79 thus separated, the following break-down is submitted:

Aliens	26
Failure to comply with foreign-service regulations, such as citizenship, for 15 years prior to foreign assignment and other reasons disqualifying the individual for service abroad	13
Close connections or involvement with foreign governments or their organs, past records indicating a high degree of security, risk, etc	40
Total	79

The Department is equally concerned with disclosing subversive activities or associations of all kinds whether Communist, Nazi, or Fascist, in any employees present or prospective.

(5) Because of the security considerations involved in the mission of the screening committee, I do not feel at liberty to disclose publicly the identity of its membership. This committee, incidentally, has no power or authority to eliminate anyone from employment in the State Department. It simply makes recommendations which the Assistant Secretary for Administration may accept or reject in whole or in part in the light of all the relevant evidence.

I hope what I have said above corrects any misapprehensions which you may have entertained as to the Department's personnel policy. Like any other administrative mechanism, it is not perfect. However, I am entirely clear that it has been fair to the Department's employees in its operation. It is my firm intention to see that it remains fair.

Sincerely yours,

JAMES F. BYRNES.

The Exorbitant Price of Manufactured Silver—II

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. COMPTON I. WHITE
OF IDAHO
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Friday, July 26, 1946

Mr. WHITE. Mr. Speaker, this is a continuation of the record of the hearing of the Senate Appropriations Committee having under consideration the bill to establish the selling price of Treasury-owned silver.

The facts concerning the price of silver and the use of the metal as money is deemed of such transcending importance that I have arranged to insert the record of this hearing in a series of extensions for the information of my colleagues. The second installment follows:

SILVER PRICE SHOULD BE $1.29 AN OUNCE

Senator TYDINGS. What do you think they should pay for this silver?

Congressman WHITE. I believe they should pay the coinage value of $1.29 an ounce. It is infinitesimal when you put it into the price the consumer must pay for silver over the coinage value.

Senator TYDINGS. Would it not be all right to take the silver out and replace it with other silver of the same quality?

Congressman WHITE. That would be selling the market short and getting spot delivery of the Treasury silver.

SILVER IS SERVING A DUAL PURPOSE

Senator TYDINGS. We would still have the silver in there.

Congressman WHITE. I want to call your attention to one fact: Silver is doing today what no other metal has ever done in the history of the world. It is serving a dual purpose. It is being used as a material in a nonconsumptive industrial use and at the same time is held as a backing for the issuance of our currency. There is about 40 percent of an item carried at the bottom of the Treasury statement, that is silver backing for our currency, and at the same time is being used industrially. This is the only time that has been done.

Senator MURDOCK. The Senator from Maryland might be interested in this advertisement from a retailer, showing that there is at least some effort on their part to keep the price of silver down, although here they are selling ashtrays at $6, with less than an ounce of silver in them.

SITUATION IN SHOPPING FOR SILVERWARE

Senator TYDINGS. In shopping for silver, all of us have had to buy a few wedding presents, or something, and my reaction is that the careful shopper can buy silver of quality, quantity, and type that is on that scale at a whole lot less than $6 an ash tray if he will look for it.

Senator MURDOCK. I might suggest this, that the fabricators of silver can find a lot of it out in the mountains and deserts of the West if they will go out there and get into the mining business instead of trying to raid the Treasury down here. They seem unwilling to do that.

Senator TYDINGS. I will take a commission right now, to furnish you those silver ashtrays, in volume, for not more than two-thirds of the price marked on there. Do I have any takers? Furthermore, I will not be an hour in getting them.

Congressman WHITE. I will say this to the Senator: He will not get it from a reputable firm. He will not get it from Harris & Co.

Senator TYDINGS. Where did this ashtray come from?

Congressman WHITE. Harris & Co. If you want the Harris brand on it and the Harris prestige, you will pay for it.

Senator TYDINGS. I do not want the Harris brand. I want a silver ashtray. I can go out and buy those at $3 apiece all over America.

VALUE OF SILVER IN ASHTRAY

Congressman WHITE. Well, Senator, I will take you not only to Harris & Co., but to one of your leading department stores in a minute, and give you a demonstration of that. I would like to bring attention, for the purpose of the record to the fact that that $6 ashtray weighed up $1.10 a silver dollar and a dime on the balance, and that the cost of the silver, calculated at 71.11 cents is 64 cents.

FINDINGS IN DEMONSTRATION OF SILVER ASH URN

Here is a silver cigarette urn purchased at Harris & Co. which I will ask Mr. Macurdy to weigh.

Senator GREEN. May I ask whether you consider that example of that ashtray that you have just mentioned, typical?

Congressman WHITE. I think it is very much so. I saw a silver tray in Woodward & Lothrop's worth $90 an ounce. It was an antique silver tray, but I did not bring that here.

Senator TYDINGS. I do not know much about the silver.

Congressman WHITE. I think it would be a good thing if the committee could have an exhibition of the proposition you suggested, Senator TYDINGS, because this is the price of the reputable companies down in Washington.

WEIGHT OF CIGARETTE HOLDER

This small cigarette holder, which is hollow ware, bought from Harris & Co., weighs 1.58 ounces.

DISCUSSION ON LAW GOVERNING MANUFACTURER'S TRADE-MARK

Senator GREEN. May I ask the witness one question about this ashtray: I believe the law is that the manufacturer's trade-mark shall accompany the mark "sterling."

Congressman WHITE. We can qualify on that, Senator. We will qualify not only on one, but six.

Senator GREEN. Will you kindly answer my question?

Congressman WHITE. I have not read all the laws of America.

Senator GREEN. Is there any manufacturer's mark on there?

Congressman WHITE. There is a mark on there, and it comes from a reputable house.

Senator GREEN. Where is the mark, other than "sterling"?

Congressman WHITE. If the Senator cites any provision of law with which he is familiar, I will have to plead ignorance, because I do not believe there is any such law, although it might be a custom. I would like the Senator, for the benefit of this committee, to show such a law.

Senator GREEN. I am only asking you the question. I will not ask you to be an authority on law. I am asking you whether there is any other mark visible there except "sterling."

Congressman WHITE. Yes; the price mark is on it.

Senator GREEN. I mean a marking stamped in the silver.

Congressman WHITE. It says "sterling," and it comes from Harris & Co., and it has a price mark on it.

Senator GREEN. Is there a manufacturer's mark?

Congressman WHITE. I did not see any manufacturer's mark.

Senator GREEN. May I ask the gentleman from the Bureau of Standards whether or not the law requires the manufacturer's trade-mark to be stamped on the article.

EXCERPT OF REQUIREMENTS FOR QUALITY MARKS

Mr. MACURDY. I have here a Commercial Standard, which is not a law, but is a voluntary agreement by the trade, and that agreement requires that a trade-mark should be put on. It is not law, though under "Requirements for quality marks" it says:

"Any article herein defined having applied thereto a quality mark shall also have applied thereto and immediately adjacent to such quality mark, and equally visible, legible, and distinct therewith, the name or trade-mark duly applied for or registered under the laws of the United States of the manufacturer or seller of the article. Initials shall not be used in place of a name unless registered as a trade-mark as above provided."

That is not a law; it is a voluntary standard.

COMMENTS ON BLACK-MARKET SILVER

Senator GREEN. In other words, from the point of view of the Bureau of Standards, that is what you might call bootleg, is it not? That would not be in accordance with the law you just read, because it is not immediately adjacent to it, if it is there at all.

Mr. MACURDY. It seems as though there is something out of order here.

Senator MURDOCK. Is that your point, Senator GREEN, that it is black-market silver?

Senator GREEN. I am asking a question. I am looking for an explanation, if there is any.

Senator MURDOCK. However, you consider this to be black-market silver?

Senator GREEN. If the law is not obeyed as to putting on the manufacturer's trade-mark, then it is black-market silver.

Senator MURDOCK. There is no law.

Senator GREEN. That is enforceable by law.

Senator MURDOCK. I do not know about that. What is the point?

Senator GREEN. My point is, everyone knows that the black market is higher than the legal market.

Senator MURDOCK. You are making a point now that the silver tray which comes from Harris & Co., which bears only the mark of "sterling," is selling at this figure of $6 because of the black market; is that your point?

Senator GREEN. That is right.

Congressman WHITE. I will say to the Senator that this cigarette holder does qualify in having the quality and trade-mark on it.

Senator TYDINGS. Who is the "PS Co."?

STATEMENT OF EDWARD O. OTIS, JR., EXECUTIVE SECRETARY, NEW ENGLAND MANUFACTURING JEWELERS AND SILVERSMITHS, PROVIDENCE, R. I.

EXPLANATION OF TRADE-MARK "PS CO."

Mr. OTIS. That is the Poole Silver Co., Taunton, Mass.

Senator MURDOCK. Is that sufficient to comply with the law, in your opinion?

Mr. OTIS. Yes.

Senator MURDOCK. Anyone familiar with the silver trade who sees that mark on there immediately knows the meaning of it?

Mr. OTIS. It is the trade-mark.

Senator TYDINGS. What is that "528" up there; do you know?

Mr. OTIS. It is an item number.

Mr. MACURDY. It may be a date.

VALUE OF SILVER IN ASHTRAY

Congressman WHITE. Let me get back to the ashtray, Senator. I would like to call your attention to the value of the silver at 71.11 cents in that cigarette holder. The value would be $1.03. If basic silver is $1.29, the value of the silver in that item would be $1.88.

Senator HAYDEN. The price of the cigarette holder is what?

Senator MURDOCK. The value is $8.40.

Congressman WHITE. The article costs $8.40. With silver selling at 71.11 cents an ounce, the value of the silver in that article is $1.03. At $1.29, the cost of the silver in that item would be $1.88. It would be about 85 cents difference if they paid $1.29.

Let us weigh that, now, and balance it in silver coin.

The next article we propose to weigh is another set that carries the stamp, bought at Harris & Co.

By weighing the $8.40 article from Harris & Co. in the scales, we find $1.90 in coin is needed to balance it—one silver dollar, a half dollar, and four dimes. It is the difference between $8.40 and $1.90.

Senator TYDINGS. There is no mark on this. Not even the word "sterling."

Congressman WHITE. If you take exception to the way the silver business is conducted in this country, we will have to change the law, but this was bought as standard goods from a standard store.

MARKINGS SHOWN ON OTHER SILVER DEMONSTRATIONS

Senator GREEN. You have shown a half-dozen little butter dishes, or coasters, or little plates—whatever they are—and they are not even marked "sterling."

Mr. MACURDY. Yes; here is the mark. It is right on the edge, here.

Senator TYDINGS. Oh, yes; I see the word "sterling," and that is etched in there with no hallmark attached to it.

Senator GREEN. It is all black market.

Senator MURDOCK. The word "sterling" does appear on that.

Congressman WHITE. I think we will have to pass a code, here, to revise the silver manufacturing industry.

Senator GREEN. It is too bad that reputable silver manufacturers should have to bear the blame for black-market silver that does not follow the law.

Senator TYDINGS. Is there any idea of taking action on this finally this morning?

Senator MCKELLAR. No.

Senator TYDINGS. I have to go to two other meetings before noon.

COMMENTS ON SILVER RIDER AS AN APPROPRIATION OR LEGISLATIVE MATTER

Senator GREEN. Could we not, Mr. Chairman, make some definite date when this subcommittee can take a vote on this matter? It is running on, this is an appropriation bill, and it ought to be passed.

Senator MCKELLAR. It most certainly should. We have a deficiency bill that just must be passed. It will take a couple of days.

Senator MURDOCK. Mr. Chairman, I must take exception to the statement of Senator GREEN. This is certainly not an appropriation bill. To call it an appropriation bill is a misnomer. This bill that we are now dealing with includes very important legislation, which certainly is not a proper matter to be before this subcommittee on appropriations.

Senator GREEN. We cannot sit in judgment on the House. It comes to us as an appropriation bill from the House, and any question as to legislation, whether it is legislation or not, is decided in the House and we have no right to change it.

Senator MCKELLAR. You are wrong about that, Senator. The committee could just defeat it.

Senator TYDINGS. I suggest that we have a final vote on this next Monday at 11 o'clock.

Senator MCKELLAR. Senator MCCARRAN is not here. He is on one side and Senator GREEN is on the other.

Senator TYDINGS. I just wanted to dispose of it for one side or the other.

Senator MCKELLAR. I believe we might have one hearing tomorrow, and Friday.

Senator MURDOCK. Legislation on this very subject is pending before a legislative committee. In my opinion, the appropriate disposition for a matter of this kind would be to transfer it from the Appropriations Committee to the legislative committee where it properly belongs.

Senator MCKELLAR. Of course, a motion to that effect would be in order when the full committee or subcommittee takes it up. However, we cannot transfer the whole bill.

Senator MURDOCK. I mean only this part of it.

Senator TYDINGS. Could we have a vote on that Monday and if you fellows have the votes, all well and good.

IMPORTANCE OF SILVER LEGISLATION

Senator MURDOCK. I am not on this subcommittee, Senator, but I do think when we consider legislation of the importance that this is to a certain part of our country, that the hearings should be thorough and we should not try to cut anyone off. I find today that the silver miners in my State who are mining lead, zinc, and copper ores carrying silver, instead of getting even the 71 cents that the law provides, are getting as low as just 5 percent of the actual silver value of their ores. It is of the utmost importance.

NEED FOR DECISION ON SILVER RIDER

Senator TYDINGS. I am in full sympathy with you that the hearings be fair. All I want is a fair deal. The point is, this has been going on now for over 6 or 8 weeks and I have given a considerable amount of time—although for the last 4 weeks I have been somewhat incapacitated and was not here. I think we owe it to these people who are away from their businesses to have this thing concluded and see how this committee stands. I frankly have not canvassed the committee. I do say that next Monday will be about the ninth week that this has been intermittently considered by this committee. I think Senator GREEN is well within his rights in saying that some date, not cutting off anybody, can now be set when we can have a decision on this.

Is that your point, Senator GREEN?

Senator GREEN. That is my point.

Senator TYDINGS. I make a request that we have a vote on this matter at 11 o'clock next Monday, which gives us almost a full week for further hearing.

Senator MCKELLAR. Just before Senator MCCARRAN left, he said he had two other witnesses, and I think we had better make that request next Friday.

Senator TYDINGS. Do you mean Friday a week?

Senator MCKELLAR. No, no; next Friday. We will adjourn over to next Friday, hoping to get the other bill out of the way on Wednesday and Thursday, and make that motion Friday, when Senator MCCARRAN is here. We want to be fair to every member of the committee. I know the Senator feels the same way.

Senator TYDINGS. I will say that I withdraw my motion, but I am going to ask the committee to entertain a motion on Friday to fix a definite date.

Senator MCKELLAR. I have instructed the clerk of this committee to notify Senator MCCARRAN.

Senator REED. Mr. Chairman, I want to express my concurrence in the view Senator TYDINGS expressed. We should dispose of this matter. There has been no disposition to cut short the hearings. In this subcommittee, I have voted to give Senator MCCARRAN an opportunity to go to Nevada and return, thereby delaying this matter. However, this is a matter that is important, and time is important. I believe these fabricators of silver are entitled to a decision by this committee.

Senator TYDINGS. I would say this, which is right in line with what you have said: I am going to ask Senator MURDOCK and Senator MCCARRAN if, between now and Friday, they will not try to find some meeting-ground where we can arrive at something that will take into consideration the various conflicting views here and try to reconcile them.

POSITION OF SILVER INDUSTRY

Senator MURDOCK. I think enough effort has been made in that line, and the indication to me is that as far as the manufacturers are concerned, they want silver out of the Treasury at the 71-cent price, "period."

Senator TYDINGS. What is your position?

Senator MURDOCK. My position is this——

Senator TYDINGS (interposing). I do not mean your personal position, but that of the people on the other side.

Address of Ralph E. Becker, Chairman, Young Republican National Federation, Made at the Executive Committee Meeting of the National Federation, Statler Hotel, Washington, D. C., July 20, 1946

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. RALPH A. GAMBLE

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, August 1, 1946

Mr. GAMBLE. Mr. Speaker, under permission granted by the House, I present for insertion in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD the address of Capt. Ralph E. Becker, chairman of the Young Republican National Federation, to the members of the executive committee of the federation on July 20, 1946.

Captain Becker, a resident of Port Chester, N. Y., in the Twenty-eighth District, was formerly State chairman of the Young Men's Republican Club, and has recently returned to the United States with an enviable war record in the Judge Advocate General's Department of the Army.

The over-all purpose of this and every other meeting of Republicans must be to make this country dynamically strong so that we may build a better America and a safer, happier world. The United States must lead the world back to peace and to spiritual and social progress, as well as to economic stability. To accomplish that, the United States must itself have the heroic, the far-seeing, the able leadership of the Republican Party. There is no other political agency in all the world capable of carrying the responsibility which today rests on our shoulders as American Republicans.

I have said that is our over-all, ultimate purpose. Now let us turn to the immediate, the practical purpose of this and every other meeting of Republicans to be held in the months just ahead. That immediate purpose must be, through a unity which puts patriotism above politics, to elect Republicans to Congress and to key positions in our State governments in the elections next fall. That must be the first step toward establishing a responsible, a truthful, a competent, a sanely and soundly progressive Government of our own country—a Republican government which will end the political and economic chaos which now has the American people bewildered and disillusioned almost to the point of desperation.

We Republicans have a gigantic job to do for America and for the world.

We can do that job only by working together—by throwing into it every ounce of strength we possess as individuals or as groups. We must forget, in effect, that we are Republicans in one age group or another, that we are Republicans in one section of the country or another, we must put aside anything and everything which divides or threatens to divide us in a desperate struggle to put the United States and the world back on their feet. We must have, it thus is apparent, a party loyalty which rises above mere party loyalty to become loyalty to the United States and to the concepts of freedom which alone can make this country and the world habitable by human beings in the atomic age.

So I am here today to say to you that it is the sort of loyalty of which I have just spoken that the Young Republicans are prepared to give to their party and to their country. Vast numbers of us already have given several of the best years of our lives to fighting on many battlefields to sustain the ideals our country had bred in us and to give untold millions of men in other lands a chance to live in freedom of body, mind, and spirit. We believe we know what the United States means to us, to our fellow Americans, and to all men everywhere. We see in the Republican Party the only organization equipped to efficiently implement and truly apply the ideals for which we fought. So we say to the Republican Party: We are ready to do our full share in a united Republican program that will be constructive and progressive in both domestic and foreign affairs. We ask you only to assure us that sort of program. We are ready to go to work for it.

It is, I think, with pardonable pride that I here outline briefly the past record of Young Republican contributions to sound national and international thought and action. Long prior to the declaration of war we urged passage of the lend-lease bill, repeal of the Neutrality Act, the safe delivery by our naval forces of merchant ships carrying implements of war, merchandise, and food to nations fighting the Axis Powers, and passage of the Selective Service Act. History, I think you will agree, has proved the soundness of our judgment and accuracy of our vision. Hence, it does not seem to us presumptuous to ask that we be accorded the right to express ourselves regarding governmental policy in the future. On the contrary, we conceive such honest, objective expression to be our required duty as mature citizens. We ask your confidence and the confidence of the American people in our sincerity as well as in our ability to serve usefully.

We have heard it said this is an age of youth. That is trite. But it's true. Life moves more rapidly these days than ever before. Leadership requires vigor and speed—and they are qualities of youth. However, we frankly recognize that youth must bring more than speed and vigor to its responsibilities. We must continue to prove that we are capable of sound thinking and useful action. We must develop in other young people, as we have tried to develop in ourselves, a dynamic appreciation of and devotion to the ideals of the Republican Party—we must bring new blood, new faces, new strength into the party. From our ranks already have come outstanding public servants, and there are others who are well equipped to serve their party and the people in the interest of good government.

This is a crucial time in American politics. The record of the present Democratic administration is replete with instances of Government evasion, governmental improvidence, inequitable taxation, governmental competition with private enterprise, regimentation, bungling, floundering, incompetency, and even downright dishonesty. There is a plague of confusion in the seat of government, there is industrial strife, there is a lack of confidence on the part of industry and labor, there is lack of governmental leadership and of any fundamental understanding of basic, everyday, simple economic problems. In a word, our Government is a mess. And history shows that such has been the case every time the Democratic Party has gone out of power—leaving behind it multiplied debt, burdensome taxes, high living costs, domestic and international confusion.

It is not enough that we ask the American people to give us a chance to clear up that mess. We must devise a program that will work. Then we must go into the highways and byways to seek out the voters, make sure they clearly understand the issues of the day, and prevail upon them to trust us to straighten things out and give the country a fresh start. If we do this properly, we'll elect a Republican House this year—and we'll elect a Republican President in 1948.

There is now no more sacred responsibility, no greater opportunity for usefulness to America than to be a loyal, intelligent, aggressive Republican.

What About Russia?

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF

HON. WILLIAM M. COLMER

OF MISSISSIPPI

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, August 2, 1946

Mr. COLMER. Mr. Speaker, wars upset the fortunes of nations as well as men. This has always been true and World War II has proved no exception. Out of this global struggle a new order of world political powers has resulted. No longer, for instance, does Britannia rule the waves. The new world power—America—has become the mistress of the seas. Meanwhile other significant changes have taken place. Whether our English and French allies like it or not they realize that a new giant has arisen from the debris of this, the greatest of all wars—Russia. Proud of its accomplishments in battle, fully conscious of but not materially weakened by its enormous sacrifices, Russia is the dominating European power today, and no nation now or ever heretofore has been more conscious and proud of that new-found strength and position. In fact it is obvious to even the most casual thinker that the future peace and opportunity of nations to survive in the new atomic age is largely, if not entirely, in the hands of the United States of America and the Soviet Republic.

Whether these statements are fully concurred in or not, it is certainly worth while to consider the question on the tongues of so many people throughout the world today—What about Russia? Will Russia cooperate with America and thus bring about the coveted goal of peace, or will the peoples of the Soviet Republic follow Stalin even as others have followed Alexander, Napoleon, the Kaiser, and Hitler on world conquest, assuming that Stalin has world conquest as his objective? Or do Stalin and his small group of commissars and advisers have in mind the construction of a great economic nation with much of the more abundant life for their millions of subjects? What about the Russian system as a whole? Is it something that the people of this Nation should adopt instead of the system of individual enterprise and freedom of the individual which has made it truly great? Was Mikoyan serious when asked what exports Russia could make to the United States in the postwar period, he said timber, furs, gold, and so forth, but not communism?

These and many other questions were raised in the minds of a subcommittee of the House Select Committee on Postwar Economic Policy and Planning, of which I have the honor to be chairman, as the result of our visit to Russia and 13 other European countries a few months ago. Congress authorized and financed the mission and the study in order that a first-hand knowledge of the European economic situation and its effect upon our own country might be gained. Although only 7—Representatives ZIMMERMAN, Missouri; WOLVERTON, New Jersey, HOPE, Kansas; WOLCOTT, Michigan; LEFEVRE, New York; SIMPSON, Illinois, and myself—of the 18 members of the committee made the trip, our report to the Congress and the country on our conclusions and recommendations was unanimously adopted by the full committee of 10 Democrats and 8 Republicans; and I hope it may be stated with pardonable pride that this report, the committee's eighth, has been substantially followed in many instances by the administration in its dealings with the several countries visited.

Both the committee and I realize that as a result of such a short dipping into the stream of Russian life we would subject ourselves to the charge of being presumptuous to set ourselves up as authorities on the economic and political problems involved in dealing with the Soviet Republic. However, it will be borne in mind that we were the first and only congressional committee to visit with Generalissimo Stalin and to make anything like a comprehensive study of that situation.

I might also point out that the committee made thorough and adequate provision for its mission. We were accompanied by our staff director, Marion B. Folsom, and our special consultant, Dr. William Y. Elliott, of Harvard University.

In addition to free and sometimes bold conversations with Generalissimo Stalin and his commissars, our group, also with equal frankness, interviewed Prime Minister Atlee and other members of the British Labor cabinet as well as the leaders of all other countries visited in Europe and the Middle East. We also talked with our own military leaders and economic advisers throughout the countries visited, including Generals Eisenhower, Clay, and McNarney. Nevertheless, in the subject at hand and the impressions that follow I shall speak only for myself.

While the entire trip, despite its strenuous nature, was most interesting and profitable, I think we all felt that our greatest education on the trip came in the first-hand analysis of the Russian system at work which was made possible by the intimate talks with the chief officials of the Government including several members of the powerful Politburo of the Communist Party in addition to the more formal conference with Stalin himself.

While the economic structure of the Soviet Government is the business of the Russian people, and others, especially Americans, who believe in the right of all peoples to govern themselves, should not question that system, it might be well to point out some of the elements of that system especially, as it concerns the economic and political freedom and rights of the individual. This might be particularly profitable now in view of the growing tendency in this country by friends of the Russian system to try to sell it to American citizens, and particularly to our wage earners who now enjoy the highest standard of living of any laboring people in the history of the world. We had ample opportunity to observe first hand the living conditions of the Russian people. The standard of living there apparently has not improved substantially since the days of the Russian czars. Surely the American people do not covet the standard of living under the Soviet system.

As guests of the Russian Government our committee was given the privilege of visiting both a factory and a collective farm. We were informed, incidentally, by attachés of our Embassy that these particular institutions which we visited were the pride of the Soviets. They were the same institutions always shown to visiting foreigners. The manager of the Stalin auto works received us in the rather elaborate office suite of the factory. He, like all other important men in the party, was dressed in a uniform not dissimilar to that worn by the Generalissimo himself. There in this office too, hung a large picture of Stalin and another of Lenin. This was a familiar scene for we observed that all important buildings had these photographs or paintings prominently displayed, while in practically every square or in front of every important government institution statues of Stalin and Lenin were found. It was our consensus of opinion that Lenin was the only competitor of Stalin in Russia—and he is dead.

Before we were shown through the factory we were thoroughly briefed by the manager, who took great pride in pointing out the productive capacity and other features of that enterprise, which we observed was largely copied after the assembly-line production of our own American factories. When I inquired of him—I confess somewhat naively—if he was bothered by strikes, he, with a smile, replied "no," and something to the effect that strikes were an American institution. When further pressed as to what happened if the workers became dissatisfied with either their working conditions or pay, he replied that such things never happened and that the workers were all satisfied. But pressed still further as to this, he replied, in answer to the question of what would happen if such complaints were made, that in such event the representative of the trade union and the representative of the factory would get together and iron everything out and everybody would be happy. He, of course, neglected to state that the representative of the trade union and the representative of the factory were both representatives of the government and the party.

At the collective farm I inquired of the superintendent about the freedom of the workers on the farm to change from one farm to another. Again the answer was that nobody wanted to change; that everyone was satisfied with their working conditions and the fruits of their labor. On further investigation of this after we had returned to the embassy, we learned that these were the true conditions and that both the laborers in the factories and the workers on the farms were virtually frozen to the jobs assigned them. We were also advised that only some extraordinary service for the party would warrant any change in their status.

The NKVD still operates in Russia as effectively as the Gestapo did in Hitler's Germany. It all reminded me of a story that came out of World War I.

It seems that the American mother of a soldier of that war had not heard from him in many months. To her great joy, the long-awaited letter was finally brought by the postman. Nervously tearing it open, she read this:

DEAR MOTHER: I know you have been muchly concerned about me, since you have not heard from me in several months. Don't worry any more. I was captured at the battle of Chateau-Thierry and am now imprisoned in this German prison camp.

I was never better treated in my life. I receive three good meals a day, have no work to do, sleep on a feather bed, and am even given good books to read. So please don't worry.

Your devoted son,

JOHN.

Then this significant postscript caught her attention:

P. S.—You remember Bill Grimes, who went into the service with me? He, too, was interned here. He was shot this morning at sunrise for complaining about the prison fare.

What is the system, itself, like? It is no secret, of course, that the control of Russia is in the hands of a smaller group of men than in any surviving world power. The sixteen to eighteen members of the Polit-Buro may have some internal difficulties but they are held together in the tightest oligarchic discipline by Stalin's domination of the party and by the necessity of keeping the great Red Army and the marshals in line after the Soviet successes of these years in the war. The internal measures of control mean keeping a very substantial part of the Russian population itself in concentration camps or under the discipline of forced labor in Siberia or in any part of the great area of Russia where they are needed. For that matter, labor's position seems to be one of complete subservience to the party control of the state.

It is a curious thing that we throw open all our industrial secrets, permit the downright appropriation of any copyrights and patents protected in all other states by the act of international copyright laws, allow well over a thousand Russians to be attached to various official capacities in the United States, and legions of Russian representatives who are in the nature of things necessarily agents, to explore every aspect of our country and engage in any type propaganda that they see fit, while the bare thought of such activity on our part in any section of Russia or in the territories which Russia controls would throw the NKVD into convulsions.

The NKVD, by the way, is the group of initials that apply to the "security" branch of the Army and the police who have incorporated the old Cheka of the earlier Russian terror. Though they are not all in uniform and operate in some instances in "plain clothes" the efforts of the NKVD have as pervasive a hold on the Russian system as the Himmler Gestapo and SS organizations had on the Nazi system. We were unable to learn any difference in methods, in fact, the Fascists and the Nazis both simply imitated the highly efficient Russian model.

It does not require a Solomon to figure out the importance of Russia in world economics, as well as world politics. Figures are sometimes produced to show that Russia in the prewar days accounted for an average of only 3 to 5 percent of the world's total international trade, but we are not dealing with that pre-war Russia any longer. The rest of the world has changed as well as Russia. Britain is visibly hard pressed to build back an export trade from her own war economy that will put her once more in the sound position of being able to pay for her necessary imports. She has been in the past, and will probably remain, the largest single import market in the world for raw materials and food. France is recovering slowly and with great difficulty. Germany is shattered by war to a degree that can only be believed when seen in its cities and its transportation system, and is being stripped of its industries by the French and Russians directly in their own zones, and by reparations from the western zones for Russia, indirectly. Italy is in a state of prostration and seems unable to develop, in the aftermath of fascism, a broadly supported strong policy. The smaller countries like Greece need raw materials to get back to work, quite as much as the larger ones. Greece has itself probably suffered more in the war than any single country from starvation and deliberate looting of its resources. Only the Scandinavian countries and Belgium seem well on the way to a healthy recovery, though Holland gave promise of rapidly following, and Switzerland was an island of stability in the whole war-lashed sea of Europe. Eastern European countries were, of course, prostrate, subject to "Russian requisitioning" to a degree almost paralleling the stripping of Germany in some instances. The whole continent appeared to give little prospect of sound recovery until some basic political problems and greater freedom of movement and trade had been achieved.

On the other hand, Russia was already making very rapid strides toward reestablishing its industrial system by stripping the wrecked zones of the West and had developed, from all that we could find out, tremendous new strength behind the Urals and in Siberia. This was being supplemented by the importation of machinery, transportation in the form of automotive equipment and anything usable, both from the eastern and western zones of the war. We know now that Manchuria, delivered from the Japanese, was treated to systematic stripping of its industrial machinery in much the same way that eastern Europe and Germany have been. The Russians have a very simple theory about war booty and are not concerned about the niceties of ownership, either American or any other. Apparently in the agreements made at Potsdam, no effort had been made to protect American property and plants, in the zones controlled by Russia, from sharing the fate meted out to everything else that was movable and useful to the Russians. We learned of American factories in Berlin being loaded on trains and moved east, even though their products were primarily for peacetime uses. We also learned that the German skilled labor was being shipped to Russia along with the machinery.

But the real point is that Russia is able today to reach out and harness the resources of the productive capacity of almost one-half of Europe, to add to its own tremendous potential, and is building up the same sort of control in Korea and in Manchuria, adjoining her Siberian provinces in the Far East. It may be true that Russia will be preoccupied primarily with her own reconstruction for a long time to come. If she gets the loans that she hopes to raise she will become a great importer also from outside the region that she controls for several years at least, mainly from this country. If she does not raise these loans, she will have to force her exports as she did in the early thirties, even at the cost of starving a lot of Russians at that time in order to pay for the equipment that she needs and cannot take from territories under her control.

We got the total impression of desperate haste to build up a system so powerful that it could support the flood of the Red Army and pour it in any direction in the very near future. Stalin's speeches have themselves emphasized this point.

For a country that is posing as the source of true democracy and as a liberator of oppressed peoples, the record in eastern Europe alone would be disillusioning. No capitalist country, to whom Stalin has charged the inevitability of the last war, has ever possessed so complete monopoly capitalism as Russia or been so barefaced in its use of power. It can hardly be said, for instance, that Rumania and Hungary have had their economies liberated or an opportunity given them for an economic basis for reconstructing their shattered lives after domination by the Axis. Poland, Czechoslovakia, and Yugoslavia were treated more leniently but with an absolute enforcement of the priority of Russian demands on the controlled governments of those countries.

We got the same story everywhere of the steady lowering of American prestige in every region under Russian control by the refusal to afford adequate quarters to our diplomatic representatives or to let in an adequate staff, to say nothing of the blackout of any sort of news out of Russia except the most closely censored stuff from the few correspondents who had been permitted to penetrate the screen.

The whole system of education in which some of us were very much interested and which we discussed with several groups seems to be in for a thorough overhauling. The classics are coming back, the great heroes of Russia today are not just the products of the Marxian revolution. Indeed, one is tempted to say, and I believe truthfully, that Marx is pretty well dead or translated to a harmless heaven of pure theory so far as internal consumption is concerned. However, Marxian dogmas including the perpetual attacks on monopoly capitalism and encirclement from abroad make the Communist doctrines a useful article of export, in spite of all professions to the contrary. If the Comintern was buried, for understandable reasons, to placate the democracies during the struggle for life of the Russian system against Hitler, the Communist international was never dead. It was buried alive and is manifestly revived today in as crusading a form as it has ever enjoyed, so that Moscow can seek to change the head of the Communist Party in the United States via French Communists.

To the new Russian nationalism, the fatherland has once again become holy, and Stalin an object of universal veneration far beyond anything dreamed of by the czars. The use of the Communist Party abroad is ironical when considered in this light but it is still mighty useful in terms of national interest.

Nothing could be more impressive, and to a Democrat, more alarming, than the apparently absolute power of propaganda to sway the Russian masses in any desired direction. The scale which has been developed in the use of this instrument is applied in every field from production to foreign affairs. Any current of opinion can be reversed so quickly as to leave the detached observer gasping; at one moment it may be the line to conceal, as apparently it was for a considerable part of the war, outside help from the United States on lend-lease. So completely successful was this effort that Russian soldiers, when they contacted our own, asked what we were doing with Russian-made jeeps, tanks, trucks, and so forth. Later on in order to create a proper atmosphere for Teheran, Yalta, and the Potsdam agreements, Roosevelt became an object of great affection and along with this the acknowledgment of American aid, in general terms, was handsomely made by Stalin. The British have, however, been treated as imperialists from the beginning, and Churchill probably never enjoyed a real success in Russia as one of the Big Three, even before he became the bogeyman of imperialism that he now is.

Naturally, one of the high lights on the trip to Russia was our visit to the Kremlin and our conference with Generalissimo Stalin. We had heard so much and had read so much about the little man with the black mustache that he had become somewhat of a legendary figure in our minds. Both our curiosity and desire to secure information on these momentous questions had been whetted. Before we had left Washington on our 2 months' arduous task we had arranged this as well as most other meetings through the Department of State, whose blessings we seemed to enjoy as the result of previous work done by the committee. Our appointment with Stalin, like all other state appointments that he has, was at night. Our Embassy officials, in the days spent in Russia preceding the appointment, never lost the opportunity to impress upon us that we were the first American Congressmen to be received by the generalissimo and that the occasion was a very important one.

On the appointed evening we proceeded to the Kremlin in three Embassy automobiles. At the gates we were stopped by the Kremlin guards, who first thoroughly satisfied themselves of the identity of our party and then permitted us to enter the grounds of the Kremlin. We observed as we drove through the several blocks before arriving at the appointed place for our interview, that the grounds were extremely well guarded by Russian soldiers. When we alighted from our automobiles there were still more guards who hastily passed us into the building itself. And there our party, although accompanied from the beginning by a representative of the Kremlin, was escorted down a series of long corridors—how many I do not recall, but it seems that there were at least three or four. At the end of each were more Russian guards. When we reached the end of these seemingly interminable corridors we were taken into a rather large reception room where we waited until our escort reappeared through two large sliding doors and announced our presence to the generalissimo and his commissars, Beryia and Vishinsky. As we proceeded into this second and larger reception room the man of mystery and legend, who was seated at the end of a long table at the far end of the room, got up and came forward to greet us. After introductions had been made all around we were asked to be seated on the opposite side of the table from Stalin's staff, while Stalin sat at our right at the end of the table.

It was agreed in advance that as chairman of the committee, I should do the talking and submit the questions which we desired to have answered. In a session of the group with representatives of the Embassy the line of questions was agreed upon. They were to be forthright and to the point without any superfluous or too fulsome praise of either the generalissimo himself or the accomplishments of his country as our ally in the late war.

No good purpose would be served by a lengthy report nor have we ever heretofore publicized our Stalin interview which was conducted through Stalin's interpreter and a Mr. Kennan, of the Embassy staff, who served as our interpreter. After appropriate but brief courtesies had been exchanged I explained to Stalin on behalf of the committee that our mission was largely an economic one; that naturally economics and politics were inseparable; and that the United States was interested in doing as much postwar trade as possible with the Soviet Republic. I stated that we had understood that to this end Russia had made some declaration of its desire to make a postwar loan of the United States. He replied that Russia had several months prior to our visit expressed a desire to borrow $6,000,000,000; that there had been some preliminary negotiations in which the question of the interest rate had been discussed; that America had apparently wanted something like 2 percent and Russia had wanted something less than 2 percent; and that nothing further had been heard from the negotiations. Naturally, we wanted to know several things: First, to what purpose Russia expected to use this money; second, how she expected to pay it back; third, what exports and imports there would be; and, fourth, what could America expect in return.

Without going into all of the details, the Russian leader said in substance that the money was desired to rehabilitate Russia, to increase its industrial capacity, and generally to raise the standard of living in Russia. To all questions his answers were on the whole responsive although at times we thought them evasive. Some of our questions were boldly frank. For instance, I, in more diplomatic language than it sounds, asked what he proposed to do with the millions of German and other war prisoners then within the boundaries of Russia. He came back with the answer that they would be returned to their countries as soon as conditions in Russia permitted. It was when I asked, in an ad lib fashion, how he expected to pay back the loan that he seemed a bit ruffled. With some show of spirit he replied that we were talking of great loans to China who had no resources with which to repay and seemed somewhat perturbed that we should question the ability of Russia to repay her loans with all of the natural resources which she has.

When all of our questions had been asked and answered, we arose, thanked the Generalissimo for the conference, all took a Russian cigarette which was proffered us, shook hands and bade the man of mystery and his advisers good night.

Everyone who visits Russia, and for that matter most other countries, must be impressed by the apparent desire of friendliness by the people in the main, insofar as contacts are permitted. But we were cautioned by the best sources, including our newspaper friends, that we would get anyone in serious trouble which might result in the loss of a bread card or the sudden removal of that person to less desirable parts of the country, possibly to the salt mines, if we tried to cultivate unofficial contacts. The alarm with which anyone in Russia receives the visit of a foreigner is unmistakable and damning.

It is this cloak of complete isolation and secrecy, which is the essence of the whole system, that troubles me most. When we had to fly back to Hamburg from Stockholm, rather than go directly over the American occupied zone to Berlin to see our own occupying forces there, and were seriously warned that we might be shot down if we ventured off the marked route, we had an indication of what distrust the Russians had of our alliance. The plane that we were using had been cleared for going into Russia. But as usual, at the last minute no clearance was given and we had to go in General Eisenhower's Sunflower II, a nice plush job, but one that left us stranded in Russia when it took Ambassador Harriman back to the conference of foreign secretaries in London. The Russians insist that none but their own planes traverse any of the territory under their control. Everyone seems to be regarded as a potential spy in Russia. No doubt the struggle for power and control, with the purges that have been necessary to establish Stalin in an unchallenged position of leadership, have left their marks. But it is a system that breeds tough and ruthless masters who feel that they alone can guide the destinies of their own people, and for that matter, that they alone have the key to world organization. This is, of course, an impression, but after all it is well supported by the record.

The Russians are certainly a great and talented nation, though their past history and their present system have conditioned them to quite different ways of looking at things than our own. Those who wish to get on with Russia at all costs are always reminding us that the Russian people are friendly to the United States and that war with them is unthinkable. For that matter, we have been told the same thing before about others.

But it is the totalitarian system of Russia, really governed by a handful of zealots, that we must deal with and not the Russian people. Unless the controls of that system can be relaxed we can never know what is going on in Russia, and the first principles of an exchange of real human contacts are impossible.

Moreover, we were convinced, possibly above everything else, that the policy of appeasement toward Russia, which had been begun during the war by the Allies with the possible justification of bringing the European war to a speedy conclusion and bringing Russia into the war against Japan, must cease. In fact, in a recent conversation which I had the privilege of having with the former Prime Minister of Great Britain, Winston Churchill, I was convinced that there was ample justification for that policy by both Roosevelt and Churchill. But I am also convinced that Stalin and his advisers understand but one language and that is force. There is nothing that they appreciate more than power and strength. They came to power by force and have since maintained their power in that manner. It is difficult for the average Russian to understand, for instance, why America would expend so many lives of its soldiers and so much of its natural resources to win a war, without also profiting on the theory that to the victor belongs the spoils. It is hard to make them believe that America's only objective is world peace. That just does not make sense to the Russian mind.

On our way back from Moscow to London we visited with both the leaders of such countries as Greece, Egypt, and Iran and our own military and Embassy officials in those countries. It was in these countries that we received our greatest disappointment. In none of these little countries—or in fact, nowhere on our trip—did we hear the United Nations organization mentioned. On the contrary, we found a genuine fear and abiding apprehension in all of these countries that it was only a question of time when the soldiers of the Soviet Republic would move in upon them. In fact, we had scarcely left Iran when that happened. In view of this the question was raised in our minds as to whether anybody outside of the United States really took the UN seriously.

Upon our return to London in a conference with Secretary of State Byrnes, who was then attending the ill-fated conference of Ministers there, I took occasion to point out these conditions which we had found, and emphasized to him the necessity of stiffening our collective backbone in dealing with the Soviet Republic. Again, upon our return to Washington when our committee made an oral report to President Truman we respectfully urged the same conclusion.

The general attitude of Russia toward her late Allies; her strong evidence of acquisition of additional territory; her overt efforts toward the political and economic domination of not only her satellites of the late war, but her apparent objective in the same acquisition or domination of other smaller countries; her secretive and closed-door policies, plus her continuous evidences of unwillingness to fully cooperate in the United Nations organization, have all added up to a question in the minds of many Americans and citizens of other countries as to whether war with Russia is inevitable.

Without attempting to speak as an expert on the policy of this new giant of Europe, it is our considered opinion that Russia is no more anxious for such a conflict than America or Britain. While it is true that there has been no demobilization to speak of in the Russian military forces such as has occurred in this country, and while it is also true that Stalin is calling for an ever-increasing and more efficient military establishment, it is equally true that the Soviet Republic is suffering from both the heavy economic and military losses sustained at the hands of the Germans. Her transportation system, never too good, must be greatly improved, if not largely rebuilt. Any ideas of grandiose world expansion and imperialism entertained by Stalin and his party advisers must of necessity be considered as a distant objective. There must be new 5-year plans, not only envisioned but realized, before such an ambitious program could well be undertaken. Certainly in the absence of the secret of the atomic bomb no nation would dare provoke such a conflict. And with equal logic, that and other military secrets should not be shared by us with any additional nations until an executive organization with real control has been perfected by UN.

In the meantime, there is nothing to be lost from the Russian point of view by both a strong economic and political program which will bring about as much such "security" as possible, short of war.

It must be apparent to all nations that we in America covet but one thing in this aftermath of the global war—to the winning of which we contributed so substantially—a stable and perpetual world peace. Surely America cannot be expected to make gargantuan loans to Russia or any other nation without some definite and conclusive assurances that that objective will be realized. So long as Russia maintains the closed-door policy and denies us and other nations through both the press and other vehicles for exchange of ideas, the knowledge of what is going on in that country even as they now have every opportunity to observe what is going on here, it is unthinkable that we should make substantial contributions in the way of additional financial assistance from our already overburdened Treasury.

The hope of the peoples of the world depends upon the ability of Russia and the United States to cooperate. We all want One World; not one enforced by a crusading system that forces others to live by its pattern, but one where all powers are prepared to live and let live. No people desire cooperation to the end of cessation of warfare among mankind, especially in this atomic age, more than do the American people. But it must always be remembered that cooperation is not a one-way street.

The Exorbitant Price of Manufactured Silver—III

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. COMPTON I. WHITE

OF IDAHO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, July 26, 1946

Mr. WHITE. Mr. Speaker, conforming to the rules of the House, there is inserted here the third installment of the hearings of the Senate Appropriations Committee on the bill to establish the selling price of the Treasury-owned silver:

DISCUSSION ON SALE OF TREASURY SILVER AT ITS MONETARY VALUE

Senator MURDOCK. I do not believe I can state that, but my position has been, all the time, that when silver goes into the Treasury, then it instantly becomes money. It belongs to the people of America then, the people of Texas, and the people of Washington, and every other State. For the Senate of the United States to be considering selling the money of the people of the United States at less than its monetary value is absurd.

Senator TYDINGS. I do not think the monetary value is the same as the Senator from Utah figures.

Senator MURDOCK. It is $1.29, fixed by law. Could monetary value be fixed by a more solemn and binding means in the opinion of the able Senator?

Senator TYDINGS. If you would go to dump it on the market, it would not last very long without a good, big piece of legislation.

Senator MURDOCK. The Senator overlooks this: That every day in the week, the Treasury of the United States is borrowing money by means of bonds. We are paying interest on those bonds, and still the people have, lying idle in the Treasury today, about 260,000,000 ounces of silver at a monetary value of $1.29 an ounce.

Senator TYDINGS. What I wanted to do was replace this silver, if the Senator would let us have it, so the monetary value would not be changed at all. In other words, if I can buy this silver at 85 cents and put it in the Treasury and take the other silver out, what is the difference? The value of the thing is not what we people over here in Washington say it is; the value is what it will bring in the market.

Senator MURDOCK. If the Senator wants to make a commodity market out of the Treasury of the United States, we should pass a law to that effect. I do not believe he wants to do that, and neither do I.

NEED FOR COMPROMISE ON SILVER PRICE

Senator GREEN. I know my friend, the Senator from Utah, does not want to put me in a hard position, and when he says that those who represent the silver users have stood firmly on the 71.11-cent figure which they have asked for and think they should get, he overlooks the fact that every time a proposal is made, they have a conference to discuss some other figure, I personally, representing, to a certain extent, the silver users, have been willing and tried to reach some sort of compromise.

Senator MURDOCK. The Senator never approached me on that.

Senator GREEN. Let me conclude my statement, and then I will answer that.

At the last meeting of the committee it was suggested that we try to get together. I have tried and I have proposed other figures than 71.11 cents in order to take into account the evidence which was presented here of the necessity of the silver miners' receiving an additional sum over what they did before, during the last 3 years.

If I may be excused from trying to approach Senator MURDOCK in the first instance, it is because he has stated over and over again just what he stated here: that he stands firm on $1.29, and we never had any other figure suggested by him as one to which he could agree. It is not his principle, sincerity, honesty, or logic I am questioning, but if he stands firm on $1.29, there is no use in trying to confer with him to a different price, a lower price.

Senator MURDOCK. I have not said that I stand firm on that, as far as my miners are concerned, but I even challenge the Senator from Rhode Island to go into his own State and tell the people up there, other than the silver fabricators, that he plans to sell their money at less than its monetary value. To me, as I stated before, that is an absurdity. However, I am not unreasonable to the point that I will not consider some other price. I am willing to get down off my sound principle, in order to get some more money for my miners, which I know they are entitled to, and talk to the Senator at any time, but he has never seen fit to——

Senator GREEN (interposing). I am very glad to hear that, because it is the first time I have heard it.

Senator HAYDEN. I think we have accomplished about as much as we can at the moment.

Senator MURDOCK. Just as a parting remark to the Senator, I am always delighted to meet him whether it is on silver or anything else. I will either come to his office or, I cordially invite him to come to mine, if there is some means of working this out.

Senator GREEN. Thank you.

TREASURY PRICES ON GOLD

Congressman WHITE. If the gentleman from Utah will yield to me, I wonder if the Senator from Rhode Island would want to apply the same principle to the price of gold. Most of the gold in the Treasury, as we all know, which cost the Government $20.67 at the old price is now $35. I wonder if he would want the Government to sell that gold to the jewelers at $20.67 an ounce.

Senator HAYDEN. We have summoned some witnesses, and we would like to get their testimony. Arguing across the table about our various views is a procedure better followed on the floor of the Senate or some other place. I suggest we let Congressman WHITE proceed with his testimony, in order that he may conclude his presentation today.

FINDINGS IN DEMONSTRATION WITH SIX ASHTRAYS

Congressman WHITE. We have on the scale six ashtrays which were bought from Harris & Co. at a price of $18. These six ashtrays have the trade-mark on them and they also have branded the word "sterling."

Senator GREEN. You do not mean to say that that is a trade-mark, do you?

Congressman WHITE. There is an emblem on them.

Senator GREEN. That is just for decorative purposes.

Senator HAYDEN. Let Congressman WHITE present his case as best he can. I do not see any advantage to be gained in examining each piece with the aid of a microscope.

Congressman WHITE. I will ask the representative from the Bureau of Standards to tell the committee how much they weigh?

Weight of trays and value of silver content

Mr. MACURDY. They weigh 4.54 ounces.

Congressman WHITE. What would their value be if the silver in them were valued at 71.11 cents per ounce?

Mr. MACURDY. $2.99.

Congressman WHITE. So, gentlemen, here we have an item that sells for $18. With the worth of silver priced at 71.11 cents an ounce, the cost of the article is $2.99.

Senator HAYDEN. You do not mean $18 worth of silver, but you mean an item that cost $18.

Congressman WHITE. Well, yes; it does contain 10 percent copper.

What would the silver in that item be worth if the silver were priced at $1.29 per ounce?

Mr. MACURDY. $5.42.

Congressman WHITE. Now, would you balance those items against silver coin?

Mr. MACURDY. It balances at $5.30 in coin, five silver dollars and three dimes.

Congressman WHITE. We have an item here that retails for $18 and it balances against $5.30 in silver coin.

Senator HAYDEN. What is the next piece?

Extent of manufacturer's trade-marks

Senator GREEN. Before we conclude with that piece, I will ask the representative from the Bureau of Standards to examine them and to tell the committee whether they have any name or trade-mark on them.

Mr. MACURDY. I find the sterling mark and some design in the center, but there is no hallmark.

Senator GREEN. You find no manufacturer's mark or trade-mark on them?

Mr. MACURDY. No, sir.

Congressman WHITE. What would you say that design in the center was? It is a coat of arms, isn't it?

Mr. MACURDY. I don't know what that is; it is probably a decorative design.

Congressman WHITE. We have the representative from the Gorham Co. here, and I wonder if he could tell us what this represents?

Mr. MCCHESNEY. That is a stamped bit of ornament that is put on by the manufacturer as a part of the decorative scheme, and it is one of the symbols of the English hallmark.

Congressman WHITE. It is a manufacturer's hallmark.

Senator MURDOCK. Does it mean anything as far as the manufacturer is concerned?

Mr. MCCHESNEY. Not a thing.

FINDINGS IN DEMONSTRATION WITH SILVER COMPOTE PIECE

Congressman WHITE. We will pass now to this silver compote piece which was purchased from the department store of Woodward & Lothrop here in Washington at a price of $18, and I will ask the representative from the Bureau of Standards to weigh the same in troy ounces.

Weight and value of silver content

Mr. MACURDY. It weighs 5.29 ounces.

Congressman WHITE. Would you give us the price of that piece of hollow ware if the silver contained therein was valued at 71.11 cents an ounce?

Mr. MACURDY. $3.48.

Congressman WHITE. Would you give us the price if the silver were valued at $1.29 per ounce?

Mr. MACURDY. $6.31.

Congressman WHITE. So we have an item which retails at $18 that contains silver selling at 71.11 worth $3.48.

Manufacturer's trade-marks

Would you examine the bottom of that piece of silverware to see, if it carries the stamp or genuineness?

Mr. MACURDY. It says, "International Sterling—'Prelude'," and there is also a hallmark.

Congressman WHITE. There we have, Mr. Chairman, a silver piece of hollow ware, purchased for a price of $18, which also bears the standard hallmark plus sterling, which, if the silver is valued at 71.11 cents per ounce, is how much, Mr. Macurdy?

Mr. MACURDY. At 71.11 cents per ounce it is $3.48.

Congressman WHITE. $3.48, and what if the silver were valued at $1.29 per ounce?

Mr. MACURDY. At $1.29 an ounce it would be worth $6.31.

Congressman WHITE. There is a difference of $10—more than $10.

Senator GREEN. Did you say how much this weighs?

Mr. MACURDY. 5.29 ounces.

Senator GREEN. Does the price include the tax?

Break-down in price

Congressman WHITE. Yes; the price includes the tax. The price of the item is $15, and with the tax added, it brings it up to $18.

REQUEST FOR COMPARATIVE PRICES OF SILVER PIECES, WITH AND WITHOUT TRADE-MARKS

Senator MURDOCK. Mr. Chairman, may I interrupt just for a moment to suggest if the committee would ask the representative from the Bureau of Standards to make a comparison now between the prices of the silver pieces that do not bear a trade-mark and this one that does. It seems to me that that would be enlightening to the committee as to whether or not the absence of a trade-mark has any bearing on the relative value of the pieces.

Senator MCKELLAR. I think it would.

Senator MURDOCK. I do not mean for you to take the time of the committee to do it now, but could you do it and submit it for the record at this point?

Mr. MACURDY. That involves some computation and some assumption that the quality was equal to——

Senator MURDOCK. They are both sterling, are they not?

Senator GREEN. They may not be.

Senator MURDOCK. For the record, I would like to ask that the Bureau of Standards be requested to make that computation and assume that both pieces are sterling, and that they are both of the same quality, but that your computation might include a statement to the effect that so far as you, yourselves, are concerned, you might not be sure as to the identical quality.

Mr. MACURDY. I will be glad to do this.

(The statement requested is shown on p. 355.)

Congressman WHITE. Let the record note at this point that the silver in question was purchased from one of the most reliable silver retail dealers in the city of Washington. Harris & Co. has specialized in the sale of silver and they have an extremely fine reputation. That is the firm of R. Harris & Co., F Street at Eleventh, in Washington.

Senator GREEN. It is unfortunate that they could have sold silver which they acquired against the law.

FINDING IN DEMONSTRATION WITH JEWELRY

Congressman WHITE. We will pass now to another item of jewelry. We have here a figure of an elephant, of very plain design, and priced at $5 at the firm of R. Harris & Co.

Senator HAYDEN. Off the record.

(A discussion followed off the record.)

Senator MCKELLAR. Back on the record.

Weight and value of silver content

Congressman WHITE. I will ask the representative from the Bureau of Standards to state to the committee what the troy weight of this elephant figure is?

Mr. MACURDY. It is 0.33 ounce.

Congressman WHITE. What would that 0.33 ounce be worth?

Mr. MACURDY. At what price?

Congressman WHITE. At 71.11 cents an ounce.

Mr. MACURDY. At 71.11 cents an ounce, the weight of the silver being 0.305 ounce, it would be worth less than $0.22.

Congressman WHITE. At 71.11 cents an ounce, that piece of silver is worth about $0.22. What would it be at $1.29 an ounce?

Mr. MACURDY. $0.39.

Congressman WHITE. This item which retails for $5 contains $0.39 worth of silver if the fabricators paid the coinage value of silver, which is $1.29.

Now, I will ask the representative of the Bureau of Standards to weigh that item against silver coin so that the members of the committee can see what it balances at.

Mr. MACURDY. It balances at $0.40.

Congressman WHITE. It balances at $0.40, 4 dimes. In other words, 4 dimes made into that would be worth $5.

Manufacturer's trade-mark

Senator GREEN. I wish to state that I have examined this and can see nothing on it other than the mark of "Sterling." I see no manufacturer's name or trade-mark on it.

I will ask the witness whether he sees anything on it?

Mr. MACURDY. I see only the word "Sterling."

Congressman WHITE. That might detract from its retail value. No doubt with a hallmark this piece of jewelry would be much higher.

Senator GREEN. It may be illegal silver.

DEMONSTRATION CONCERNING JEWELRY PROFITS

Congressman WHITE. To qualify our demonstration as to profits on pieces of jewelry, I have a piece of sterling silver that is properly marked and carries the emblem of the manufacturer on a little figure of a horse, simple in design, and it is marked $25, at which price it was purchased. I will ask the representative from the Bureau of Standards to weigh that in troy ounces.

Mr. MACURDY. It weighs 0.78 ounce.

Weight and value of silver content

Congressman WHITE. That is slightly over three-quarters of an ounce. Could you tell the committee what that would be worth if the silver in it were priced at 71.11 cents an ounce?

Mr. MACURDY. $0.51.

Congressman WHITE. A $25 piece of jewelry, gentlemen, contains $0.51 worth of silver at 71.11 cents per ounce. What would that silver be worth if it were made of silver priced at the coinage value of $1.29?

Mr. MACURDY. $0.93.

Congressman WHITE. Now, would you balance that against silver coins?

Mr. MACURDY. It balances at about $1 in coin.

Congressman WHITE. Here we have a piece of jewelry that is plain in design, purchased from Harris & Co., one of the best retailers of silver, and who are one of the most reputable firms in the city of Washington, that retails at $25, article that will balance up to just about $1—a silver dollar—on the scales.

Manufacturer's trade-mark

Could you tell the committee if it has its proper marking as to genuineness?

Mr. MACURDY. It has a mark which I cannot read. There is the complete name stamped on there, "Sterling."

Congressman WHITE. It carries the mark of "sterling"?

Mr. MACURDY. "Sterling," and a trade name.

Congressman WHITE. It carries the trade name?

Senator GREEN. The individual letters are distinct, but the words do not seem to be in English.

Mr. MACURDY. I could probably read it with a glass, because it is in script.

It is not a law, Senator, but it is an agreement.

Senator GREEN. But it is enforceable by law?

Mr. MACURDY. I do not believe so, sir.

OTHER DEMONSTRATIONS PRESENTED FOR CONSIDERATION

Congressman WHITE. It will not be necessary to weigh the things that you buy in the 5- and 10-cent stores, but I have taken, in recognition of the contentions advanced by the silver fabricators concerning the art that goes into the manufacture of their wares, and would like to bring to the attention of the committee a dish which I have here, and that dish has hinges on it, which dish is rather artistic in design. This dish is nothing more than a soap dish purchased for $0.15 at Murphy & Co.; there is also a bill inside, so when it comes to art and design, you may take that into consideration.

Here also is a cigarette holder, purchased for $0.15. I would say it was quite a heavy piece for $0.15, so when it comes to the art and workmanship that goes into these silver things, I will match the $0.10 products from the 5- and 10-cent store with the products of silver fabricators.

I also have here some bar silver which are bars stamped and purchased from the mint so that you may all see it, just in case any member of the committee would like to know what crude or pure silver looks like. I just happened to have that in my possession.

MARKET CIRCLE REACTIONS TO PROPOSED COMPROMISE ON PRICE OF TREASURY SILVER

I might add and call your attention to the fact, in closing my testimony, that the good word of the proposed compromise seems to have reached market circles. In scanning the market page in yesterday's paper, when all other stocks seemed to be declining with minus figures of 2, 1, and 1¼ against all of the standard stocks of the country, including the big mining companies, the American Smelting & Refining Co. and the Anaconda, we find that yesterday a miraculous thing happened. International silver took a plus jump of 16 points probably on the good news that a compromise on the price of the Treasury silver was going to be effected.

I would like to submit for the record the April 15 issue of the Washington Star, the New York Stock Exchange quotations comprising three columns in the paper, beginning with the prices of the standard stocks and showing the moves on the stock market and the fact that International Silver took a 16-point rise when one-eighth of a point is supposed to be a good jump.

(The matter referred to is on file with the committee.)

Congressman WHITE. In doing that, Mr. Chairman, I want to call the attention of the committee to the fact that——

Senator REED. I think you might have added that International Silver started its jump at 226. That was the high, and the low here is 223, and in the right-hand column where they show the net change there is a plus 16. It is a pretty good stock to start with.

IDENTIFICATION OF DOCUMENTS ESTABLISHING COMMERCIAL STANDARDS AND MARKING OF JEWELRY AND NOVELTIES OF SILVER

Senator REED. I think it might be well for the record to identify the document that has been referred to here as establishing commercial standards. It has been referred to as the law, but I do not understand that it is law, although possibly it may be enforceable.

Senator GREEN. It is enforceable by law in some States.

Senator REED. That document to which reference has been made is entitled, "Making of Jewelry and Novelties of Silver, Commercial Standard CS118-44." It is put out by the United States Department of Commerce.

(The document referred to is on file with the committee.)

Senator GREEN. May I put on Mr. McChesney who will comment very briefly on the prices of silver as it goes out from the manufacturer and the price at which the retailer sells it?

Senator HAYDEN. We have two Members from the House here who will make statements, and Congressman WHITE has gone out of his way to get them over here.

PRICE OF TREASURY SILVER IF CEILING PRICE ON SILVER IS LIFTED

Congressman WHITE. Under the provisions of existing law, if the ceiling price on silver were lifted, there is nothing to prevent the Treasury from selling the silver stock of the Treasury at the coinage value of $1.29. There is no law that prevents it, except the raise of the ceiling price by the Office of Price Administration.

Senator HAYDEN. Thank you for your statement.

Letters Written by Hon. Hugh B. Mitchell, of Washington, Regarding Initiative 166, Pending in the State of Washington

---

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. GLEN H. TAYLOR

OF IDAHO

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES

Friday, August 2 (legislative day of Monday, July 29), 1946

Mr. TAYLOR. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in subsequent editions of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD three letters which the junior Senator from Washington [Mr. MITCHELL] has written on initiative 166, pending in the State of Washington.

There being no objection, the letters were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

LETTER NO. 1 ON INITIATIVE NO. 166

DEAR FRIEND: This is the first of three letters which I intend to write about initiative 166, a proposal fostered by private power interests to delay, hinder, or defeat the extension of competing publicly owned power systems in the State of Washington.

On its face, initiative 166 purports to be a measure permitting people in public-utility districts to vote upon plans for acquiring electric utility properties or for issuance of revenue bonds. In fact, initiative 166 is a rehash of a device drummed up 6 years ago to wreck the public power movement.

You will recall that in November 1940 Washington voters had before them initiative 139, and rejected it by a decisive vote of 362,508 to 253,318. In substance, initiative 166 now proposed is the same as initiative 139 thrown out by the voters in 1940.

Apparently the private power companies never learn anything and never forget anything.

Because they persist in ignoring the wishes of the great majority and try to suppress the benefits of public power with the same old tactics, it is necessary to repeat what the friends of public power said about initiative 139 in 1940.

At that time, Senator Homer T. Bone, a valiant fighter for the development of public power projects in Washington State, wrote a series of letters which eloquently and forcefully condemned the obnoxious activities of the private power interests now again in evidence.

Senator Bone pointed out that initiative 139 was a very cunning device to create the impression that people are being deprived of their right to vote. It was a smart way of inducing citizens to fight the battles of the power companies, while the framers of the initiative stood back of the scenes and enjoyed the deception they were practicing.

Public utility districts are authorized and function under the Washington District Power Act, initiated by the people and approved by them in the general election of 1930. The private utilities unsuccessfully fought the passage of this act, and then tried to render it useless by an amendment requiring a vote on prospective bond issues of public utility districts. When this amendment failed in the legislature, they went to the courts. The Supreme Court of Washington squarely rejected the contention of the private utilities on the voting matter.

Thereupon, the legislative counsel for the Washington State Taxpayers Association, a lobbying arm of the private power interests, drafted initiative 139. By maneuvering the people of Washington State into a vote on initiative 139, the opponents of public power gave themselves the opportunity to "call the shot" on amendments to accepted public power policy.

The private power spokesman made a show of innocence by creating a false front organization, known as the Let the People Vote League. This was not the first and only organization set up to spread misinformation and propaganda against public power. But this new league, which mysteriously sprouted over night and only contained six or eight members, all known to be opposed to public utility districts, sounded like it was working for the public, when actually it worked against the public.

Today in place of the Let the People Vote League we find the Committee for Initiative 166. The name was changed, but the purpose is still the same. In 1940 an investigation by the Federal Power Commission thoroughly exposed the electioneering and political maneuvers of the private power companies in support of initiative 139. I have urged the Commission to repeat this investigation in connection with initiative 166.

Of course, these companies are not really concerned about the right to vote. Do you recall the time the Washington Water Power Co., of Spokane, a subsidiary of Electric Bond & Share of New York, went to the State supreme court to prevent citizens of Spokane from voting on whether or not the company should receive a 25-year renewal of its Spokane franchise?

The private power companies, which have a long history of financial manipulation and control by a few "insiders," do not seem very anxious to solicit the votes of their own stockholders on business policy or security issues. Their professed interest in the people's vote cloaks a desire to block further progress of the public-utility districts and public power.

The great Federal power projects in our State, which were essential to victory in the war and which provide the foundation for economic development of the Pacific Northwest, are predicated upon the wide distribution of power through public bodies. The Congress never intended that the people of Washington State be compelled to pay tribute to private interests in the enjoyment of public power benefits.

A vote against initiative 166 is a vote for public power.

Sincerely yours,

HUGH B. MITCHELL,
United States Senator.

LETTER NO. 2 ON INITIATIVE 166

DEAR FRIEND: In my first letter it was noted that the Federal Power Commission had investigated the propaganda and political expenditures of the private power companies which tried to sell initiative 139 to the people in 1940. Now that the old technique has been hashed up again in the form of initiative 166, I think it is worth-while to review the findings of the Federal Power Commission.

The power lobby, of course, is not a recent event in American history. During the last three or four decades, consumers of electricity have been charged extra billions of dollars by the private utilities to finance one of the most efficient and most powerful lobby organizations ever known.

The weird and complicated story of these efforts to persuade the American consumer that he should continue to pay high electricity rates is spread over the pages of many official documents. In the 1920's the National Electric Light Association and its affiliated organizations poured millions into a campaign to make its propaganda a part of the American educational system. Kindergarten children were treated to the booklets of the power lobby, and college students studied its textbooks. Newspapers, brochures, and printed matter of every description carried its message throughout the land.

The Federal Trade Commission found that the National Electric Light Association and its geographical divisions alone spent $1,500,000 a year. This figure leaves out expenditures of the State associations, which obtained their money locally.

After the Federal Trade Commission report, the Association dropped out of sight, then reappeared under the name of the Edison Electric Institute. The new organization professed high-sounding business objectives, but in a short time the Institute was identified as a remodeled propaganda machine for grinding out material against the TVA and public power.

It is a matter of record that the private power companies of our own State have been associated with, and have contributed to, the National Electric Light Association and the Edison Electrical Institute.

A customary procedure of the power lobby was the setting up of so-called citizens' committees, voters' groups, taxpayers' leagues, and other "false front" organizations in various States and communities. People in the State of Washington have observed the machinations of such groups for many years.

In 1927, for example, private power interests paid the Voters' Information League to try to discredit Seattle City Light. In 1940, the Let the People Vote League was created under the same sponsorship to cripple public utility districts by promulgating initiative 139. In 1944 it was the Citizens' Committee Against Referendum No. 25. Today a Committee for Initiative 166 seeks to further the cause of the private utilities against public power. This latest measure is simply a revision of initiative 139, which was defeated by a vote of almost 2 to 1 in 1940.

What did the Federal Power Commission find when it investigated the political expenditures of Washington power companies in 1940? I quote from the trial examiner's report:

"At the very outset of the hearing it became evident large sums had been made available by the utilities to 'false front' organizations and that devious means had been employed to conceal the extent of political activities of the utilities, particularly those antecedent to the November 1940 general election. The evidence showed that from about the beginning of 1938 until the 1940 election there had been a well organized and steadily accelerated drive generously financed by the utilities to defeat municipal plant projects and utility district proposals and, finally, to enact laws, including Washington initiative No. 139, which were skillfully designed to obstruct the financing of future acquisitions of plants by utility districts, whether through purchase or condemnation.

* * * * *

"From this investigation it is found each of the respondents has engaged extensively in political activities to defeat public ownership measures both before State legislatures and at the polls, charging part of the cost of these activities to income deductions or surplus and a part to operating expense.

* * * * *

"The political activities were for the defeat of public measures and objectives. To accomplish a drastic amendment of the Washington public utility district law four of the utilities contributed liberally to the campaign to enact initiative No. 139. The means employed to obtain the signatures of voters to the initiative petition was neither forthright nor commendable and the electorate administered a sharp rebuke at the polls."

The following summary of the findings made by the Federal Power Commission's trial examiner provides an instructive background from which to appraise the current campaign for initiative 166;

1. From 1935 to 1940 the five respondent companies spent more than $1,000,000 in political activities to influence the decisions of voters at elections relating to the establishment of public utility districts, as well as to bring about the enactment of initiative 139.

2. During the same period, Puget Sound Power & Light Co. spent $670,938.24, and Washington Waterpower Co. spent $37,640.87 for services of lawyers, engineers, and other persons, and incidental expenses to defend condemnation proceedings brought by public utility districts. Most of these expenditures were charged to the cost of service.

3. Accounting practices relating to political expenditures were neither consistent nor uniform.

4. Records of political expenditures were meager and in many instances misleading.

5. Certain of the accounting records relating to such expenditures were falsified.

6. Lavish amounts were expended to defeat PUD proposals and to contest PUD condemnations.

7. Various "front" organizations were employed to veil political and legislative activities.

8. The respondent utilities contributed more than $115,000 to Washington State Taxpayers Association during 28 months ending November 1940.

9. Washington State Taxpayers Association advanced $43,000 to Let the People Vote League to support initiative No. 139.

10. Systematic house-to-house bell-ringing campaigns were conducted by Washington Waterpower Co. through employees schooled in political campaign technique.

11. Records were not maintained to show the time consumed or expense incurred by employees for political purposes.

12. Political and legislative expenditures were frequently hidden in expense accounts of officers and employees.

13. Employee and labor organizations were used and exploited to further the political interests of the respondent utilities.

14. Extensive advertising and radio programs were featured by the utility companies during political campaigns

15. So-called civic organizations were fostered and financed for political purposes.

16. During the years 1935 to 1940, the five respondent companies contributed in the aggregate more than $70,000 to the Edison Electrical Institute of New York City.

Record your judgment of these activities by a vote against initiative 166.

Sincerely yours,

HUGH B. MITCHELL,
United States Senator.

LETTER NO. 3 ON INITIATIVE 166

DEAR FRIEND: In this third letter on initiative 166 I wish to consider how the proposed measure would actually work against public power. Initiative 166 is designed to violate the spirit of the Federal law authorizing power projects in this State and to defeat the intent of the State law governing public-utility districts.

In the Bonneville Act the Congress of the United States specified that the widest possible use of electric energy be encouraged and monopolization by limited groups be prevented. In furtherance of this policy the Congress specifically provided that cooperatives and public bodies be given "preferential rights and priorities" in the distribution of Bonneville power.

The purpose behind initiative 166 is directly opposed to the policy of Congress. The private power companies evidently prefer to see the monopolization of Federal power by limited groups. By maintaining higher rates and limited distribution, they desire to place a toll charge on this power generated for the public.

Customers of private companies in our State paid on the average twice as much per kilowatt-hour in 1945 as did the customers of public systems. In the past 5 years public competition has induced rate cuts from the private companies amounting to more than $40,000,000. Further rate reductions can and should be made.

The public-utility districts have demonstrated their own ability to reduce rates. Districts have cut kilowatt-hour costs as much as 60 percent since taking over private company properties in 16 counties, and have increased the use of electricity as much as 250 percent.

Through the instrumentality of initiative 166 the private power companies hope to put a stop to further benefits of public power. Let us see what this measure proposes.

At first glance initiative 166 seems reasonable and unpretentious. But a little study will show that it is a tricky device to disarm the voter and create an impression of wrong doing on the part of public-utility-district commissioners.

Section 1 of the initiative recites that the purpose of the act is to "remedy defects" in existing laws relating to public utility districts which allegedly permit commissioners to disregard the wishes of the people in acquiring electric-utility properties and in issuing bonds to finance such acquisitions. It is then proposed to give the people "the right" to vote by making mandatory a prior approving election on purchases, financing, etc., of these properties.

Of course, the utility district commissioners would still have the right under this initiative to purchase, condemn or construct water systems, irrigation systems, and other facilities authorized by law without the necessity of an approving vote. The sponsors of initiative 166 only talk about giving effect to the "will of the people" when it concerns the electric properties in which they are interested.

More important, initiative 166 is a perversion of the concept of the public will and sound administration. The people expressed their will in voting a law for the creation of public-utility districts and in electing commissioners who are given broad, general powers under that law. These commissioners already carry a mandate from the people. If they exceed their authority, they can be prosecuted in the courts or rejected at the polls.

The contention of initiative 166 that the commissioners can ignore the will of the people is an effort to distract attention from the fact that these commissioners have a lawful purpose to accomplish and lawful duties to carry out. In the event further aids are deemed necessary to promote the public-power objectives of the law, the people can amend the law accordingly. Certainly these objectives will not be attained by a measure, sponsored by the enemies of public power, which nullifies the basic law while professing to restore to the people their voting rights.

Sections 2, 3, and 4 of initiative 166 contain the administrative "booby traps." They require that any utility district which hereafter seeks to purchase or condemn properties of an existing electric utility must: (1) Adopt a resolution describing the plan of acquisition and the amount of revenue bonds to be issued in connection therewith; (2) submit this resolution to the qualified voters at a special or general election; and (3) proceed to purchase or condemn the properties in question and issue bonds only after voters' approval of the resolution has been obtained.

These procedures, if adopted, would make it impossible for a public-utility district to negotiate squarely and firmly for purchase of an electric utility. Without knowing the results of a future election, the district could offer no definite commitment to the company, and without a contract from the company the district could offer no definite proposition to the voters. Thus the district would be shuttled back and forth in a twilight zone of uncertainty from which it could never emerge to proceed with the business of acquiring and operating public-power facilities.

If a condemnation rather than a purchase were proposed, the difficulty would not be lessened. The district would be required to submit a bond authorization to the voters for approval without knowing the results of the jury award in a future condemnation suit. If the final award turned out to be higher than the approved bond authorization, the district would be stopped short, and the vote wasted. If the jury made its decision in accord with the amount of bond issue, then the actual worth of the company's investment would be disregarded. A more ingenious method of insuring overpayment to a company for its condemned properties would be hard to find anywhere.

The provision in initiative 166 for the holding of special or general elections would require the public-utility district in the case of a special election to get an order from the county commissioners of the particular county involved. In the event this order were denied, the district would be forced to wait until the next general election—as long as 2 years—to submit to the voters a proposition for purchase or condemnation of electric utility properties.

Initiative 166 further provides that condemnation proceedings or purchase contracts pending at the time of its passage would be unaffected, but that no properties could actually be acquired or bonds issued by the district until the required election were held. Thus contracts and other arrangements already made would be subject ex post facto to a new procedure.

Initiative 166 would completely disrupt the pending plan for acquiring the Puget Sound Power & Light properties. It is contemplated that all of Puget's properties would be purchased by one public-utility district, with other districts simultaneously contracting to purchase distribution properties within their respective boundaries. But initiative 166 would require each and every participating district to hold a separate election. Failure in any one would wreck the whole project.

It is clear from the foregoing analysis that initiative 166 is not a proposal that confers upon the people a right to vote; on the contrary it is a proposal to thwart the people's will by confusion and delay.

The best assurance that the will of the people and power policy keep in step is the rejection of initiative 166.

Sincerely yours,

HUGH B. MITCHELL,
United States Senator.

Taxes and Trickery

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. JOHN D. DINGELL

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, August 2, 1946

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Speaker, while we await the pleasure of the Senate with regard to action on adjournment this final day of the Seventy-ninth Congress, permit me to say a few words of warning as a farewell to my Democratic colleagues who are about to return to their respective constituencies in order that they and particularly the voters in their districts may be put on guard against nefarious political trickery of every kind. Propaganda originated in or inspired by the Republican National Committee is being circulated through the press and over the radio and credited to individual Members of Congress, although in some instances quotations and statements for political reasons may be, and are, original and spontaneous.

Here are two distinct examples of baseless two-edged Republican propaganda intended either to induce or frighten the citizen to vote for Republicans in the November election. Both expressions are without substance or reason, and I brand them as misleading and irresponsible. They are not sustained by facts or authority and are, because they seek to intimidate the electorate, reprehensible and insulting to the American intelligence. The people will repudiate such tactics in the fall when they know the truth.

One Republican member of the Committee on Ways and Means, of which I am a member, by way of widespread Associated Press publicity stated that a 20 percent cut of personal income taxes is dependent upon the election of a Republican majority of the House of Representatives. He bases his spurious claim upon a prospective 50 percent cut in Federal expenses. He is quoted further as having said, "Such an election outcome would mean a reduction in Federal consumer taxes." These remarks are baseless and impossible. They are a move of political desperation intended to produce a certain desirable political effect even at the cost of misleading the people. There is not one responsible authority on Federal taxation who would agree a 50 percent cut in over-all or the fixed expenses is possible.

We all agree a cut is desirable and if it is at all possible it will be realized through the continuance of the Democratic Party in control of this House.

As regards the quotation bearing upon consumer taxes, let me say that it is pure unadulterated bunk and the author knows it. My politically minded friend knows too that he and his Republican Party are ardent uncompromising advocates of a Federal sales tax which I among others successfully opposed every time the proposal was made because it would shift the burden of taxation to the shoulders of those least able to bear it and would relieve at the same time the coupon clipper waxing fat upon royalties and tax exempt bonds. Let me remind my friend living in his glass house that when in 1945 I succeeded in obtaining favorable committee and House action on the repeal of the wartime excise taxes that it was he and his Republican colleagues aided by one Democrat of the conference committee, of which I was a member, who voted in opposition to me and contrary to House action for retention of the excise taxes which are, of course, consumer taxes. We have these taxes today because the Republican conferees for the large part insisted upon their retention. They were very anxious and did succeed, again contrary to House action, to fully repeal the corporation excess profits taxes. The little fellow, the consumer, and his welfare were swapped for the benefit of the privileged corporation and he was stripped and sent home in a barrel. Such cuts in taxes as were given the average citizen and the complete elimination from the tax rolls of more than 12,000,000 taxpayers—small taxpayers in the lowest brackets, was the work of the Democratic majority in the committee and in the House. It was consistent with the policy of this Administration. If further tax cuts or adjustments can be made they should logically begin at the bottom in accord with the Democratic idea instead of at the top as prescribed by Republican formula. My friend would not likely agree to that I am sure.

Of course, we cannot be too severe in our denunciation of such desperate moves on the part of our Republican colleagues. They hungered for a House majority and have been planning to take over since 1934 but more times than not, when the votes were counted, they lost instead of gaining seats. Now again, like the doomed soul, they hope for victory and control by any manner or means. The end justifies the means, is their philosophy.

The United Press refers to the remarks in the House of another self-anointed tax expert who predicts or refers fearfully to prospective capital tax levies intended to tax federally what the people own. This "hot tip" intended as a political forewarning is an invention of his own imagination or political pipedream and comes from a Member of the House who has no connection whatsoever with the Ways and Means Committee having jurisdiction in all tax matters. This "hot tip" provoked a great deal of laughter at the Treasury Department where it did not even rate a denial.

What I set out to illustrate here, Mr. Speaker, is that if the Republican Party cannot induce you to vote for their candidates by the spurious promise of less taxes, they will use the opposite threatening technique, or of frightening you into voting their ticket by insistent propaganda that you will be further taxed unless you do vote for their candidates.

The policy and practice of the Democratic Party and of your humble servant, Mr. Speaker, is to cut taxes to the greatest possible extent at the earliest possible date where the greatest possible good will ensue; that is, at the lower level first, and progressively toward the higher and corporate levels. But candidly there will not be any mad rush to cut taxes if such action is deemed inconsistent with the stability of our economy and of the outstanding bonds in the hands of our people and especially if such unwarranted cuts might jeopardize the general welfare. We remember only too well the mad rush to cut taxes for political reasons after the last war, which terminated in the collapse of 1929. We have a large war debt secured by bonds which must be reduced as rapidly as possible during prosperous, not depressed times. We must provide amply for veterans, the aged, the blind, and the dependent. Our responsibility is to all of our people not the few who object to carrying their just share of the tax burden.

My final warning to you, my colleagues, beware of such tactics and warn your constituents about false prophets. There may be other and last-minute personal political tricks. The Republicans, remember, are past masters at the game of promising what we Democrats have already accomplished.

The Movement Nobody Knows

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. ANDREW J. BIEMILLER
OF WISCONSIN
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Friday, August 2, 1946

Mr. BIEMILLER. Mr. Speaker, unfortunately, a great deal of misinformation regarding the aims and activities of the labor movement prevails in this country. Sometimes it is difficult for the general public to obtain accurate and fair information.

In the July issue of Current History, Mr. Mark Starr, educational director for the International Ladies' Garment Workers Union, has published an article entitled "The Movement Nobody Knows." This article throws so much light on certain misunderstandings regarding the labor movement that I am including substantial portions from it with my remarks:

THE MOVEMENT NOBODY KNOWS

(By Mark Starr, educational director, International Ladies' Garment Workers Union)

Hewing more closely to the line of truth, perhaps it should be called the movement which is known chiefly by its mistakes. Generally labor is thought of as a single united force; actually there are the same internal conflicts in labor between groups, personalities, principles, and institutions as are to be found, say, in organized religion. But as in organized religion there is a central idea—the solidarity of men who toil for their living. It is both tragic and strange that the citizens of the United States know so little about a movement with over 14,000,000 members who, with their families, now compose such an important part of our community. Most people are aware of unions only when their members propose to stop work, and then our cartoonists picture them as a huge Frankenstein bogey.

The relative newness and rapidity in growth of the modern labor movement have created fear and ignorance which, in turn, have fostered illusions, fallacies, and bogeys in the minds of otherwise well-informed people. Public opinion polls reveal how widespread these misconceptions are and how foolish and dangerous the remedies proposed for them. Exceptional instances of union racketeers are exaggerated into a general pattern. It is as if the rare two-headed calf were taken as typifying the whole bovine species.

Much of the behavior of the modern labor movement can be understood only if one remembers the fierce struggle for existence through which it passed. Few cared when strikes failed and unions were smashed. Many of the "featherbedding" and "make work" regulations are rooted in a deep fear of unemployment and social insecurity. You cannot in a few months obliterate the influence of a hostile environment because there always must be expected a hang-over in habits of thought and behavior.

Only fear of the unknown can explain what many members of the general public feel about the unions. The press, movies, schools, church, and radio have only made modest beginnings in reporting the normal activities of unions. During the war everybody saw the picture of Sewell Avery being carried out of his Montgomery Ward office; but they ignored the fact that, up to that time, the War Labor Board had had before it 6,750 cases involving 8,500,000 workers. Only 18 were referred to the President, of which 2 were from Montgomery Ward; only 14 caused temporary Government operation.

We do not attack banking when we find that the president of one of our greatest financial concerns has, by means of fictitious sales of stocks and shares and by transferring accounts to the names of his relatives, cheated the Government in the payment of income tax. We do not pull down the stock exchange when its president is sent to jail for mishandling funds; neither do we make over the marriage laws to suit those who make repeated scandal copy for the tabloids. When an exceptional firm is found guilty of selling defective cable to the Army, we do not indict all war plants. However, because in a few exceptional instances, gangsters have muscled into the control of a local union, some people immediately demand restrictions on all unions.

Ill-digested and contradictory measures, such as the Smith-Connally Act, were in wartime rushed through Congress over President Roosevelt's veto in 30 minutes—less time than it took Congress to declare war on Japan after Pearl Harbor. Similar anti-union laws have been rushed through many of our State legislatures. Even the authors of the Smith-Connally Act now want to end it. The Case bill is the most recent antiunion proposal. This measure contains all the proposals repeatedly urged by labor's enemies to destroy labor unions. Interference with strikebreakers is made unlawful; unionists would be forbidden under law to refuse to work with or handle goods made under nonunion conditions; Federal courts could be used to enforce collective bargaining agreements. The case bill would nullify the Norris-LaGuardia Anti-Injunction Act.

Such measures constitute a serious setback to the trend to union-management cooperation which was necessary to win the war and also to lift capital-labor relations up to new and higher levels. Just as all sensible men and women hope to see aggressive war outlawed and the nations bound together in the world scene, so inside the United States of America, all thoughtful men and women must hope that the oldtime conflict between capital and labor will be replaced by mutual understanding.

But let us deal with some specific misconceptions.

THE STRIKE RECORD

The average man believes that unions are synonymous with strikes. This is emphatically denied by the record. Prof. Sumner H. Slichter, in the Yale Review (December 1945) said that in the year 1942 there were approximately 50,000 agreements between employers and trade unions. He estimated that 25,000 of these were negotiated yearly and nine out of ten of them renewed without any interruption in production or resort to mediation. This record Professor Slichter describes as excellent. In the same article he wrote: "Furthermore an occasional strike or lock-out is needed both to test the willingness of each side to fight and to keep alive a vigorous spirit of realism."

The idea is prevalent that strikes seriously hindered wartime production; actually interruptions of production were cut down to the vanishing point. The latest available figures given by the United States Department of Labor show that in the 44 months of the war, man-days lost due to strikes amounted to only eleven one-hundredths of 1 percent of the time actually put in by the Nation's workers. Further, this tiny number of unauthorized stoppages were quickly terminated by the unions involved. * * *

The electrical construction industry (150,000 workers and 1,500 business firms) has been free of any major strife for 25 years. In the women's garment industry (320,000 union members with over 8,000 contracts) the majority of agreements are renewed without stoppages as a result of the experience of mutual faith in nearly 40 years of successful collective bargaining.

Another prevalent idea is that workers obtained fabulous wages during and after the war. Much of the unrest among returned veterans, which has resulted in strikes, was caused by the fact that they heard exaggerated estimates of wartime wages and were disappointed when they found them missing upon their return to civilian life. While it is true that overtime and increased rates sent up the take-home pay of wartime workers, those advances have not been retained. The average weekly earnings of a production worker in manufacturing industries in New York State, according to the last figure obtainable for September 1945, stood at $47.04. The average manufacturing worker, according to the United States Commerce Department, earned $46.35 in June 1945. This was cut back by the reduction in overtime to $35.60. No housewife needs to be told that a family cannot be maintained adequately on such wages. From January 1941 to October 1945, living costs rose 33 percent and factory wage rates 33.7 percent. Overtime swelled take-home pay in wartime. When that disappeared, the real position is clear.

Much is made of stoppages due to strikes among different unions claiming a particular line of work. The truth is that labor deplores jurisdictional strikes and has developed elaborate agencies in the building industry and elsewhere to prevent them. Their causes are better understood if we remember that men and women fight for the jobs because they fear unemployment. However, jurisdictional disputes account for less than 4 percent of work stoppages, according to official figures.

It is asserted that trade-union leaders are ignorant agitators, foreign-born, or at least under the inspiration of alien ideas. Prof. C. Wright Mills, University of Maryland, has shown that in politics, in religion, and in education, the leaders are a good cross-sampling of American citizens. Eighty-five percent of A. F. of L. leaders and 79 percent of CIO leaders are United States born. Sixteen percent of the American Federation of Labor leaders have college education, and 32 percent of the Congress of Industrial Organizations. Higher percentages, of course, have been through high school.

A common illusion is that trade-union leaders are overpaid. Prof. Philip Taft, after giving full details of all the salaries paid by A. F. of L., CIO, and independent unions in the Harvard Business Review (winter, 1946), concludes:

"Considering the great responsibility that rests upon them, the concept of fabulous earnings seems a gross exaggeration."

Only one president of an international union gets over $30,000; 10 get less than $5,000; 22 get less than $7,000. The curious will find a full listing of CIO salaries in Economic Outlook (February 1946), and also a comparison with big-business salaries. Mr. C. E. Wilson, of General Motors, got $459,041 in 1943; the president of the United Auto Workers get $9,000. Mr. Eugene Grace, of Bethlehem Steel, in the same year got $221,645; Philip Murray, president of the United Steelworkers, gets $20,000.

Union critics are hard to satisfy. If union leaders do not discipline their members, they are said to be irresponsible; if they do, they are denounced as dictators. The majority of citizens are unaware that unions regularly publish their accounts. In many meetings I have asked the question: "Which union balance sheet do you want to see?" and offered to obtain it, but the hecklers rarely are willing to name a union.

Labor unions are blamed by editors who have doubled the price of their papers, for jacking up prices by increased wage demands. But when Walter Reuther showed how to get increased wages without increasing prices based upon the employers' figures of increased productivity, he was rebuked as butting into the employers' business. When Philip Murray and John L. Lewis say that prices are none of the union's direct business, that is also bitterly criticized. Editors affect ignorance about welfare funds provided either by a pay-roll or production tax and preferred to denounce Petrillo and Lewis as dictators, but in August 1945, the study report supplement of Labor and Nation examined such plans run by seven groups of unions, including those in men's and women's clothing, electrical machinery, and shipbuilding.

There is the illusion that unions enjoy special privileges under the law. The same person who will denounce trade-union leaders as dictators will also insist that those union leaders live up to their responsibilities. The compulsory payment of trade-union dues for privileges received is bitterly attacked by those who normally pay their taxes without complaint.

DISCIPLINE

Critics of trade-unionism refuse to recognize that group action and disciplines are an indispensable part of our modern life. Modern industry cannot be carried on with the psychology of a gold rush. If a union is responsible for the enforcement of a trade-union contract, then its leaders must have the right to discipline its members. However, no one is forced to belong to a union. While there are between fourteen and fifteen million men and women in trade-unions, that is less than half the wage workers of the United States. If the unions do not have the right to strike, then the employer should not have the right to lock out, and no one thinks that compulsory arbitration can be rigidly enforced. Few think that the Government is capable of replacing the negotiation between organized labor and organized business in industrial matters.

Labor unions object to being incorporated because incorporation is introduced to limit the liability of shareholders in a company usually engaged in an activity carried on for profit. The unions are not business concerns and do not require any limitation of their liability because they have no shareholders thus to protect.

The suggestion that unions are not responsible for their actions is based upon a complete misapprehension. Trade-unionists are subject as individuals to the laws of the land in exactly the same way as other fellow American citizens. Unions cannot be made responsible for the action of their members because the member is not legally made responsible to the union. A man can quit his union membership at will. Hence it would be an utterly unfair position for a union member to do something and then for his union to assume responsibility while he himself may no longer be a member.

The people who want unions incorporated hope to keep unions busy in the courts by planting in their ranks possible disrupters in the pay of those wishing to distract the attention of the unions by creating a lawyers' paradise. Unions in other countries are not incorporated and there is no reason why they should be incorporated here.

* * * * *

It is alleged that trade-unions restrict production, despite the fact that both the A. F. of L. and the CIO insist that wages can only be increased from the fruits of increased productivity. The May issue of A. F. of L.'s Labor's Monthly Survey says:

"Our first task is to increase production of consumer goods so that supply will be enough to meet demand and competition will again keep prices down, so that increasing productivity will create the income to pay further wage increases."

* * * * *

Labor has some right to be suspicious of those who wish to reform it. Despite the fact that the Wagner Labor Relations Act has been in operation for nearly 11 years, reactionary interests are still anxious to repeal it. The most open advocate of repeal is John W. Scoville, former economic consultant to the Chrysler Corp. His platform is a simple one:

"1. All Federal (labor) laws should be repealed;

"2. There should be no State laws on wage rates or hours;

"3. Collective bargaining and all other monopolistic practices should be made illegal by State laws."

Not all employers are as reactionary as Scoville, but the number of strikes for recognition of a union as the workers' bargaining agency are significantly increasing. In 1945 there were 462 strikes for recognition or recognition linked with wages and hours. These constituted 10.1 percent of all the strikes in that year and the idleness resulting in 18.7 percent of the total number of days lost. In comparison, the strikes to obtain the closed or union shop in 1945 numbered only 90 or 1.9 percent of the total, resulting in only 2.6 percent of the total man days of idleness. Incidentally, the main cause for strikes in 1945 was still conflicts over wages and hours. These constituted 42.4 percent of the total number.

Labor has a big responsibility in public relations to make its activities known to everybody and to show that what is good for labor has been and still is good for the community. The unions' extensive welfare activities are practically unknown as was demonstrated by the surprise of the general public over the request by the miners' union for the welfare tax. Labor should place its record before public opinion—and indeed before its own members and their relatives—by all the modern arts of mass media to make it the movement that everybody knows.

Equal Justice Under Law

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. WILLIAM LEMKE
OF NORTH DAKOTA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Wednesday, July 31, 1946

Mr. LEMKE. Mr. Speaker, recently there appeared in the August issue of the Washington News Digest, on page 6, an article by myself entitled "Equal Justice Under Law." This magazine is published by our former colleague, John J. O'Connor, of New York.

Mr. O'Connor used to be chairman of the Rules Committee. Needless to say, I did not always agree with Mr. O'Connor as chairman, yet I knew he was carrying out the wishes of the administration—the administration that later on opposed him.

Since Mr. O'Connor left Congress, I have begun to admire his fearlessness, and his stand, taken on many important issues. As publisher of the Washington News Digest, he is doing a good job—at times critical of the administration and especially of bureaucracy—but if there is anything bureaucracy needs, it is more constructive criticism.

Here is the article as it appears in the Washington News Digest:

"EQUAL JUSTICE UNDER THE LAW"

(By Representative William Lemke, of North Dakota)

This morning I passed the Supreme Court Building—a beautiful building of white marble. The most beautiful building, perhaps, in Washington.

A building where nine Justices are supposed to preside over the destiny of the Nation.

Over the entrance are these words, "Equal justice under law."

For 150 years men of dignity, honor, and integrity presided over this Court. They were not infallible, but they had courage and vision. They removed themselves from the political humdrum of the Nation.

Such men as John Marshall, Oliver Wendell Holmes, William Howard Taft, and Charles Evans Hughes gave respect and reverence to that Court.

But in recent years, that Court became a political stooge to carry out the will of the President regardless of the Constitution.

The former President was determined to ignore the Constitution by appointing judges that would carry out his mandates.

He was determined to unite the legislative, executive, and judicial branches of our Government into one—into Franklin Delano Roosevelt.

In the words of Louis XIV "The state, it is I."

Congress trembled as it witnessed the packing of the Supreme Court, as it witnessed Member after Member rewarded for being a political stooge, by appointment to the District Court, the Circuit Court of Appeals, and the Supreme Court.

It realized that unbiased justice under these conditions was impossible.

It knew that Hitler, Mussolini, and Stalin achieved their dictatorships by first destroying the judiciary.

The present disgraceful squabble among the Justices of the Supreme Court is not only a shock but a blessing in disguise.

The degrading of the Court was not the fault of the former President alone, but of the people who elected him four times.

We got what we voted for—a packed Court composed of small and quarrelsome men.

We got a Court where none of the Justices are big enough to realize the lofty position they hold.

Public opinion will now wash the dirty linen, and may again make that Court worthy of its inscription "equal justice under law."

Grain Restrictions Relief and Restoration of 5-Cent Beer

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. JOHN D. DINGELL
OF MICHIGAN
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Friday, August 2, 1946

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Speaker, on this final day of this session, I find it necessary to impose upon the membership of the House for a second time in the matter which concerns a great segment of the people who reside not only in my district but are perhaps of the same frame of mind if less numerous in districts throughout the entire United States. I refer to the problem of restrictions pertaining to the use of grain chiefly in the production of beer although the same principle applies to the production of spirituous beverages.

I am in sympathy with the objective sought in petitions which have been presented to me and which protest present and continued restrictions on the quantity of grains available for the manufacture of beer—"The beverage of moderation." The petitions were sponsored by the Michigan State Council of Brewery and Soft Drink Workers. A similar proposal was brought to my attention by John Bodenstab, of the Royal Ark Association, of Detroit, Mich. Though sympathetic, I cannot, however, agree that it is an easy matter for those in public office who are responsible to make an immediate decision in line with the proposal of the petitions. I have discussed this problem on more than one occasion and with more than one Government official. A long time ago, I went into a huddle with my good friend and former colleague, Secretary of Agriculture Marvin Jones and more recently with his distinguished successor and my equally dear friend, Clinton P. Anderson, who has been serving the welfare of the people in the capacity of Secretary of Agriculture.

Obivously there can be no immediate or hastily considered increase in the amount of grains to be diverted from the starving people of the world for beverage purposes unless and until the food situation generally is relieved.

BREAD COMES FIRST

The first consideration, I am sure we will all concede, must of necessity be given to the bakers, and I cannot visualize the time for such relief to the bakeries as being far off. I think it must come very shortly. I am reconciled that it cannot be immediately. Reasonable crops will, of course, be harvested throughout the devastated lands, thus easing the demand upon our food resources. God's blessing upon our country is manifest in the bumper crops of corn, wheat, and other edible grains. In the most important crops we have set records of production according to the prospect and the report soon to be officially issued by the Agriculture Department, so I can foresee a very material increase in the amount of grains to be allotted to the brewers and perhaps to the distillers in this country within a short time and it is to be hoped the situation will be so satisfactory and the yield in grain so great that all restrictions and all quotas can and will be lifted within a short time.

I am an advocate of temperance. Good beer is a food beverage, a temperance drink, a mild and healthful stimulant. It is the workingman's champagne and the workingman has a right to a good glass of beer at the lowest possible price. Vice President Marshall once said "What the country needs is a good 5-cent cigar." Mr. Speaker, let it be recorded here that JOHN DINGELL said, "It is even more important to have a good glass of beer to be followed by a good 5-cent cigar." To attain this objective, it will be necessary not only to increase the volume to meet the normal demands of the consumer but at the same time it will be necessary to eliminate at least the wartime excise taxes on beer. In fact, these beverage taxes should be reduced to the lowest point consistent with fairness and justice to the millions of consumers in the industry and to the hundreds of thousands of men and women engaged in the production of these beverages and those who are in the business of distribution to the consumer.

At this time I have reason to say, Mr. Speaker, the outlook for relief is good. I believe restrictions on the quantity of grains available to the beverage industry will soon be eased materially, perhaps to the extent of 50 percent and within a short time I hope that all restrictions on volume and the kind of grain to be used will be eliminated in their entirety. It may be that if and when the Agriculture Department reports are in we will find that it has been possible for the Department to issue an order to abolish any and all impositions and restrictions at an early date.

H. R. 1362—Railroad Retirement Acts

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. ROBERT CROSSER
OF OHIO
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, August 1, 1946

Mr. CROSSER. Mr. Speaker, pursuant to the leave granted to me on August 1, I present the following analysis of H. R. 1362.

I have not here discussed provisions in the acts which have not been changed by the amendments contained in H. R. 1362.

1. EMPLOYEE

While the definition of "employer" remains unchanged, the definition of "employee" has been clarified in some respects, and changed in others, by section 1 of the amendments, effective as of July 31, 1946. Under the unamended law the test whether an individual is an employee is whether in the performance of his compensated service is "subject to the continuing authority of the employer to supervise and direct the manner of rendition of his service." This test has been found meaningless when applied to professional personnel, such as doctors and lawyers, since the nature of their work is such that they are normally required to exercise independent professional judgment and cannot be subjected to supervision as to the manner in which their services are performed although they are employed on a time basis and are recognized as being employees rather than independent contractors. For this reason, and for the purpose of clarification, the amendments make an individual an employee if "he is rendering professional or technical services and is integrated into the staff of the employer," regardless of supervision. This conforms substantially to the decisions which have been made by the Railroad Retirement Board under the unamended law.

Another problem with the definition of employee has to do with railroad services performed on the property used in the carrier's operations and which are of such a nature as to be an integral part of the carrier's operations. In some instances, carriers have entered into contracts for the performance of such services though they can hardly afford to divest themselves of the authority to supervise and direct the manner of rendition of such services. In view of all the circumstances, the Board has, in many cases, held individuals performing such services as coming within the statutory test, but some carriers have disagreed with the Board's holdings. For purposes of clarification, and in order to avoid long extended controversies, the definition of employee has been amended to provide that an individual is an employee under the act also, regardless of whether subject to supervision, if "he is rendering, on the property used in the employer's operations, personal services, the rendition of which is integrated in the employer's operations." For example, if an individual performs, under a contract with a carrier, services on the property of the carrier and clearly integrated into the carrier's operations, such as coaling and sanding locomotives, removing cinders and ashes from locomotives, washing or repairing cars, or similar services, the individual would be an employee of the carrier, regardless of the carrier's authority to supervise the work and regardless of the fact that the services are performed under a contract purporting to establish an independent contractor status. Certain substantive changes in the definition of employee was also made by the amendments. Thus: Before September 1940, many redcaps were compensated exclusively by tips, a form of remuneration specifically excluded from the term "compensation" so that these redcaps were not employees and could not get credit for their service before September 1940. To eliminate this injustice, the amendments have provided a method for giving the redcaps employee status and credit for their prior services.

Another substantive change in the definition of employee refers to a problem concerning officers and employees employed principally in Canada by subordinate units of labor organizations. The unamended law provided special formulae for computing the compensation of these organization men, resulting, in many cases, in such a low compensation that the individuals concerned derive little or no benefit from the credit. The amendment provides for disregarding the compensation in any such case if the prescribed formula would result in less than 10 percent of the remuneration being creditable, and thus excludes such officers or employees from employ status.

2. COMPENSATION, SECTION 2 OF THE AMENDMENTS, EFFECTIVE JULY 31, 1946

Under the unamended acts, compensation has been credited to the month in which earned irrespective of when paid. Effective July 31, 1946, the crediting of compensation has been changed to a paid basis in order to avoid the heavy administrative burden, both on the Board and on the employers, of making the innumerable corrections heretofore necessary in cases of back pay awards and the like. In most cases it makes little or no difference to the employee's benefits whether the compensation is credited at the time it is paid or at the time it is earned.

Another change made by the amendments is to establish a presumption that payments made through the regular pay roll are compensation. This is intended to regularize the Board's present practice and to avoid the necessity of requiring further evidence of the necessary employee status.

Still another problem dealt with by the amendments relates to pay for time lost. The present law provides generally without limitation for crediting pay for time lost and the Board has interpreted the term as not including pay for time lost on acount of personal injury where it appears the payment was made solely in settlement of the employer's liability. The amendment provides specifically for crediting such injury payments, as well as other payments, when they are made with respect to identifiable periods of absence from the employer's service, though made in a lump-sum. In the case of lump-sums, the payment would be allocated to the month or months in which the time is lost, subject, of course, to the $300 monthly maximum. The amendments provide also for the inclusion in compensation of payments for loss of earnings resulting from displacement to a less remunerative position or occupation.

In changing the method of crediting compensation from an earned to a paid basis, it is provided that compensation paid in January for services rendered in the preceding calendar year is to be credited for the preceding calendar year if it is reported to the Board within the month of January. An additional provision permits the employee to have his compensation allocated, upon proof, to any month in which earned regardless of when paid.

The only other addition to the definition of "compensation" is this: Previously the compensation attributed to military service has been, in effect, the average compensation earned by the individual in his other months of service, except that $160 per month was credited in computing the lump-sum death benefit. This amendment gives credit at the $160-per-month rate for all benefit purposes.

3. NEW TAX RATES EFFECTIVE JANUARY 1, 1947

Subchapter B of chapter 9 of the Internal Revenue Code, which contains the taxing provisions for railroad retirement purposes, is amended by section 3 of the amendments. This section increases the tax rates on employers, employees, and employee representatives. The present tax, a pay-roll tax, is at the rate of 3½ percent on employers, 3½ percent on employees, and 7 percent on employee representatives. This tax rate will continue in effect until the end of 1946 on compensation earned. Beginning January 1, 1947, these taxes will be assessed on compensation paid and will be increased as follows:

For the years 1947 and 1948 the tax rate will be 5¾ percent on employers, 5¾ percent on employees, and 11½ percent on employee representatives.

For the years, 1949, 1950, and 1951 the tax rate will be 6 percent on employers, 6 percent on employees, and 12 percent on employee representatives.

After 1951 the tax rate will be 6¼ percent on employers, 6¼ percent on employees, and 12½ percent on employee representatives.

The definitions of "employee" and "compensation" have been amended for the purposes of the new taxing provisions in the same way that they have been amended for the purposes of the Retirement Act.

The compensation of an employee of a subordinate unit of a national railway labor organization—that is, an employee of a State or National legislative committee, a general committee, and insurance department, and a local lodge or division, of a national railway labor organization employer—who is also employed by another covered employer, will be taxable only if such employee's compensation from such other employer service is less than $300 a month, and only on the difference between his total compensation—not exceeding $300 a month—and his compensation from such other employer. If such an employee works for more than one subordinate unit employer, all such employers will pay a proportionate share of the tax on the additional compensation. The net effect of this amendment will be that the employer tax would be paid by railroad employers in the same way that it would be if the individual were not also employed by railway-labor organizations and the railway-labor organizations will make up proportionately among them any difference in the total tax imposed up to the limit of $300 in the calendar month.

Hereafter, by the amendments, the retirement tax provisions of the Internal Revenue Code may be cited as the Railroad Retirement Tax Act.

4. EMPLOYMENT RELATION EFFECTIVE JULY 31, 1946

In order to receive credit under the Retirement Act for service rendered prior to January 1, 1937, an individual must have been on the enactment date, August 29, 1935, in the active service of or in an "employment relation" to an employer. Under the former act, an individual was in an employment relation to an employer if he was on furlough subject to call for service and ready and willing to serve or on leave of absense or absent on account of sickness or disability all in accordance with the established rules and practices in effect on the employer. Under the amendment made by section 201 of the amendments, only the following may have an employment relation on August 29, 1935—the enactment date: First, an individual who was on the enactment date on a leave of absence expressly granted him by an employer and if this leave is established before July 1947. If a leave of absence was granted purporting to extend through August 29, 1935, but actually was no longer in effect on August 29, 1935, that is, if before that date the leave of absence was nullified by, for example, a furlough or retirement, the individual will not be considered to have been on such leave on that date.

Second, an individual who did in fact return to service and worked in at least six different calendar months, whether or not consecutive, after August 29, 1935, and before 1946. Third, an individual who before the enactment date did not retire and was not retired or discharged from the service of the last employer by whom he was employed, but (A) solely by reason of his physical or mental disability he ceased before the enactment date to be in the service of such employer and thereafter remained continuously disabled until he attained age 65 or until August 1945, or (B) solely by reason of his physical or mental disability an employer by whom he was employed before the enactment date did not on or after the enactment date and before August 1945 call him to return to service, or (C) if he was so called he was solely for such reason unable to render service in six calendar months. And finally, an individual who was out of service on the enactment date by reason of a discharge which, within 1 year after the discharge, was protested to an appropriate labor representative or to the employer as wrongful, and which was followed within 10 years of the discharge by reinstatement in good faith to the individual's former service with all his seniority rights.

Individuals will fall within clause (A) of the third category if they show that their cessation of service before the enactment date was due solely to disability and that they continued to be disabled until age 65 or until July 31, 1945; it is immaterial that, had they recovered from the disability they could not have returned to service for some other reason. An individual who ceased service before the enactment date solely because of physical or mental disability, did not retire, and was not retired or discharged, before the enactment date, and was already 65 or over before that date, or before cessation of service, will have an employment relation without further proof of disability. It will be unnecessary, under this clause, to ascertain whether the individual would have been called to service at any time.

Under clause (B) it will be necessary to ascertain whether the individual would have been recalled to service in the period August 30, 1935, and July 31, 1945, if he had not been physically or mentally disabled throughout that period. Qualification under this clause may be established (1) by proof that during a period of physical or mental disability, the employee next junior in seniority was called for service; (2) there is nothing otherwise to show that the individual would not have been called; and (3) the employer affirmatively states that the individual would have been called.

Under clause (C) it will be necessary to ascertain, first, in cases in which the individual did not respond to a call to service, whether he did not respond solely because of disability; and, second, in cases in which he did respond to such a call, whether he did not work in 6 months solely because of disability, or because the job did not last 6 months; or if the job had lasted 6 months, whether he would have been unable to work in 6 months solely because of disability; or whether he failed to work in 6 months for other reasons, such as resignation, discharge, and so forth.

The definition of "employment relation" contains a proviso, however, excluding individuals otherwise qualified if: They had been pensioned by their employers prior to the enactment date and had been awarded a pension under section 6 of the Retirement Act; their last period of service before the enactment date was outside the United States under conditions in which the service itself would not be creditable; and their only connection with the industry lies in having maintained a relationship or reestablished a relationship with a local lodge of a labor union.

5. OTHER SERVICES BEFORE THE ENACTMENT DATE MADE CREDITABLE, EFFECTIVE JULY 31, 1946

Another problem with respect to the rights to credit for prior service under the Retirement Act is dealt with by section 202 of the amendments. Under these amendments, service prior to August 29, 1935, to a nonemployer in operations involving the use of standard railroad equipment may be credited if such operations were conducted on August 29, 1935, by an employer.

6. FRACTION OF A YEAR OF SERVICE, EFFECTIVE JULE 31, 1946

Formerly, in computing years of service, under the Retirement Act, months of service were accumulated, and an ultimate fraction of less than 6 months was taken at its actual value, and an ultimate fraction of 6 months or more was taken as a year. The amendment limits the privilege of counting an ultimate fraction of 6 months or more as a year to persons having at least 4½ years of service, or 54 months.

7. CURRENT CONNECTION WITH THE RAILROAD INDUSTRY, SECTION 203 OF THE AMENDMENTS, EFFECTIVE JANUARY 1, 1947

The amendments provide for the Retirement Act a definition for "current connection with the railroad industry." This is new, no similar concept appearing in the prior law.

The general test of current connection is that the individual have had at least 12 months of railroad service out of the last 30 months, that is, the 30 months immediately preceding the month of retirement or death whichever first occurs, but if the individual did not have 12 months of railroad service in the last 30 months, he may select any other 30-month period for such purpose provided that in the period after such 30 months and the month of his retirement or death, he did not have any regular employment outside the railroad industry. Thus, an individual who is on furlough for a substantial period preceding his retirement or death but does not go into another industry will not be prejudiced. If the individual lives to retirement age and is currently connected with the railroad industry at the time of his retirement, he remains currently connected for life so that any survivor benefits payable at his death will be under the Railroad Retirement Act.

The definition is significant in the following three respects:

First. Only persons currently connected with the industry at the time the annuity accrues are entitled to annuities based on occupational disability as distinguished from permanent total disability for all work.

Second. Only persons currently connected with the railroad industry at the time the annuity begins to accrue are entitled to the benefits of the minimum annuity provisions.

Third. Only the survivors of persons currently connected with the railroad industry at the time of death receive their survivor benefits under the Railroad Retirement Act although Social Security Act services will be credited; all others, except the survivors of pensioners and annuitants under the Railroad Retirement Act, look to the Social Security Act, receiving credit, however, for their railroad service. Pensioners taken over from the railroads, and annuitants with 10 or more years of service whose annuities began in the first 10 years following 1936 are considered to have a current connection.

Provision is made also for deeming a person to have a current connection if under the Social Security Act he would have no insured status, or a lesser insured status than he would have under the Railroad Retirement Act. This permits the adjudication under the Railroad Retirement Act rather than under the Social Security Act of the claims of the survivors of such person.

8. ANNUITIES, SECTION 205 OF THE AMENDMENTS, EFFECTIVE JANUARY 1, 1947

Under the amendments, the conditions for eligibility to an annuity under the retirement act are liberalized in certain respects.

One amendment makes women employees, who have 30 years of service, eligible for retirement on a full annuity at the age of 60.

Another provides an annuity because of occupational disability; heretofore the only disability giving annuity eligibility was total and permanent disability to do any kind of regular work. It is now provided that persons "currently connected with the railroad industry" who are disabled to work in their regular occupation are entitled to retire on full annuity if they have 20 years of service or are 60 years of age. The amendment provides that the Board, in determining whether the employee is disabled for his regular occupation, should make such determination in accordance with generally prevailing standards in the industry. It also provides that the Board cooperate with employers and employees in bringing about a greater degree of standardization of employers' practices with respect to occupational disqualification. If an employee has not been disqualified by his employer, the Board may still award him an occupational disability annuity if the Board finds that his condition is disabling for work in his regular occupation in accordance with the standards generally established.

With respect to regular occupation, it is provided that an individual's regular occupation shall be considered to be the occupation in which he worked in more calendar months than in any other occupation during the last 5 years in which he worked. If the employee during the last 15 years worked in a particular occupation for one-half or more of his total working months he may claim that occupation as his regular occupation. In other words, if the 5-year test and the 15-year test would show different occupations to be the regular occupation, either one might be regarded as the employee's regular occupation and the employee is allowed to choose which of the two is to be used in judging occupational disability.

The next amendment revises the conditions upon which annuities may be paid for total and permanent disability for all work. Under the unamended law a person permanently and totally disabled for all work is eligible for a full annuity upon completing 30 years of service or for a reduced annuity at age 60, irrespective of the years of service. Those requirements are liberalized in that the service requirements for a full annuity based on total disability are reduced from 30 to 10 years; and an annuity without reduction may be awarded at age 60, irrespective of the number of years of service.

The provisions relating to proof of continuance of disability and recovery from disability are in substance unchanged; they were rewritten merely to adapt them to cover both the occupational disability and the disability for all work. The only substantive change is the provision that an individual who earns more than $75 a month for six consecutive months in either self-employment or services for hire, is deemed to have recovered, irrespective of his actual physical condition.

9. COMPUTATION OF ANNUITIES. SECTION 207 OF THE AMENDMENTS, EFFECTIVE JANUARY 1, 1947

Prior to the amendments, service after June 30, 1937, was not creditable under the Retirement Act to an individual after he attained age 65; but the compensation for such service was creditable if it resulted in a greater average compensation. Under the amendment, service after June 30, 1937, will be creditable to an individual to the end of the calendar year in which he attained age 65. The service after such calendar year will not be creditable and the compensation for such service will not be considered even for the purpose of increasing his average compensation.

10. MONTHLY COMPENSATION, SECTIONS 208 AND 209 OF THE AMENDMENTS, EFFECTIVE JULY 31, 1946

The amendment to the definition of monthly compensation under the retirement act will enable redcaps—who generally were compensated entirely by tips prior to September 1940 and whose compensation could not be computed—to use their compensation in the period from September 1940 through August 1941 as the measure of creditable compensation.

11. MINIMUM ANNUITIES, SECTION 210 OF THE AMENDMENTS, EFFECTIVE JANUARY 1, 1947

This amendment revises the minimum annuity provisions. Formerly the only minimum provided was for an individual who was an employee at the time he attained age 65 and who had at least 20 years of service. The minimum was $40, unless the individual's monthly compensation was under $50, in which case the minimum was 80 percent of the monthly compensation, but not less than $20 or an amount equal to the monthly compensation, whichever was less. The amendment provides a more liberal minimum. The effect of this liberalization which applies to all persons having a current connection with the railroad industry at retirement and at least 5 years of service, is that for individuals who have 17 years of service or more and whose average monthly compensation is $50 or more, the minimum would be $50; if the compensation is less than $50 or if the individual has less than 17 years of service the minimum would be $3 multiplied by the number of years of service or the average monthly compensation, whichever is less.

12. ACCRUED ANNUITIES UNPAID AT DEATH, SECTION 211 OF THE AMENDMENTS, EFFECTIVE JANUARY 1, 1947

Formerly, any annuity payments which had accrued but had not yet been paid when the annuitant died were paid to the surviving spouse if the spouse was entitled to a survivor annuity pursuant to a joint and survivor election; otherwise they were paid to the individuals entitled to receive the lump-sum death benefits. These provisions are no longer appropriate in view of the fact that the survivor-benefit provisions of the amendment are in substitution for both the joint and survivor election provisions and for the lump-sum death-benefit provisions. It is accordingly provided that the devolution of accrued and unpaid annuities correspond to the new survivor-benefit provisions rather than the old survivor annuity and death-benefit provisions.

13. JOINT AND SURVIVOR ELECTIONS, SECTION 212 OF THE AMENDMENTS, EFFECTIVE JULY 31, 1946

Heretofore an individual could elect to have his annuity converted into a joint and survivor annuity of equivalent value that is, to receive a reduced annuity during his lifetime to allow his surviving spouse to receive an annuity during her lifetime. Since surviving spouses are provided for under the new survivor-benefit provisions it becomes unnecessary to continue the provision for joint survivor annuity elections, and this provision is therefore repealed for the future. Elections already made, however, may be preserved if reaffirmed before January 1, 1948.

14. SURVIVOR BENEFITS, EFFECTIVE JANUARY 1, 1947

Section 213 of the amendments to the retirement act provides a new section 5, and substitutes for the former election and lump-sum death-benefit provisions, survivor benefits like those provided under the social security system. The lump-sum death benefit which is superseded was roughly equivalent to the individual's tax contributions to the fund minus any annuities that may have been paid.

For purposes of the survivor benefits two kinds of insured status are recognized, completely insured and partially insured. Survivor benefits of all the kinds provided are available to the survivors of completely insured individuals whereas only those benefits for children, and widows with children in their care, and the lump-sum payment, are available to survivors of persons only partially insured. The amount of each survivor benefit is determined by reference to what is called the basic amount. This basic amount is derived by a formula from the average monthly earnings and the years of covered employment of the employee after 1936.

Subsection (a) of new section 5: This subsection provides a monthly benefit for widow after attainment of age 65 until death or remarriage. It is three-fourths of the basic amount.

Subsection (b): This subsection provides a monthly benefit to widows under age 65 during the perod that they have one or more of the employee's children under the age of 18 in their care. This benefit is also three-fourths of the basic amount.

Subsection (c): This subsection provides monthly benefits for each child—under the age of 18—of a deceased employee. This benefit is one-half of the basic amount.

Subsection (d): In the absence of a widow or children, parents over age 65, and dependent on the deceased employee at the time of his death, are provided monthly benefits of one-half the basic amount.

Subsection (e): A parent or child is entitled to only one annuity even though otherwise two or more annuities might have beer claimed independently with respect to the death of two or more employees.

Subsection (f): In the event that a completely or partially insured employee dies after 1946 and no survivors are entitled to immediate monthly benefits, a lump-sum amounting to eight times the employee's basic amount is paid. This lump-sum is paid to the surviving spouse, but if none, to the children; if none of these, to parents; and if there are no persons in any of these classes, there may be reimbursement of anyone who paid the deceased's funeral expenses, up to the lump sum.

In some cases survivors may be entitled immediately to a monthly benefit, but eligibility may terminate very shortly thereafter, as, for example, in the case of a child a month or two less than age 18. Under those circumstances, in order that the survivors may not be worse off than they would be if they had been entitled only to the lump sum, this subsection guarantees benefits within the year following the employee's death at least equal to the lump sum.

The period within which the application for the lump-sum benefit must be made is 2 years. In case the employee was missing in the armed forces, the 2 years runs from the time the War or Navy Department officially determines him to be dead.

Subsection (g) (1): This section excludes from survivor-benefit rights under the Social Security Act any survivors entitled, with respect to the same employee, to benefits under this act except that benefit rights under the Social Security Act which may have begun to accrue before this section goes into effect, are preserved if those benefits should exceed the benefits payable under this act.

(2) If a widow or child or parent is receiving any benefits under the Social Security Act other than those from which they are excluded by the preceding paragraph, this paragraph limits the amount to which they are entitled under this act so that the total amount received under both acts equals no more than the larger benefit.

Subsection (h): Since the survivor benefits may be payable independently to a widow and to each child, the total of these benefits might in the absence of limitation become relatively excessive. Therefore, this subsection puts an overall limit on the survivor benefits payable to the family with respect to the death of a particular employee; the limit is, generally speaking, $120, twice the employee's basic amount—that is, the equivalent of four children's annuities—or 80 percent of the employee's average monthly compensation, whichever is least. The minimum total of annuities to the family is $10.

Subsection (i): Paragraphs (1) and (2) of this subsection provide in substance for not paying a survivor annuity with respect to any month in which any of the conditions enumerated in paragraph (1) exist—such as employment for an employer or work for wages of $25 or more—but in order to alleviate the possible hardship of leaving a survivor wholly without income for a month this provision authorizes the deductions to be spread over a longer period. For example, suppose that a widow earns $25 in wages in a particular month, thereby forfeiting a month's benefits. To cut off the whole of a month's benefit at one time might cause hardship, and the Board is authorized to spread the required deduction over a number of months.

Paragraph (3) provides for other deductions to be made so as to avoid duplicating other benefits which may already have been paid under the Retirement or Social Security Act on the basis of the same employment or to compensate for the failure to pay taxes on certain employment in 1939 by persons over 65 covered by the Social Security Act.

Paragraph (4) gives discretion to the Board to provide flexibility in deductions previously provided for, and provides pro rata distribution among the several beneficiaries of any increases or decreases to meet the maximum and minimum totals provided for in subsection (h).

Subsection (j): This subsection sets the effective date of survivor benefits and provides for the filing of applications for survivor benefits. An application to be valid cannot be filed more than 3 months before the individual becomes entitled to receive benefits. Applications may be filed at any time within the 3 months following the month in which eligibility is attained without loss of any benefits, but if the application is not filed within that period retroactive benefits will not be paid and the first payment will be for the month in which the application is filed.

Subsection (k):

First. This paragraph makes railroad service creditable for survivor-benefit purposes under the Social Security Act. As stated earlier, persons eligible for survivor benefits under the Retirement Act are denied any rights under the Social Security Act to survivor benefits based on the death of the same employee. So the net effect of the two provisions in combination is that persons eligible to survivor benefits under the Retirement Act look exclusively to this act whereas those not so eligible will look to the Social Security Act and will have their Social Security Act benefits calculated on a basis which credits under that act railroad service also.

Second. Since the survivor benefits of the families of men who died currently connected with the railroad industry will be based also on wages for service under the Social Security Act and, on the other hand, railroad-industry service is credited under the Social Security Act for the families of persons who are not currently connected with the railroad industry when they die, neither fund would charge the other for this reciprocal crediting and it is expected that the distribution of cost through reciprocal crediting will be equitable. However, experience may show that the distribution may not be entirely equitable to one fund or the other and it is consequently proposed that the Social Security Board and the Railroad Retirement Board make a joint report to Congress together with their recommendations after some experience has been gained and they are able to tell whether the distribution of cost is working out equitably or not.

Third. Since both the Railroad Retirement Board and the Social Security Board will be maintaining records of service and compensation covered by their respective acts each will be in a position to, and will, furnish to the other reports of such service and compensation when such reports are needed for the adjudication of claims involving the crediting under one act of service covered by the other act.

Subsection (l):

First. This incorporates by reference the definitions of widow, child, and parent contained in the Social Security Act. The additional qualifications set forth in subparagraphs (i), (ii), and (iii) are also required, in substance, for the purposes of the Social Security Act.

Second. This definition merely permits the use of the shorthand expression "retirement annuity" to refer to railroad employee annuities under the Railroad Retirement Acts of 1935 and 1937 and the term "pension" to refer to the pensions paid under section 6 of the Retirement Act of 1937.

Third. For survivor benefit purposes under the Social Security Act, and roughly also for those provided in this act, the basic unit of service is a three-month period or calendar quarter in which a minimum of $50 is earned in covered employment. Some calendar quarters may be counted twice because the individual may have service covered under both the Social Security Act and the Retirement Act in the same quarter but there is a specific prohibition against counting more than four quarters in the same year.

Fourth, Fifth, and Sixth. Retirement Act quarters of coverage are differentiated from Social Security Act quarters of coverage by calling the former "compensation quarters of coverage" and the latter "wage quarters of coverage." Earnings are called compensation in the Retirement Act and wages in the Social Security Act. As stated above, under both acts the basic unit of service for survivor-benefit purposes is a 3-month period in which a minimum of $50 is earned in covered employment. Under the Social Security Act, this period is a calendar quarter, but for the Railroad Retirement Act a special table has been constructed based on an annual earnings figure together with unnamed months of service in the calendar year.

Seventh. This paragraph sets forth the various conditions under which an individual is completely insured for survivor benefit purposes. As stated earlier, the survivors of completely insured individuals qualify for all the survivor benefits whereas the survivors of partially insured individuals qualify only for the benefits directed to the support of children and widows having children in their care, and lump-sum payments. An individual is completely insured if he has quarters of coverage—either under the Retirement Act or the Social Security Act or both—equal to at least one-half the calendar quarters in which he lives after 1936, exclusive of the time he was under 21 or over 65 or the quarter in which he dies, but once he gets 40 or more quarters of coverage—that is, the equivalent of 10 years—he retains a completely insured status without regard to the lapse of time or change in or loss of employment. Persons who have already retired or will retire before the end of this year, so they will not have had a fair opportunity to become completely insured by employment after 1936, are given a completely insured status provided they are pensioners or have an annuity based on at least 10 years of service.

Eighth. An individual is partially insured if he has six quarters of coverage in the period beginning with the third calendar year before the year of death and ending with the quarter before that in which death occurs.

Ninth. The average monthly remuneration is roughly the monthly average obtained by averaging total creditable earnings after 1936 under either Railroad Retirement Act or Social Security Act coverage or both, over total elapsed time after 1936, but excluding time during which the individual may have been retired and time prior to age 22 during which the individual did not have quarters of coverage, and the quarter in which he died.

Tenth. The basic amount is the common denominator, so to speak, by reference to which the amount of all survivor benefits is computed. Monthly widow's benefits whether based on age or on having children in her care are three-fourths of the basic amount; each child's monthly benefit and a parent's monthly benefit is one-half the basic amount; and the lump-sum payment is eight times the basic amount.

The formula set forth in subparagraph (i) is the normally applicable formula and gives weight both to earnings and to the amount of service and gives more than pro rata weight to earnings in the lower brackets so as to avoid having the survivor benefits of low-paid employees normally fall below a subsistence level. The formula will produce monthly benefits which in general are about 25 percent higher than social security monthly benefits, and lump-sum payments which are 66⅔ percent higher than social security lump-sum payments. In the words of the statute, the basic amount in the case of the ordinary employee is as follows:

> (i) * * * the sum of (A) 40 percent of his average monthly remuneration, up to and including $75; plus (B) 10 percent of such average monthly remuneration exceeding $75 and up to an including $250, plus (C) 1 percent of the sum of (A) plus (B) multiplied by the number of years after 1936 in each of which the compensation, wages, or both, paid to him will have been equal to $200 or more; if the basic amount, thus computed, is less than $10 it shall be increased to $10.

15. RETURNS OF COMPENSATION AND RECORDS OF THE BOARD, EFFECTIVE JULY 31, 1946

Section 8 of the Railroad Retirement Act of 1937 is changed by section 214 of the amendments. The amendments contained in this section accomplish two things: First, they amend the provisions relating to reports of service and compensation, which employers must make to the Board, so as to change over from the earned to the paid basis. Secondly, these amendments give conclusive effect to the Board's records after a certain period. As a matter of practical administration, of course, the Board cannot adjudicate cases from the original periodic reports made by employers; it is necessary to transcribe the information into individual cumulative accounts covering the record of a particular employee over his whole period of service. When that transcription has been made the original reports become useless and should be discarded. But the Board has been hesitant to discard them since under the prior law the original reports rather than the transcription—which is annually checked with the employee—is authoritative. Under the Unemployment Insurance Act, this same change was made as a part of the 1940 amendments.

16. JUDICIAL REVIEW, EFFECTIVE JULY 31, 1946

Section 10 of the Railroad Retirement Act of 1937 is amended by section 215 of the amendments. The amendments make the judicial review provisions contained in the Railroad Unemployment Insurance Act applicable to Retirement Act cases. It is of importance to attain uniformity since very frequently, particularly in coverage cases, the same issue must be decided under both acts and uniform provisions will enable the Board to decide the issue in a single consolidated proceeding with a single court review. In view of the amendment to the judicial review provisions of the Unemployment Insurance Act, judicial review hereafter under the Railroad Retirement Act must be initiated in a circuit court of appeals or the Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia rather than in the Federal district courts.

17. REGISTRATION PERIOD, EFFECTIVE JULY 1, 1947

Subsection 1 (h) of the Railroad Unemployment Insurance Act is amended by section 301 of the amendments, which changes the definition of "registration period" so as to cover also registration periods based on days of sickness. In other words, compensation may be paid for sickness as well as unemployment; however, days of unemployment and days of sickness may not be combined in the same registration period, but a registration period based on days of sickness may be begun before a registration period based on days of unemployment has expired and vice versa. That is to say, an individual who has current a registration period in which he has had, say, 4 days of unemployment when he becomes sick can immediately begin a registration period based on his sickness so that the pendency of one kind of registration period does not prevent the individual from having current a registration period of the other kind; but he cannot, of course, add the days of sickness to the days of unemployment or vice versa in determining the number of compensable days—that is, excess over 7 or 4, as the case may be—in a registration period.

18. REMUNERATION, EFFECTIVE JULY 1, 1947

Subsection 1 (j) of the Railroad Unemployment Insurance Act is amended by section 302 of the amendments for the purpose of excluding from remuneration, maternity and sickness benefits paid under a nongovernmental plan. The significance of this provision is that an individual cannot be considered unemployed on any day with respect to which he receives remuneration; hence an individual who is not receiving pay but some form of private unemployment sickness or maternity insurance is not to be precluded from drawing unemployment insurance under the act.

19. DAY OF SICKNESS, EFFECTIVE JULY 1, 1947

Subsection 1 (k) of the Railroad Unemployment Insurance Act is amended by section 303 of the amendments by adding a definition of a day of sickness, which in the words of the statute is as follows:

> A day of sickness, with respect to any employee, means a calendar day on which because of any physical, mental, psychological, or nervous injury, illness, sickness, or disease he is not able to work or which is included in a maternity period, and with respect to which (i) no remuneration is payable or accrues to him, and (ii) in accordance with such regulations as the Board may prescribe, a statement of sickness if filed within such reasonable period, not in excess of 10 days, as the Board may prescribe.

20. BENEFITS, EFFECTIVE JULY 1, 1947

Subsection 1 (l) of the Railroad Unemployment Insurance Act is amended by section 304 of the amendments so as to include sickness benefits within the term "benefits."

This section of the amendments also describes the statement of sickness and statement of maternity sickness—that is, the certificate from a doctor—which is required to be filed with the Board to establish days of sickness or maternity periods. Ordinarily this will be the proof on which benefits are paid but the Board will have power to investigate further if it has reason to doubt the proof thus furnished. The statement of sickness with respect to sickness and maternity benefits corresponds to and serves the same function as registration at an employment office with respect to unemployment insurance.

Finally, this section also defines "maternity period," that is, the period before and after the birth of a child to a female employee for which period she receives maternity benefits. Payment will be made for 116 days.

21. BENEFITS FOR DAYS OF SICKNESS, EFFECTIVE JULY 1, 1947—22. TWO NEW DAILY BENEFIT RATES, EFFECTIVE JULY 31, 1946—23. BENEFIT YEAR FOR MATERNITY PAYMENTS, EFFECTIVE JULY 1, 1947

Section 2 (a) of the Railroad Unemployment Insurance Act is amended by Section 305 of the amendments. This section amends the benefit-payment provisions so as to provide for payments with respect to days of sickness on the same basis as for days of unemployment; and add two new benefit rates, $4.50 for employees having base year earnings between $2,000 and $2,499.99, and $5 for employees with higher base year earnings. The section provides also that where a maternity period begins in one benefit year and extends over into another benefit year, payments are to continue on the basis on which they started even though the daily benefit rate for a new period in the new benefit year might have been different; if, however, the employee did not qualify in the benefit year in which the maternity period begins, and hence no payments have been begun, but the employee is qualified in the new benefit year, payments are begun, of course, as soon as the employee becomes entitled. An additional provision eliminates possibility of combining days of sickness with days of unemployment for the purpose of paying benefits.

24. EXTENSION OF DURATION OF BENEFITS, EFFECTIVE JULY 1, 1946

Section 2 (c) of the Railroad Unemployment Insurance Act is amended by section 206 of the amendments. This increases the maximum number of compensable days of unemployment in a benefit year from 100 to 130, and establishes the same maximum for days of sickness.

25. TECHNICAL CHANGES, EFFECTIVE JULY 1, 1947

Subsection 2 (f) and section 3 of the Railroad Unemployment Insurance Act are amended by sections 307 and 308 of the amendments. Section 307 operates to prevent the payment of sickness benefits, or to recover them if paid, in cases where the employer pays remuneration for days otherwise days of sickness; and section 308 accomplishes the change over in crediting compensation for benefit purposes from a payable to a paid basis.

26. DISQUALIFICATION PROVISIONS FOR SICKNESS BENEFITS, EFFECTIVE JULY 1, 1947

Section 4 of the Railroad Unemployment Insurance Act is amended by sections 309 and 310 of the amendments. These two sections merely rearrange and in part rephrase disqualifying conditions applicable to unemployment insurance so as to separate those which are applicable to sickness insurance from those applicable only to unemployment insurance. The disqualifications which have application to sickness insurance are: Fraudulent claim of benefits, receipt of State sickness or unemployment insurance, retirement or other social-insurance benefits; and, in the case of train and engine service employees, or employees in similar services, the prior accumulation of sufficient earnings to cover the period for which claim is made.

27. PROCEDURE FOR APPEALS AND JUDICIAL REVIEW EFFECTIVE JULY 31, 1946

Section 5 of the Railroad Unemployment Insurance Act is amended by sections 311–316 of the amendments. The prior law provided for administrative review of initially rejected claims by district boards. Such provision was made on the assumption that there might be a large volume of appeals. In fact, there have been practically no appeals, and the Board itself has handled the few that have been taken; consequently, the district boards have never functioned. The amendment eliminates the provision for district boards and authorizes the Board to establish such intermediate reviewing bodies as may be called for if the volume of appeals should require any.

In the past the Board was authorized to decide coverage cases in special proceedings, determining simultaneously the liabilities of the employer for contributions and the benefit rights of all employees concerned. By conducting a single, thorough, consolidated proceeding, both efficiency of administration and most adequate protection of all rights are secured. However, that procedure contemplated that whenever such an issue arose there would be pending benefit claims and that the employer would have refused to comply with the act. If there happened to have been no persons unemployed at the moment and hence no current claims pending, or if the employer complied with the act by paying the contributions but paid them under protest and claimed a refund, some doubt arose as to whether the Board had authority to proceed with a determination. Under such circumstances the issue was just as much present, and it was just as important for the employer and employees to have the issue determined as though all the conditions which the statute contemplated were present—normally they are present, but occasionally they are not. This amendment will enable the Board to proceed to a determination whenever a coverage issue actually arises, regardless of the form in which it arises, and makes it clear that coverage issues are to be determined in proceedings in which all parties in interest have an opportunity to be heard.

Another change made was to place initial review in the circuit courts of appeal or in the Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia rather than in the district courts.

28. EMPLOYERS' RETURNS AND BOARD RECORDS FOR THE UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE ACT, EFFECTIVE JULY 31, 1946

Section 6 of the Railroad Unemployment Insurance Act which provides for the filing with the Board of employers' returns of compensation is amended by section 317 of the amendments. The purpose of this amendment is merely to change over compensation from a "payable" to a "paid" basis.

29. PAYMENT OF CONTRIBUTIONS, EFFECTIVE JANUARY 1, 1947

Section 8 of the Railroad Unemployment Insurance Act is amended by section 318 of the amendments. This makes precisely the same changes with respect to railroad unemployment insurance contributions by subordinate units of railway labor organizations (except that the 3 percent contribution rate remains the same) as are made by section 3 of the amendments with respect to assessing taxes under the Retirement Taxing Act.

30. ENFORCEMENT OF SUBPENAS, EFFECTIVE JULY 31, 1946

Section 12 (b) of the Railroad Unemployment Insurance Act is amended by section 319 of the amendments and provides for the Board to invoke the aid of the District Court of the United States for the Northern District of Illinois as well as the District Court for the District of Columbia in securing the attendance and evidence of witnesses, and for the orders, writs, and processes issued by such courts in such connection to run and be served anywhere in the United States.

31. OTHER TECHNICAL AMENDMENTS, EFFECTIVE JULY 31, 1946

Subsections (f) and (g) of section 12 of the Railroad Unemployment Insurance Act are amended by sections 320 and 321 of the amendments. These are merely technical changes required by the inclusion of provision for sickness benefits.

32. PROCEDURE WITH RESPECT TO SICKNESS BENEFITS, EFFECTIVE JULY 31, 1946

Section 12 of the Railroad Unemployment Insurance Act is further amended by sections 322 and 323 of the amendments so as to authorize the Board to establish the procedures for the execution and filing of statements of sickness. These statements are designed to furnish the initial proof of sickness and ordinarily would constitute the evidence upon which claims to sickness benefits would be paid. They would normally be executed by doctors licensed to practice in the place where their profession is carried on or by officers or supervisory employees of hospitals, clinics, group health associations, or other similar organizations whose qualification meets the standards to be prescribed by the Board. These statements of sickness, in their function of providing the initial proof of sickness, correspond to registration at an employment office with respect to unemployment benefits. By these amendments the Board would be authorized to require physical examination of any claimant in order to verify his claims of sickness. It is required that places of examination be reasonably convenient to the employee.

Doctors in attendance upon employees claiming sickness benefits are required to make information regarding the illness as treated available to the Board. A waiver of the doctor-patient privilege respecting such information is required, but the Board in turn is required to maintain it in confidence except as its revelation may be required in a court proceeding pertaining to sickness benefits.

The Board is authorized to contract for and pay for physical examinations of claimants which it requires in accordance with the first paragraph of this section. If the Board pays for such an examination and the employee bases his claim upon the examination provided by the Board a reasonable fee for the service is to be deducted from the benefits allowed.

The fact that a third party may be liable to the employee for inflicting the disability upon which a claim for sickness benefits is predicated does not affect the validity of the claim for benefits, but the Board is entitled to reimbursement from any payment in discharge of such liability to the extent of the sickness benefits paid under these circumstances, and upon notice to the person liable obtains a lien securing its right of reimbursement.

The Board is authorized after hearing to disqualify persons from executing sickness statements on grounds of solicitation, falsification of statement, refusal to give information to the Board, and malpractice or other professional misconduct.

The Board is authorized to carry on investigation and research in connection with the sickness-benefit program. Inevitably the operation of a sickness-benefit program will place in the hands of the Board a great deal of information and statistics regarding the incidence and effects of disabilities which should be of great value to the Government in determining future policy with respect to sickness and disability. But that information cannot be utilized unless it is properly processed and correlated to other information so that its significance may appear.

33. EXCLUSIVENESS OF PROVISIONS, EFFECTIVE JULY 31, 1946

Subsection 13 (b) of the Railroad Unemployment Insurance Act is amended by section 324 of the amendments. Section 13 (b) of the Unemployment Insurance Act preempts to the Federal Government the field of railroad unemployment insurance so as to exclude State unemployment compensation laws from the field and thus to protect employers from double liability. The amendments extend that preemption to the sickness provisions.

34. EFFECTIVE DATES

Sections 401–403 of the amendments provide the effective dates for the several provisions of the amendments to the Railroad Retirement, Unemployment Insurance, and Retirement Taxing Acts. The effect of these sections is as follows:

Section 1 of the amendments, clarifying and amending the definition of employee, is effective July 31, 1946. See item 1 of this analysis.

Section 2, changing the base of compensation from earned by, to paid to, and clarifying pay for time lost, is effective July 31, 1946. See item 2 of this analysis.

Section 3 provides for the payment of taxes by each side of 5¾ percent of pay in 1947–48; 6 percent in 1949–51; and 6¼ percent thereafter. Employee representatives pay twice that amount on the same date. See item 3 of this analysis.

Section 201, defining employment relation, becomes effective July 31, 1946. See item 4 of this analysis.

Section 202, which credits services before January 1937, rendered to a nonemployer in operations involving the use of standard railroad equipment if such operations were conducted by a covered employer on the enactment date and restricts the creditability of a fraction of a year of service to cases where the total service is not less than 54 months, is effective July 31, 1946. See items 5 and 6 of this analysis.

Section 203 defines current connection with the railroad industry and is effective on January 1, 1947. See item 7 of this analysis.

Section 204 defines quarter and calendar quarter and is effective July 31, 1946.

Section 205 deals with the new disability provisions, and awards full annuities to women who have attained age 60 and completed 30 years of service. This section is effective January 1, 1947. See item 8 of this analysis.

Section 206 changes certain section references and is effective on January 1, 1947.

Section 207 makes service creditable to the end of the calendar year, rather than to the end of the month, in which age 65 is attained, and is effective on January 1, 1947. See item 9 of this analysis.

Section 208 changes the compensation base for determining monthly compensation from remuneration earned to remuneration paid and is effective July 31, 1946. See item 10 of this analysis.

Section 209 provides a basis for prior service credits for redcaps and is effective July 31, 1946. See item 10 of this analysis.

Section 210 provides the new minimum benefits and is effective on January 1, 1947. See item 11 of this analysis.

Section 211 makes new provisions for the payment of accrued annuities and is effective on January 1, 1947. See item 12 of this analysis.

Section 212 repeals the joint and survivor election provisions, renumbers certain sections, and is effective July 31, 1946. See item 13 of this analysis.

Section 213 is the new survivor benefit section and is effective on January 1, 1947. See item 14 of this analysis.

Section 214 makes conclusive the Board's records rather than the employer's returns and is effective July 31, 1946. See item 15 of this analysis.

Section 215 provides for the Retirement Act the same judicial review provisions as are provided for the Railroad Unemployment Act, and is effective July 31, 1946. See item 16 of this analysis.

Sections 301–310 deal with the unemployment insurance amendments and are effective on July 1, 1947, except that the increases above the former maximum rate will be effective July 31, 1946 and the increase in duration—from 100 to 130 days—became effective on July 1, 1946. See items 16–26 of this analysis.

Sections 311–316 provide referees and other reviewing bodies in the place of district boards for appeals under the Railroad Unemployment Insurance Act, and provide for initial review of Board decisions by circuit courts of appeals instead of district courts, and are effective July 31, 1946. See item 27 of this analysis.

Section 317 changes the compensation base from payable to paid for the filing of employer reports under the unemployment insurance act, and is effective July 31, 1946. See item 28 of this analysis.

Section 318 changes the contribution base from payable to paid for the purpose of unemployment contributions, and is effective on January 1, 1947. See item 29 of this analysis.

Section 319, authorizing the Board to invoke the aid of United States District Court of the Northern District of Illinois in securing the attendance of witnesses and evidence, is effective July 31, 1946. See item 30 of this analysis.

Sections 320–321 make technical changes required by the inclusion of sickness benefits and are effective July 31, 1946. See item 31 of this analysis.

Sections 322–323 provide for the establishment of procedures with respect to sickness benefits and are effective July 31, 1946. See item 32 of this analysis.

Section 324 preempts to the Federal Government the field of railroad sickness benefits under the new act the same as is now provided for railroad unemployment benefits, and is effective July 31, 1946. See item 33 of this analysis.

For the effect that the amendments will have on existing benefits, see the following items 35–39.

35. NO RETROACTIVE ACCRUAL RIGHTS, SECTION 404 OF THE AMENDMENTS

It is provided in section 404 of the amendments that in general, annuities in force upon the approval of the amendments will be left undisturbed, and with respect to pending applications there will be no retroactive accrual of rights although, as indicated below, increases may be provided as of the effective date of the applicable amendments. Further, the counting of credit for prior service would depend on whether the applicant was entitled to such credit under the new amendments.

36. EFFECT OF EXISTING ELECTIONS OF JOINT AND SURVIVOR ANNUITIES, SECTION 405 OF THE AMENDMENTS

Although the provision for joint and survivor annuity elections is repealed by the amendments, such elections heretofore made will be given effect with respect to annuities accruing before January 1, 1947, except that revocation is permissible if no award is made before passage of the amendments. Also other persons who have made joint and survivor elections but whose annuities do not accrue before January 1, 1947, are permitted to retain those elections in effect by reaffirmation before January 1, 1948.

37. OLD-TYPE DEATH BENEFITS, SECTION 406 OF THE AMENDMENTS

Lump-sum death benefits, under the 1937 Retirement Act and the death benefits payable in the cases still governed by the 1935 act—that is, persons who had retired and become eligible for annuities before the 1937 act was passed—will be paid only with respect to deaths occurring before January 1, 1947, as of which time the new survivor benefits become effective.

38. INCREASES IN EXISTING ANNUITIES, SECTION 407 OF THE AMENDMENTS

Increases in annuities now in effect may be granted only in the following cases: First, persons previously awarded annuities who did not receive credit for prior service because they lacked an employment relation under the prior law but would have an employment relation under the amendments and persons who may be given credit under the amendment for prior service to a nonemployer, will have their annuities increased effective August 1, 1946; and, second, persons whose annuities would be increased by reasons of the change in the disability provisions and persons who would benefit by the new minimum annuity provisions will be given the benefit of the new amendments as of January 1, 1947. These increases will be granted without the filing of new applications. For the purpose of the increases, a current connection with the railroad industry is presumed if the annuity previously awarded was based on 5 years or more of railroad service. In case the annuities affected are in joint and survivor form the increase generally will be similarly treated.

39. REDUCTIONS FROM AGE ANNUITIES BY REASON OF RECOVERY FROM DISABILITY, SECTION 408 OF THE AMENDMENTS

Prior to the amendment the law provided that if a disability annuity was awarded and there was a subsequent recovery from disability before age 65, any future age annuity to which the individual became entitled was to be reduced to compensate actuarily for the payments made under the previously awarded disability annuity. The provision for reduction is superseded in section 205 of the amendments. Section 408 makes it clear that there are to be no reductions of this character after the amendments become effective.

The Triumph of Democracy Over the Evil Armies of Fascism

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. FRANK E. HOOK

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, August 2, 1946

Mr. HOOK. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks, I offer for insertion in the RECORD a speech prepared by me for delivery in my district on Victory Day:

This is the day when all the people of the United States, in fact all the people of the world, celebrate the triumph of democracy over the evil armies of fascism. Victory Day has deep meaning for all of us but this day belongs to those who secured the victory, the men and women who fought our battles for us in Europe and Asia and Africa and on the bloody sands of the Pacific Islands. There is no way we can ever repay our debt to them. There is no tribute great enough to express our pride in the job they did nor our gratitude for the sacrifices they made.

More than 25 years ago I took part in an occasion very similar to this. It was a homecoming celebration for the veterans of World War I. I was a veteran of that war and I helped plan the welcome for my fellow veterans in Wakefield where I then lived. Then, just as today, the people who stayed at home, dedicated themselves to trying to make the veterans understand that their own, their neighbors, were proud of them and were grateful and understanding of the sacrifices they made.

No one wants to mar a day of happy celebration with too much solemnity or dark prediction of things to come. But, if this victory day is not to become a mocking memory for many of the veterans of World War II, we must remember that the real test of this country's gratitude to its former soldiers, sailors, and marines will be met in the years ahead.

While the battles still raged the national motto was "Everything for the boys." That feeling—that nothing is too good for the veteran—was I believe, a genuine one, growing out of a real sense of national gratitude and responsibility.

Unfortunately, all too many of the veterans are beginning to realize that there is a wide disparity between promise and performance when it comes to really doing something for the boys. Many of them are asking: Is this the world I fought for? Is this what peace means?

Yes, we should celebrate our victory, but we have not yet earned the right to celebrate the peace. We have not proved that as a nation we are worthy of our heroes.

Most veterans and servicemen do not feel that the country owes them a living. What they want, what they feel is their right, is what all of us want—a job, a home, security for his family. These are the simple wants which every veteran must have satisfied before we can celebrate peace—before the veteran will say "This is the world I fought for."

Our veteran population is a very sizable proportion of the national community. It is not a special interest group, or a political minority. The veteran's interests are served, not by recognizing his special status, but by recognizing the identity of his interests with the national interest.

It is not enough for us to be grateful for a job well done. Gratitude is small comfort to the man who can't get married because he can't find a home for his bride or to the boy who can't go to college because there isn't space or equipment enough to take care of him.

The loud promises of reward for war service, the much-publicized GI bill of rights, the sentimentalizing of war heroes—all these have held out to the returning servicemen a promise of a better and richer life after he gets home again. Now millions of them are home again. Many of them have found a better and richer life. But to other millions, the return to civilian life has meant only disillusionment and despair.

I have received hundreds of letters from veterans and from servicemen who soon will be veterans. I think I know from these letters and from conversations with boys from home who have visited me in Washington—I know what their aspirations are and I know too what their gripes are.

Many of the men in service had an idealized concept of what their rights under the GI bill were. Ill-advised and uninformed propaganda—some of it official—had led them to believe that they would have no worries when they got out of the Army or the Navy. Of course, that is not so. No one has, nor no one ever will, create for any man, veteran or not, a world without worries.

The purpose of the GI bill is a simple, and a good one. Its objective is to restore the veteran to a position in civilian life comparable to what he would have had had he not been drafted or enlisted. Actually, that is all that most veterans want. A chance to take up his life where he left off when he put on a uniform.

When Congress first adopted the GI bill, it was hailed as the complete answer to the "veteran problem." It does have many excellent features and does try to meet the needs of the ex-servicemen. But, in practice, the men subject to its provisions have found it very inadequate protection against the pitfalls of civilian life.

Most of the provisions of the bill are good—the educational benefits, the unemployment insurance, the loan provisions, and so forth. They are good so far as they go, and they do provide reasonable protection for most veterans.

In the last session of Congress, we liberalized many of the provisions of the GI bill but, in my mind, we did not go far enough. I certainly do not subscribe to the theory that unstinting economic aid should be given the veteran without regard to the cost to the public. That is a popular political position of some of my colleagues—but I know that the veterans themselves do not want just a generous hand-out from the Government. However, I do feel that when Congress liberalized the benefits under the bill, it should have been done with an eye to the changes in the cost of living. As it is now, the veteran student, or the unemployed veteran, has tough going trying to make ends meet on his Government check.

Many young men, interested in setting up a business for themselves, have complained bitterly to me that the so-called loan provisions of the GI bill are worse than useless to them. And it is true, the ordinary veteran cannot qualify for a loan under the bill. He has neither sufficient security nor business background to become what a banker could accept as a good risk.

I have proposed, and many Congressmen and Government officials agree, that loans for business purposes to veterans be made directly to the veteran by the Government, without going through a middleman banker. Already existing agencies—the Reconstruction Finance Corporation—could provide this service, and I do not feel that the Government would be making a bad investment or a poor loan in assisting its veterans to get started in business.

The real cause of bitterness among veterans, however, does not stem from any failure or inadequacy of the GI bill of rights. As I have said, what the veteran wants is to pick up where he left off and get on with his life. What he does not realize, though, until he is out of uniform, is that he cannot pick up where he left off. The war has changed life even back in his home town. His difficulty comes in making the adjustment to the changes brought about by the war while he was away. Materials are scarce. He cannot build a house, or open up the store he wanted. Everything is high priced. His discharge pay isn't going to go as far as he thought.

More than any other single thing that really gripes the veteran, is his inability to find a place to live. He looks around him and sees construction on race tracks, dance halls, or hot dog stands—but no place for him to live, and no lumber or nails or tile to build a place.

The priority which veterans hold for housing has become almost meaningless—and no one knows it better than the veteran. I have heard of one housing official in Washington refer to a veterans HH priority as "only a hunting license and by no means a buck in the bag."

No new legislation is needed to correct this situation. Even with the best legislation in the world, and the best administration of that legislation, you cannot create building materials where they don't exist. What can be done, and what should be done now, is enforcement of the veterans' priority by the Civilian Production Administration which has been so lavish in priorities for unessential commercial building.

Of course, the veteran is resentful of what he knows to be flagrant violation of the intent—if not the letter—of the law which was enacted to protect his interests. His right to a home must be protected against the interests which see big and immediate profit in commercial building and none in a four or five thousand dollar bungalow for a veteran.

Most of the men who have come back from the battles have not come home to large incomes. They have come home to jobs in industry, in the mines, or store. Or they have gone back to their farm. The veteran is a cross section of America. Like most Americans he lives on what he earns, and like most Americans today, he is finding out that what he earns is becoming less and less because living costs more and more. Next to the housing shortage, this is the most resented factor in civilian life—the high cost of living, the effort to make $2 do what $1 did before. You will find very few ordinary ex-GI's who joined in the clamor to kill the OPA. The soldier turned consumer and worker was one of the most potent factors in the fight to retain what we do have left of price control.

As the ranks of veterans swell with the still returning soldiers, it becomes increasingly clear that veteran legislation alone is not going to be the answer to their needs. There are very many real and difficult individual problems for the ex-servicemen, but the one overriding problem of the veteran is the same as the problem of the whole-community. That is how to create a democratic, prosperous America in a world organized against war.

That is our national responsibility to the men who made this Victory Day possible.

During the years of the war, the people of this country, soldier and civilian alike, proved themselves capable of heroic sacrifice, of selfless devotion to a great cause. It will take sacrifice and heroism, without benefit of fanfare or acclaim, to create for ourselves and the veterans the kind of world they fought for.

I said that this day—Victory Day—belongs to the veteran. The world of tomorrow belongs to him too. He can create it with our help.

The soldier and sailor and the men of the Marine Corps learned in the tough bitter school of war that no man, no group can stand alone. Now they are bringing that lesson home to the peace. The veteran knows that his job is not safe when other men are without jobs. He is learning that his security is part of the security of the whole community. He knows that he cannot benefit, in the long run, at the expense of the rest of us. He doesn't want a Government hand-out or retirement to an old soldiers home. He wants what he fought for, peace and prosperity for himself and his children. It is a challenge to the rest of us to see that this goal is attained.

The Next and Effective Step in Completing Congressional Reorganization

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. JOHN D. DINGELL

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, August 2, 1946

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Speaker, the congressional reorganization bill, after a long and rough journey through congressional halls, committee rooms, and legislative chambers is finally on its way to the White House, where the President's imprimatur will make it the law.

I am the first to concede that the bill has much merit and due credit must be given the authors—MONRONEY and LA FOLLETTE. However, I am not convinced that the bill will do all that is claimed for it by its proponents and enthusiastic supporters. The reason is obvious, the bill does not go far enough, does not go to the seat of trouble. In fact, it overlooks and ignores one of the principal, if not the main, cause for legislative delays.

I refer to the startling fact that the reorganization fails to eliminate the important Appropriations Committees. As a Member of the House, I want to deal with our own Committee on Appropriations, and let me say with all due deference, Mr. Speaker, this committee composed as it is of some of the most experienced and able Members of the House has performed its functions, and duties most efficiently, expeditiously, and patriotically and I could not find fault with any single individual member of this great committee. There is not a harder working committee in the House but its labors are largely duplications of the performance of legislative committees. It is the system that I find fault with and which I believe ought to be eliminated. If I had my way and perhaps in the future I shall propose that further reorganization of both Houses should be extended by the abolishment of the Appropriations Committees, the reassignment of its members, and the reinvestiture of their functions, privileges, and prerogatives in the reorganized legislative committees. I have discussed that matter with my colleague from Oklahoma [Mr. MONRONEY] long before the bill was reported and I had similar discussions with many Members of this House but because of the stress of official duties and my own committee work, I was unable to take the time to appear before the Special Joint Committee for the Reorganization of Congress. The reorganization of both Houses as provided in the bill which was just passed will not save very much, if any, legislative time. It will not reduce the volume of hearings or the number of joint conferences between the two bodies, nor will it in any other way, as far as I can see, materially increase efficiency or reduce the length of sessions. The number of bills introduced and subject to consideration certainly will not be reduced by the reorganization. No consideration is here given to the procedure requiring legislative rules which means more time consumed.

There will be as many departmental bills and bills affecting the general welfare as there have ever been and if there are two or more of an urgent nature referred to a given reorganized committee, it is evident that subcommittees will have to be appointed and charged with the responsibility of conducting hearings. After reporting the bill to the full committee, in all likelihood, the piloting of the bill through the House and through conferences will have to be directed by this same subcommittee and certain members designated as conferees, should there be disagreement between the two Houses. If the bill carries an authorization of expenditure of public moneys, obviously the next step in the fulfillment of the objective will be the function of the Appropriations Committee and, as is the practice today, the matter will inevitably be considered by a small subcommittee. Thus, if a bill should originate in the Committee on Ways and Means, the appropriation will subsequently be provided with funds through the action of the Subcommittee on Treasury and Post Office of the Appropriations Committee. If a bill should emanate from the Judiciary Committee, the fiscal features of the bill will be attended to by the Subcommittee on State, Justice, and Commerce of the Appropriations Committee. In the matter of legislation and authorization the Committee on Ways and Means, like any other legislative committee, will have to continue hearings and follow all prescribed rules of procedure. The same will occur in a corresponding legislative committee in the Senate, in this instance the Senate Finance Committee.

If, after a given bill passes both Houses, there are any disagreements, House and Senate conferees will be appointed in the usual manner to iron out the differences and the bill will again be brought back for final approval to the respective Chambers. The same pattern and the same procedure will be carried out as regards other committees and their actions. Thus far, there will only be an authorization for the expenditure of public moneys within certain limitations but no appropriation. After another and long rigmarole of hearings, and these will occur in both Houses, and the same parade of busy and frequently overburdened Cabinet members, department heads, and executives, followed by a string of lesser witnesses and some of no importance at all, the particular subcommittee on appropriations will, after another internal step, report to the House the appropriation bill in connection with the legislative bill which originated in the Committee on Ways and Means. When this bill is piloted through the House by a five-man Subcommittee on Appropriations, we again will be faced with the whole gamut of ironing out differences between the two Houses, actions on conference reports at both ends of the Capitol, and an interminable amount of useful time being spent in a practice that has no substance in fact for its existence.

The short cut and the method of saving time could be had by the simple and single method of having the appropriation made by initiated action in the legislative committee.

I believe it is generally conceded that there will be very little, if any, time saved by reshuffling and consolidation of committees, but I believe it will be admitted at the same time that all of the time or nearly all which is used by the Appropriations Committee could be saved if the responsible legislative committee, having the original jurisdiction, could consider the amount of the appropriation and wherever practical to make it at one and the same time. Some adjustments of practice and routine may be necessary by such a move but they can be worked out satisfactorily by the same committee which brought in the congressional reorganization bill and they can offer an assurance both to the Congress and to the Nation that much time will be saved in the consideration of bills and in making appropriations and that such action on the part of the legislative appropriating committee will be not only more speedy but, I have reasons to believe, more efficient, economical, and effective.

I cite the illustration that we of the Committee on Ways and Means, working with the Treasury Department every day and with the War Department in such matters as amortization and of renegotiation and operating as a full committee of 25 members over a period of many years, know as much if not more of their needs than do the 5 members of the Subcommittee on the Committee on Appropriations. That is not imagination or self-centered egotism. It is a matter of fact, a reasonable deduction. It is not only sound but it is absolutely true. How many times has it happened that what was intended by the full legislative committee after due consideration was later nullified by a 5-man subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations, and it is not my intention, Mr. Speaker, to cast any reflections on the members of the Appropriations Committee or any subcommittee thereof. Such actions are due to overlapping, duplication, and frequently because of misunderstanding, or even contrary advice which is given the Subcommittee on Appropriations in order to circumvent the positive action and the authority of the legislative committee.

I have one example in mind affecting the Customs Division of the Treasury Department which, if it had not been by sheer accident of detection by me, would have nullified a positive action of the Committee on Ways and Means. How many similar instances occur not even the record would show because of skillful concealment on the part of those who might deliberately mislead a committee, or which might happen accidentally. Therefore, I say in conclusion, Mr. Speaker, that if we are to carry the reorganization to its final and efficient conclusion, the membership of the distinguished and important, yes, and powerful Committee on Appropriations should be distributed and incorporated among the various legislative committees of the House and, if necessary, such legislative committees might create their own Subcommittees on Appropriations. These subcommittees could well consist of five or seven of the ranking members of each committee. The action on appropriations would be simultaneous, economical, direct, and effective. It would, moreover, save the time of two committees in the House, two committees in the Senate, the precious time of cabinet members, department heads, of experts, and other witnesses of the general public. One appearance would be made before the authorized committee in the House and one in the Senate. There would be one conference between the two Houses in case of disagreement. House action and Senate action on appropriations and the waste of time on appropriations conference reports would be eliminated and the useless waste of precious time in what is known as general debate on appropriations bills could and would be abolished once and for all.

The distinguished member of the minority, my good friend, Dr. EATON, of New Jersey, expressed himself in accord with my feelings in the matter when he complained of having to talk to empty seats within this Chamber in what we term "general debate." He said, as a minister of the gospel, he had to talk to empty seats in his church at times, but that he was more often compelled to do so here. This practice could well be abolished even without reorganization, but it would be certain to go after a sound and careful solution of this joint jurisdiction problem between legislative and appropriations committees. I realize that it may not be the most popular thing to initiate and advocate a move of this kind but if it is efficiency which is desired and the saving of time that we hope to accomplish, this, in my estimation, is the one and, I dare say, most important step which we must make.

The question of the change may involve the Bureau of the Budget and the legislation on appropriations relating thereto may require considerable thought with some adjustment, and the possible institution of new practices, but these are not, in themselves, insurmountable or even important. The reorganization bill, as I understand it, now provides for a sort of budgetary committee composed of members of the Committee on Ways and Means and of the Committee on Appropriations. Since we are to have a sort of fiscal or budgetary committee of our own, I cannot see why the plan I propose and which would eliminate the Appropriations Committee need in any way conflict with the present budget system, but even if it does, Mr. Speaker, the change can be made to dovetail and function efficiently, positively, and promptly.

If the press and the public will give to this essential proposal the same sustained and enthusiastic support given the initial reorganization proposal, it should become a part of the plan early in the eighteenth session of Congress.

Veterans' Affairs

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. JOHN E. RANKIN
OF MISSISSIPPI
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Friday, August 2, 1946

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, under permission granted to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I am including, first, a letter from General Bradley, Administrator of Veterans' Affairs; second, a statement of General Bradley on recent legislation, including legal safeguards pertaining to training on the job; third, a summary of activities of the Veterans' Administration as of July 31, 1946; and fourth, a brief digest of the laws directly or indirectly affecting veterans and their dependents enacted during the Seventy-ninth Congress, practically all of which were handled by the Committee on World War Veterans' Legislation of which I am chairman.

LETTER FROM GENERAL BRADLEY

The letter from General Bradley reads as follows:

VETERANS' ADMINISTRATION,
Washington, D. C.

Hon. JOHN E. RANKIN,
Chairman, Committtee on World War Veterans' Legislation, House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. RANKIN: As my first year as Administrator draws to a close, and I consider the relationship during that time between the Veterans' Administration and Congress, there comes to mind your sympathetic and helpful approach to our problems.

The Veterans' Administration found it necessary to recommend enactment of numerous legislative proposals to the Seventy-ninth Congress. The understanding consideration given these proposals by you and the members of your committee was responsible for bringing their merit to the attention of the Congress, resulting in favorable action in almost every case. Permit me to take this means of expressing our sincere appreciation to you and the other members of the committee.

I hope that the coming months will afford you well-earned rest and recreation.

Sincerely yours,

OMAR N. BRADLEY,
General, United States Army, Administrator.

GENERAL BRADLEY'S STATEMENT ON VETERANS' BENEFITS—RADIO ADDRESS

The statement by General Bradley reads as follows:

Within the last few days, the President signed several new acts vitally affecting veterans, their families, and the rest of the Nation. These acts were passed by the Seventy-ninth Congress in the closing days of its session.

As Administrator of Veterans' Affairs, I have two major duties: First, to inform veterans on benefits to which they are entitled; second, to see that they get those benefits in time to solve their principal problems of adjustment. This was the intent of Congress. It is the intent of taxpayers who will pay the bill to get our veterans off to a solid peacetime start.

Because these new laws are important to the future of more than 13,000,000 veterans of World War II, some 4,000,000 veterans of earlier wars, to say nothing of their dependents, I welcomed this chance to explain them.

Congress may seem far off to the average veteran in his home town. But what Congress does comes home to him in benefits and in costs.

Some of these laws will cost money; others will eventually save money. Each is designed to help the veteran by helping him to help the country as a wage-earning citizen and taxpayer.

Intelligent veterans' laws are aimed toward helping the veteran become a more productive citizen. He can contribute to the enrichment of his community; ultimately to the welfare of his Nation.

These were methods the American people chose to help reconvert our vast resources of manpower. They can assure our country of a more abundant, more comfortable life. These laws point the way for veterans to overcome the handicaps of time, health, skills, and opportunities lost because of their war service.

Now let us take up these new laws:

GI insurance promises the veteran his best chance for an honest bargain today. It offers his family low-cost security as safe as the Government itself. All this was available in the wartime insurance he carried while still on active duty. It is available—with many new features added—to him as a veteran today.

These features were provided in a bill signed by the President last week.

As you know National Service Life Insurance was created to protect the families of soldiers and sailors in war.

One of the most unusual stories of the war came out of Corregidor in the spring of 1942. In those last tragic days, the thoughts of our 35,000 American and Filipino troops turned from escape and survival to concern for their wives, parents, and children when they failed to return. In the middle of heavy fighting they took time out to sign up for GI insurance or to increase what they already had to the maximum of $10,000.

Col. Royal G. Jenks, the island's finance officer, made special arrangements with the War Department and the Veterans' Administration by radio. Red tape was thrown away. Insurance applications took priority over everything and thousands were sent out by radio. Meanwhile, scraps of paper were used to authorize pay-roll deductions. These records in several large wooden boxes left in a submarine, the last boat to leave the Philippines. Colonel Jenks brought them to Washington. They served the purpose. Those thousands of families were protected as the beleaguered troops wished.

With the shooting over, the danger to veterans is less. But as they grow older, as their families grow larger, the need for insurance is greater.

I am not an insurance salesman. But I do not want to see veterans let a good thing go. The law last week makes GI insurance more nearly like a commercial policy than anything we have had before. It is suited to the peacetime need of veterans. It offers endowment policies that will enable veterans to save for their old age or their children's education. There are no restrictions on who the beneficiary may be. In the event of death, payments may be made in monthly installments ranging from 36 months to lifetime incomes. Or if the veteran wishes, they can be made in one lump sum. However, the method of payment of insurance now being paid to beneficiaries cannot be changed.

Some 10,000,000 veterans have let their policies lapse. They can be easily reinstated. It requires the payment of only 2 months' premiums. No examination is necessary if the veteran's physical condition is unchanged. Your nearest VA office can fill you in on details.

To veterans now holding their wartime policies, I might pass along this word: Don't convert to permanent Government insurance until you're sure you know exactly what you want, need, and can afford. You have several years in which to convert it. The main thing to remember is to keep your policy in force.

Incidentally, when you write to us on your insurance or when you send in your premiums—remember there are many millions like you. Send your full name, address and claim or insurance numbers so we can handle your record quickly. We have more Johnsons than there were American soldiers in the Normandy D-day assault. More Browns than there are people in the whole State of Nevada.

Another measure passed this week will make things better for the quarter of a million patients that pass through our hospitals each year.

It is a move we started 1 year ago to give sick and wounded veterans good canteen service.

Congress has given us $4,000,000 in a revolving fund to set up hospital canteens. The cash is an investment in ice cream fountains, stock, and other purchases of veterans. Canteens will pay their own way.

They replace the old system of concessions. Patients will purchase better things at lower prices. Profits will revert to them in the form of better service, rather than to the concessionaire.

We feel they will make the life of our patients more pleasant. They will give them PX's they can call their own as in the Army or Navy.

Veterans who lost their legs in World War II will soon have their own cars in which to get around.

The President this week signed a bill authorizing the Veterans' Administration to pay for $30,000,000 worth of cars for amputees. They will go to veterans who lost one or both legs at or above the ankle. They will likewise go to veterans who have lost the use of one or both their legs.

I know of several legless veterans driving their own cars today. One of them, William F. O'Hara, works for us in Scranton. When he was lost in the Arctic for 88 days, both O'Hara's legs were frozen. He now drives better than I do.

Few disabled veterans can afford new cars. Under this law, they will be allowed up to $1,600 each for any car and special equipment they may choose to get.

We're now working out the procedures to get these new cars. They should be ready shortly and veterans will be advised exactly how they should proceed.

Properly equipped a legless driver is as safe as any other on the road. This is one of the things that amputees can do as well as able-bodied persons. Cars will widen their chances, solve the problem of transportation to and from their jobs.

Increased costs of living have forced up our pension rates.

Congress this week passed and the President signed a law increasing pensions by an over-all 20 percent. The increased rates will mean more money for 2,250,000 veterans and their dependents drawing monthly payments from the VA.

Still another pension law will permit patients in hospitals even when they have no dependents to draw their full pensions. Formerly their rates were cut to $20 or even to $8 in some cases at the time of admittance when they had no dependents.

If they are patients more than 6 months at a time, we may hold a part of their pensions. This will be returned to them in lump sums at the time of their discharge.

These increases are automatic.

Veterans need not write us on them. In fact, 2,500,000 letters would probably slow us up.

The increases will show up in checks on October 1.

Several million letters on pensions if added to the millions we get each month will only clog the works. Veterans will help us and help themselves by waiting until October 1 for this pension increase.

I have time now for just one more law. This is one that Congress passed at our special request.

It will help save the veteran from racketeers. It will help save the businessman from being duped and the taxpayer from being cheated.

It concerns veterans training on the job; not those in apprenticeship courses; not those in long-established courses; but veterans who have been enrolled in training that is training in name only.

I asked for the law when I felt it necessary to curb a situation that threatened to grow into a national scandal. Although no laws were being violated, the loose construction of the GI bill permitted on-the-job training far in excess of the intent of Congress. There was the danger that chiselers—unscrupulous employers and selfish veterans—would wreck the veterans' program in a million-dollar scheme for legal but phony training.

Veterans are paid subsistence at $65 if single and $90 if married per month while drawing wages on train-while-you-learn jobs.

Some employers used the plan for cheap labor schemes while the taxpayer footed the difference. Veterans involved in these programs were being cheated of their chance to learn a useful and workable skill.

In other instances, high-priced executives had themselves enrolled for training—sometimes for the president's job. Some of them were drawing six or seven hundred dollars a month in addition to their $90 in subsistence.

States were responsible for supervision. In some places they allotted no funds for the job. In most States, they had no set standards.

Under this new law, VA can draw the reins tighter to protect the veteran and the honest employer who can now join the program without fear of scandal due to its misuse.

We shall reimburse States for the cost of approval and constant supervision of establishments in which veterans are training. The States, in turn, must abide by national standards.

Subsistence will be paid to veterans in training only where their wages with subsistence do not exceed $175 a month for a single man, or $200 a month if he has dependents. This will make the program safe, keep it from being discredited by the veteran who seeks simply to make a good thing of the law.

This same law also permits us to pay students in schools their full subsistence whatever their part- or full-time jobs—providing their earnings do not exceed our ceilings for job training.

A few chiselers do not mean the program is no good. But if allowed to continue they might undo its intent and penalize the veterans who really need that training. With that in mind, we had to clean it out and keep veterans' training safe for those who play it fair.

In passing these new laws, in amending the old ones, Congress has acted to help the GI.

As a citizen the veteran must keep the best interest of the country at heart.

Veterans are obligated on their own right to use these benefits wisely.

Veterans must show that the only help they want is the chance to build their future soundly. They must prove they want most to become useful, job-holding citizens.

They would be the first to tell you that it's wrong to save the country with men's blood only to risk its ruin by greed.

In reviewing these laws tonight, I've tried to show how the Government is working to help our veterans.

But even huge Government agencies cannot do the job alone.

We need industry. We need labor.

The communities must pitch in.

The veteran's neighbor must help him.

Most of all, the veteran has to help himself. In the last showdown, he has to make his own decisions as to how the country can best help him. Then he has to see that he gets only what he wants and needs.

As a citizen, he also has to protect the best interest of the country.

He knows what it means to be a good citizen. He was part of a citizen army. He sailed with a citizen fleet.

He knows that his best interests are bound to the best interests of his country. He knows that the country's welfare will benefit him. That nothing good can come to him at the expense of another. That Americans must work together now as they did in the war.

Veterans don't want hand-outs. They want jobs and the chance to earn their way. Veterans don't approve of raids on the Federal Treasury. They help to stock it with their taxes.

Our veterans will get along without asking more than they need. But we must do our part to see they get what was promised. We must help them in the many ways that veterans require a hand to get going again.

These veterans are good citizens. They proved that during the war. They will prove it even more convincingly in the years to come.

What Is the Difference Between the Wagner-Murray-Dingell Plan and the Private Prepaid Health Plans?

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. JOHN D. DINGELL

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, August 2, 1946

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Speaker, the difference is that the Wagner-Murray-Dingell plan is an all-inclusive premium-paid insurance system. Private plans are premium paid but provide only partial or fractional protection.

The WMD plan provides hospital, surgical, medical, and preventive care, plus X-ray and laboratory service. Private plans provide one or perhaps more of these features but give only partial overall coverage. I know of none that provides any coverage which seeks to prevent illness.

The WMD plan provides full coverage for the insured and for all his dependents. The private plans provide coverage to a limited degree for the insured only. For dependents to be covered, additional premiums are charged. Very few, if any, such plans exist today.

The WMD plan gives the insured $2 in value for every dollar paid by the insured because the employer pays $1 into the Federal insurance fund for the benefit of the worker. No private plan provides $2 worth of coverage for $1 in premium.

The WMD plan, administered by the Social Security Board, at the outset is expected to cost 5 to 7 percent in administrative overhead. Eventually this is expected to be reduced even lower, meaning that the insured will benefit from 93 percent to as high as a possible 97 percent of all that he and his employer pays for prepaid health insurance protection for the insured and for all of his dependents. The private plans, according to some available figures, cost in overhead from 25 to 50 percent and some figures considerably in excess of that amount.

The WMD plan will be free of all promotional costs. The private plans are subject to the cost of advertising, sales commissions, office rentals, management compensation, public-relations costs, and various other and sundry expenditures not applicable to Government-supervised plans.

The WMD plan is to be owned by the people themselves, with profit to no outsiders and no dividends to stockholders. All accumulations, including interest on cash reserves, will be applied to maintain and to increase the benefits of the insured. Private plans are, in many instances, insurance plans for profit. The insured who pays the premiums receives comparatively fractional benefits only after salary and dividend requirements and all overhead expenses are met. This frequently causes the fund to dwindle almost to the vanishing point.

The WMD plan will be as sound and as permanent as the Government itself. Its security will grow with time. Private plans are in some instances well managed and reasonably sound, at an excessive cost, however, to the insured, who can only get in benefits the residue after the overhead is paid.

The WMD plan provides for no special or periodic assessments under any circumstances. Private plans, unfortunately, are at times obliged to and do obtain authority of State insurance commissioners to levy additional assessments over and above premiums already paid.

Under the WMD plan, solvency and permanency will be guaranteed by the United States Government. Under private plans, there is no guaranty of solvency or permanency.

The WMD plan, because of the large numbers of American citizens who will be covered by what is generally conceded to be a universal plan, will be in a position to grant the greatest amount of benefit for every dollar paid in by the insured. In addition thereto the employer's dollar will double this benefit to the insured without any added cost to the beneficiaries. Private plans, no matter how large, will be relatively small by comparison with the WMD plan. There are virtually scores of small prepaid health-insurance plans. Many of these are of mushroom growth.

The WMD plan benefits covering health and providing hospitalization, surgical, medical, and preventive services for the insured and all of his dependents are intended to cover all diseases and all ailments unconditionally and absolutely, except very minor illnesses. Private plans providing partial or even fractional coverage altogether too frequently, in one manner or another in nearly all instances, offer such benefits to the insured on the basis of what is known as "when, where, and how" which means that to collect your benefit you must become sick when, where, and even how your contract prescribes; thus if you become sick "when" in accordance with your contract, you may not be "where" you can receive your benefit. If you get sick "when" in accordance with your contract, you may not be sick "how" or "where" in order to take advantage of the expected benefits.

Under the WMD plan, there will be no concealed restrictions in case of illness to deny the insured his expected benefits. Under private plans, there are too many contractual restrictions which, at the crucial moment, deny the insured expected benefits.

Under the WMD plan the health-insurance features covering even the maternity care of the wife of the insured will be financed through a contribution of 3 percent, one-half to be paid by employer and one-half by employee. The 3-percent insurance premiums will be paid only on the first $3,600 of an individual salary. Private plans for the amount of medical coverage and service given cannot possibly compete with the WMD plan.

Under the WMD plan, it is contemplated eventually to add 1 percent additional premium payment or tax, to be paid one-half by employee and one-half by employer, out of which will be paid during disability the equivalent of 80 percent of salary, but not to exceed $30 per week. Under private plans no such known provisions are made or even remotely contemplated.

I have been asked many questions, Mr. Speaker, and I give these as an impromptu answer at the very last opportunity during this session of Congress. I do want to stress in closing the fact that the social-security plan of old-age annuities and of unemployment compensation has proved to be the most reliable, sound, and permanent plan ever devised in any country, beyond comparison with any other plan.

The health-insurance proposal sponsored by Senators WAGNER and MURRAY in the Senate and by myself in the House of Representatives will become by amendment a part of the Social Security System and will concededly be as permanent, solvent, and beneficial as the well-established, tried, and true features of the present law; and I want to emphatically state that the Wagner-Murray-Dingell plan is neither socialized medicine, federalized or political medicine, nor does it interfere with either the patients' or doctors' right of choice.

Congressional Organization Bill

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. ANDREW J. BIEMILLER
OF WISCONSIN
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Thursday, August 1, 1946

Mr. BIEMILLER. Mr. Speaker, on the whole, I believe the bill in front of us is a sound, progressive measure which will improve the work of the Congress. I regret that certain features of the bill as it passed the other body have been deleted, particularly the provision for an administrative assistant for each member. Were this provision adopted, I am convinced that our legislative activities would be improved materially, as each member would have more time to devote to floor work. No one can deny that today every Representative must spend a large share of his time handling the many problems with executive agencies which are referred to him by his constituents. And in the years just ahead, the very legitimate problems of veterans will increase greatly.

There is one provision in the present bill which I do not like, and I am supporting an amendment to eliminate it. Until the Congress takes firm and decisive action to overhaul our social security and old-age assistance laws so that our senior citizens are given their just deserts, I do not believe Senators and Representatives should be made eligible for participation in the Federal retirement system.

The Leather Shortage

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. DEAN M. GILLESPIE
OF COLORADO
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Friday, August 2, 1946

Mr. GILLESPIE. Mr. Speaker, domestic supplies of leather, already below an adequate minimum, will become critical if OPA controls are reestablished on livestock, acording to a spokesman for Civilian Production Administration.

The CPA estimates that 28,000,000 hides will be needed to meet pent-up demand in the United States in the coming year. Without restriction, the CPA spokesman said domestic producers can fill this need, but if OPA controls are reimposed on the livestock industry, production will barely reach an estimated 20,000,000 hides.

The Nation's 10 big meat packers normally turn out about 6,600,000 hides a year. Their total production during the first quarter of 1946 was only 130,000 and dropped to a mere 30,000 during June—the last month of OPA controls.

Although adequate hides to supplement our short supply were available in foreign markets, OPA pricing policies made purchases impossible. Russia, without pricing restrictions, was able to buy 100,000 hides in Argentina well above the world ceilings.

Price ceilings were set by the Combined Hides, Skins, and Leather Committee composed of the United States and 14 other nations. It was set up to divide the short world supply of hides and leather according to historical need. Although invited, Russia did not become a member of the committee.

The committee established allocations and a world ceiling price for hides. The committee's price was the United States ceiling, established by OPA, at which Argentina, a large producer, would not sell.

While Argentina and prospective buyers of hides, including the United States, dickered over price, Russia moved in. Ignoring the allocations and the world ceiling price established by the Board, Russia signed a contract with Argentine dealers for 100,000 hides.

Unable to do anything about Russia's refusal to "play ball" under its rules, the committee dissolved itself on June 26.

Another reason for the acute shortage of hides is that slaughterers of black-market meat must destroy the hide to prevent detection.

Before recontrolling livestock the Decontrol Board should seriously consider OPA's past failure to provide a workable solution to the problem.

Cut in Grain for Beer Unwise

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. ANDREW J. BIEMILLER
OF WISCONSIN
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Thursday, August 1, 1946

Mr. BIEMILLER. Mr. Speaker, there have been many rumors spread in recent weeks that a still further cut in the use of grain for brewing beer will be made. Inquiries I have made at the Department of Agriculture lead me to believe that such an action is very unlikely.

However, I am not at all sure that the present cut of 30 percent was a wise one. No one desires to aid the hunger-stricken people of Europe more than I do, but there is grave doubt in my mind that the grains used in brewing would aid materially in relieving human food shortages. What we have done is to simply reduce the supply of beer and also reduce Federal, State, and local income from beer taxes.

It seems to me, in analyzing this question, that there are several facts we should keep in mind:

Of the total grain crop of 150,000,000 tons, the brewing industry in 1945 used only 1,800,000 tons or 1.2 percent. Of this quantity, about one-third, or 600,000 tons, revert to the farms as valuable high-protein feed in the form of brewer's dried grains, barley screenings, and malt sprouts. The balance, of course, appears as nutritional values in the beer itself.

Barley is the main cereal used in the manufacture of beer. In the form of malt, it constitutes 66 percent of the grains consumed by the breweries.

Only a fraction of 1 percent of the total barley crop is used for barley products for direct human consumption; 80 percent goes toward the feeding of livestock and 20 percent is bought as malting barley to produce malt for the brewing of beer. This malting barley is of superior quality and, on the average, commands a price about one-third—25 cents per bushel—higher than feed barley.

Broken rice constitutes 6 percent of the grains consumed by the breweries. It is otherwise never used for the human diet, but only for starches and cattle feed.

Corn grits constitute 27 percent of the grains consumed by the breweries and is the only brewing cereal which is also used directly in the human diet. The 30-percent reduction in brewers' grain would liberate for the stated purpose of the amendment no more than 146,000 tons of corn grits, which is less than one-tenth of 1 percent of the total United States grain.

To expect that any of the barley and broken rice which was disallowed for brewery purposes would revert to the farm to supplant wheat at present being fed to livestock, is entirely fallacious reasoning.

Sufficient tonnage of these commodities is now in the elevators of brewers and maltsters to furnish the entire supply needed until the new crops come in; no farmer will put his wheat on the market and haul from elevators in distant localities barley and rice back to the farm as feed.

The following estimates, on an annual basis, of the economic impact of the 30-percent reduction I believe are reliable enough for practical purposes:

First. The Federal Government will lose:

(a) Excise taxes on beer, $270,000,000.

(b) Corporate income taxes, $60,000,000.

Second. States and municipalities will lose:

(a) Taxes on beer, $56,000,000.

(b) Miscellaneous license and permit fees, $14,000,000.

Total loss of public revenues, $400,000,000.

The 30-percent grain reduction will amount to 27,000,000 bushels of various grains; thus, for each bushel saved, the Public Treasury pays about $15, or 10 times the value at which the grain can be bought on the open market.

Not included in these figures are the losses due to reduced sales by the purveyor industries, loss of income of laid-off workers, and so forth.

Third. Normal purchases of beer by the consuming public will be reduced by $1,700,000,000, thus adding approximately 12 percent to existing dangers of run-away inflation, as a prominent economist calculates it.

Fourth. Definite reduction of employment in 350,000 retail beer outlets—650,000 workers—12,000 beer wholesale establishments—70,000 workers—and 460 breweries—85,000 workers. The effect upon employment in the industries supplying the breweries cannot readily be estimated, but should range from 25 to 30 percent.

Fifth. Exportation of malt rose from 1,300,000 bushels in 1940 to 5,700,000 bushels in 1945, or to somewhat over 8 percent of the 1945 domestic consumption.

Beer made from this malt is being shipped into the United States from Mexico and other countries at a tariff smaller than the domestic Federal excise tax of $8 per barrel, and the American farmer loses for the use of his herds 3,000 tons of feedstuffs which as by-products of the brewing process remain abroad and, pound for pound, contain twice as much protein as the original grain.

An extensive and expanding black market has already developed in beer, even the full 1945 supply having been far short of the demand.

Daily protests against the shortage are heard from industrial workers, the principal consumers of beer. With the advent of warm weather these protests have increased sharply as it becomes more and more apparent that the reduction of brewers' grains cannot possibly achieve its objective to alleviate shortages of wheat and other grains for human consumption here and abroad.

I am hopeful that the Department of Agriculture will soon rescind the 30 percent cut in brewers' grain. To my mind, there is little value in the present regulation. I recognize that the prohibitionists are again active and have seized upon the need for grains to alleviate human suffering to propagandize for a return to the days of "the noble experiment."

I am confident that the Democratic Party which ended the gangster regime which grew up during prohibition will not permit the return of prohibition. And for that reason I am equally confident that in the not too distant future the present regulation will be rescinded and the breweries of America will be able to turn out beer in sufficient quantities to satisfy the normal demand.

Social Security Act Amendments of 1936

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. ROBERT CROSSER

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, August 1, 1946

Mr. CROSSER. Mr. Speaker, the establishment of economic justice would be a consummation of the wishes of every earnest student of political economy.

One of the reasons why more progress has not been made toward the establishment of economic justice is that symptoms have generally been mistaken for causes. It has been observed that a few people possess much wealth and that the overwhelming majority have little or nothing. Consequently some denounce the few as if that would correct things. They do not realize that indulging in personalities never solves any problem.

The fact is that practically all those who have excessive wealth appreciate the cause of the unjust distribution of wealth no better than do those who have but little.

My friends, all those possessing more wealth than they need might be killed tomorrow and their possessions divided among others without in any way removing the cause of the unjust distribution of wealth.

Another explanation for failure to correct economic injustice is that among those who presume to speak learnedly there is a lack of standards as to what is absolute or inherent right, by which to test the justice of proposed measures. They urge action by government without apparent regard to the violation of the fundamental rights of the individual. According to principle, all men inherently have equal rights in the bounties of nature; that is, in the natural resources. This is, in common with others, a right to natural advantages, and has the character of a property right. The right just mentioned is fundamental and no legislation, no governmental action, should disregard it.

Because no human being ever created a single particle of the earth, no one has a right to the exclusive monopoly of the earth or any part of it. Rightful ownership of anything is based on the fact that the person claiming such ownership has created it or has received it from someone else who did create it or who has derived title from someone who created it.

The benefits that are entirely due to the possession of the natural resources—that is, of the earth or any part thereof—belong to society as a whole, because no person or persons made or produced them. All must be assured, however, of undisturbed possession upon proper terms of such natural resources as may be rightly in their control.

The possession by any person of the least productive part of natural resources used by society clearly gives him no special privilege or advantage, and he could not, therefore, be justly asked to pay for using what nobody else desires; but whatever may be the value of the additional productive power of the natural resources held by all other members of society, belongs to all the people, and the yearly value of possessing such advantage should be taken by government for the benefit of all. Such additional productive power is not due to the energy, enterprise, or industry of those possessing the resources having greater productiveness.

On the other hand, the persons making the payments of such amounts to public authority are by every standard of right entitled to absolute and exclusive ownership and enjoyment of all they produce above and beyond what they so pay to society, and they should not be molested in the enjoyment of the same by any person or government. That is the product of their own efforts and is not due to the enjoyment of any special advantage or privilege or to the force of nature. For government to take any part of it, is robbery and it is as wrong in principle as for a private person to take it from them.

The enforcement of this principle would supply government with sufficient funds for its operation. More important than that, however, it would prevent the evils of special privilege—that is, monopoly—because if we were to collect the full yearly value of possessing natural resources, then, in order to provide means to pay to society the yearly value of such possession, the holders would be forced to use the resources, and use them effectively, too. The best way in which to prevent monopoly is to make monopoly unprofitable. This increased use would create a demand for workmen and the increased demand for workers would soon end involuntary idleness. With unemployment abolished, wages would rise, for men would not work for less than is fair when they could procure employment from others, who, in order to procure their services, would pay what would be just.

With enough revenue paid to society for the use of natural resources, no longer would taxes be put on any of the things produced for the support and comfort of man. This would increase production, because removing the sales taxes, excise taxes, and all other kinds of taxes placed on the products of agriculture and industry would lessen the cost of such commodities by at least the amount of the taxes removed. Then as the prices should become less, more and more commodities would be sold, because more people could afford to buy the goods at the lower prices. On the other hand, when taxes are put on goods we increase the price, and then, because goods are higher priced, sales become fewer.

When it will be to the interest of holders of natural resources to make use of them, instead of to keep them idle, we shall have an increased demand for labor, which would soon end unemployment. With employment to be had by all who desire it, everyone would have means to purchase from merchants the comforts of life. Merchants would in turn buy more and more from manufacturers, and manufacturers, in order to supply the demand for their products, would need more workmen.

Men would thus be sure of employment, and no longer would prevail the constant fear of want which for ages has haunted mankind. Freed from worry and despair, men would then joyfully engage in creative effort. Men and women, once sure of economic justice, independence, and reasonable abundance of material comforts, would recoil from evils which are wholly unnatural.

No longer dreading starvation and lack of material comforts, man will cease frenzied efforts to accumulate vast wealth, wholly unnecessary to a sane existence, and, in fact, harmful.

When comparatively little effort will supply material wants, and the making of a living will have become only incidental to the real business of making a life, then will man turn to the work of developing the eternal verities of being. Then will he strive to understand, to become conscious of, the glorious realities of life which now wait for recognition.

Then will be the reign of harmony. To promote it is the duty and can be the joy of all. Let none shirk the call, believing that death will end the task. Now or later we must unfold reality, we must manifest the true life.

That which is true has always existed. It will continue to exist without end. The pholosopher, Herbert Spencer, has said "that which is real is permanent; that which is not permanent is not real."

All the strength, beauty, harmony, and other elements of being ever exist or, to use Spencer's term, are permanent. Man's duty, then, is to become conscious of these infinite realities; his work should be to present to all mankind the magnificent truths which continually enter the chamber of his consciousness. This is the road to real happiness. When man grasps this true meaning of life, then, throughout all the earth will be concord. The unity of creation will be manifest, and, in each other, men will see not only the likeness of the Creator but brothers all. In joyous unison will the sons of men sound forth the grand symphony of life. In perfect harmony will each work for the good of all.

Not mere searching for personal glory, then, is the true purpose of life. The service of all creation, not of self, must be the watchword.

No more the victim of fear, and free from want and the dread of want, men will then joyously obey their noblest and best impulses. In their spirit of freedom and with gladness men will embrace the inspiring principles of justice and eagerly devote their hearts and minds to expressing the harmony of life. Then from the earth will vanish the meanness, the envy, the jealousy, and hatred which now blight our harassed civilization.

Along the pathway of life, with songs of joy pealing from their hearts and the spirit of justice shining from their eyes, will march the sons of men in the glorious cause of brotherhood. Men will be free men and the grandeur of creation will be manifest throughout the land.

Investigation of the Ku Klux Klan

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. ANDREW J. BIEMILLER
OF WISCONSIN
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Friday, August 2, 1946

Mr. BIEMILLER. Mr. Speaker, newspapers this week have carried stories stating that the Department of Justice, with the hearty approval of the President, is investigating the Ku Klux Klan in at least 7 States, and also the thoroughly un-American outrage in Georgia when an armed mob killed 4 Negroes.

I want to commend the President and the Justice Department for these investigations. I sincerely hope that the guilty parties in Georgia are discovered and punished properly for this unspeakable outrage. I also hope that the Klan is driven completely from the American scene. We want no native Fascists in our democracy.

It is peculiarly significant that the House Committee on Un-American Activities has not interested itself in either the Georgia outrage or the obviously antidemocratic, pro-Fascist activities of the Ku Klux Klan. Surely, the despicable lynching in Georgia and the nefarious activities of the Klan are not considered as good Americanism by the overwhelming majority of the American people.

Qualifications for the Members of the Colorado House of Representatives

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. DEAN M. GILLESPIE
OF COLORADO
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Friday, August 2, 1946

Mr. GILLESPIE. Mr. Speaker, members of the Colorado House of Representatives are undoubtedly the hardest working group of legislators in this Nation but the United States Congress runs a close second. It might be well, therefore, to compare the qualifications of members of these two bodies.

I recently received a statement outlining the qualifications for membership in the House of Representatives of Colorado. It was written by the Honorable Hubert D. Henry, a member. Perhaps some of the older members have compiled a list of the qualifications for this House. If so, it should be made public. Here are the qualifications for the members of the Colorado House of Representatives:

Must be at least 25 years of age, citizens of the United States and the State of Colorado. Must be honest, discreet, intelligent, able, and personable. Must be well acquainted with all processions, businesses, industries, and employments in the State of Colorado, including stock raising, farming, mining, manufacturing, selling, financing, transportation, and utilities. Must be intimately acquainted with all phases of State government, departmental, and institutional administration, personnel problems, the levying and collecting of revenue, economical and efficient budgeting, public welfare, public health, education, the regulation of industry, the regulation of utilities, liquor, game and fish, highway safety, the commitment, care, treatment and restoration of dependent children, delinquent children, criminals, and the insane and feeble-minded, the preservation of natural resources, the construction and maintenance of highways and public buildings, and any other matter which is or may become a proper subject for State legislation. Must have a comprehensive knowledge of the laws of Colorado, including the constitution, 3 volumes of statutes, 11 volumes of session laws, 113 volumes of decisions of the Supreme Court, the Constitution and laws of the United States, the common law of England as applied in Colorado, and numerous published and unpublished volumes of rules and regulations of various departments, boards, bureaus, and directors. Should know the rules of interpreting and construing statutes and should be able to perceive instantaneously the ultimate effect of all words used in any proposed bill or amendment thereto. Should know legislative procedure, administrative procedure, and judicial procedure. Should know the problems of law enforcement. The term of service is 2 or 4 years. Meetings are held in Denver once every 2 years for from 90 to 150 days, and during this period must be prepared to spend entire time in Denver and devote entire efforts to the responsibilities of position. During the remainder of term will be subject to call at any time for any period of time. Will be selected by from 10,000 to 150,000 electors and before obtaining position must be prepared to interview these persons in groups of from 1 to 500 during the 6-week period prior to selection. Must be willing to consult with any elector at any time on any question, public or private. Must be ready and willing to answer questionnaires on all conceivable subjects, whether or not related to State legislation, from any group now in existence or hereafter created. Will be subjected to criticism whether justified or unjustified and whether based upon fact, intelligent appraisal, or arising from prejudice or incomplete understanding of the facts. Will be expected to anticipate all problems which might arise in the future and find means of accomplishing the impossible, and overcoming conditions without the power or facilities to do so. Will be expected to increase the service rendered and yet reduce the cost to each individual contributing thereto. When in session will be paid expenses in coming to Denver and returning home once; however, during the session and at other times will be expected to make several trips between home and Denver at own expense. While in Denver, will be expected to pay own living expenses. Will be subjected to some expense in seeking the position whether or not ultimately successful in obtaining it. The compensation, regardless of time spent and regardless of expenses incurred, is $1,000 for the 2-year term. Out of this amount will be paid living expenses in Denver, traveling expenses for trips to Denver in excess of one each session, and amounts spent in seeking the position. In computing income tax, the living and traveling expenses, but not the expenses of seeking the position, are deductible. If you are interested in such a position, apply to the chairman of the county central committee of your political party.

Indian Claims Commission Bill

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. KARL E. MUNDT
OF SOUTH DAKOTA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Tuesday, July 30, 1946

Mr. MUNDT. Mr. Speaker, the passage of the Indian Claims Commission bill, H. R. 4497, by the Congress represents a great landmark in our treatment of the American Indians. By this bill the United States, as a sovereign Nation, consents that it shall be subject to suit by any Indian tribe not only upon claims that arise in law or equity under the Constitution, but also upon claims not recognized by any existing rule of law or equity, which have as their bases unfair and dishonorable dealings on the part of the United States. In other words, if any Indian tribe can prove that it has been unfairly and dishonorably dealt with by the United States it is entitled to recover. This ought to be an example for all the world to follow in its treatment of minorities.

When the bill was before the House, an amendment of Congressman TABER was adopted. This amendment in turn was superseded by a Senate amendment agreed to by the managers. In view of the requests that have been made by our colleagues for an authoritative statement as to the effect of the Senate amendment and as to other parts of the conference report, the House managers, in confirmation of informal explanations already made to our colleagues, have prepared a supplemental statement which, in behalf of my distinguished colleague from Oklahoma, Mr. STIGLER, who acted as chairman of the House managers, and the other House managers, I desire to incorporate as a part of my remarks:

SUPPLEMENTAL STATEMENT OF HOUSE MANAGERS ON INDIAN CLAIMS COMMISSION BILL

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 4497) a bill to create an Indian Claims Commission, to provide for the powers, duties, and functions thereof, and for other purposes, submit the following supplementary statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon and recommended in the conference report:

The Senate and House conferees met and resolved all differences the morning of July 27, 1946, and because of the imminence of adjournment, the statement of the managers was carefully prepared and filed on the same day. The shortness of time, however, did not permit as full a statement as the conferees feel the bill is entitled to and therefore they make this following statement:

In our original statement we stated that Senate Amendment No. 5 did not permit the Government to plead as a defense to any of the five enumerated classes of claims that such facts constitute only a political and not a justiciable wrong, for the bill expressly makes such wrong justiciable by authorizing suit thereon.

While we think this statement plain, we add this further explanation:

The bill with the amendments agreed to by the conferees confers jurisdiction on the Commission to render judgment in any case that falls within five classifications, as follows: (1) claims in law or equity arising under the Constitution, laws, treaties of the United States, and Executive orders of the President; (2) all other claims in law or equity, including those sounding in tort, with respect to which the claimant would have been entitled to sue in a court of the United States if the United States were subject to suit; (3) claims which would result if the treaties, contracts, and agreements between the claimant and the United States were revised on the ground of fraud, duress, unconscionable consideration, mutual or unilateral mistake, whether of law or fact, or any other ground cognizable by a court of equity; (4) claims arising from the taking by the United States, whether as the result of a treaty of cession or otherwise, of lands owned or occupied by the claimant without the payment for such lands of compensation agreed to by the claimant; and (5) claims based upon fair and honorable dealings that are not recognized by any existing rule or law or equity.

The first two classifications were in substance in the bill as passed by both the House and the Senate. As to causes of action arising under these classifications, it is implicit that the bill, notwithstanding Senate Amendment No. 5, removes the defense that the defendant, because a sovereign, cannot be sued, for by the bill the Government gives its consent to be sued on claims of this character.

Items 3 and 4 were in the bill as passed by the House and were reinserted by the conferees. As to causes of action which are covered by claims coming within these classifications, it is implicit in the bill, despite Senate amendment No. 5, that it removes not only the defense that the defendant cannot be sued, but also the defense that such causes of action are political in nature and ordinarily not subject to judicial review. In other words, this bill creates a cause of action for these enumerated claims, the Government, however, to have all defenses to any suit which would not in their nature defeat a determination on the merits of the claims asserted under the broad jurisdiction conferred by the bill. Thus, if the question is whether the United States has obtained a release by unconscionable imposition on the tribe, the United States may not plead the release as dispositive of the claim, but may plead that the consideration for the release was fair and equitable. Stated another way, the acceptance of Senate amendment No. 5 was not intended to permit the Government to destroy the causes of action created by the act; the grant of jurisdiction conferred by the bill is not immediately withdrawn by Senate amendment No. 5, although it does permit historical legal defenses, not addressed to the justice and equity of the claim, to be interposed. This is apparent from the original House report on the bill, which, with respect to the third classification, said: "It is intended that this provision shall also permit the Commission to reject defenses predicated on similar offenses such as settlements based on duress or unconscionable consideration." The reinsertion of this cause of action by the conferees was intended to revive this interpretation of the House committee.

As to the fourth classification, the original report of the House committee stated that it "will permit Indian tribes to sue for just compensation for lands taken from them under the guise of an unratified treaty or otherwise, without just compensation." The reinsertion of this item by the conferees was also intended to revive this interpretation of the House committee.

Inquiry has been made as to whether the substitution of Senate amendment 5, making, except for the statute of limitations and laches, "all other defenses available to the United States" was intended to deprive the Government of the benefit of the Taber amendment adopted by the House, which provided that "no claim shall be considered by the Commission where a final determination of an issue of law or fact has been made on the merits." It was not intended by accepting the Senate amendment to deprive the defendant of the benefit of the defense of res judicata where the same claim has been previously decided upon the merits against the claimant. This does not mean, however, that the Government shall be permitted to defeat a suit brought under one of the board jurisdictional classifications of this act because it was defeated in a prior action on the ground it did not come within the precise scope of the limits of the then applicable jurisdictional act. The present act, by classifications 3, 4, and 5, make justiciable certain claims which were not cognizable under many jurisdictional acts. If a claimant can qualify under one of these classifications a prior decision against the claimant under narrower language of a prior jurisdictional act may not successfully be pleaded as res judicata.

Neither does it mean that causes of action which could have been brought under prior jurisdictional acts, but which were not, can be defeated. Only cases which have been actually tried before the courts and settled on their merits under both the jurisdictional features of the particular jurisdictional act and the jurisdictional language of this act are precluded from determination by the Commission. Thus, where an Indian tribe has already recovered for the value of land taken from it, the Commission will not be permitted to reopen the case as to the principal value of that land, but the Commission will be permitted to entertain a claim for just compensation where no such claim was actually litigated by the tribe. Again, the previous assertion of a claim for interest, which could not be awarded because of existing provisions of law, shall not preclude the claimant from hereafter raising before the Commission a claim for interest as a part of just compensation in the constitutional sense on the principal sum already obtained. Again, where a tribe has sued and recovered land taken under the guise of unratified treaties that tribe is not to be precluded from presenting to the Commission a cause of action for the taking of other lands immemorially possessed by the tribe; likewise, where a tribe sued for the value of land taken on the theory such taking arose under or grew out of a treaty, act, or Executive order, a judgment against the tribe will not preclude a determination by the Commission of a claim for the taking of Indian title to the same land, made actionable by classification No. 4.

Amendment 6 of the Senate lists certain gratuitous expenditures which shall not be set off against any award made to an Indian tribe. Whether other gratuitous expenditures shall be set off is left to the discretion of the Commission, or to the Court of Claims in those cases which have been or will be brought in that court. While this discretion seems very broad, it is contemplated that the Commission will, by analogy, in general follow the broad pattern of the statute and set off only those gratuitous expenditures which are for the exclusive benefit of the Indians, and then only if the nature of the claim and the entire course of dealing between the United States and the claimant justifies their being set off.

In stating that "agency or other administrative" expenses shall not be set off, the conferees intended that that language should have a broad interpretation and applied to all agency or administrative expenses of every kind and description. Since these expenses have, in general, been expended for all tribes, there is no reason why they should be set off against a tribe which has a claim against the United States when it cannot possibly be charged against other tribes. The conferees also intend that the other special items which are not to be set off shall have a broad interpretation. By "educational" expense, for instance, is meant all expenses connected in any way with the education of the Indians, such as the construction of buildings, the construction and maintenance of public utilities for these buildings, the transportation of educational supplies, board and room for the children, the pay of all employees, etc.

KARL E. MUNDT,
W. G. STIGLER,
CHAS. R. ROBERTSON,
A. M. FERNANDEZ,
HENRY M. JACKSON,
Managers on the Part of the House.

Speaking for the conferees, I think, Mr. Speaker, that the Commission to be created will, under the terms of this bill, be able to dispose of all Indian claims in a manner consistent with the principles of Christian statesmanship for which this Nation has always stood.

UNRRA Has Sent 12,383 Tractors to Russia

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. DEAN M. GILLESPIE
OF COLORADO
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Friday, August 2, 1946

Mr. GILLESPIE. Mr. Speaker, figures released last month show that UNRRA has sent 12,383 tractors to Russia and countries dominated by her. Altogether, $50,000,000 worth of tractors were exported during the 6 months ending April 1, 1946, and 14,500 tractors are allocated for shipment in the coming 6 months.

While food production of American farmers continues to be impeded by lack of machinery, the administration continues its policy of playing Santa Claus to the world.

These tractors can be seen rusting by the roadside in Albania and Greece. Farmers there do not know how to use them, and if they did, the size of their farms would make tractors impractical. In China many tractors never reach the farmer, but are allowed to rust on the dock.

As of July 18, 1946, UNRRA had shipped 12,383 tractors, distributed as follows:

Russia and her satellites
Albania	334
Austria	400
Czechoslovakia	1,893
Poland	4,721
Yugoslavia	3,437
Byelorussia	168
Ukraine	167
Total	10,820
Rest of the world
China	400
Greece	1,343
Italy	79
Total	1,563

Conclusion of Services as Chairman of House Printing Committee and Vice Chairman of the Joint Committee on Printing

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. PETE JARMAN
OF ALABAMA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Friday, August 2, 1946

Mr. JARMAN. Mr. Speaker, with the approaching adjournment, I will to all intents and purposes conclude my service as chairman of the House Printing Committee and vice chairman of the Joint Committee on Printing. In fact, January 3 will be only the eighth day since I entered the Congress 10 years previously on which I shall not be chairman of a committee.

It was my unusual good fortune to become chairman of the Memorials Committee on my eighth day as a Member of the House, which I resigned to become chairman of the Printing Committee, by virtue of which I also became vice chairman of the Joint Committee on Printing, 2 years later. I simultaneously became a member of the Foreign Affairs Committee and the only majority member on both a major and a minor committee. Consequently, my committee work load has been a double one.

When the Foreign Affairs Committee was divided into subcommittees last year, I became chairman of the Western Hemisphere one, which is the only chairmanship or vice chairmanship I will occupy in January.

I have thoroughly enjoyed my service as chairman of the Printing Committee and I hope the pride I feel in its functioning during these 8 years is pardonable. Much money has been saved by the care exercised, and I imagine the record of never having had a resolution defeated is unique. Not only has no resolution from the Printing Committee been defeated since I became chairman of it, but the only roll call occurred on the first one I presented to the House. It resulted from the natural ignorance of procedure of a brand new sophomore who was handling his first bill. While it is true that the amounts involved were small compared to the billions and millions in which the war has required us to become accustomed to deal, the volume of work has been large and the total amount saved by the exercise of care has been substantial. To illustrate, I dare say that I have presented more resolutions than the total presented by any half dozen chairmen during this period. I recently passed 19 on one day and the amount involved in one resolution was $61,000.

As I conclude this service which has at times been arduous as well as interesting and pleasant, I wish to express to you, my colleagues, my deep appreciation of your kindness, consideration, and thoughtfulness. I would particularly thank the Speaker whose recognition has been the only requirement to bring these highly privileged resolutions to the floor, and the distinguished majority and minority leaders, all of whom have been especially considerate. While I have not always consulted the majority leader, only two resolutions were ever presented to the House without consultation with the leader of the minority. They were the first, on which the only roll call I mentioned occurred, and the last, the haste in connection with which caused me to forget to contact him.

I wish to also sincerely thank my colleagues on the committee and the great number of Members with whom I have dealt for their thoughtful consideration and cooperation. I by all means wish to express my gratitude to that lovable and able gentleman, Senator HAYDEN, chairman of the Joint Committee on Printing, under whom I have served as vice chairman. He as well as all others I have mentioned are exceedingly delightful gentlemen with whom to deal.

Under the Reorganization Act, which prevents service on more than one major committee, the performance of the duties of the Printing Committee will be transferred to the House Committee on Administration, to the chairman of which I wish to offer any cooperation and assistance I can possibly render him as he assumes this important obligation to the House and its membership.

Social Security Conference Report

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. ANDREW J. BIEMILLER
OF WISCONSIN
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Friday, August 2, 1946

Mr. BIEMILLER. Mr. Speaker, I am supporting the conference report on H. R. 7037 with great reluctance. In my opinion, the pending legislation is only a start on needed revisions of the present law. But since our only alternative is to vote for the report, which does contain important forward steps, or to vote against any changes in this session, I will support the report.

Naturally, I am pleased that there will be some slight advance on pensions paid under the old-age assistance laws. The increased appropriations for maternal and child welfare are desirable. The inclusion of seamen under unemployment compensation is a reform long overdue. Veterans will be given certain credits for Social Security Act coverage for time they have spent in the armed forces. This extension of veterans' rights is eminently just.

But I insist that the bill leaves much to be desired. I sincerely hope that the Eightieth Congress will make a thorough and complete overhauling of the Social Security Act. If I am a Member of that Congress I shall use whatever influence I possess toward this desirable end.

The Crime at Athens, Ga.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. MICHAEL J. BRADLEY
OF PENNSYLVANIA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Wednesday, July 31, 1946

Mr. BRADLEY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, the whole country has been shocked by the terrible incident at Athens, Ga., where a mob of irresponsible, callous, and unscrupulous men slew four colored citizens of that State. These despicable individuals have perpetrated a crime which is probably without parallel in the history of our country.

The action of those responsible for this outrage indicates a disregard on their part, not only for all humane considerations, but also an utter abandonment of all principles of Christianity and justice and a total rejection of all laws of both God and man.

One of the innocent victims of this crime was a man who had heroically served his country in the war which we have just won. He thought enough of America to risk his life in defense of our institutions. What a sad commentary it is that some of those for whom he fought had so little regard for those institutions.

The Negroes of the United States who made sacrifices equal to those of their fellow Americans certainly have the right to expect equal justice under the law. If we are to expect them to continue to have loyalty equal to that of their fellow Americans we must see they are accorded not only protection from wanton murder but that they are also afforded equal opportunity to receive the benefits of our country for which so many of them fought so valiantly.

Such men as Governor Arnall of Georgia and Ralph McGill, editor of the Atlanta Constitution, can be depended upon to use their utmost endeavors to bring the perpetrators of this outrage to justice. The rest of the country hopes that they will be supported by all decent citizens of Georgia.

I am glad that President Truman has ordered the FBI to investigate the crime and to assist in bringing those responsible to justice. He has acted quickly and wisely. I am sure the overwhelming majority of American citizens will approve his action. All of those who participated in this dastardly crime must be brought to justice for the sake of the good name of America.

Sgt. Albert A. Schmid, One of the Nation's Outstanding War Heroes

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. WILLIAM J. GREEN, JR.
OF PENNSYLVANIA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Friday, August 2, 1946

Mr. GREEN. Mr. Speaker, among the outstanding war heroes which the great State of Pennsylvania and the city of Philadelphia gave to the Nation and to the cause of liberty in World War II is Sgt. Albert A. Schmid, of the United States Marine Corps. I would like to tell the House, briefly, about his military exploits and to pay tribute to the sacrifices that he, and thousands of other young Americans, made to preserve our country.

Sergeant Schmid lost his eyesight fighting against great odds for his country, and by his heroism saved an American force from massacre.

It happened on Guadalcanal on the early morning of August 21, 1942—back in those grim days when we were hopelessly outnumbered by the Japanese in every department of war—in airplanes, pilots, ships, weapons, and manpower, and when the fate of this Nation hung in the balance.

Sergeant Schmid had an infected leg on this morning, but he talked his way out of sick bay to be with his comrades. With two other marines, he was manning a machine gun when the main body of a force of 800 Japanese tried to cross the Tenaru River and massacre the Americans. Opposing them was this lone machine gun and three marines.

Within a few minutes of the beginning of the attack, the marine gunner was killed and Sergeant Schmid took over. The third marine was put out of action, badly wounded. It was up to Al.

The full firepower of the Japanese force was concentrated on him. The machine gun was hit, and its water jacket riddled, but Sergeant Schmid kept firing. In the end, a well-aimed Japanese hand grenade blew up the gun and blinded Schmid, but the attack had been repulsed. More than 200 dead Japanese were credited to Schmid alone.

In recognition of his heroism, Sergeant Schmid was awarded the Navy Cross, the Purple Heart, a Presidential citation and personal citations from President Roosevelt, Secretary of the Navy Knox, Admiral Halsey, and General Holcomb, commandant of the Marine Corps.

More than half a million of his fellow Philadelphians turned out to do him honor when he came home. He was the first recipient of the Philadelphia Inquirer hero award. His exploits furnished the material for a best selling novel, and the motion picture, Pride of the Marines.

But, although out of combat, Sergeant Schmid was not out of the war. He did not rest on his laurels. As soon as he was released from the hospital, he was in the battle on the home front. He addressed war workers to stimulate production. He spoke for the Red Cross. He made speeches at war-bond rallies. He averaged three, four and five appearances a day—on one day, seven.

In April of 1943, he married Ruth Hartley, the "girl he left behind," when he went off to war. They have one son, Albert, Jr. In May of 1946, he was honored as a family man when the National Fathers' Day Committee selected him as the "father of the year."

Sergeant Schmid is a life member of the American Legion, the Veterans of Foreign Wars and the Disabled American Veterans. He also is a member of Local 1, International Molders and Foundry Workers Union, American Federation of Labor.

I am happy to report to the Members of the House that the Democratic voters of Philadelphia and Pennsylvania, seeking to honor all veterans of World War II, have nominated Sergeant Schmid as the party's candidate for the office of State Secretary of Internal Affairs, at the general election to be held November 5, 1946. Sergeant Schmid is a symbol of the heroism and sacrifice of millions of young Americans who served their country in the armed forces in World War II. By nominating Sergeant Schmid, and other veterans such as Col. John S. Rice, Democratic candidate for Governor, the Democratic Party of Pennsylvania has served notice that it intends to grant recognition to veterans both in its platforms and among those whom it supports for public office. I am sure that the selection of Sergeant Schmid as the Democratic candidate for the office of State Secretary of Internal Affairs will meet with the approval of the voters.

William Olin Burgin

MEMORIAL ADDRESS
OF
HON. PETE JARMAN
OF ALABAMA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Tuesday, May 28, 1946

On the life, character, and public service of Hon. WILLIAM OLIN BURGIN, late a Representative from the State of North Carolina

Mr. JARMAN. Mr. Speaker, I am confident that everyone who was at all well acquainted with him shares my deep regret of our great bereavement in the passing of our lovable colleague, the late distinguished gentleman from North Carolina, Mr. BURGIN, to whom I always referred as "BURG." He will be greatly missed in this body, particularly by the members of the Foreign Affairs Committee. I am confident he will be equally missed by the citizens of his district who, with us, suffered a great loss by his passing.

We became members of the committee simultaneously and it was my pleasure for a long while to sit by him during committee meetings. A man of few words, he was just as fine, just as lovable, just as honorable, just as devoted to his friends as any man it has ever been my pleasure to know. I was especially fond of him, and regret exceedingly to realize that I shall not see him on the floor or in committee again.

To his devoted wife and to his constituents who loved him, I wish to express the deep, heartfelt sympathy of one who has long been his admirer and good friend, and who will always cherish his memory.

FEPC, Anti-Poll-Tax, Housing, 65-Cent-Minimum Wage, and Other Bills Recommended by President Truman Must Be Passed in Next Congress

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. ADOLPH J. SABATH
OF ILLINOIS
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Friday, August 2, 1946

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, though this Congress has passed many good laws, it failed to pass some of the most important measures recommended by President Truman in the interest of the American public.

What I regret most is the failure of the Congress to pass FEPC—the bill to set up a permanent Fair Employment Practice Commission and eliminate as much as possible the unfair discrimination of employers against some American citizens because of color, race, religion, or national derivation.

REPUBLICANS MUST ANSWER FOR DEATH OF FEPC

To me, enactment of FEPC is a sacred trust laid upon me by the late President Roosevelt, my friend and trusted leader, in his last hours still urging passage of FEPC; and I regret that I could not, though I used every parliamentary resource at my command, overcome the insistence of a majority of the membership of the Committee on Rules that the full membership of the committee be present at a meeting when a vote was taken on the FEPC bill.

Some Republican spokesmen have tried to make it appear that blame for the failure of FEPC to pass rests on the southern Democrats alone. Let no one be misled; it was possible up to the very last day of this session for them to sign the discharge petition which would have permitted an immediate vote, and they failed to sign in sufficient numbers to meet the required 218 signatures. There were times, too, when a quorum of the committee, including Republicans, were present that a vote could have been had, but in deference to absentees I could not force a vote.

The Republicans could have carried out the pledge of the Republican Party, but they chose not to do so and to line up instead with bitter southern foes of FEPC to let the bill die in committee.

REPUBLICANS ALSO KILLED 65-CENT MINIMUM WAGE BILL, HOUSING AND HEALTH, ST. LAWRENCE WATERWAY, AND ANTI-POLL-TAX BILLS

I was unable to report the 65-cent minimum wage bill, while the Republicans carried on open filibusters to kill the Wagner-Ellender-Taft General Housing Act, the Wagner-Murray-Dingell national health bill, and the St. Lawrence waterway bill in the legislative committees. In the House we passed the anti-poll-tax bill by an overwhelming majority. If the Republicans in the Senate had supported Senator MEAD and Senator BARKLEY and other Democratic leaders, the filibuster could have been broken and the anti-poll-tax bill would now be law, for the Democratic Party is pledged to abolish the poll tax.

TO DEMAND BILLS BE TAKEN UP AT ONCE BY NEW CONGRESS

As I have heretofore stated on the floor, it is my intention to demand, just as soon as the new Congress convenes, that we take up this unfinished business immediately. These are the bills I shall insist we begin work on at once, even before the appropriation bills:

First. The 65-cent minimum-wage bill.

Second. The FEPC bill (Permanent Fair Employment Practice Commission).

Third. The Federal anti-poll-tax bill.

Fourth. The housing bill.

Fifth. The health bill.

Sixth. The St. Lawrence waterways bill.

Seventh. A new and stronger Price Control Act is still needed.

Eighth. Amended seamen's bill of rights.

Ninth. A real investigation of the Ku Klux Klan and other cowardly Fascist organizations, trying to plunge us into another war and to rob Americans of the rights and freedoms for which we fought and their outrageous crimes of violence; to find out why the cowards who murdered defenseless Negro-Americans are not apprehended and punished; and to probe the ways in which qualified Negro citizens are robbed of the right to vote even after their poll taxes are paid.

With the defeat of Congressman SLAUGHTER and the probable elimination of another southern Member viciously opposed to FEPC and other progressive laws urged and recommended by the President, I look forward to a more progressive membership of the Committee on Rules, which will enable us to act as the House Rules intended, as a clearing-house for legislation, and not as a bottleneck and burying ground.

I believe and have repeatedly urged that the House should have an opportunity of voting on bills reported by legislative committees.

If the American people send to Congress this fall progressive representatives with the good of the country at heart who will back President Truman's legislative program not only with talk but with actual votes, we will pass these fair, just, humane, and desirable laws.

Accomplishments of Seventy-ninth Congress

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. JOHN W. McCORMACK
OF MASSACHUSETTS
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Friday, August 2, 1946

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, the Seventy-ninth Congress convened when the war was still being waged. Its first tasks therefore had to do with the expeditious completion of the war. Germany fell when the Congress had been in session a little over 4 months; Japan capitulated 3 months later.

The coming of peace brought with it tremendous problems of readjustment, all of which have not yet been solved. But the work of the Seventy-ninth Congress has, I believe, brought the Nation safely around many of the worst pitfalls which marked the path of reconversion.

I should like to review briefly some of the main legislative accomplishments.

INTERNATIONAL COOPERATION

In striking contrast to what happened after the First World War, this Congress supported the administration wholeheartedly in its effort to commit the United States to a policy of cooperation with other nations designed to ensure a firm and lasting peace.

To this end, the Congress ratified by an overwhelming majority the United Nations Charter and authorized the President to negotiate an agreement with the Security Council of the United Nations Organization "providing for the numbers and types of armed forces, their degree of readiness and general location, and the nature of facilities and assistance to be made available to the Security Council on its call for the purpose of maintaining international peace and security."

Authority was also granted for this Nation's full participation in the International Monetary Fund and World Bank agreed upon at the Bretton Woods Conference. Thus, by assuming a leading role in the stabilization of world currencies and the easing of economic pressures between nations, this country took another important step towards enduring peace and international economic well-being.

The first concrete measure by which the Bretton Woods agreement was implemented was the $3,750,000,000 loan to Great Britain. By authorizing this loan, the Congress not only enabled Britain, our best customer, to continue large-scale purchases from the United States, but it also took a step toward elimination by Britain of long-standing trade barriers which have worked to the disadvantage of this country.

Substantial amounts of funds were allocated to the United Nations Relief and Rehabilitation Administration so that that agency might alleviate the starvation and misery which stalk the war-torn nations and which constitute a serious threat to world order and stability.

The Administration's reciprocal trade program, designed to promote international economic cooperation and to open additional markets to American producers and exporters through reciprocal tariff bargaining, was extended.

Also extended was the lend-lease program which played so vital a part in shortening and winning the war, and thus saving American lives. After the end of the war, however, the lend-lease program was discontinued by Executive order of the President.

Authority was also granted for a broad program of cultural relations with other countries, including the exchange of educational and scientific information.

By its acceptance of compulsory adherence to the decisions of the World Court in international disputes involving this country, Congress gave unmistakable evidence of the sincerity of its pledge to cooperate with other nations in keeping the peace.

Finally, through its grant of independence to the Philippine Nation on July 4th, this country set a shining example of behavior toward colonial peoples which cannot fail to have a salutary effect on relations between other great nations and their colonies.

NATIONAL DEFENSE

While a firm foundation for world peace was being laid, the military defenses of this country were not neglected.

The Seventy-ninth Congress, second session, appropriated a total of $7,263,542,400 for military and $4,119,659,300 for naval purposes.

The Selective Service Act was extended until March 31, 1947, with young men under 19 years of age exempted from conscription under the new law.

In addition, the President was authorized to acquire and build up stock piles of strategic materials which might be needed in the event of a future war. Our unfortunate experience with regard to rubber and other scarce, but necessary, materials during the early part of the war taught us how important it is to exercise foresight in this respect.

The control of the development and use of atomic energy was transferred from the military to a civilian commission. This transfer was in line with traditional American policy which holds that in time of peace control of matters affecting the whole public must be in civilian hands. Furthermore, experience has shown that the development of atomic science, both for military and civilian purposes, can proceed more rapidly and fruitfully under civilian management than under Army rule. On the other hand, the interests of the military forces were safeguarded by the establishment of a Division of Military Application under the civilian control commission. This arrangement meets with the complete satisfaction and the wishes of the Secretary of War, the Secretary of the Navy, and the high command of the armed forces.

VETERANS

The Nation can never fully compensate its war veterans for the unusual sacrifices they made. But it is the Nation's solemn duty to recompense the veteran to the fullest extent of its ability.

The GI bill of rights, enacted during the Seventy-eighth Congress, gave the veterans a series of benefits more comprehensive and more liberal than those accorded to veterans of any other nation in the world.

The Seventy-ninth Congress, however, broadened and liberalized these benefits still further, especially with regard to educational benefits. On July 1, 1946, nearly a million veterans were receiving college or other advanced training at Government expense.

The existing legislation governing the retention and conversion by veterans of their GI insurance policies was also broadened and liberalized, so as to make it as easy as possible for veterans to continue to enjoy this very economical form of protection.

A Bureau of Medical Services was established in the Veterans' Administration under a chief medical officer who serves directly under the Administrator. This reorganization has resulted in a vast improvement of the medical services provided to veterans.

Legislation was also enacted providing for Government purchase of automobiles for the use of legless veterans.

The sum of $600,000,000 was appropriated for an emergency housing program designed particularly to meet the needs of returned service personnel and their families.

The Congress also authorized the payment of approximately $2,700,000,000 in Government bonds and cash to ex-service men to compensate them for terminal leave or unused furlough time. Enlisted men were thus given the same terminal-leave benefits to which officers are entitled.

Finally, veterans were given credit on their social-security accounts for the time they spent in the service.

FISCAL POLICY

The Seventy-ninth Congress appropriated a total of about $95,000,000,000 for the Federal establishment. Of this amount, however, about $64,000,000,000 was retracted when the war ended.

The national debt limit was reduced after the end of the war from $300,000,000,000 to $275,000,000,000.

Taxes were reduced by $5,633,000,000. The reduction in individual income taxes was $2,644,000,000. The excess profits tax was repealed, resulting in a saving to industry of $2,555,000,000. Repeal of the excess-profits tax gave industry both an opportunity and an incentive to use a greater share of its funds to speedy reconversion for peacetime production. General corporation taxes were reduced by $294,000,000. Repeal of the automobile and boat use tax resulted in savings to motorists and boat users of $140,000,000.

The life of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation was extended to January 1947.

In the interest of increased Government efficiency, as well as in simple justice to the large body of public servants in the Federal employ, Government salaries were increased.

A graduated pay-scale increase, with low-paid employees, receiving the highest rates of increase, was approved in June 1945. An additional increase of 14 percent was approved in May 1946.

As a result of these increases, the Government may be expected to attract the highest type of personnel. The working force in the Federal agencies will also tend to be more stable than it has been. In the past, Government has not been able to compete with private industry for the services of the best-qualified workers. The cost of the increases will be offset in large measure by increased efficiency and lower turn-over in the working force.

RECONVERSION AND SOCIAL LEGISLATION

In order that the country might not, through lack of economic planning, be plunged from time to time into the depressions that have cost it so dearly in the past, a policy of maximum employment was enunciated, and a three-member economic council was authorized. It will be the duty of this council to keep its finger on the economic pulse of the Nation and recommend to the President such fiscal and economic policies as will contribute to maximum employment and continuing economic prosperity.

The greatest economic danger confronting the Nation in the postwar period has been inflation. With purchasing power at an all-time high, and most types of goods in short supply as a result of the concentration on war production, heroic measures were needed to prevent runaway inflation.

Although prices have risen, the rise has not been so great as it was after the First World War. There has been no runaway inflation, and if prices can be held within reasonable limits for a little while longer, a boom-and-bust cycle such as the country experienced in the early 1920's will be avoided.

With these considerations in mind, the Congress extended the Office of Price Administration until January 1947. At the same time it was realized that some price adjustments were justified, and provision was made for the granting of warranted increases. The OPA extension bill also provided for the decontrol of various products in an orderly manner as production catches up with demand. In view of the acute housing shortage, and the probability that it will continue for some time, rigid control of rents was retained.

The Government's power to allocate and ration scarce products such as sugar and building materials was also extended.

The administration of the disposition of Government surplus property was centralized under one man, a much more efficient arrangement than the former three-man board.

A formula was set up for the sale of the large amount of Government shipping acquired during the war.

A program of Federal aid was established to encourage and assist States and communities in the development of a Nation-wide system of airports. This program will give great impetus to air travel in the future throughout the country.

Another Federal aid program was authorized to assist in the construction of hospitals and health centers, especially in areas where medical facilities are grossly inadequate. This program will help to bring modern, scientific medical care to many sections of the country where not only hospitals, but doctors, are lacking. With the provision of hospitals, doctors will once again find rural practice attractive.

A National Mental Health Institute was established as a part of the United States Public Health Service, and grants to States were authorized to aid them in the development of mental hygiene clinics. The need for more research on the problem of mental disease and abnormalities has long been apparent, and the new institute will go far toward meeting this need. The new clinics throughout the country will serve not only to prevent and cure much mental illness, but will provide training facilities for needed psychiatrists.

The federally aided school-lunch program was made permanent. Health and educational authorities have testified to the great good this program has wrought in recent years. Its establishment on a permanent basis will have a great and beneficial effect upon the health and vitality of the Nation's children.

GOVERNMENT ORGANIZATION

The Seventy-ninth Congress gave the President power to reorganize the Federal agencies, a step that has long been needed in the interest of more efficient Government operation.

Of the three reorganization proposals submitted by the President, the Congress accepted two. One provided for the centralization of all health and welfare activities in the Federal Security Agency as a preliminary step toward making the agency a department with a Cabinet officer as its head. The other proposal that was accepted involved the transfer of more than a score of functions among various agencies in such a way that better coordination of activity and greater efficiency of operation will be achieved.

The Congress also reorganized itself, doing away with much cumbersome and outmoded procedure. Outstanding among the changes was a drastic reduction in the number of committees. Standing committees in the Senate were reduced from 33 to 15; in the House, from 48 to 19.

Provision was also made for the return of the United States Employment Service functions to the States in November 1946.

These are, in brief outline, the major accomplishments of the Seventy-ninth Congress. Though there are several other measures which I and other supporters of the administration, as well as the President himself, would have liked to see enacted, the record is one of substantial achievement.

I believe that we can face the immediate future and its problems with greater assurance because of what this Congress has done. I know that the people will judge us not only on the basis of what we have done, but also on the basis of what we have not done. And from the people's verdict will come the opportunity to continue in the next Congress the excellent start already made on the road to true peace and prosperity.

America is too great to be stopped. This Nation will march on to the creation of a post-war world that her people have fought for and prayed for, a world of peace and plenty and a fair division of the fruits of labor. The record of the Seventy-ninth Congress shows that there are men in America, leaders in Government, who have this ideal in their hearts and are resolved to fight through to its realization. These men, and more men like them, will be in the Eightieth Congress. And America, looking ahead with them, will march on.

Relief Funds for Italy

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. MICHAEL J. BRADLEY
OF PENNSYLVANIA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Friday, August 2, 1946

Mr. BRADLEY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, in conformity with unanimous consent which I have received, I am placing in the RECORD an exchange of correspondence between my colleague from Philadelphia, the Honorable JOHN EDWARD SHERIDAN, and myself:

CONGRESS OF THE UNITED STATES,
HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, D. C., July 26, 1946.

HON. JOHN EDWARD SHERIDAN,
House of Representatives,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR COLLEAGUE: Because I am aware of the interest you have expressed on many occasions with regard to present conditions in Italy, where there is great suffering and distress, I am taking the liberty of writing to you with reference to the relief funds which are being raised here in America for the benefit of the Italian people, who are in such sore need of help and assistance.

The economy of Italy has been more than seriously dislocated and there is a critical shortage of essential articles which are necessary for the sustaining of life. I had an opportunity to see conditions at first-hand when I was in Italy last year and I was appalled at the misery which existed. When our country was forced into the war, the Italian people immediately demonstrated their reluctance to fight America, where so many people of their own blood had found happiness. Thousands of American boys of Italian blood were among those who gave their lives in North Africa and in the campaign in Italy, and the action of the Italian people in revolting against Fascism and Nazi dictators was in no small measure due to the traditional friendliness they felt for America. Anything we can do here in America to help them is more than justified by the sacrifices which were made by those Americans of Italian blood who served so ably and so heroically in our armed forces. If you could see the things which I saw in Italy last year, I know you would agree with me that it is essential for us to extend any aid which we can to the Italian people, who are actually on the verge of starvation. Might I therefore appeal to you to make a contribution to the committee which is in charge of raising funds for the relief work in Italy? I know there are many demands made upon you but I am sure this is one which well merits consideration.

With warmest regards, I am,
Sincerely yours,
MICHAEL J. BRADLEY.

CONGRESS OF THE UNITED STATES,
HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, D. C., July 30, 1946.

HON. MICHAEL J. BRADLEY,
House of Representatives,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR COLLEAGUE: I am very glad that you directed my attention to the relief funds being raised in America for the people of Italy. I, too, saw this suffering when I was in Europe last year and I am more than glad to send you a contribution and will be grateful to you if you will direct it through the proper channels.

Sincerely yours,
JOHN EDWARD SHERIDAN.

Arguments Against Gila Project Bill, H. R. 5434, Cannot Stand Critical Analysis

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. JOHN R. MURDOCK
OF ARIZONA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Tuesday, July 30, 1946

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Speaker, long before the likelihood of adjournment of the Seventy-ninth Congress I introduced H. R. 5434, a bill to reauthorize the Gila project in Yuma County, Ariz., with a view of changing the boundary lines of that 10-year-old project in order to provide for the completion of it at less expense in time, money, and water, and with a greater total benefit than the project would yield under the original plan. The desirability of the changes seemed so apparent to me and to the other sponsors that I thought the bill could be reported out by the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation without delay, and possibly be put on Consent Calendar and passed, so that the House might complete action on it during the Seventy-ninth Congress.

Imagine my surprise when I found great opposition to this bill by a number of effective witnesses from southern California who raised many objections to the legislation, thus prolonging the hearings from the early part of June to the very close of the session in August. These hearings required weeks and weeks, even though the committee met morning, afternoon, and evening, and on the 4th of July. The printed hearings will cover about 700 pages, the greater part of which is adverse testimony against the bill. What are the criticisms and objections levied against this bill, H. R. 5434, and how valid are such objections?

LOGIC NOT ENTIRELY LOGICAL

It would not be altogether facetious to say that the objections heard from these opposing witnesses are quite similar in logic to the three-part, water-tight defense put up by Farmer Jones when sued by Farmer Smith on returning a rented horse in damaged condition.

According to the story, Farmer Jones borrowed or rented a horse from Farmer Smith and was sued for damages by Farmer Smith because the horse was said to be spavined on being returned to the owner. Jones prepared his defense under three heads, a, b, and c, as follows:

(a) In the first place, the horse was spavined when I got him.

(b) In the second place he was not spavined when I returned him, and

(c) I did not have the horse in the first place.

Following a similar water-tight logic, the opposition to the Gila project bill, H. R. 5434, argued:

(a) That H. R. 5434 would require more water for this project than Arizona's quota from the Colorado River.

(b) That Arizona does not have any quota of water, to speak of, in the Colorado River, and

(c) That there is not much water worth mentioning in the Colorado River not otherwise preempted.

WHAT ARE THE FACTS?

In all seriousness, the testimony against H. R. 5434 minimizing the total supply of water in the Colorado River breaks down before the physical fact that official measurement records over 50 years show that the virgin flow of the river at Lees Ferry averages about 17,000,000 acre-feet of water annually passing that point, and the same records over the same half-century show that the virgin flow of the river across the international boundary line into Mexico averaged a somewhat larger amount annually than the 17,000,000 acre-feet at Lees Ferry. Of course, there are variations in the river flow from season to season, but that is or can be equated and ironed out by proper engineering, which is a part of the total program for the basin. For ages past, the Colorado River watershed has furnished over the long run and on an average that volume of water at Lees Ferry and at the international border. Practically the same amount of water as always is today in the river for use.

When it is considered that the Santa Fe compact intended for at least 8,500,000 acre-feet of water to be used annually in the lower basin (if present in the river—and it is present and has been for a million years) and laid the basis for the legal authority for such, it does not seem reasonable that anyone could consistently contend that out of that 8,500,000 acre-feet there are not 2,800,000 acre-feet for use in the State of Arizona from the main stem of the river. Yet that is exactly what the opponents contend, in spite of the fact that Arizona comprises more than three-quarters of the area of the lower basin of the Colorado River and has more irrigable land in the lower basin than the other States combined. Furthermore, it seems even less reasonable for the opponents to contend that whatever Arizona's proper quota out of the main stem of the river may be, that there is not safely 600,000 acre-feet of water out of 8,500,000 acre-feet allowed the lower basin which may be used on the Gila project, as the bill, H. R. 5434, would require in "consumptive use" on the completed project.

To examine these criticisms and objections individually, I may say that to begin with the critics contended that this bill, H. R. 5434, favors the development of a project contrary to the advice of the Bureau of Reclamation, and yet the Department of Interior gave a favorable report on the bill. In fact, the bill itself is virtually a departmental measure, and several representatives of the Bureau of Reclamation appeared as witnesses at the hearings in support of the legislation. How can one explain this apparent inconsistency? Well, the opposition refers to a recent report by the Bureau of Reclamation in which the Bureau recommends certain procedure as an aid in the development of the whole Colorado River Basin and these critics contend that this proposal runs counter to the Bureau's recommendations in that report. Their contention is in this case fallacious in itself, not only because the Bureau is supporting this bill, but because H. R. 5434 does not inaugurate a new project, such as listed in the Bureau's latest report on the Colorado Basin. Instead, it is an improvement of a project initiated more than 10 years ago. Therefore, the criticism is more seeming than real, as thus applied to H. R. 5434.

HOW ABOUT THE WATER TREATY?

The opposing witnesses complain that the recent water treaty with Mexico has been forced upon them against their more strenuous opposition and it was done, as they claim, with the support of short-sighted Arizona officials. This seems to imply that in their view it would be only justice to Arizona now to deprive her of the water for the Gila project to satisfy the Mexican Treaty requirements which we are under that treaty bound to meet. Such argument is worse than fallacious in that it is not only of questionable soundness but is vindicative. In the first place, the Mexican Water Treaty is not a new thing of such recent origin as the last 3 or 4 years. This treaty brings little that is new into the complicated problem of the lower Colorado River development. There are really only two features of the Mexican Water Treaty that were not contemplated 10, 20, or 25 years ago. One is that under it the quantity of water provided for Mexico is somewhat more than was thought 25 years ago to be Mexico's share. The other is the use of the All-American canal to carry out the treaty's stipulations.

It is true the governmental use of the All-American canal as called for and limited by the Mexican Water Treaty is a new feature not entirely to the liking of the Imperial Valley irrigation district. This canal has been built at great expense and is of capacity sufficient to carry a large share of the river, and yet the treaty virtually commandeers for international purposes a large portion of that capacity in the beginning section of the canal in order to deliver 500,000 acre-feet annually to Mexico. The 500,000 acre-feet will be carried until the year 1980, after which it will carry to Mexico only 350,000 acre-feet. That amount of water going to Mexico through the All-American canal could produce power at Pilot Knob, the revenue from which could go toward paying the cost of the All-American canal. Naturally the owners favor producing power at that point. What the Government should do is to pay to itself a proper proportion of the cost of the All-American canal on that link from the Imperial Dam to Pilot Knob in lieu of the revenue which the Imperial irrigation district could make from the sale of that power it could produce there. The representative of the Imperial irrigation district would like to use several milion acre-feet of water annually which they call surplus to produce power at Pilot Knob.

I, for one, and I am not alone in this, feel that the Imperial irrigation district must be carefully controlled in regard to the amount of power it is allowed to produce and be paid for at Pilot Knob, for we do not want any more water passing Pilot Knob to Mexico, except what the treaty requires, and certainly not any water which could be used to irrigate any lands in the United States. Of course, the Imperial Irrigation Co. must pay for at least their share of the All-American canal and they ought to be able to do so by producing power for sale, not mainly at Pilot Knob, but at a half-dozen other drops in the All-American canal between Pilot Knob and the lower end of the canal before the water is used for irrigation in California.

Any punitive action toward Arizona because her public officials favored the water treaty with Mexico is illogical, or worse, when applied to H. R. 5434, for the very development of such lands covered by H. R. 5434—as well as other Colorado Basin projects—makes imperatively necessary that we have a water treaty with Mexico limiting the amount of water which she may put to beneficial use and for which she may establish a legal claim. Again, the carrying out of H. R.

5434 would help to fulfill the water requirement of the Mexican Water Treaty by furnishing return flow from the Gila project instead of furnishing Mexico the entire treaty stipulation and burden from stored water. Thus, instead of furnishing Mexico 1,500,000 acre feet of precious water out of storage to meet the treaty water burden, we could meet the treaty requirement under H. R. 5434 by using on American soil at least half that amount of water called for in the treaty before it goes to Mexico as return flow. By so doing, we would have a treaty with Mexico which protects all the irrigation projects in the Colorado Basin and at the same time we would pay for it in water which has previously been used to benefit land in our own country.

WATER TO SERVE IF PROPERLY USED

The contention of the opposing witnesses that there is not enough water in the Colorado River to meet existing legal requirements, and therefore not enough to divert any water into Arizona, as called for under H. R. 5434, is somewhat plausible, but really fallacious. It is true that the last few years have been drought years, and it is true that there has been less water on an average in the Colorado River during the last 16 years than during any other 16 years of recordings, but that does not prove that there is not enough water to meet the requirement of H. R. 5434. If it proves anything, it proves that more storage will be required on the river before the upper basin States can safely put to beneficial use the 7,500,000 acre-feet annually which the Santa Fe compact apportions to the upper basin. Let it be remembered that article III (a) of the Santa Fe compact also apportions 7,500,000 acre-feet of water annually to the lower basin to be delivered at Lees Ferry, just as it apportions that amount to the upper basin. The same compact amplifies the apportionment to the lower basin in that part of the river by requiring the upper basin to let down to the low basin 75,000,000 acre-feet of water in any 10-year period of years consecutively cumbered. This later provision of the compact is just as binding as the earlier provision of the compact. Both are legally binding and legally furnish the water Arizona is asking for.

Therefore, anyone who contends that there just legally is not water enough in the lower Colorado River to meet all legal requirements must show that there have been 10 year periods where less than 75,000,000 acre-feet of water passed Lees Ferry. That cannot be shown, for the records show that the 10 years of lowest flow were from 1931 to 1940, inclusive, and at that time the actual flow past Lees Ferry was 101,708,000, and the virgin flow for the same period totaled 122,136,000. Therefore, it is plainly evident on the basis of the Santa Fe compact and the Boulder Canyon Project Act and the Mexican Water Treaty, that during the period of lowest flow there was more than enough water flowing past Lees Ferry to meet every legal requirement and to furnish Arizona, not only enough water for the Gila project, but for another project in central Arizona as well, both together calling for less than 2,000,000 acre-feet annually in consumptive use.

Summary of Important Legislation, Seventy-ninth Congress, 1945–46

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. ALBEN W. BARKLEY
OF KENTUCKY

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES

Friday, August 2 (legislative day of Monday, July 29), 1946

Mr. BARKLEY. It is customary in the closing days of a Congress to insert in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD a brief summary of important legislation enacted during that Congress. I therefore request that such a summary for the Seventy-ninth Congress, prepared under the direction of the Secretary of the Senate by the Senate Library, be inserted, as a part of my remarks.

There being no objection, the matters were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

SUMMARY OF IMPORTANT LEGISLATION, SEVENTY-NINTH CONGRESS, 1945–46

AGRICULTURE

Commodity Credit Corporation Act of 1945 (Public Law 30, 79th Cong., Approved April 12, 1945): Ample production of food for war was insured in extension of the work of this agency until 1947 and increasing its funds, including funds for subsidy payments, from $3,000,000,000 to $4,750,000,000.

Agricultural Cooperative Extension Act of 1945 (Public Law 76, 79th Cong., approved June 6, 1945): To further develop county extension work in agriculture and farm home economics, improvement in farmers' standard of living and development of farm and home planning, an authorization of increased appropriations was provided over a 3-year period, 1946—$4,500,000, 1947—$8,500,000, 1948—$12,500,000, and provision made for continuation of this project at the 1948 appropriation level.

Farm Credit Act of 1945 (Public Law 98, 79th Cong., approved June 30, 1945): Farm credit laws were streamlined in amending the Federal Farm Loan Act, the Emergency Farm Mortgage Act, and the Servicemen's Readjustment Act of 1944, to make changes in providing a more efficient farm mortgage system for farmers and to simplify and improve the entire farm credit system. The Federal Farm Mortgage Corporation was authorized to repay $50,000,000 to the Treasury, and the authority of the Land Bank Commissioners was extended for 1 year.

Meat and Flour Subsidy Act of 1946 (Public Law 328, 79th Cong., approved Mar. 21, 1946): Meat subsidies were increased by an additional $125,000,000 and flour subsidies by $25,000,000 in order to encourage production and marketing of these vital food products.

Farm Mortgage Loan Act of 1946 (Public Law 505, 79th Cong., approved July 12, 1946): In supplementing provisions of the Farm Credit Act of 1945, the authority of the Land Bank Commissioners was extended to July 1, 1947, and the Farm Credit Administration was authorized to make a thorough study and report to Congress of means whereby loans to farmers might be more effectively made and efficiently administered under the Federal Land Bank system.

EMPLOYMENT AND LABOR

Full Employment Act of 1946 (Public Law 304, 79th Cong., approved Feb. 20, 1946): Stated the policy that the Federal Government should foster and promote free competitive enterprise and the general welfare by promoting maximum employment, production and purchasing power in cooperation with State and local governments. The President was required to submit annual reports to Congress on economic conditions throughout the country. An Economic Council of three members was established to advise the President and a Joint Congressional Committee on the Economic Report, composed of three members of each House, was set up to study the President's report and submit recommendations to Congress.

Communications Act of 1946 (Petrillo bill) (Public Law 344, 79th Cong., approved April 16, 1946): Prevented certain coercive practices in radio broadcasting by making it unlawful to use force or threats, to employ more persons than are actually required, to stop the broadcasting of noncommercial, educational, or cultural programs for which money is neither given nor received, to limit production or distribution of transcriptions.

Postal Service Pay Act of 1946 (Public Law 386, 79th Cong., approved May 21, 1946): Increased annual compensation of all postal employees by $400, except hourly or part-time employees who received 20 cents per hour additional and fourth-class postmasters who received 20 percent additional of their basic annual rate of compensation.

Federal Employees Pay Act of 1946 (Public Law 390, 79th Cong., approved May 24, 1946): Provided for an increase in basic salary of all Government employees of $250 per year or 14 percent, whichever is greater. Increases which would bring salaries over $10,000 per year not permitted.

Anti-Racketeering Act of 1946 (Public Law 486, 79th Cong., approved July 3, 1946): Prohibits interference with commodities moving in interstate commerce by robbery or extortion, or threat of physical violence.

District of Columbia Teachers Pay Increase Act of 1946 (Public Law 568, 79th Cong., approved July 31, 1946): Pay of teachers in the District of Columbia was raised $450 per annum by this act.

Railroad Retirement Act amendment of 1946 (Public Law 572, 79th Cong., approved July 31, 1946): Raised the aggregate tax for retirement fund from 7 percent gradually to 12½ percent by 1952, equally divided between carrier pay rolls and employee's pay; increased benefits from $20 to $25 a week and extended period from 20 to 26 weeks; liberalized disability retirement provisions; provided survivors' annuities to widows on reaching 65 which would be 25 percent higher than those under social security.

GOVERNMENT ADMINISTRATION, RECOVERSION, AND FINANCE

Federal Lending Agencies Act of 1945 (Public Law 4, 79th Cong., approved February 24, 1945): Reestablished the Federal Loan Agency as an independent agency of Government, bringing the exercise of its broad powers more directly under the supervision of Congress.

Insurance Company Act of 1945 (Public Law 15, 79th Cong., approved March 9, 1945): Provided that the business of insurance shall remain under control of the States. No act of Congress except the Sherman Antitrust Act and the Clayton Act shall be construed to invalidate, impair, or supersede any State law regulating or taxing insurance. A moratorium until January 1, 1948, from provisions of the Sherman and Clayton Acts is provided to enable insurance companies to comply with their provisions in cases in which practices do not now conform.

Surplus Property Act of 1945 (Public Law 181, 79th Cong., approved September 18, 1945): Amended the Surplus Property Act of 1944 to provide for a single administrator, instead of a board of three, to coordinate and bring responsibility for the administration of this act under a single authority.

Revenue Act of 1945 (Public Law 214, 79th Cong., approved November 8, 1945): To provide a measure of tax relief for low income brackets the $500 normal tax exemption for each income recipient was abolished and a $500 exemption was allowed for each taxpayer, his spouse, and each dependent. Approximately 12,000,000 low-income taxpayers were thus freed of tax payments. Service pay of enlisted men was exempted and a 3-year extension was provided for deferred taxes of members of the armed forces. Corporate taxes were reduced and the carry-back provisions were extended for 1 year. Surtax rates in each bracket were reduced 3 percent.

Government Corporation Control Act of 1945 (Public Law 248, 79th Cong., approved December 6, 1945): Annual scrutiny and current financial control of Government corporations by Congress was provided by including the annual budget of all corporations in the annual Presidential budget and audit and report to Congress by the Comptroller General on corporation compliance with congressional directives and restrictions. Creation of Government corporations was prohibited except by act of Congress. State incorporated Government corporations were ordered liquidated on or before June 30, 1948, subject to reincorporation by acts of Congress.

Government Reorganization Act of June 1945 (Public Law 263, 79th Cong., approved December 20, 1945): The President is empowered in the interest of economy and better administration to reorganize executive agencies and departments, with the exception of the Interstate Commerce Commission, Federal Trade Commission, Securities and Exchange Commission, National Mediation Board, National Railroad Adjustment Board, and the Railroad Retirement Board. The civil functions of the Army Corps of Engineers was removed from reorganization provisions, as were the General Accounting Office and Office of the Comptroller General. Provision was made to deal separately from any other agencies, in reorganization of the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation, Federal Communications Commission, Tariff Commission, and Veterans' Administration. Plans for reorganizations shall go into effect 60 days after transmission of the plans to Congress unless Congress within that period vetoes such plans.

First Appropriation Rescission Act of 1946 (first supplemental) (Public Law 301, 79th Cong., approved February 18, 1946): Reduced appropriations and contract authorizations for the fiscal year 1946 by $51,786,811.

Public Contracts Act of 1946 (Kick-Back Act) (Public Law 319, 79th Cong., approved March 8, 1946): Provided for eliminating practice of subcontractors of paying fees or kick-backs, granting gifts or gratuities, to employees of cost-plus-a-fixed fee or cost-reimbursable prime contractors. Extensive investigation by congressional committees had revealed that gratuities or gifts in the form of war bonds, money, and entertainment had been given in some instances for the purpose of inducing award of future orders.

Merchant Marine Ship Sales Act of 1946 (Public Law 321, 79th Cong., approved March 8, 1946): Aided in the establishment of an efficient and adequate postwar merchant marine and its maintenance in a vigorous condition by means of orderly disposition of the war-built, Government-owned merchant fleet. Methods and means of disposition of such vessels to private individuals, associations, or corporations is outlined. Provisions for charter of vessels under certain conditions is also included in this act.

Second Appropriation Rescission Act of 1946 (second supplemental) (Public Law 391, 79th Cong., approved May 27, 1946): Provided for nullifying $6,286,000,000 of previously authorized war appropriations.

Administrative Procedure Act of 1946 (Public Law 404, 79th Cong., approved June 11, 1946): Provided for more general dissemination of information with respect to organization and procedure in departments and agencies of Government. Rules and regulations are to be published currently in the Federal Register and made available to the public. Public hearings and decisions are provided in cases relating to agency management or personnel or to public property, loans, grants, benefits, or contracts and interested parties shall be given opportunity to testify either written or orally; and a simplified system of judicial review is outlined to improve the administration of justice under the act.

Federal Judges Pay Increase Act of 1946 (Public Law 567, 79th Cong., approved July 31, 1946): Raised the salaries of the Federal judges by $5,000 per annum, including Chief Justice and Associate Justices of the Supreme Court.

Congress Organization Act of 1946 (Public Law 601, 79th Cong., approved August 2, 1946: In the interest of modernizing and rendering more flexible the system by which Congress operates, Senate Committee are reduced from 33 to 15, and House Committee from 48 to 19. At the beginning of each year the appropriating and taxing committees of each House shall concur and draw up a Federal budget specifying the amount to be spent. Lobbyists are required to register and make financial statements. Members of Congress are brought under the Federal retirement system and their salaries increased from $10,000 to $12,500 per annum with a $2,500 expense allowance.

INTERNATIONAL COOPERATION AND ORGANIZATION

Reciprocal Trade Agreement Act of 1945 (Public Law 130, 79th Cong., approved July 5, 1945): The authority to negotiate reciprocal trade agreements was continued to June 12, 1948, providing that the President could modify tariff duties up to 50 percent of the rate existing January 1, 1945. In the interest of national defense the War and Navy Departments were included in this Act as sources of information in negotiating agreements.

INTERNATIONAL MONETARY FUND AND INTERNATIONAL BANK ACT OF 1945

Bretton Woods Agreement Act (Public Law 17, 79th Cong., approved July 31, 1945): In carrying out the terms of the Bretton Woods agreement the President was authorized to accept membership for the United States in the International Monetary Fund and in the International Bank for reconstruction and development of the war-exhausted economy of the world. No appropriations were required as the Secretary of the Treasury was authorized to use $1,800,000,000 of the Stabilization Fund provided in the Gold Reserve Act of 1934, as amended, to pay part of the share of the United States participation. In order to further decrease the actual cost to the United States of participation, the Secretary of the Treasury was authorized to deposit proceeds of securities hereafter issued under the Second Liberty Loan Act up to $4,125,000,000, which together with the $1,800,000,000 of the Stabilization Fund, would make up the United States' share of $5,925,000,000 in the two international agencies, $2,750,000,000 in the Monetary Fund and $3,175,000,000 in the International Bank.

Export-Import Bank Act of 1945 (Public Law 173, 79th Cong., approved July 31, 1945): To supplement war reconstruction of friendly nations the lending authority of the Export-Import Bank was increased and restrictions lifted prohibiting loans to foreign nations. Provision was included requiring that semiannual reports be made to Congress on loans to enable the Congress to more effectively oversee the policies of the bank in international finance.

United Nations Food and Agricultural Organization (Public Law 174, 79th Cong., approved July 31, 1945): Provided for participation of the United States, under the Secretary of State, to procure more efficient production and distribution of food and agricultural products, and to better conditions of rural populations. Appropriations of $1,250,000 annually for cost of participation was authorized.

United Nations Relief and Rehabilitation Administration (Public Law 259, 79th Cong., approved Dec. 14, 1945): To work with the other United Nations in carrying out their declaration that aid and relief should be provided to civilian populations liberated from the enemy, $550,000,000 was appropriated for the fiscal year 1947.

United Nations Relief and Rehabilitation Act amendments (Public Law 262, 79th Cong., approved Dec. 18, 1945): In view of increasingly grave food and living conditions in the liberated countries, the appropriation for UNRRA was increased by 50 percent, to $2,700,000, and authority extended from June 30, 1946 to June 30, 1947.

United Nations Charter (Executive F, 79th Cong., ratified July 28, 1945): The Charter written by the United Nations Conference on International Organization and signed at San Francisco by the members of the Conference on June 26, 1945, provided for setting up a flexible international organization to maintain peace under the guidance of the United Nations.

United Nations Participation Act of 1945 (Public Law 264, 79th Cong., approved Dec. 20, 1945): To carry out provisions of the United Nations Charter, the President was authorized to appoint representatives to the United Nations organization and to its agencies. The President was further authorized to negotiate with the Security Council of the United Nations with respect to the number and type of armed forces to be made available to the organization by the United States, and provided that any agreement pursuant thereto should be subject to ratification by Congress.

Export-Import Bank amendment of 1945 (Public Law 282, 79th Cong., approved Dec. 28, 1945): In order to aid in rehabilitation of the Philippine Islands the Export-Import Bank was authorized to extend operations to the Philippines.

Philippines Rehabilitation Act of 1946 (Public Law 370, 79th Cong., approved Apr. 30, 1946): Provides for setting up the Philippine War Damage Commission to help that nation to rapidly regain a sound foundation from which to build political independence and stability. The Commission is authorized to make compensation for destruction of or damage to property from December 7, 1941, to October 1, 1945, to individual citizens, religious bodies, associations, trusts, or corporations.

NATIONAL DEFENSE

Naval Reserve Officers Training Corps Act of 1945 (Public Law 1, 79th Cong., approved Feb. 13, 1945): Authorized a permanent increase in the number of students in the Naval Reserve Officers Training Corps from 7,200 to 14,000, and a temporary increase to 24,000 until 1 year after cessation of hostilities.

Marine Corps General (Public Law 19, 79th Cong., approved Mar. 21, 1945): Established the rank and grade of general on the active list of the Regular Marine Corps in view of the size and prestige of the corps and the great service it had rendered in the war.

Smaller War Plants Corporation Act of 1945 (Public Law 42, 79th Cong., approved Apr. 27, 1945): This act which mobilized and coordinated the productive facilities of small business in the interests of successful prosecution of the war, was extended to December 31, 1946, and the management of the Corporation vested in a board of five directors appointed by the President and approved by the Senate.

Latin-American Cadets to West Point (Public Law 447, 79th Cong., approved June 26, 1946): For the furtherance of the "good neighbor policy and hemisphere solidarity," the Secretary of War was authorized to admit to West Point 20 cadets from Latin-American nations, each nation limited to 3 cadets in attendance at any one time.

British Loan Act of 1946 (Public Law 509, 79th Cong., approved July 15, 1946): Provided for loan of $3,750,000,000 to Great Britain for rehabilitation and reestablishment of her economy. Provision is made for repayment in 50 annual installments beginning December 31, 1951, with interest at 2 percent per annum computed on the outstanding balance as of January 1 each year. Interest waivers may be made if necessitated by poor exchange rates and gold balances or if the International Monetary Fund certifies that British income from home-produced exports, plus net income from invisible current transactions, is on an average over the preceding calendar years less than the average annual amount of imports during 1936–38, fixed at 866,000,000 pounds but allowing adjustment in this figure for changing price levels in current imports.

United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (Public Law 565, 79th Cong., approved July 30, 1946): Provided for United States participation in the United Nations Educational, Scientific, and Cultural Organization as proposed in the United Nations Charter signed at San Francisco. This organization will seek to build closer understanding between peoples through cooperation in educational, scientific, and cultural fields. The President is authorized to appoint five representatives of the United States. The Secretary of State is authorized to organize a National Commission on Educational, Scientific, and Cultural Corporation not to exceed 100 members who are citizens of the United States.

Selective Service Act of 1945 (Public Law 54, 79th Cong., approved May 9, 1945): Amended the act to provide that 18-year-olds should not be sent into combat until they had received 6 months of training for combat duty.

Armed Forces Voluntary Recruitment Act of 1945 (Public Law 190, 79th Cong., approved Oct. 6, 1945): Enlistments were again accepted in the Regular Army and Navy until June 30, 1947, of men over 18 years of age. Provision was included for retirement after 20 years and not more than 29 years' service travel allowance of 5 cents per mile for those discharged after June 1, 1945, who reenlist and have been granted furlough; mustering out payments to be paid those discharged for purpose of reenlisting in the Regular Army or Navy; enlistment allowances based on highest grade at time of discharge for men reenlisting; choice allowed by enlisted personnel of first, second, and third grades between monetary allowance in lieu of quarters for dependents or dependents to receive family allowance; free postage on first-class mail until December 31, 1947; extension of time limits to receive benefits under the GI bill of rights; overseas-duty pay to be continued.

Navy and Marine Corps Increase Act of 1946 (Public Law 347, 79th Cong., approved Apr. 18, 1946): Increased authorized enlisted personnel of the Regular Navy to 500,000, of the Regular Marine Corps to 20 percent of the Navy's enlisted strength. The number of commissioned officers of the line of the Regular Navy would be 7 percent of the authorized enlisted strength. Naval Reserve officers transfering to the Regular Navy were placed on an equal footing with all other officers with respect to promotion, assignment, and positions in the Navy, and attending the Naval War College or other schools.

Atomic bomb tests (Public Law 442, 79th Cong., approved June 25, 1946): Authorized the Secretary of the Navy, with approval of the President, to use naval vessels as targets for test and experimentation to determine the effect of atomic weapons on such vessels.

Philippine Military Assistance Act of 1946 (Public Law 454, 79th Cong., approved June 26, 1946): United States assistance was pledged for 5 years to the Philippine Republic in establishing and maintaining its national security and in participation in any defensive operations required to protect national security.

Selective Service Extension Act of 1946 (Public Law 473, 79th Cong., approved June 29, 1946): Extended the act for 9 months after July 1, 1946. Further drafting of fathers was prohibited and fathers then in service were to be released after August 1, 1946. The minimum age for training and service was advanced from 18 to 19. Limitations were placed on the number of men to be in active service in the various branches and the period of service was set at 18 months.

Armed Forces Pay Increase Act of 1946 (Public Law 474, 79th Cong., approved June 29, 1946): Pay increases were granted to service personnel ranging downward from 50 percent for buck privates and apprentice seamen to 10 percent in the highest grades. Persons on the emergency officers retired list would have their basis of pay computed on the new rates.

Strategic and Critical Materials Stock Piling Act of 1946 (Public Law 520, 79th Cong., approved July 23, 1946): Provided for acquisition, retention and servicing of strategic and critical materials and encouraged the conservation and development of sources of such materials within the United States. An orderly purchase program was established to acquire materials at reasonable costs and with minimum interference with the normal operations of producers and consumers. Purchases would be made in accordance with the "Buy American Act of 1933". A joint board composed of Secretaries of War, Navy and Interior Departments determine what materials come within the provisions of the act, and consult the advisory committees composed of members of the industries concerned with the materials to be stocked.

SOCIAL SECURITY

National Housing Act of 1945 (Public Law 27, 79th Cong., approved Mar. 31, 1945): Under this act the Federal Housing Administration was given authority to increase mortgage insurance by $100,000,000. The termination date of the authority was extended to July 1946.

Emergency Price Control Extension Act of 1945 (Public Law 108, 79th Cong., approved June 30, 1945): Provisions of the original Price Control Act of 1942, as amended, were extended to June 30, 1946. Maximum prices of products resulting from processing livestock should allow for reasonable profit. In order to bring more meat products to the consumer, quotas were lifted from certain types of slaughterhouses under strict provision, to be certified by the Secretary of Agriculture, that the establishment and meat are sanitary, and that such meat must move in legitimate trade channels. Provision was also made to allow such meat to move in interstate commerce.

National School Lunch Act of 1946 (Public Law 396, 79th Cong., approved June 4, 1946): Provided for further assistance to the States in a school-lunch program under direction of the Secretary of Agriculture. This act insures proper nutrition for children, many of whom are undernourished in low-income areas, and encourages domestic local consumption of nutritious agricultural commodities and other foods. For the years 1947–50 the Federal Government shall apportion equitably among the States funds appropriated for this program on a dollar-for-dollar basis; for the years 1951–55, apportionment shall be on a basis of $1.50 by States to $1 by the Federal Government, and for the fiscal years thereafter on a ratio of $3 from the State to one Federal dollar.

National Housing Extension Act of 1946 (Public Law 452, 79th Cong., approved June 26, 1946): Continued Federal assistance was extended under this act to local school agencies which were still overburdened with war-increased enrollments or financially restricted by lower tax receipts because of migration of war workers to other areas. Continued appropriations for those school agencies already receiving aid were authorized.

Emergency Price Control Extension Act of 1946 (Public Law 548, 79th Cong., approved July 25, 1946): The Office of Price Administration was extended until June 30, 1947. Reductions were imposed on OPA's powers by shifting authority to decontrol or recontrol prices to a Decontrol Board, composed of 3 members appointed by the President. Under the act price ceilings must be lifted from any item when supply equals demand and all nonessential items were to be decontrolled by December 31, 1946. OPA was given 30 days to raise price ceilings to conform to the provisions of the act. The Secretary of Agriculture shall certify agricultural commodities to the Price Administrator which are in short supply or normal supply and maximum prices shall not be imposed unless such commodities are in short supply.

Hospital Center Act (Public Law 648, 79th Cong., approved August 7, 1946): To promote the public health and strengthen the laws to control communicable disease, the act provides for establishment in the National Capital of a modern, adequate, and efficient hospital center. The facilities of three hospitals are to be utilized as the medical center, and the Washington Hospital Corporation is created to carry out the provisions of the act.

Social Security Act Amendment of 1946 (Public Law 719, 79th Cong., approved August 10, 1946): Postponed scheduled increase in pay roll tax rate from 1 percent to 2½ percent until the end of 1947; increased Federal aid to States for pensions for needy aged and more liberal aid to blind and dependent children; extended unemployment coverage to maritime workers; provided for survivor's insurance to families of war veterans who die within 3 years of discharge.

SOLDIERS' AND VETERANS' BENEFITS

Military Personnel Claims Act of 1945 (Public Law 67, 79th Cong., approved May 29, 1945); Provided for settlement of claims of military personnel and civilian employees of the War Department or of the Army for loss or destruction of personal property incident to their service.

Veterans' Housing Act amendment of 1945 (Public Law 87, 79th Cong., approved June 23, 1945): The Housing Administrator was authorized to provide housing for distressed families of servicemen and for veterans and their dependents who are affected by eviction or other unusual hardship when their needs cannot be met through the existing housing supply.

Veterans' Pension Increase Act of 1945 (Public Law 182, 79th Cong., approved September 20, 1945): Provided for increasing pension rates for veterans of World War II, for specific service-incurred disabilities, placing such rates on a parity with the rates of compensation payable for similar disabilities under the World War Veterans' Act of 1934. This act removed inequities existing between the veterans of the two World Wars.

Terminal Leave Employment Act of 1945 (Public Law 226, 79th Cong., approved November 21, 1945): Servicemen on terminal leave were permitted to enter or reenter Government service prior to expiration of such leave without forfeiting terminal-leave pay.

GI Bill of Rights Amendment Act of 1945 (Public Law 268, 79th Cong., approved December 28, 1945): The period in which veterans might begin or resume interrupted education was extended until 4 years after termination of the war, and time for completion of courses was extended to 9 years after termination of the war. Subsistence allowances for veteran students were increased to $65 per month for single persons and to $90 per month for veterans with dependents. Real-estate loan guaranties were increased from $2,000 to $4,000, with 10 years in which to repay such loans.

Veterans' Housing Act amendment, second of 1945 (Public Law 292, 79th Cong., approved December 31, 1945): Amended the National Defense Housing Act of 1940, appropriating $160,000,000 for use in relocation of temporary housing for use of distressed families of servicemen.

Department of Medicine and Surgery Act of 1946 (Public Law 293, 79th Cong., approved Jan. 3, 1946): Provided for establishment of a Department of Medicine and Surgery in the Veterans' Administration under a chief medical director to provide a more flexible and responsive organization to minister to the medical and hospital needs of disabled veterans. Salaries of officers and employees were increased and retirement privileges granted to attract doctors and nurses of high quality to the service.

Veterans' Housing Act amendment of 1946 (Public Law 336, 79th Cong., approved Mar. 28, 1946): Authorized the expenditure of $250,000,000 to provide temporary housing units for 100,000 distressed families of servicemen and veterans.

Veterans' Vocational Rehabilitation Act of 1946 (Public Law 365, 79th Cong., approved Apr. 24, 1946): The revolving fund available for loans to World War II veterans for vocational rehabilitation was increased from $500,000 to $1,500,000.

Return of war dead (act of 1946) (Public Law 383, 79th Cong., approved May 16, 1946): Provides for return to the United States of remains of members of the armed forces, civilian officers and employees, and United States citizens who served in armed forces of governments at war with Germany, Italy, or Japan.

Veterans' Emergency Housing Act of 1946 (Public Law 388, 79th Cong., approved May 22, 1946): To insure adequate housing facilities for veterans this act provided for coordinating veterans housing under a housing expediter to prevent speculation and excessive prices in sale of houses. The mortgage guarantee limit per room was raised from $1,350 to $1,500, with authority given to the expediter to increase this amount to $1,800. A subsidy of $400,000,000 was authorized to increase production of building materials and supplies, markets were guaranteed for new type building materials and prefabricated homes. In order to speed lumber production an appropriation of $15,000,000 was made to provide for road construction to timber on Government lands. Export of lumber was prohibited.

Government Property Use for Veterans' Organizations (Public Law 411, 79th Cong., approved June 11, 1946): Authorized the Secretary of War to lend to any recognized veterans' organization such cots, pillows, blankets, mattresses, unoccupied barracks, and other articles as he may prescribe for any national or State convention of such organized veterans.

Unknown Soldier of World War II (Public Law 429, 79th Cong., approved June 29, 1946): Authorized and directed the Secretary of War to have the remains of an unidentified American soldier who lost his life in World War II brought to the United States and buried in Arlington National Cemetery with appropriate ceremonies.

Veterans' Homestead Entries Act of 1946 (Public Law 440, 79th Cong., approved June 25, 1946): Persons under 21 years of age, who have or who may serve for at least 90 days in the military or naval forces during World War II, shall not be disqualified from making homestead entry or from any benefits which were provided in the Veterans' Homestead Entry Act of 1944, which act was limited to persons of 21 years of age or over.

Veterans' Rural Rehabilitation and Resettlement Projects Act of 1946 (Public Law 563, 79th Cong., approved July 30, 1946): Authorized the Secretary of Agriculture to expedite disposition of such lands in resettlement and rehabilitation projects as may be considered suitable for economic farm units. Disposition shall be made to veterans of World War II and to present project occupants to whom previous commitments to purchase have been made if such persons meet the requirements of the Bankhead-Jones Farm Tenant Act. Disposition under this act shall be made within 3 months from the date of enactment.

Reemployment of persons who served in merchant marine (Seaman Job Act) Public Law 660, 79th Cong., approved August 8, 1946): Provides that wartime members of the merchant marine shall have the same reemployment rights provided for members of the armed forces under the Selective Service Act.

First Supplemental Appropriation Act of 1947 (Public Law 663, 79th Cong., approved August 8, 1946): Appropriates $2,431,708,000 to carry out the provisions of the Armed Forces Leave Act of 1946, including payments to members of the armed forces and payments to the Treasurer of the United States of amounts representing the face value of bonds issued to such servicemen, due them for unused leave accumulated while on active duty. The act also appropriates $30,000,000 to purchase of specially equipped automobiles for veterans who have lost their legs. Provision is made in the act for grants to States for maternal and child-health services ($6,885,000); for services for crippled children $6,885,000); and for child-welfare services ($2,617,500).

Armed Forces Leave Act, 1946—GI Furlough Pay Act (Public Law 704, 79th Cong., approved August 9, 1946): Provides that enlisted men and women of the armed forces of World War II, estimated to be approximately 12,000,000, who have served at any time since September 8, 1939, shall receive payment for accrued furlough time at the rate of 2½ days' leave for each month up to 120 days. It is estimated that $2,700,000,000 is due them for unused leave accumulated while on active duty. To carry out the purposes of this act, bonds will be issued, which will be nontransferable but could be used to pay premiums to the Veterans' Administration.

Fight Communism, But Do It With Your Eyes Open

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. FRANK E. HOOK

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, August 2, 1946

Mr. HOOK. I herewith present the following editorial from the St. Louis Lutheran which is very well written and should be heeded at this time. It seems to me the writer has taken the proper approach to this subject.

FIGHT COMMUNISM, BUT DO IT WITH YOUR EYES OPEN

Marxian communism has two fundamental heresies: There is no God, and there is no life hereafter. No Communist, who manifests himself as such, can therefore become or remain a member of the Lutheran Church or, for that matter, a member of any Christian Church communism is to be opposed on the grounds that it is an atheistic ideology.

It is to be resisted also on political grounds. In denying the rights of the individual and in setting up the state as the supreme arbiter of the destines of men, communism runs counter to the fundamental American philosophy of life—the right to the pursuit of one's own conception of happiness as long as it does not interfere with the rights and the happiness of others. Thus we confront communism on religious and political grounds and are committed to spiritual and political warfare against it.

DON'T DISREGARD FACTS

But the conflict must be carried on intelligently. Neither as Christians nor as Americans can we afford to strive against communism with fanatical disregard for facts or in a blind fury of rage. An illustration came to our desk in the pages of a new Catholic publication, recently launched here in St. Louis, whose purpose it is to fight communism. The second number lists 400 organizations in the United States, with a combined membership running into millions, which are stamped as red, leftist, Communist, with a naive disregard for the laws of libel, when everybody knows, or should know, that communism in the United States is hard put to muster more than 50,000 members.

Just as ludicrous as those who see a Bolshevik behind every bush and a fellow traveler under every bed, are the whitewashers who condone everything Russia does. The Soviet record is red with the blood of those who were crushed under its ruthless boot heel, and that red record cannot be tinted pink.

BEWARE OF RACIALISM

In contending against communism, let us beware that we do not slip into racialism, specifically anti-Semitism. It is true that Jews are prominent in the Communist Party in the United States, prominent as leaders rather than, perhaps, numerically. But don't condemn a whole race for the sins of the few.

In resisting communism do not join wrong groups. The Catholic Church opposes communism, but one wouldn't join the Catholic Church in order to oppugn communism. Neither should a Lutheran make common cause with movements such as that of a Gerald L. K. Smith, whose unsavory connection with Huey Long has not been forgotten and whose demagoguery does not sit well with thinking Americans. If communism is so great a menace, there are enough Lutheran organizations and publications to take up the fight without joining hands with movements whose record is studded with stupidity and violence.

DO NOT TALK WAR

In fighting communism do not call for war with Russia, as did William Bullitt, former American Ambassador to Russia, who—in a book published this month—said that the United States should "not hesitate to use the atomic bomb to stop new crimes of Soviet imperialism." How more reasonable is Senator VANDENBERG'S recent statement which, although it recognized an appalling disagreement with Russia, counseled "patience, fair play, tenacity, and firmness." He predicted that these qualities would make it possible "for eastern communism and western democracy to find friendly, common ground." The absolute enemy of mankind is war. Those who call for it, who in blind hatred whip up emotions, should know that the next war would probably mean their own destruction and that of one-third of mankind. Every consideration of enlightened self-interest calls for patience and firmness in dealing with Russia.

RECOGNIZE PROGRESS

In fighting communism let us not overlook the fact that some progress has been made by Russia. What was Russia under the Romanoffs? In old Petrograd 100,000 peasants had gathered in the square to petition their little father, the czar. It was a hard winter, food was scarce, thousands were dying from disease and hunger. Would the little father give them bread? They asked for bread; the little father gave them gunfire.

Don't think all is well inside of Russia. The Russian soldier has seen other countries during the war and he is demanding a watch for his wrist and a mattress for his bed. Nothing has depreciated the cause of communism in the world more than its uncompromising attitude toward the efforts of the other nations to establish cooperative security.

Yes, fight communism, but do it intelligently, with a sense of proportion. And remember that as Christians we can fight communism most effectively by sending missionaries into Russia, who will say to the people: "There is a God, and there is a life hereafter."

On the Subject of Price Control

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. MICHAEL J. BRADLEY
OF PENNSYLVANIA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Friday, August 2, 1946

Mr. BRADLEY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, Congress is about to adjourn after one of the longest sessions in its history. The Members of the House now must return to their home constituencies and face the verdict of the voters on the record of their accomplishments and failures and omissions in this session.

The voters will have a formidable task in rendering their judgment, because of the great number of controversial and complicated pieces of legislation which have come before the Congress for decision. On one measure, in particular, there is bound to be confusion because of the intricacy of the legislation and the great number of amendments proposed and because of the involved and prolonged legislative process which resulted in the measure which finally was enacted and signed by the President. Mr. Speaker, I refer to the bill to extend the powers of the Office of Price Administration.

I think, however, that the voters can render their verdict correctly and simply if they will remember this one fact concerning the OPA legislation. The original bill, the bill which President Truman asked for and wanted, was defeated. The bill which was finally enacted, was signed by the President with reluctance, received his approval for one reason only—it was better than nothing at all.

But it was not a good bill, nor an adequate bill, Mr. Speaker, and the President has informed the Congress and the Nation that it was not a good bill, nor the bill he wanted.

I urge the voters to remember this fact.

The bill the President wanted was defeated and emasculated by crippling amendments, Mr. Speaker, because reactionary Republican Members of Congress forget that they were elected to serve the people of their districts and instead served the selfish interests of the National Association of Manufacturers, the real-estate lobby, and other private pressure groups seeking to enrich themselves at the public's expense.

I also wish to comment on the hypocrisy of the Republican city council in my own city of Philadelphia in giving lip service to rent control while at the same time the leaders of the Republican Party in the Congress and in Washington were doing their utmost to eliminate not only rent control but also to remove price control from all commodities necessary to sustain life.

If the half-baked OPA bill which the Congress finally passed results in inflation, in runaway price increases, Mr. Speaker, I want the voters of this country to know who is responsible. It was the reactionary Republican Members of this Congress, many of them from my home State of Pennsylvania, who must bear the responsibility.

I do not have to tell any Member of this House, Mr. Speaker, what runaway inflation will do. It will cause untold hardship among low-income workers and workers with fixed incomes. It will wipe out the savings of millions of American citizens.

I can boil down to a sentence or two, Mr. Speaker, what this fight on a genuine OPA bill—the kind of OPA bill President Truman wanted—is all about. During the war, millions of Americans were able, because of higher wages and a scarcity of materials, to accumulate, many for the first time, a sizable reserve of savings with which they hoped to educate their children and provide security for their old age. The selfish big business interests have their eyes on these savings—they want them and they want them fast. Kill the OPA, charge what the traffic will bear, and get it right away, is their philosophy. I need not dwell, Mr. Speaker, on the ruinous effects of such a philosophy on our national economy and on the hopes and aspirations of the great body of our people. The retail merchants would also have been seriously affected because eventually they would have been at the mercy of the manufacturer in restocking their shelves and through depreciation of their assets by a ruinous inflation such as took place in the early 1930's.

There is one other phase of this attack on a real OPA bill which I would like to call to the attention of the House. Back of this desire to raid the savings of millions of American workers is another secret and more fundamental purpose. That purpose is to take away the security of the American workers and by doing so, to destroy the labor unions of this country. A worker with savings in the bank is strong enough to bargain with his employer for his rights. But a worker who is penniless is helpless.

The die is cast, Mr. Speaker. The reactionary Republicans have killed the genuine OPA bill the President wanted, and have given us a weak substitute. Only the future holds the answer to efforts of the selfish action on their part. I am happy in the knowledge that all of my Democratic colleagues from Philadelphia supported the President 100 percent and all the way for a real OPA bill—the one he wanted. Lt. Col. Albert S. Townsend, who is the Democratic nominee in the third district for the seat in Congress I now hold, also has announced his wholehearted support of the President. These men, Mr. Speaker, can face the voters with a clear conscience. No lobbyist had any of their votes in his pocket.

I call upon the voters of Philadelphia to remember this fact when they go to the polls next November 5, and to return to Congress Representatives who have supported, and who will support, President Truman in his efforts to achieve a prosperous postwar economy with equal opportunity for all.

Veterans' Benefits

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. HADWEN C. FULLER
OF NEW YORK
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Friday, August 2, 1946

Mr. FULLER. Mr. Speaker, in order that I may be of all possible assistance to the veterans of my district, I include herewith a digest of veterans' benefits which have been provided by the Congress during the war and since the end of hostilities:

DIGEST OF VETERANS' BENEFITS

ELIGIBILITY

A veteran must have served in the active military or naval service on or after September 16, 1940, and prior to the termination of the present war. He must have been discharged or released under conditions other than dishonorable after active service of 90 days or more or because of an injury or disability incurred in line of duty.

MONEY

1. Mustering-out pay: Service personnel up through the rank of captain in the Army and Marine Corps and senior lieutenant in the Navy and Coast Guard are entitled to: (a) $300 mustering-out pay if they have performed active service for at least 60 days outside of the United States; or (b) $200 mustering-out pay if they have performed active service for at least 60 days, no part of which was served outside of the United States; or (c) $100 for any active service less than 60 days.

2. Bonus: Public Law 268 repeals that portion of the law, which provided that any financial benefits received under the act would be deducted from any future bonus authorized.

3. Retirement pay: Service personnel on active duty for more than 30 days and disabled from disease or injury received in the line of duty are entitled to receive the same retirement pay as now provided for regular personnel of the service.

4. Pensions: Discharge or release from service under conditions other than dishonorable is a prerequisite to veteran's benefits. Any veteran having a 10-percent or more disability resulting from disease or injury incurred in or aggravated by war service will, if his application is approved, receive the following amount:

Percent of disability:	Amount payable per month
10	$11.50
20	23.00
30	34.50
40	46.00
50	57.50
60	69.00
70	80.50
80	92.00
90	103.50
Total disability	115.00

Eligibility for pensions for non-service-connected disabilities requires honorable discharge and 90 days' wartime service—or if period of service was less than 90 days, have been discharged for disability incurred in service in the line of duty. The disability must be permanently and totally disabling and not due to the veterans' own willful misconduct.

Any single veteran with an annual income of over $1,000, or any married veteran—or with dependent minor children—with an annual income over $2,500, is ineligible for non-service-connected disability pensions. This pension is $50 per month and is increased to $60 upon 10 years of continuous, permanent, total disability or upon reaching the age of 65.

5. Insurance: Service personnel are eligible for the cheapest and best life insurance attainable—the national service life insurance. This is term insurance for 8 years convertible into ordinary life, 20-payment life, or 30-payment life policies.

Insurance that has lapsed may be reinstated by the veteran, either within 6 months after date of separation from active service, or within 8 months after date of lapse whichever is later by payment of only 2 monthly premiums without interest.

6. Readjustment allowances: Unemployed veterans who register with an office of the United States Employment Service are entitled to a readjustment allowance of $20 per week while unemployed. An eligible veteran may receive such payments up to a maximum of 1 year, depending on length of service. Self-employed veterans with net earnings of less than $100 per month may receive an allowance amounting to the difference between net earnings and $100 in any month, up to a maximum of 1 year, also depending on length of service.

7. Loans: Veterans have up to 10 years after official end of the war in which to make application for guaranteed loan at no more than 4 percent interest. These loans are automatically guaranteed if made in accordance with the provisions of the act and if the amount does not exceed the appraisal made by an appraiser of the Veterans' Administration.

Any loan on real estate may be guaranteed up to a maximum guaranty of $4,000 of the loan, with the Government guaranteeing 50 percent of the total loan up to the maximum amount. The business loan guaranty limit remains at $2,000, or 50 percent. Real-estate loans may be amortized over a period up to 25 years, and farm realty loans up to 40 years. Maturity on non-real-estate loans may not exceed 10 years.

Proceeds of a loan may be used to purchase a lot in connection with home construction. Loans may be made for all ordinary farming purchases, and any normal business enterprise, and so that existing indebtedness in default may be refinanced in connection with all types of eligible loans.

8. Income-tax exemptions: Special provisions have been enacted by Congress for the tax benefit of veterans. These benefits include (a) $1,500 of active-service pay is excluded from gross income for the taxable year 1943 and until the termination of the present war is proclaimed; (b) mustering-out pay is excluded from gross income for the taxable year of 1944 and later years.

JOBS

1. Employment placement and assistance: The United States Employment Service and the Veterans' Placement Service Board are directed to cooperate in seeing that all veterans, able and willing to work, obtain employment. This assistance includes employment counseling.

2. Employment preference: Preference in job referrals through the United States Employment Service is available to veterans under regulations adopted by the Veterans' Placement Service Board, carrying out the direction of the GI bill of rights that the veteran receive "the maximum job opportunity in the field of gainful employment."

3. Civil-service preferences: Veterans with service-connected disabilities or in receipt of pensions, disability retirement benefits, or compensation from the Federal Government, receive an additional 10 points on their civil-service examination rating.

A five-point preference is allowed to veterans not disabled.

These preferences will place veterans' names above all other names on the civil-service list except for professional or scientific positions paying over $3,000 a year.

4. Restoration to former Federal job: A veteran who held a permanent, probational, or probational-indefinite civil-service job when called to active service with the armed forces is entitled to mandatory reemployment in his former position, or one of like seniority, status, and pay, provided he has satisfactorily completed his period of service, is still qualified to perform the duties of his position, and applies for restoration within 90 days after separation from active service or discharge from the hospital.

5. Other civil-service benefits: The civil-service rule that not more than two members of a family, living in the same House, may hold a Federal civil-service position does not apply in case of a person entitled to veteran preference.

BUSINESS AND HOME AIDS

1. Small-business aid: "Assistance is provided to veterans in establishing small businesses through (a) loans not connected with the GI bill of rights for worth-while manufacturing projects; (b) assistance in obtaining surplus war materials that will be helpful to the planned business venture; and (c) supplying of technical assistance.

2. Material priorities: Priorities for materials are granted by the Civilian Production Administration and the Office of Price Administration to veterans.

3. Purchase of surplus property: Veterans can purchase surplus property to set themselves up and help to maintain themselves in business without buying through regular dealer channels or paying a profit to anyone.

4. Housing priorities: Priorities for the construction or purchase of new houses have been established for veterans in obtaining homes under $10,000.

5. Legal assistance: The American Bar Association has adopted a program of legal assistance to veterans and members of their families.

EDUCATION AND TRAINING

1. Education: Any eligible veteran may receive 1 year of education or training plus additional education (up to a maximum of 4 years), for total length of active service. There is no age limit nor is there any need to show that a veteran's education was interrupted by war service.

The time during which a course may be initiated is within 4 years after discharge or the end of the war, whichever is later, and the time limit for completion of the course is 9 years after the end of the war.

Short intensive courses may be undertaken and the additional cost prorated against the period of eligibility to which the veteran is entitled at the rate of $500 per school year. No such short course may cost more than $500. Veterans may apply to take a correspondence course but they are entitled to no subsistence allowance. One-fourth of the elapsed time used in pursuing such a course is charged against the veteran's period of eligibility. Total amount payable for correspondence courses for any veteran is limited to $500.

Monthly subsistence allowance, while in school or training, is $65 for veterans without dependents and $90 for veterans with dependents.

2. Vocational rehabilitation of disabled veterans: The purpose of vocational rehabilitation is to restore the employability which has been lost by virtue of a handicap due to a disability incurred in or aggravated by service.

Vocational training involving more than 4 years of training may be begun by disabled veterans, subject to approval of the Veterans' Administration. The time for completing such training is 9 years after the end of the war.

Disabled veterans in vocational rehabilitation training are entitled to receive monthly subsistence allowance of $65 (without dependents) or $90 (with dependents) plus whatever pension they are entitled to by law. The minimum total amount such veteran may receive is set at $100 per month (without dependents) and $115 (with a dependent), plus $10 for the first child, $7 for each additional child, and $15 for any dependent parent. If the veteran would otherwise receive less than these minimum amounts, his allowance is raised to equal the minimum during the period of training and for 2 months thereafter.

HOSPITALIZATION AND DOMICILIARY CARE

1. Hospitalization: The Veterans' Administration provides hospitalization for any veteran of any war who was discharged under conditions other than dishonorable. Veterans with service-connected disabilities are given preference. Veterans with non-service-connected disabilities are eligible if a hospital bed is available and the veteran makes a sworn statement that he is unable to defray expenses of treatment.

The Veterans' Administration has been authorized and directed to expedite additional hospital construction and to establish all necessary administrative offices to make veterans' benefits more readily available.

2. Artificial limbs and prosthetic appliances: Provision has been made to insure ample funds for the Veterans' Administration to purchase prosthetic appliances for veterans and instruct them in the use of such appliances, including payment of any expense involved in the veterans' traveling to and from the center where the appliance is fitted and training given in its use.

3. Guide or seeing-eye dogs: Guide or seeing-eye dogs may be provided for the aid of blind veterans who are entitled to disability compensation or pensions for a service-connected disability under laws administered by the Veterans' Administration, including payment of any expense involved in the veterans' traveling to and from the center to become adjusted to the dogs.

Blind veterans are also entitled to mechanical or electronic equipment to aid them in overcoming the handicap of blindness.

4. Domiciliary care: A veteran who is so disabled as to be unable to earn a living, and is without adequate means of support, may be admitted for home care to a facility of Veterans' Administration providing such accommodations.

The Servicemen's Community Fund of the 2800 Block on Jasper Street, Philadelphia, Pa.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. MICHAEL J. BRADLEY
OF PENNSYLVANIA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Friday, August 2, 1946

Mr. BRADLEY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct the attention of the House to a remarkable and most commendable action on the part of citizens who are constituents of the Third Congressional District, which I have the honor of representing in the Congress of the United States. They reside in the 2800 block on Jasper Street in the twenty-fifth ward in the city of Philadelphia. In my opinion, they have done something for the servicemen of their community which is unique and not duplicated in any other community in the whole United States.

During the war, the residents of this city block, comprising only approximately 46 families, raised funds in the amount of $5,630.40 by their own efforts, through the medium of social functions for which nominal admission sums were charged. On the evening of Tuesday, March 19, 1946, a banquet was given at which all the families in this community were guests, the expenses being borne by the committee, following which there was a presentation of a check in the amount of $127.40 each to 36 boys and 1 girl who had served in the armed forces. This was given with the grateful appreciation of their neighbors, all of whom live in the confines of one city block.

To say that I am proud of these constituents of mine would be to put it mildly. My vocabulary is not sufficient to express my admiration for what they have done in giving what amounts to a bonus to these boys and to this young lady from those in their own neighborhood, because of the gratitude they feel and the realization they have of the sacrifices, which those who fought for our country made during the war. The officers of this servicemen's community chest were: William Hornsby, Sr., president; Fred W. Vinter, Sr., vice president; James Reid, treasurer; and Esther Franklin, secretary. The directors were: William Cavanaugh, Sr., William Franklin, George Vinter, Samuel DeBow, Mrs. C. Devlin, Mrs. H. Wechter, and Miss E. McKay.

I am submitting herewith for insertion in the RECORD the names of all the veterans who received these checks, together with the fervent thanks of their neighbors: Nathan Goldstein, Delbert G. Cox, Daniel D. Gindhart, William H. Realley, George W. Realley, Harry Faber, Gaetano Di Paolo, Robert M. Cardwell, Mildred Hackett Filko, John J. Doherty, Joseph F. Danner, Milton A. Elberg, Jr., Elvin E. Elberg, William F. Kelly, William J. Cavanaugh, Jr., Joseph F. Cavanaugh, Joseph F. DeBow, Samuel P. DeBow, Charles A. DeBow, Gerard J. DeBow, Thomas J. Fox, John F. Fox, Charles J. Brady, Joseph A. Maguire, Roy O. Schneider, John C. Tsamutatos, George H. Wechter, Richard R. Thrasher, Jean R. Thrasher, William E. Thrasher, Cesare A. Priore, Dominic V. Mentileone, James Coughlin, William J. Franklin, Frederick W. Vinter, Jr., Charles Tongue, James Reid, Francis Fox.

It is my intention to see that a copy of this CONGRESSIONAL RECORD is sent to every family whose members participated in the raising of these funds, all of whom, as I previously stated, are residents of the 2800 block on Jasper Street, in the city of Philadelphia.

How To Control Prices

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. WILLIAM LEMKE
OF NORTH DAKOTA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Wednesday, July 31, 1946

Mr. LEMKE. Mr. Speaker, now that the OPA has been continued, with some restrictions, for another year, let us hope that Mr. Porter will make it a success. So far Mr. Porter has shown vision, courtesy and common sense. If he will continue to do this, he will have the wholehearted cooperation of all thinking people.

I have received a letter from a constituent of mine, Paul Campbell, attorney, Minot, N. Dak., which I feel should be read by every person who believes in the American way of life. Here is part of Mr. Campbell's letter:

MINOT, N. DAK., July 2, 1946.

This is a letter from one of your citizens, an attorney, and a common man. It is in my own behalf, and in behalf of my clients not one of whom can qualify as Big Business with an income of over $5,000 per year, and who generally cannot and do not care to spend time or money in lobbying by means of letters, telegrams, post cards, and so forth, to their selected representatives and servants in Congress or the Executive Mansion, or elsewhere. It is in no manner instigated by CIO, AFL, Farmers Union, OPA, or any others of the many indulging in Government by pressure group practices, including job holders, Government bureaus, agencies, pay-rollers, shovel leaners, all motivated by selfish and self-serving interest.

The long-range problem before us is to put an end to the war which plain common sense says is over, but politics and political power, control, and economic advantage delays asserting, if not in fact asserting the contrary to avoid returning our people to a government by law instead of a government by men, either bureaucrats, or pay-rollers, or otherwise. With this it is as rapidly as possible to restore to the American people a free peacetime economy in lieu of a "planned," man- or bureau-controlled economy—a monopoly-controlled economy. I limit myself to the one small phase of these involved problems; housing and rent control.

This does not mean and does not call for an OPA or any other large or small bureaucratic, inflationary, expensive set-up of political governmental agency, with its horde of nonproducing, ward-heelers and pay-rollers. It means a simple little law of Congress, to be administered and executed by the courts, State and Federal, and the executive branch and departments of our Government, State and National.

The occasion for the law arises from the emergency, temporary, due to a present shortage of building material arising from the war, labor strikes, increased production costs due to Government-inspired wage costs, and improper OPA and other improper price regulation and control, rationing, etc. Not one of these landlords would dare to demand of their tenants increased rents to which the latter did not consent, and which was not fair and proper were it not that they knew that these tenants had no place at present to go.

Let us have a simple congressional moritorium to continue during this emergency, to be enforced as between the parties in and through the courts already existing; and prohibiting increase in the rents and evictions when the rents are paid, except in cases where the tenants consent, or the landlord can establish and satisfy the courts that the increase is fair and reasonable, and the tenant has a place to go, or available to him at a rental not in excess of that paid by him and with equal conveniences.

Let us stop misleading the public in the representation that inflation and price increases are the same, when price increase is merely the consequence of prior and continued inflation; that control of price and continuance of Chester Bowles' job, or OPA are the same thing. I, for one can neither afford or take the time to be writing to you.

I selected you as my agent and representative, not to be bulldozed by any CIO, PAC, OPA, or other high-pressure organization, with their chain letters and telegrams, nor by any farm or labor, lawyer, business, or other organization; and not to be continually hounding you with my advice, letters, lobbyists, and paid propagandists in press or on radio.

I selected you to use and exercise your own honest judgment in behalf of the general welfare of the American people, and not in behalf of any political party or organization, Democrat or Republican, or any special class of American citizens.

Respectfully,

PAUL CAMPBELL.

The Problems of Small Business

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. MICHAEL J. BRADLEY
OF PENNSYLVANIA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Friday, August 2, 1946

Mr. BRADLEY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I wish to call to the attention of the Members of the House a matter which concerns every individual who is interested in preserving our American system of free enterprise, of individual opportunity, and political liberty.

I refer to the plight of small business in this country, and to the growing encroachments of huge monopolies, the expansion of the chain-store system and its invasion of new fields of merchandising, and the detrimental effects of absentee ownership.

The reports of the Securities and Exchange Commission present striking evidence of the growth of huge monopolies during the war years and of the concentration of wealth in the hands of a small group. Today 250 large corporations own two-thirds of all the Nation's usable manufacturing facilities, and only 75,000 persons own one-half of all corporate stock in the country. The chain store has invaded every community of any size in the land, and as the chain stores have expanded and grown the small businessman has begun to disappear.

The problems resulting from this trend toward elimination of the small businessman have been recognized by all thoughtful persons for some time. There have been numerous proposals for helping the small businessman, and committees of the House and Senate have made special studies of the matter.

I do not doubt that concrete legislative proposals will come out of these studies, and that they will result in the enactment of laws beneficial to small business. But I think the salvation of the small businessman lies in another direction.

I think it rests with his neighbors. The importance of the small businessman to a community must be brought home to all of the residents of the community. They must realize that he has a value to the community, over and above the things he buys and sells or the commercial services he renders, that is lacking in any chain-store enterprise.

The small businessman has been the bulwark of freedom and liberty in this Nation; he has helped to make this country great; he has kept open the avenues of opportunity for coming generations; he has been a rock of common sense and sanity in troubled times.

He is an asset to any community—the druggist, the filling station operator, the small restaurant owner, the haberdasher, the proprietor of the hardware store, the grocer, the small retailer, the confectioner, the tailor, the laundry owner, and the proprietors of the vast number of other enterprises which have contributed to the richness and variety of American life. These business enterprises have provided good livings and an outlet for the industry and ingenuity and competitive spirit of the American citizen.

The small businessman participates in the life of the local community and knows its needs and problems. The chain stores are operated by absentee owners who are interested only in profits. The small businessman usually is active in church and civic affairs in his community, and frequently is the leader in community action. He raises his family in the community and educates them in community schools. He makes his money in the community and he spends it in the community. He contributes generously to community causes. In times of economic stress, he frequently carries families in distress on credit, providing them with the very necessities of life, until conditions improve. He is a respected citizen, a person of importance in the community. He exemplifies the virtues of industry and self-reliance.

As a matter of self-interest, the residents of local communities must patronize their small businessmen. For if the small businessman disappears from the scene, much that was precious and irreplaceable in our American way of life will disappear with him.

Big business screams to the high heavens about the preservation of private enterprise in this country and about the virtues of the free competitive system. But what they mean is free enterprise for themselves only and for no one else. What they mean is freedom to destroy. They don't want competition. They hate competition. What they want is monopoly. I am for free enterprise and for the free competitive system, but I want it to be really free and actually competitive.

The people of this country must be aroused—before it is too late—to the danger to themselves arising from the spread of the chain-store system, the growth of monopolies and the evils of absentee ownership. They must loyally patronize their neighborhood businessmen, as a matter of practical self-interest, if he is to survive and prosper and if the essential features of our American way of life are to be preserved.

British Treatment of Jews in Palestine Cries to Heaven While Arab Office Turns Out Propaganda

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. ADOLPH J. SABATH

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, August 2, 1946

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, the inhuman and unfair British treatment of the Jews in Palestine cries to Heaven and the civilized world for redress.

It is difficult to find the difference between the broken faith of the British Government and the Nuremberg laws of Nazi Germany, except in degree.

The whole might of the British Empire is being marshaled against a few hundreds of frightened, penniless, helpless, Jewish refugees from the charnel houses of Europe, while the British repudiate the Balfour declaration, their agreements to carry out the unanimous recommendations of the Anglo-American Joint Committee of Inquiry, and the most fundamental principles of Christian humanity.

CORRUPTING AMERICAN PUBLIC OPINION

Not content with the brutal treatment and reign of terror in Palestine, evidence has been accumulated by the Non-Sectarian Anti-Nazi League to show that the British are countenancing, and possibly financing, a vicious campaign of misrepresentation and racism here in the United States through the propaganda channels of the Arab office.

From a sumptuous suite in the Wardman Park Hotel a steady stream of propaganda is pumped out into the newspapers and radio channels of America.

This propaganda does not stop with its grievous distortions and misstatements about the economic and political affairs of the Arab Peninsula; with insolence unmatched in this century the "diplomats" who direct and produce the propaganda of the Arab office are meddling in the domestic and internal affairs of the United States.

WHERE DO THEY GET THE MONEY?

The American people want to know, and have a right to know, where the Arab office, representing seven poverty-stricken feudal kingdoms of the Middle East, can get the money to spend a million dollars in propagandizing the United States.

Are funds being diverted from lend-lease allocations or from other American credits?

Are American and British oil companies, bent on continuing their monopoly of the fabulous oil fields of southwestern Asia, putting up the cash?

Is the British Government secretly contributing to this campaign of misleading and divisive propaganda?

SHOULD BE INVESTIGATED

Mr. Speaker, I call upon the Department of Justice and the Department of State to make a thorough investigation of the activities of the Arab office, and find out by what right the Arab kingdoms can interfere in our domestic affairs, attack and distort and misrepresent administration policy, hire high-priced public relations counsel, and bring pressures on our Department of State impossible to our own American citizens.

Why the indecent haste of the Department of State to recognize the new British puppet state of Transjordania? Why the support and recognition accorded to Yemen, the feudal kingdom which is one of the few remaining places in the modern world carrying on constant and open traffic in human slavery? Why has the Export-Import Bank allocated credits of $10,000,000 to another feudal, slave-owning state, Saudi Arabia? According to our statutes, it would be impracticable to trade with Saudi Arabia, for it is illegal for Americans to engage in commerce with slave states; and nothing has been done to mitigate the conditions described in the League of Nations report of 1925; if anything, slave trading and African human piracy there are worse than 20 years ago.

ARE WE TIED TO BRITISH POLICY?

Has our State Department no capacity for developing its own foreign policy? Why should we be tied to the kite of British colonial exploitation and oppression?

I have said before, and I repeat, that secret British diplomacy has frequently been in full accord with the aims and conduct of the Nazis. The Grand Mufti of Jerusalem, No. 1 Moslem quisling and collaborationist, traitor, agitator, arch criminal, who murdered and persecuted Christians in Lebanon and Jews in Yugoslavia, and to whom Hitler gave a staff of 180 people for his plots and murders, could not have "escaped" from detention in France without secret cooperation from British and American officials.

Why did we fight this terrible war, with its millions of dead and maimed and sick and starving, its destruction of property and human values, if we are to substitute British fascism for German fascism? Where lies the difference between Herr Doktor Goebbels' lie-mill and the orders of British General Sir Evelyn Barker? The propaganda activities of the Arab League through its quasi-diplomatic office here in the Wardman Park, protected by diplomatic immunity, and its "fronts" in New York, the phony "League for Peace With Justice in Palestine," and the Institute for Arab-American Affairs, Inc., which trace their lineage to the bund-affiliated Arab National League, are insolent in their intervention in American affairs, and reminiscent of the German propaganda in America prior to outbreak of war.

THREATENS PEACE OF WORLD

Mr. Speaker, we have read time and again, in our free American newspapers and magazines, reports of independent, trained reporters and investigators who have explored the Arab Peninsula.

They have unanimously reported that there is no conflict between the Arab people and the Jewish people in Palestine—the only conflict is between British imperialism and finance and the demand of the civilized world that Britain's promises be made good; the Arab governments are merely mouthpieces for the British Colonial Office.

Let me, then, read a single inflammatory statement from a letter dated June 21, 1946, on the letterhead of the League for Peace With Justice in Palestine, 420 Lexington Avenue, New York 17, and signed by R. M. Schoendorf, Habib I. Katibah, and Ben H. Freedman.

The first paragraph of this letter reads:

> World War III may burst upon the world if an attempt is made to transplant into Palestine, against the wishes of the Arabs, 100,000 displaced European Jews and using for that purpose the armed forces of the United States and Great Britain.

DID BRITISH WRITE THAT?

Mr. Speaker, a more sinister threat against world peace and the declared policies of the United States can scarcely be imagined.

One of the incorporators of this so-called League for Peace With Justice in Palestine is a mysterious British subject, resident in the United States, suspected of espionage activities and known to be connected with a small but fantastically profitable international cartel in valves, one Capt. Charles Passman.

The so-called League for Peace With Justice in Palestine was incorporated as a nonprofit membership corporation under the laws of New York on May 5, 1946. One of the incorporators was the Benjamin Freedman I have named who signs himself as "representative of persons of the faith"; R. M. Schoendorf, who is said to be "representative of cooperating persons of the Christian faith" and who appears actually to be the wife of Benjamin H. Freedman; Habib I. Katibah, the Arab; a neighborhood girl named Marjorie Schulman, who probably has not the slightest idea of how her name was used; and a mysterious, wealthy British subject, a former officer in the RAF who heads a small but fantastically profitable international valve cartel, who all during the war commuted between London and New York, who enjoys the most intimate acquaintance with the British Foreign Office, especially in regard to near eastern questions—Capt. Charles Passman, who avoids publicity and public notice as much as possible.

Did Passman write or dictate or suggest that heavy-handed threat to the peace of the world?

The most casual newspaper reader can recognize the similarity between the language and some of the public pronouncements of British officials. Is that similarity adventitious? Or was the letter written in London, or at the British Embassy on Massachusetts Avenue?

The League for Peace With Justice in Palestine has also published expensive full-page ads in many metropolitan daily newspapers which are as inflammatory, as distorted, and as hostile to American policy as the letter from which I have quoted. Benjamin H. Freedman insists that he himself has furnished all the money for the advertisements and other propaganda activities of the league.

AMERICA IS ENTITLED TO FACTS

Mr. Freedman's statements may be true; but they may also be false.

In any case, the American people and the American Government are entitled to the full facts and to all the facts. Who is Freedman? Who is Schoendorf? Who are Passman and Katibah? Where does all the money come from, and for what purpose?

Dr. James Sheldon, executive chairman of the Nonsectarian Anti-Nazi League, presented all this and more material to a number of Senators and Representatives prior to adjournment. He urged a full investigation by the House Committee on the Judiciary or by the Senate Committee on Foreign Affairs.

Such an investigation was, unfortunately, impracticable at that time, so late in the year; there was no proper time to discuss the resolution or the proposals.

However, we have two departments closely involved. I know that Dr. Sheldon stands ready to turn over to any authorized agency all the mass of incontrovertible evidence of improper activities which his organization has amassed, and I pledge my cooperation. I hope, I demand, Mr. Speaker, that the Departments of State and Justice will take cognizance of these charges and take immediate steps to ascertain whether or not any violations of law or of international amity have occurred through the propaganda activities of the Arab office and its subsidiaries and affiliates, regardless of what international double dealing may be exposed.

I am inserting in the RECORD a memorandum prepared by Dr. Sheldon and intended for presentation to the Committee on Rules in support of an investigating resolution, and also a more recent summary prepared by him which gives many details:

ARAB OFFICE AND RELATED AGENCIES LINKED WITH SUBVERSIVE GROUPS AND FORMER AXIS AGENTS IN UNITED STATES IN CAMPAIGN TO DEFEAT PRESIDENT TRUMAN'S PALESTINE POLICY AND STIR UP DOMESTIC DISCORD ON RELIGIOUS AND RACIAL LINES

During the past 6 months there has grown up in the United States a well-planned effort, under the general inspiration of agents of the Arab League and of a network of more-or-less affiliated agencies, to use the evil weapons of organized propagandistic appeal to religious and racial bias and bigotry for the advancement of foreign political purposes.

BUND CONNECTIONS ESTABLISHED

Several present key figures in this effort were closely connected with Nazi and Fascist propaganda activities as far back as 1934. The key organizations trace their beginnings directly to predecessor organizations which worked hand in hand with the Nazi Bund until the FBI closed the doors of German agencies after Pearl Harbor. These connections are provable by documentary evidence, now in our possession, and available for public use.

These groups, ostensibly cultural in purpose, are primarily engaged in an all-out campaign of political agitation to prevent President Truman and the Government of the United States from carrying into effect the recommendations of the Anglo-American Commission of Inquiry on Palestine, particularly as the admission of 100,000 homeless European Jews. Their activities also tend to weaken the general reputation of the Jewish people and other minorities in the United States, to increase religious and racial tension, and to strengthen nationalistic, isolationist, anti-Semitic, and Ku Klux Klan-like groups.

Central to all of this activity is the Arab office (at Washington), a highly financed agency registered with the Justice Department as acting for the seven near eastern governments which make up the so-called Arab League. The Arab League has international headquarters at Cairo, Egypt, and acknowledges the leadership of the Mufti—well-known Nazi collaborator and war criminal. The seven governments constituting the league are feudal or theocratic in set-up and do not represent the Arab peoples in any democratic sense.

FINANCED THROUGH LEND-LEASE?

The financial resources behind these propaganda and agitational activities are evidently almost unlimited and are sufficient to maintain very elaborate headquarters in Washington (with such facilities as a private bar for the entertainment of guests), to retain the most expensive public-relations consultants, to purchase full-page advertisements repeatedly in the leading newspapers of the country, to buy national radio time, and to send a body of lecturers traveling about the United States. There are indications (proof for which might be disclosed by official inquiry) that part of the funds involved may have been diverted from lend-lease sources and that some funds may have been made available through the extralegal assistance of agencies of other Allied governments.

The Arab office has, in advancing its propaganda in the United States, cooperated with some of the most extreme anti-Semitic and nationalist bodies in the country. Related organs of the Arab League in Canada and Latin America have pursued a similar course.

These charges are based on analysis of a large number of separate instances. Below are cited a few typical—but not extreme—examples.

LECTURERS FURNISHED TO SUBVERSIVES

On March 22, 1946, a notorious anti-Semitic agitator, H. L. Smith, wrote the Arab office requesting them to send an official speaker to address a sympathetic group in Philadelphia. This invitation contained the statement "Democracy is nothing but Jewocracy" and referred to the Jews of Philadelphia as "kikes."

This letter was received by Khloussy Khairy, legally registered chief of the Arab office and referred by him to Anwar Bey Nashashibi, the Arab League's most distinguished spokesman then in America. On March 25 Nashashibi accepted Smith's invitation. Subsequent carefully guarded correspondence, in which the secret nature of the Philadelphia meeting was emphasized, was in many ways reminiscent of well-known Nazi propaganda pattern. Apart from other evidence, it is obvious that the un-American attitudes of the group arranging this meeting could not have been unknown to the Arab office, because these attitudes and purposes were clearly set forth in writing in the invitation itself. (Attached are photostatic copies of the letters quoted.)

GERALD SMITH TIES SHOWN

The preceding meeting of this same Philadelphia group, incidentally, had been addressed by Gerald L. K. Smith's field representative, in an attempt to set up a veterans' organization along Nationalistic and anti-Semitic lines.

Principal unofficial arm of Arab propagandists in America is the Institute for Arab-American affairs, whose headquarters are located at New York. The institute's editor and chief propagandist is a man named H. I. Katibah. Before Pearl Harbor Katibah was director of the defunct Arab National League, a body closely associated with and promoted by the German-American Bund, official Nazi propaganda agency in this country. Files of the Weckruf und Beobachter (the Bund's newspaper) contain regular reports of activities of Katibah's old organization, and the official World Service news releases of the Nazi government recommended that Americans of German descent should extend their support to the Arab National League.

This same man, Katibah, is also one of the three publicly announced directors of the League for Peace With Justice in Palestine, whose expensive full-page advertisements have appeared in nearly every leading newspaper of the United States and several other countries, during recent weeks. Attorney for the League for Peace With Justice in Palestine and coauthor of many of its advertisements, is Hallam M. Richardson, who served as attorney for Paul Castorina, editor of the Blackshirt and convicted head of the prewar American Union of Fascists. Richardson was also closely associated as counsel and otherwise with Joseph McWilliams (now under Federal indictment for sedition), and was co-author of one of McWiliams' most effective propaganda booklets. In addition to other duties with the League for Peace With Justice in Palestine, Richardson now serves as host in assembling groups of Christian ministers whom the league seeks to infect with its views.

It is significant that another key figure in the League for Peace With Justice in Palestine—one of the five founders and legal incorporators, but a man who prefers to keep out of public sight—is an exceedingly wealthy British industrialist and financier and ex-RAF officer, Capt. Charles Passman. Passman, although he heads a business located largely in America, continues to be a British subject and apparently enjoys intimate ties with the British Foreign Office, especially in relation to some of its near eastern affairs.

Relationships between the official Arab office and the "unofficial" Institute for Arab-American Affairs are so close that requests for speakers directed to one of these agencies are apt to be filled by representatives of the other and vice versa. Likewise, nationally distributed propaganda advertisements signed by the institute, and other advertisements signed by the League for Peace With Justice in Palestine, were in fact paid for by the same individual—who also accompanied an Arab office spokesman before the State Department.

In addition to Katibah, several other key figures of the Institute for Arab-American Affairs—including the chairman of its executive committee—were also officers of the old Bund-associated Arab National League.

IMPLICATED WITH NAZI SPY

A striking example of the way in which these propagandists have maintained an unbroken line of activity is to be found in the case of The Arab World, top-ranking "slick-paper" Arab publication, now issued from New York. Its editor, George Kheirallah, was another officer of the defunct Arab National League. It was Khierallah to whom the notorious German radio spy, Wheeler-Hill—now serving a long Federal penitentiary sentence—arranged the transfer of extensive funds, before Pearl Harbor. "Our own organization will work with you 100 percent," Wheeler-Hill promised.

The principal West Coast publicist for these groups, Salem Bader, who arranged Nation-wide radio hook-ups for spokesmen of the various Arab governments during the San Francisco Conference is also a regular contributor to subversive and racistic publications, including such papers as "Women's Voice" (monthly issued by "We, the Mothers," Chicago-Detroit "Nationalist" group mentioned in the Federal sedition conspiracy indictments) and The Broom (west coast anti-Semitic and isolationist weekly, whose editor is under Federal indictment for sedition).

MISREPRESENTATION CHARGED

Under terms of the McCormack Act (Foreign Agents Registration Act) the Arab office is registered in Washington as an agency "to cultivate and promote the friendly relations and mutual understanding between the United States and the Arab world." No reference whatsoever is made to conducting a high-powered political agitation in opposition to the President's near eastern policies, nor to activities having to do with the dissemination of domestic propaganda directed against loyal religious or racial minorities in the United States.

During the past 5 weeks the Arab office and its principals have adopted a much bolder policy, in openly acknowledging the spiritual and political leadership of the Grand Mufti, Amin-El-Husseini, who was a close and trusted collaborator of Hitler, and whose responsibility as a war criminal and outstanding Moslem quisling has been unequivocally stated by Mr. Justice Jackson. The Mufti's short-wave radio broadcasts to Americans of Syrian and Arabic extraction, during the war, rank near the bottom in the record of traitorous deeds committed by Axis agents. Nevertheless, the Arab office, in its official organ (see Arab News Bulletin, June 15, 1946), unblushingly refers to the Mufti as "a singleminded and courageous patriot."

It is our recommendation that an appropriate official investigation be instituted to discover whether these activities do not constitute flagrant violations of the laws of the United States, in that they involve the conduct of extensive foreign propaganda activities under circumstances not within the terms of the Foreign Agents Registration Act; to determine whether these activities have been financed through credits originally secured for wartime purposes under lend-lease or similar arrangements, either directly from the American Government or indirectly through the treasury of a third country; and further, to determine what cognizance American foreign policy should take of these various activities.

STATEMENT BY PROF. JAMES H. SHELDON, ADMINISTRATIVE CHAIRMAN NONSECTARIAN ANTINAZI LEAGUE, IN SUPPORT OF INVESTIGATION OF ARAB PROPAGANDA IN THE UNITED STATES

The resolution proposes an investigation of foreign expenditures in the United States for carrying on a program of propaganda and agitation, in a manner which either involves the application of provisions of the McCormack Act (Foreign Agents Registration Act), or else requires the consideration of new legislation to extend that act.

A presentation of what is already known about Arab League propaganda in the United States, and related lines of agitation, would take many hours. I intend merely to say why this subject requires congressional study, and will, unless your committee otherwise requests, leave the presentation of specific evidence for another time. I have at hand adequate documentary evidence to support every charge I shall make—and that evidence is available to you.

We charge—

1. The Arab office (which represents seven Arab countries here in Washington) is engaged in a broad international propaganda in violation of the terms of its registration—if not in violation of the strict letter of the present act then certainly in violation of its spirit.

When it registered with the Justice Department, under the McCormack Act, the Arab office said: "The office shall in its best endeavors seek to cultivate and promote the friendly relations and mutual understanding between the United States of America and the Arab world." Nothing was said about carrying on a high-powered expensive propaganda campaign to try to turn the American people against a course of action to which the President of the United States has committed our country—as, for example, in connection with the report of the Anglo-American Commission of Inquiry on Palestine. Fighting against the report of the Anglo-American Commission—and even collaborating with similarly minded subversive, anti-Semitic and pro-Nazi forces in the United States—actually constitutes the main program of the Arab office today. This is a program which has nothing whatever to do with the official purpose of promoting friendly relations. It is in fact contrary to the democratic traditions of this country, and tends to weaken the foundations of our republican form of government. Such activities are contrary to the terms of the Arab office's official registration—but because the Foreign Agents Registration Act was not drafted to cover exactly this kind of situation, I am not sure how far we can go toward meting out effective punishment, unless the Judiciary Committee wants to bring out the facts and recommend strengthening the statutes.

2. The Arab office is engaged in close collaboration with groups whose subversive character is well known, and the effect of whose activities is to spread religious and racial hate in our country by concentrating on the anti-Jewish propaganda line, which the Nazis declared to be their most successful weapon, these groups seek, not only to attain their foreign political objectives, but also to divert American attention from the dangerous plight of Christian minorities in the Near East.

To mention a single example, I cite the case of a semi-secret meeting arranged by one of the most notorious propaganda agitators in Philadelphia, along with the Arab office, in March and April of this year. On March 22 H. L. Smith of Philadelphia, a wealthy retired merchant who is the chief local backer for the notorious rabble rouser, Gerald L. K. Smith, wrote to the Arab office at the Wardman Park Hotel, Washington, D. C., asking them to send him a speaker. There was no possibility that the Arab office could fail to know who it was dealing with, for H. L. Smith wrote, in his letter to the Arab office, the most scurrilous attacks on the American system of religious liberty. Like Hitler, he wrote "Democracy is nothing but Jewocracy" and he referred to the Jewish people of Pennsylvania, including many loyal veterans, as kikes. A friendly diplomatic agency receiving such a letter would either call the FBI, or throw the letter into the waste paper basket, but not so, at the Arab office. A Mr. Khairy, who is registered with the Justice Department as a foreign agent, as secretary of the Arab office, took Mr. Smith's invitation, and endorsed it and handed it over to a Mr. Nashashibi who represents one of the two great families of so-called Arabian nobility. In Palestine, and Mr. Nashashibi, after he had read Smith's disgraceful invitation, wrote "It would give me very great pleasure to come and address" the Philadelphia group.

Here is the unbelievable picture of a foreign semi-diplomatic agency engaging in an insolent attempt to turn Americans against each other, and subvert the principles of freedom of religion in our country!

There are plenty of other examples to justify this same charge, that the Arab office is engaged in close collaboration with subversive groups in the United States. I believe that the amount of this agitation is so great as to justify the Congress looking into it.

3. Leaders in this propaganda activity are the same men who tried to betray Americans of near eastern extraction into the hands of the axis during the war, and in the period of Nazi bund activity from 1933 up to Pearl Harbor.

This is true with regard to the "official" Arab agencies (who regard the mufti, Amin el-Husseini, a known war criminal, as their leader), and it is even more true with regard to the unofficial groups working in concert with them.

For example, the most powerful "unofficial" arm of Arab propaganda is the New York agency called the Institute for Arab-American Affairs, Inc. This agency works closely with the Arab office, even supplying speakers to groups which apply to the Arab office, but where, for some reason, the office does not want to send an official spokesman.

The chief propagandist and editor for the Institute for Arab-American Affairs is a man named H. I. Katibah, and he is the very same man who was director of the prewar Arab organization in the United States that was associated with the Nazi Bund. Just as the bund was supposed to make German-Americans into Nazis, so the Arab National League, of which this man was director, was supposed to make Americans of near eastern extraction into Nazis.

The general purpose of this organization of which Katibah was director, is evident from publications of the Nazi Bund on the one hand, as well as from the Arabic language press of the United States. As a matter of fact, not long after Pearl Harbor, the leading Arabic newspaper in America, Al-Hoda, openly admitted this Arab-Nazi connection, and urged Arab-Americans no longer to follow the false leadership of the German affiliated agitators.

Let us return now to what these same propagandists are doing today under the leadership of the same director, Katibah.

The most expensive work of these Arab groups has been the publication of a series of full-page advertisements in all of our leading newspapers, attacking the report of the Anglo-American Commission of Inquiry on Palestine. These ads, costing many thousands of dollars, have also been placed in papers in France and other countries, over the signature of a New York group closely associated with the Arab cause. These ads all bear the signature of this same propagandist, Katibah, who was director of the prewar organization whose activities were so closely related to the Nazi line as to be reported weekly in the official German-language newspaper of the bund. I have here samples of such reports. (Note that the report of the activities of the Arab National League and of the reelection of Fritz Kuhn to the headship of the bund appear in adjoining columns.)

The paper organization which signs these advertisements, by the way, is known as the League for Peace with Justice in Palestine. It has many other connections with subversive figures. For example, the man who is its attorney and who presided at a luncheon the other day in which it sought to influence the views of a group of Christian ministers, is the very same man who has for years been a close adviser to the indicted seditionist Joseph McWilliams. This man, Hallam M. Richardson, not only defended McWilliams in court when he got into trouble, but also wrote the preface to McWilliams' booklets addressed to our ex-servicemen, in a vile attempt to undermine the Americanism of our veterans. It is pertinent to add that one of the five original incorporators of this organization, along with Katibah, is a prominent industrialst who is a British subject, although at this moment residing in New York.

Activities of all of these groups are intricately bound up with each other. For example, the founder of the League for Peace with Justice in Palestine, named Friedman, makes no secret of the fact that he is also the man who paid for half-page propaganda advertisements of the Institute for Arab-American Affairs in the New York Times last winter and collaborated with the Arab Government legations in officially presenting their case to the Department of State. Apparently, so far as advertising is concerned, funds of the institute and funds of the league were mingled with each other. On the other hand, when Dr. K. Totah, head of the institute, had occasion to write the Secretary of the State and the British Ambassador about political subjects, he first consulted the Arab office and wrote its director, "We depend upon you to do whatever is necessary with the proper authorities," to carry out the action demanded in the letters.

A striking example of the way in which Nazi-supported Arab propagandists—who between 1933 and Pearl Harbor had helped "soften up" the peoples of near eastern extraction for Hitler's ideological penetration—are still active today, under Arab League labels, is to be found in the case of George Khairalla. Khairalla, for years a leading officer of the old Bund-affiliated Arab National League, was on many occasions the avenue through which Nazi funds were made available to that organization. Today he is editor of the top-ranking slick Arab publication, the Arab World, which is issued in close collaboration with the Institute for Arab-American Affairs, and which is highly recommended by the Arab office in Washington. I present for the record a photostat of a letter transmitting funds to Khairalla in 1939. The stationery is that of a branch of the German-American Bund and the signature is that of James Wheeler Hill, one of the most skillfull German espionage agents in America, who is now serving a long sentence for having constructed and operated a short-wave sending set with which the Nazis sought to transmit military secrets from America to Berlin. This is the kind of man to whom the Arab governments turn for help today.

4. The Arab office admits to the spiritual leadership of the notoricus Mufti Amin El-Husseini, branded as a war criminal by Mr. Justice Jackson, and known as a man who repeatedly spoke in Arabic over the Nazi short-wave radio in an attempt to cause American soldiers of near eastern extraction to desert the flag of the United States.

At the very moment when the majority of patriotic citizens were demanding the Mufti's apprehension and punishment, after his recent "escape" to Cairo, the official News Bulletin of the Arab office for June 15 again came out shamelessly in his praise. To the Arab office, this most detested of the world's quislings, who was Himmler's close friend and adviser, is "a single-minded and courageous patriot" (Arab News Bulletin, June 15, 1946). Is it necessary to present more evidence as to the evil and totalitarian threat which these foreign agents are holding over our country under the protection of a diplomatic immunity which they have dishonored?

5. The money behind these agitations comes from foreign sources.

The evidence on this point is obvious. It is to be found in the public budgets of Saudi Arabia, Iraq, Trans-Jordan, and the other Arab states, and is available without much trouble to any good student of the Arabic language who will make an honest translation. A part—but only a small part—of the same story is to be found in reports filed by the Arab countries with our Justice Department. When the Judiciary Committee makes an investigation it should also inquire whether some of our own American lend-lease money has not found its way back into the United States, and perhaps into other Allied countries, and been used to support these propaganda activities.

6. This agitation is apt to involve the United States in troubles with other countries of this hemisphere, because the Arab office in Washington serves as clearinghouse for similar propaganda in Canada, Mexico, and elsewhere. I present for the record a particularly obnoxious group of publications, in the Spanish language, now being distributed by Arab agencies in the Argentine. Some of these are translated directly from original propaganda publications distributed by the Nazis. The Argentine agents who distributed them report their activities to the Arab office in Washington. These exhibits were in fact removed from one such report mailed from the Argentine to Washington.

A leading Arab agent carrying on similar work in Mexico was recently deported, as soon as discovered.

It is well known that during the entire period of World War II Axis-affiliated Arab spokemen directed a campaign against the United States by means of Nazi propaganda published in Arabic language periodicals and issued from German controlled printing establishments in Buenos Aires. All of these printers were listed on the official United States List of Blocked Nationals. It is known that shipments of their publications were stopped and condemned by the hundreds, by United States censorship authorities during the war. The persons responsible for the writing and publishing of this Arab-Nazi material are indentical with those with whom the now defunct Arab National League worked prior to Pearl Harbor, and with whom the defunct league's successor bodies are again actively collaborating today.

The Committee on the Judiciary can easily verify this point from files of the Office of Censorship, Division of Publications.

7. This investigation must be undertaken in the present session else the responsible parties may escape or conceal their tracks. Anwar Nashashibi, the Arab agent involved in the Philadelphia episode described above, has already managed to leave the country. The press reported that his recall was the result of news stories following the insertion of our memorandum to President Truman in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD on May 7. This man, however, was only a tool. His immediate boss, who gave him his instructions, remains in Washington. We must act now, before these agitators, whose technique we can expose, are succeeded by a more subtle and more highly paid crew, whose work it may be more difficult to uncover.

The Justice Department is already alert and studying the situation. The trouble is that the statutes may not cover these situations adequately—in fact, as in so many cases of wartime treason, the man responsible for forging the ideological bullets that killed our boys, may go free, while the poor soldier, who only followed orders, is made to suffer. Here is the task for the Judiciary Committee: to bring to light the facts as to this particular postwar propaganda nexus, while it is still time to act on the situation by proper legislative remedies.

Vital Issue at Stake

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. WALT HORAN
OF WASHINGTON
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Thursday, July 25, 1946

Mr. HORAN. Mr. Speaker, under permission previously granted me, I am pleased to include an editorial from the Northwest Farm News.

I feel that this editorial reviews very thoughtfully the whole problem, past, present, and future, that stands before the country in the matter of whether our economy shall move on to a controlled status, shall revert to the regulated free economy, or whether, as some reactionaries wish, we shall move in the direction of a free and unregulated economy.

VITAL ISSUE AT STAKE

When the heat of the battle over price control and OPA has been forgotten, the country will gradually come to see that something more than prices of the next 12 months or so was at the bottom of the controversy. That something goes back to the very foundations of this Nation's economic system which was planned to assure to every citizen as free a chance as possible to paddle his own canoe or steer his boat as he deemed best so long as he did not trespass upon the same right of other citizens. Whether this country was to continue as free a land as possible, a land of government by law rather than by personal rule, or whether we were to continue the swing toward the permanent government economic management resorted to in Europe was a deeper seated issue at stake. Whatever the outcome as to prices, the overwhelming majority of Congress may be given credit for holding the desire to preserve a free America above the political coercion of big, easily prejudiced voting groups.

During the past 14 years of depression and war it should be remembered the free people of the 48 United States relinquished a great deal of their normal right of self-determination to the Federal Government in order to get quick action to meet emergency conditions of those periods. The Congress, poorly organized and unequipped to work out instantly in detail the maze of problems concerning this country's highly complicated, interwoven economy during these emergency periods, had no recourse but to delegate temporary extralegal powers to the President and agents he might appoint. Thus was brought about the war period's complex array of overlapping bureaus, administrations, authorities and their thousands of big and little administrators, with hundreds of thousands of employees, all forming a personal supergovernment never known in this country before. And thus it came about that the decision of a mere clerk might supersede the normal law and sometimes imposed the most arbitrary unjust and uncalled for interference with one-time free citizens who were all the while doing their best to produce or serve to meet the Nation's need.

One of the most troublesome and disappointing as well as most necessary of these agencies of temporary super-government has, in fact, been OPA. Congress enacted the price-control law for the purpose of keeping the Nation's economy on as even a keel as possible during the period of scarcities which the war was certain to cause. But Congress as a whole, and much of the Nation with it, became steadily more and more incensed as extremists assumed control of price control and attempted to turn it to purposes never intended when the law was passed. It had come to be operated, in fact, in the very evident attempt to convert it to a continuing regulatory authority over all production and distribution throughout the United States indefinitely. Thus the extremists in OPA brought about its now evident early doom.

BETTER UNDERSTANDING BY ALL NEEDED NOW

In trying to impose their impractical and sometimes experimental theories upon the Nation's entire production system, and in blindly ignoring failures of production to meet the Nation's needs under their inflexible, chart-bound methods, OPA brought upon itself the settled distrust of a large majority of Congress which has been adamantly resolved for weeks past to take back as rapidly as possible the temporary powers which have been considered greatly abused and exceeded.

Government controls, however, are still a necessary safeguard to prevent prices from getting out of bounds during the remaining period that may be required while production builds up to the point where competition will hold them to reasonable levels. But equally now, as pointed out before on this page, is the actual production of the goods and services which people have so long been waiting for. In some lines, such as dairy and livestock, controls have proven not practical because they discourage production too much.

In ordinary times people are producing while they are earning so there are always goods to be bought with the money or services available to spend it for. During the war the government poured more money into the pockets of workers and nearly all producers than they had ever possessed before, but much of the vast outpouring of billions went, of course, for destructive purposes. There was consequently, as everybody is aware, not enough produced that people wanted that could be bought with the money.

But now nearly a year has gone by since the war was all ended. People are still waiting for most of the things they have wanted. Farmers are waiting for tools and machinery. Manufacturers are waiting for metals while factories of all kinds are looking for short supplies of all kinds and also for labor. Wages were raised—a large part of the cost of all production. But OPA held back too long, refusing any or sufficient raise in selling prices of some of the most needed goods. Pricing methods must be flexible enough so that prices will be sufficient to cover production costs and allow a profit inducement or store shelves and warehouse floors will continue empty.

As consumers, it seems clear that people must keep on exercising patience and understanding of the situation. Production and distribution from farm and mine to factory and store is the only solution for the present great gap between needs and supply. Consumers must get used to the new fact that the government is getting out of the subsidy business, leaving them to pay more of the full price of the foods they buy.

Most of all, probably there needs to be patience, too, on the part of workers. More man-hours of labor—many more—are needed than are being furnished by trained workers ready to go to work. This applies to production of all manner of goods and commodities. Dealers of so simple a thing as kodak film complain that their shipments are being cut a third below last year, due to shortage of metal for the spools, as well as shortage of labor and the shortened workweek, with metal shortage also due to labor shortage. Supplies of every kind are way below what they might have been were it not for the strikes that paralyzed production in so many vital industries last winter. More strikes and more wage raises imposed too soon will only mean more halting of production, more waiting by consumers, more raising of prices.

Time must be allowed for channels of production to get into high gear, for the right workers to find their right places, for goods of every kind to flow, and services to become available. Then, and not until then, can prices and wages throughout this greatest of all national production systems be brought into balance or stabilized. After all, it is prices that make possible the payment of wages—make possible the production of food or goods.

The Seventy-ninth Congress and the Farmer

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. MELVIN PRICE
OF ILLINOIS
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Friday, August 2, 1946

Mr. PRICE of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, the Seventy-ninth Congress has dealt generously with the farmer, as have all Democratic administrations in the past, a perusual of the record of the past 2 years will show. The farmers of the Nation know the great benefits which came to them under the leadership of President Roosevelt and they have only to study the legislative acts of the present Congress to see that the present Democratic administration likewise has dedicated itself to bettering conditions for the farm owners and those who work on farms.

Personally, I have always given my support to legislation helpful to the farmer with the thought foremost in my mind that we should insure them against depression years such as they knew in the late twenties and early thirties. It hasn't been so long ago that the average farmer in this country was in desperate plight. We can recall how Roosevelt came to their rescue and how he quickly restored them to their proper place in our Nation's economic life. Agriculture will profit for many, many years to come by the progressive programs instituted by the Democratic national administration since 1933. It is needless for me to enumerate the helpful legislation which Congress in those years, under Democratic Party leadership, enacted for the benefit of the farmers.

In this present Congress, in addition to getting the farmer higher prices, we passed new laws to increase the farmers' markets and enable millions of tenant farmers to become farm owners.

The dominant philosophy behind most of Congress' farm legislation during the past 2 years that I have been a member has been the desire to secure abundant production and abundant consumption. The farmers showed during the war that there is no limit to what they can produce. The question now is finding a place to put the products they turn out.

One of the most important measures for that purpose is an act greatly increasing the Agriculture Department's research activities. Congress has authorized appropriation to:

First. Develop new agricultural commodities as well as new uses for old ones.

Second. Provide marketing research on how to get farm products quickly and economically to the consumer. This will include experimentation with packaging, freezing, and dehydration.

Farm leaders also backed permanent establishment of the school-lunch program and legislation aimed at increasing foreign trade to provide more markets for farm products.

The farmers of America have enjoyed greater prosperity in the last 10 years than ever before in the history of our Nation. But they must be on their guard to protect the gains they have made. They should remember the policies of a few years back that brought them to the brink of catastrophe, and if they will look closely into the history books they will discover that each time a reactionary administration was in power, farm prices began to fall, markets began to disappear and farms went to the banks on mortgage foreclosures. Agriculture depends on progressive, democratic legislation to continue to prosper—and to avoid a return to the bottom prices of the depression. Experience teaches that.

Americanism Versus the PAC

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. HADWEN C. FULLER

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, August 2, 1946

Mr. FULLER. Mr. Speaker, a few days ago one Clifford T. McAvoy, of Washington, D. C., described as the director of the Political Action Committee of the UE-CIO, visited my congressional district for the express purpose of telling the people there how to vote in the fall election.

As Mr. McAvoy's approach followed the old Communist line, I felt it was my duty to inquire into his background and antecedents. I accordingly addressed the following letter:

HOUSE COMMITTEE INVESTIGATING UN-AMERICAN ACTIVITIES,
House of Representatives.

GENTLEMEN: I will greatly appreciate a report from you as to whether Clifford McAvoy, Washington, D. C., national director of the PAC for the UE-CIO, has ever been cited by your committee, and if so, what are the citations.

Sincerely yours,

HADWEN C. FULLER.

I received the following reply:

Hon. HADWEN C. FULLER,
House Office Building,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: In response to your inquiry of July 31, I enclose herewith information concerning Clifford McAvoy. I hope it will be helpful.

Yours very truly,

JOHN W. CARRINGTON,
Clerk, Committee on Un-American Activities, House of Representatives.

That Mr. McAvoy has been cited 37 times by the House committee for his un-American activities was no surprise to me. That he tries to hide his Communist schemes behind a cloak of honest working men and women is no surprise either, for that is an old Communist trick with whiskers on it.

However, Mr. McAvoy and his handful of immediate followers, either sincere and deluded or of his own ilk, will fool no one in the Mohawk Valley or anywhere else, unless it be themselves. For there is too much sound Americanism in the Thirty-fifth Congressional District for such a nefarious scheme to make any headway.

Because I have fought them as vigorously as I know how, and because I have worked and voted for the American way of life during my service in the Congress, these Communists, however, will spare neither money nor effort to assure my defeat at the polls in November. Their only hope of success is to get the people to believe their clever but lying propaganda, and this, of course, is a vain hope.

The money they have already spent so freely has been raised in part from unwilling working people over whom they have obtained control, and in part from funds furnished from Moscow. Can you wonder that the Congress is unwilling to loan money to Russia when it is a foregone conclusion that the Communists would use these American funds in an effort to communize America?

Many Americans—the farmer, the veteran, the working man and woman, the businessman and housewife—are in the fight today to rid America of the Communist drive to destroy democracy. None, however, has hit more vigorously and more effectively at Communists than that great American churchman, Francis Cardinal Spellman.

Said Cardinal Spellman:

> I believe that every real American, if he but knew the truth, would strive to defend this Nation from Communists who, wielding their weapons of intrigue and infamy, are imposing on our country their profane pattern of serfdom. * * * In their efforts to wean Americans from Americans, Communists unanimously revile and defile everyone whose opinions and convictions differ politically, socially or morally from their own. Their subtle, sinister schemings sway and mislead Americans who, in ignorance or weakness, yield to communism their loyalty to God, to country, and to their fellow-man. * * * Freedom is not a treasure which, once possessed, cannot be lost; and it will be lost for us and for our children unless it is cherished, defended, and preserved as it was fought for and won. * * * I feel that I would not be a true American if I entered into the conspiracy of silence and did not raise my voice above those who, privately and in whispers, talk about communism, but neither act nor speak publicly against this insidious enemy of Americanism.

Mr. Speaker, as long as there is the breath of life in me I shall fight for the principles which have made America great, whether I am in or out of Congress. The campaign launched against me by Mr. McAvoy, of Washington, D. C., and his ilk, I consider a great compliment to the soundness of my service in the House.

The issue has been clearly drawn in the Thirty-fifth District of New York. This is whether the Communists shall prevail or I shall be returned to the House of Representatives. The common sense and sound Americanism of the people of the district is second to none in America, and I am confident this Communist drive will fail by an overwhelming vote in November.

Bureaucratic Stupidity

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. WILLIAM LEMKE

OF NORTH DAKOTA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, August 2, 1946

Mr. LEMKE. Mr. Speaker, ever since 1933, the farmer has been regimented—made the shock absorber of bureaucratic blunders. Ever since 1933, he has been told what to produce and what not to produce. During the war, the farmer complied with the request of the Department of Agriculture. He produced an abundance of livestock, poultry, and poultry and dairy products.

He was asked to increase his poultry 20 percent. He complied. Then when the price of eggs went down to 14 cents a dozen, the Department started to buy eggs with the taxpayers' money. It lost more than $100,000,000 in the venture. Thus the farmer not only produced poultry at a loss, but, since he pays one-third of all taxes, he is compelled to pay one-third of the $100,000,000.

Then the Department asked the farmer to produce hogs and more hogs, but when they were ready for market, it prohibited him from marketing them. He was Russianized. He had to have a marketing card to sell a single bushel of wheat. He had to have a permit to sell a hog. Then for months he could not get a permit. The loss in feed and care was the farmer's, not the bureaucrats.

Then he was asked to feed the world at the expense of our own people. This not at cost of production prices, but by paying to a few farmers an additional 30 cents a bushel on corn and wheat. Thirty-cent wheat and corn bonus—what a boner. The chickens of the administration's farm policy are coming home to roost.

For years the Department of Agriculture told the farmer that there was overproduction. It preached the gospel of "the abundant life by scarcity"—by the wanton destruction of crops and livestock. It fined and filched some $20,000,000 from the farmers through so-called excess wheat penalties. It is still collecting penalties and suing farmers under an unconstitutional law. No apologies to the packed Supreme Court that cannot read English.

Finally with an excess of stupidity, the bureaucracy hit upon the idea of paying a 30-cent bonus on wheat and corn. This created a crisis. With the OPA's ceiling remaining on wheat and corn, and the Government paying a 30-cent bonus, not a bushel went into domestic consumption, except via black markets. Flour mills, processing mills, bakeries, and other industries were shut down by a bureaucracy that acts first and thinks afterward.

I do not blame the farmers, who sold their wheat and corn before the bonus, for being up in arms. They rightly demand that the bonus be paid on all wheat and corn raised and sold in 1945. They claim that in place of doing justice, the Commodity Credit Corporation, which had advance notice, in many cases tricked them into selling their wheat and corn and liquidating their loans.

It is claimed that in many instances, the Commodity Credit Corporation told the farmer that it was foolish to hold wheat or corn and pay interest on the loan, because the price would not go up. It urged him to pay the loan and turn the wheat and corn over to the Government. This was perpetrating a fraud. The Government should be as fair and upright in its dealings with the farmer as it expects him to be with it.

The farmers may rest assured that the Congressmen, representing agriculture, have and will do all in their power to get this 30-cent bonus paid for all of the 1945 wheat and corn raised and sold. But to accomplish this, we will need the active support of all farm organizations and their leaders. There must be no reneging. We have the active support of the Commissioners of Agriculture from the wheat and corn States.

The fight for this bonus has just begun. The battle will be renewed at the opening of the next session of Congress. The Members of Congress from the wheat and corn growing States have a right to demand that the leaders of all farm organizations join in this battle. Simple justice demands that the Government treat all farmers alike. There must be no favoritism.

Remember that the farmers are not as strong in Congress as they used to be. The farm population has decreased from 33,000,000 to less than 23,000,000. On the other hand, the city population has increased accordingly. The Government needs increased agricultural production. Therefore, we have a right to demand that the Government do justice to all the farmers, not only a few.

If the farmer had been given a square deal—100 percent parity—in place of a New Deal—75 percent parity—then we would not have to spend our time on this 30-cent bonus. If he had been given cost of production, then he would, during the war and since, have received $2.24 a bushel for wheat; $1.82 for corn; $1.23 for oats; $1.32 for barley and $5.10 for flax.

He would have gotten $5.17 per hundredweight for milk: $22.61 for prime finished beef; $22.65 for lambs, and $22.25 for hogs—and similar increases on other agricultural products. That would have put him on an equality with labor and industry. If he had gotten these prices, then he could now, without again going into debt, replace his worn-out farm machinery with new. He could then repair, paint, and replace his fences, home, and farm buildings.

During the war and ever since, there has been a severe shortage of boxcars and storage facilities in the grain-growing States. The farmer was asked to and produced an abundance of wheat and corn. Then when he harvested it, he had to store it on the ground. For years he could not get lumber to build granaries. Each year rains came and destroyed millions of bushels. Such lack of granaries and boxcars can only be accounted for because of the inefficiency of the Washington bureaucracy. The world demanded wheat, and yet it was allowed to spoil for want of cars. It might have been overlooked if this had happened only one year, but to happen year after year is inexcusable.

This year the Department of Agriculture advised the Interstate Commerce Commission and the Office of Defense Transportation that Montana and North and South Dakota would produce less than half a crop. Upon that advice, the cars that belonged to Montana and North and South Dakota were allotted to other States. This blunder, if it were not so costly, would be laughable. The Department apparently thought it knew more about rains and crops than the Lord. These are only a few of hundreds of costly blunders made by bureaucracy, but visited upon agriculture.

I am talking today for the farmers—for those who till the soil and feed the Nation. I am also speaking for the farmers' friends—the laborer and the professional and small businessman. There is not a professional, or businessman or laborer in our Nation whose prosperity does not depend upon the prosperity of agriculture—whose welfare is not linked and intermingled with that of the farmer.

The farm situation must not be judged as of today but as of yesterday and as of tomorrow. The economical readjustment of our Nation is yet to come. There are many crises—many pitfalls—ahead. Our President was right when he said "What the Nation needs is to go to work."

But the farmer has been and is at work. In order to keep the armies going—in order to feed the world—he had to wear out all of his farm machinery. He had to work his children and old folks from 14 to 18 hours a day. If he had lived in a city, he would have been arrested for violating the child labor laws and cruelty to the aged.

I repeat, he worked night and day to keep the war machinery and the world supplied with food. His home and his buildings were permitted to depreciate—to go unrepaired and unpainted—to decay. There was no paint, building, or repair, material to be had. He kept his farm implements going until they fell to pieces. In many cases he worked in rags. This while his Government was and still is supplying foreign civilians with working clothes, lumber, and farm machinery that by right were his.

The farmer was compelled to live on his past accumulations—on the accumulations of farm machinery, a home, granaries, fences, barns, and other buildings and improvements. Many of these must now be replaced with new and others partially rebuilt and reconditioned. He has to start from scratch. His accumulated wealth is virtually gone. The mortgage that he paid off will have to be replaced. He will again be in the red unless he gets cost of production.

The farmer is not being deflated. He was never permitted to become inflated. During the war he not only produced the food for our own Army, but for the armies of the United Nations. He was asked to do this not at parity prices, but at 85 percent of so-called parity. While all other industries got 100 percent parity plus, President Roosevelt, at the request of the Secretary of Agriculture and some farm leaders, vetoed the Pace bill—the bill that would have put agriculture on a par with other industries.

How much longer will the farmer be discriminated against? Is agriculture to be wrecked—is it to be regimented? It is apparent that there is a little clique of young, urban born, educated pinks in the Department of Agriculture that has no respect for the farmer or his labor.

Recently the Government, on advice from the pinks in the State and Agricultural Departments, attempted to seize the wheat the farmer had stored in his local elevator. This without his consent or knowledge. It was only when State officials came to the rescue, and informed the bureaucrats where to head in at, that this Russian attempt of grabbing that which is not yours was abandoned.

The sad thing is that Congress and the Nation have been led to believe that the farmer is rolling in wealth. Some Members of Congress do not understand that all the farmer has been getting from the Government is lip service. Up to 1946 no farm legislation has been passed that gives the farmer price protection.

In 1932–33, and again in 1938–39, agricultural prices and income went into a complete collapse and our national income suffered in the same ratio—only the war saved the situation. Had a cost-of-production bill been passed, no such an economic disaster could have overtaken our Nation.

The farmer himself, however, has become conscious of the fact that he is underprivileged. But he need not be underprivileged. If he had asserted himself he would long ago have gotten cost of production—100 percent parity. He would not now be interested in a 30-cent bonus.

I am aware that because of five abundant crops and war prices farm conditions have apparently improved. I know that the farmer realizes that these conditions will not continue. He knows that in 1939 the average net income per farm family in North Dakota was only $685. He knows that in the same year the net annual income per farm family in all but 8 or 10 States was less than $800.

The farmer realizes that he is discriminated against and is not getting his fair share of the new wealth he creates each year. He realizes that there will again be lower prices, and that there will again be poor as well as good crops. He realizes that in order to measure his future prosperity, you must measure his income over a period of years. He knows that in considering his future welfare you must take the average and not select only a few favorable years.

The farmer knows that under Roosevelt's administration he never got over 75-percent parity. He knows that the parity scheme was proposed to resist the farm demand for cost of production. He knows that he will again be made the shock absorber, unless Congress assures him cost of production.

For 30 years the Government has farm boarded, triple A'd, OPA'd, WPB'd, subsidized, parity'd, penalized, and deceived the farmer. He has been rolled back and regimented by an ignorant bureaucracy. In the words of the world's greatest sculptor, Gutzon Borglum, "They are determined to make the farmer dependent in order to control the source of all independent thought."

These bureaucrats not only abused the farmer's patience but suppressed the truth and falsified the facts. They gave him a new deal, a bonus, a double deal, with stacked cards, loaded dice, and points. I repeat in the past the farmer has been fleeced and made to believe that he was being helped.

His is a constant struggle. The few crumbs that Congress has permitted him to get for his labor were opposed at every turn of the road. In 1935 as a compromise on the Frazier-Lemke refinance bill, the Federal land-bank interest was reduced from 5 percent to 3½. But in 1944 it was again increased to 4 percent. It should be permanently fixed at 2 percent.

During the war the farmers' sons and farm help were drafted to the extent that the farms were practically denuded of farm help. After a fierce struggle we finally saved a little of the farm help, but not enough. Over a year ago the House passed my resolution redefining the Tydings amendment. But that resolution still sleeps in the Senate. The farmers' sons did not ask to be deferred—they asked no favors. But the Army had to have food and clothing, and so did the laboring people who supplied and equipped the war machines.

The farmers' domestic market was again given to foreign nations via an extension of the reciprocal trade agreement. When the war-torn foreign nations get on their feet and begin producing agricultural products, then this Nation will again be flooded with products produced by slave labor. This law was originally, and still is, sponsored by the international banker and the international manufacturer.

Surely no farmer, laborer, or other businessman favors the surrendering of our domestic market to foreign nations—favors selling America short. The Tariff Commission's records show that under this law, prior to 1940, our agricultural exports fell off, while agricultural imports increased. They show that the international manufacturers' foreign trade increased 85 percent.

During that time I saw trainloads of cattle imported from Canada and Mexico. The annual total importation of meat and meat products during those years was equivalent to about 2,000,000 head of cattle. Our farmers and ranchers were compelled to compete with those importations.

Since the war, I saw trainloads of farm implements going into Canada and Latin America, shiploads to Europe, while these same implements were denied to our own farmers. I saw a train of 72 cars loaded with cargo carriers—trucks—for the USSR. These trucks have been, and are still being, denied to our own people. Foreigners preferred, Americans forgotten.

While these international horse traders constitute but a small percentage of our people, they are a powerful group. They control about 95 percent of all our avenues of publicity. They control the radio, the theaters, and the metropolitan press. They have saturated this country with false propaganda. They are interested not in the future of our country, but in their own enrichment. They recognize no country nor any flag, except the flag that follows the almighty dollar.

Philippine Independence Ceremonies

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. HUGH BUTLER
OF NEBRASKA
IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES

Friday, August 2 (legislative day of Monday, July 29), 1946

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD an address delivered by me on the Philippine independence ceremonies.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Friends and neighbors, barely a month ago I was privileged to witness and feel the gratitude to our country of the people of the new Philippine Nation, for the grant of the priceless gift of independence that we have given them.

This privilege came to me as a member of the commission appointed to attend the Philippine independence ceremonies, which represented the United States at Manila on July 4, 1946. Those ceremonies were impressive indeed. A crowd of forty or fifty thousand gathered for the event. Many notables spoke, including President Roxas, General MacArthur, Senator Tydings, and Mr. McNutt. Old General Aguinaldo made a great impression when he turned over to the new President Roxas the flag of the old times that he once led in rebellion against the United States. And when the American flag was lowered to be replaced by that of the new Republic, there were not many dry eyes in the crowd.

As I watched this historic event, I wished that many more of our people from all over the Nation might have witnessed it. It was an effective answer to those detractors of our country who seem to enjoy charging, on every occasion, that America is not doing enough for other countries, or that America is not willing to go far enough along the line of international cooperation. We have given the Filipinos something far more valuable than loans of money, or gifts of material things. Having full control of their own destinies, the Filipino people may now build and construct what they wish, and what they create will belong to them, not to a foreign imperial power. We have given freely and generously to a subject people that which our own ancestors had to win for themselves through their own strength and resolution, the freedom of the Nation. It was an act of generosity which no other nation can match in all history. Let us remember this act with pride the next time foreign nations try to tell us where our duty lies.

The entire trip to and from the Philippines was made by Army plane. Manila is almost half way around the world from our starting point, so we returned to Washington by way of Asia and Europe. This route gave us a chance to study economic conditions and the progress of recovery in all parts of the world recently affected by the war. In all, we visited 27 countries and flew over 5 more without stops. The trip was a tremendous education to me. I only wish that all members of Congress might have the same opportunity to study at first-hand the conditions with which they must deal in passing on proposed legislation governing our international relations. I believe they and the Nation would benefit from such a journey.

The dominant impression I carry back with me is that of the confusion and distrust that exist in almost every country visited. Changes in government are a common occurrence in many countries. One of the greatest evils is the tremendous inflation of the money supply in most countries, which is wrecking normal price levels. This is caused by the irresponsible inflationary spending of the governments in those countries. Although most of the countries have made attempts to control prices through regulations similar to our OPA, generally such controls have been powerless to hold prices stable and the black market has taken over the economic system. In Greece, for example, an Army colonel presented me with a 5,000,000 drachma paper note, now worth nothing. Such examples prove once again that all inflation is caused by Government deficit spending, and that no system of price controls can be more than a temporary stop-gap, if the Government is wasteful and extravagant. Before these foreign countries can really recover, they will have to drive the demagogues from power and reestablish common sense financial policies in their governments.

On the physical side, however, there are many signs of rapid progress toward reconstruction. Most important, in almost every country harvests are very good. In addition, some countries such as Japan, did a first-rate job toward clearing away the debris and beginning to rebuild. Undoubtedly it will be some years before all destruction has been repaired, but at least a start is being made. The people there seem cheerful, and are working industriously to restore normal life under our military government, which they do not seem to resent. I had a very constructive discussion of his problems with General MacArthur who feels that we should keep a firm control over Japan for some time, but hopes it may be possible to reduce the number of occupation troops soon, even below his previous estimates. The occupation there is not involving us in a heavy expense, since the Japanese must cover such costs. Furthermore, they realize they have no one to depend on for help except themselves, so they have gone to work with a will. It is quite a contrast with the Philippines, where the people seem to be waiting, expecting us to repair much of the material damage and restore normal economic life.

The most shocking thing I learned from this trip is the enormous waste and loss of UNRRA funds and material. Graft and theft seem to be the normal thing, rather than the exception, in connection with UNRRA goods in many countries. In China, for example, a 10 percent rake-off by each official handling the supplies is generally accepted, and very little of what we send reaches those who really need it. Fortunately the abundant harvests in all parts of the world remove any reason for keeping UNRRA in existence beyond this year. I might mention that Senator ELLENDER, of Louisiana, a life-long Democrat, thoroughly agreed with me on this point. In those cases where some need for relief will still exist, I am confident that our charitable citizens will gladly take care of the need by contributions through private groups such as church organizations, racial groups, and other private charitable organizations. There is no question in my mind but that much of the relief donated by the American taxpayer has gone to feed the power and wealth of those in control, rather than to feed the needy.

Unfortunately UNRRA was not the only example of waste of funds of our taxpayers that I found. Time after time we landed at airfields built by America, which had now been turned over to the ruling power where the field was located. We have to have permission to enter these fields we built, paid for with our money. A particularly strange case I came across was the field at Dhahran, in Saudi Arabia. This field was not even started until long after the close of the European War, and it cost the American taxpayer $4,000,000! Just the pay roll to operate the field cost us $25,000 a month, and there is not enough traffic there to justify an airfield anyway. I have not yet received a full explanation of just why this field was built, but I certainly intend to. If it was intended to appease the Arabs toward our policy in Palestine, it does not seem to have succeeded, since they seem to remain as unreasonable as ever.

With such reckless spending as this by our Federal Government, is it any wonder that inflation is taking hold of our Nation and driving goods into the black market?

Other examples of dissipation of our wealth and assets could be given. Many islands in the Pacific still have tremendous quantities of our war equipment located on them. At Okinawa, for example, one entire field is completely covered with surplus material. Much of it is still in the crates in which originally sent. On some of the islands, no one even knows what is in the crates. Lumber, machines of all kinds, rope, cable, electric equipment, and cloth screen are some of the items. Over 2,000 jeeps are still crated in one spot at Okinawa. Some of the equipment has been bought by the Filipinos with our money for their reconstruction, but much of the rest should certainly be returned to this country. It would fill many of the needs of our returning veterans and others. Progress along this line seems unnecessarily slow.

While we were in China we had meetings with both General Marshall and the "Gemo"—Generalissimo Chiang Kai-shek. General Marshall's task of bringing peace between the warring factions there seems almost hopeless. There has been almost continuous civil war in China since the emperor was overthrown 35 years ago. Meanwhile, the presence of our troops there is a constant incitement to incidents, and may ultimately draw us into a war we do not intend. I do not believe our troops have any business in China, and Senator ELLENDER agrees with me on this point also. The sooner we get them out, the better.

Although we spent most of our time in the Pacific war area, we did have brief opportunities to visit some of the European countries. Germany was terribly devastated, and recovery will be a slow, painful process. The refusal of the British to permit packages to be sent to German residents of their area is unreasonable and continues to be a sore spot. The destruction of Berlin was utterly indescribable. To quote General Clay, our host at dinner, "Berlin epitomizes the tragedy of war. The work of mankind for 1,000 years destroyed overnight and for utterly no good purpose."

Lidice, the town in Czechoslovakia destroyed by Hitler's madmen, was the most pitiful sight, however. Not one stone was left on another. Every man of the town was shot, and the women and children were separated and scattered everywhere. Some of the children are now being located in Denmark, Poland, and elsewhere. This valley will always be a Czech shrine, I believe, and no building will be permitted.

It was my good fortune to be able to visit the Scandinavian countries briefly. In Sweden, I found a type of farming most nearly similar to that in this country. The farmers do not live in villages, as they do in many countries of Europe, but on the farm, and the farm home is not built up against the barn as elsewhere, but stands by itself. Sweden is in better shape economically than almost any other country in Europe, because she was fortunate enough to avoid direct participation in the war. She has, however, been most generous in lending money to her neighbors for reconstruction. Denmark and Norway likewise have a high type of culture. I believe we should go the limit in developing friendship and cooperation with the Scandinavian countries.

Another nation where considerable progress is being made, despite great obstacles, is Palestine. The Jews who have immigrated there have made wonderful progress in turning a desert into a garden. Every foot of the hillside is terraced. Some has lost all soil long since, but is being reestablished by carrying soil up in buckets. The valleys are irrigated. I believe the Jews would develop a wonderfully prosperous country if those who wish could freely immigrate there and work in peace.

In Italy the harvests are good, and Italy has real prospects for a speedy recovery. The people are very incensed over the loss of Trieste, which is to be made a free city. This indignation is entirely justified, in my opinion, since Trieste is almost purely an Italian city. It is my judgment that when the peace treaty is finally written Trieste should be restored to Italy, in accordance with the wishes of the vast majority of its inhabitants.

An observation of great interest to me personally was the great number of fellow Nebraskans I met everywhere I went throughout the world. It was apparent that men from our State were making their full contribution toward building the peace we all hope for. The copilot of our own plane, who accompanied us throughout the trip, was Lt. Donald Faulhaber, of Havelock. A partial list of the other Nebraskans I met included Lieutenant McManaman, of Spalding, in Manila; Lieutenant Busenbarrick, of Tecumseh, and Captain Barnes, of South Sioux City, both in Guam; Colonel Funk, of Central City, and Colonel Yates, of York County, both in Peiping; Lieutenant Hickey, of Columbus, in Nanking; Marvin Moeller, of Scribner, and Captain Hoppe, of Gordon, both in Korea; Anna McLaughlin, of Ingleside, in Shanghai; Sergeant Dane, of Clay Center, and Colonel Cohn, of Fremont, in Tokyo; Sergeant Zahn, of Syracuse, in New Delhi, India; James Carey, of Omaha and Council Bluffs, in Rome; Lieutenant Grote, of Norfolk, in Foggia, Italy; Lieutenant Townsend, formerly of Lincoln, in Nuremburg; Private (first class) Holder, of Scottsbluff, and Private (first class) Heutzel, of Maxwell, in Berlin; George Pipal, of Omaha, in Prague; and Sergeant Beck, of Martel, in Munich. For most of them the dominant thought was, "How soon can we get home?" As one lad said to me, "Senator, when you get back to Nebraska, will you kiss the earth for me?" I promised that I would.

But this trip also brought home to me, as nothing else could, the thought of those who can never return. The graves of American men lie in all parts of the world. I am happy to be able to report that almost without exception these graves are well cared for. There was one cemetery whose story is indelibly printed in my memory. On one small island in the Pacific are the graves of just six American dead. I suppose the fight there would be called a minor engagement—nevertheless, those six men had hopes and plans for the future, just like all the others, and there are six American families who mourn for them. The natives of that tiny island are not ungrateful for their sacrifice. As a token of their gratitude, those natives place fresh flowers every single day on the graves of the men who died to give them freedom. I hope our own gratitude for the sacrifice our men made for us shall be as faithful and enduring as that of the natives of this tiny atoll.

One measure which I plan to introduce at the next session of Congress is for a permanent memorial to our dead in the Pacific. Our dead are scattered over hundreds of small islands out there. Okinawa had the largest number, I believe. Guam, however, is American territory and will always remain so. It is near the center of the battle area, and is a stopping point for both trans-Pacific flights and voyages. I can think of nothing more fitting than a memorial there to commemorate the services of all those thousands of young Americans who gave their lives for their country on all the obscure little islands throughout that vast ocean. Our young men who are at rest out there may have forgotten this life's ambitions and tribulations, but the living should not forget and will not forget their services. Nothing we can do will bring them back. But a monument as imperishable as the services they have rendered, will keep alive in the memories of all who pass that way, those sacrifices we can never repay.

CIO-PAC Missouri Purge

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. MAX SCHWABE

OF MISSOURI

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, August 1, 1946

Mr. SCHWABE of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, the question that confronts us in the approaching congressional election seems clearer day by day. Should we send men to Washington who will speak and vote as their conscience dictates, on the basis of principle, ever bearing in mind what will assure maximum happiness and welfare of our free liberty-loving people, or will the men we send to Washington betray the confidence of the people by knuckling down to the Communist-dominated CIO-PAC?

As indicated by recent statements in the press, certain Members of this Congress, including myself, have been placed on the blacklist and branded by the CIO-PAC. Of the 22 Members of the House and 10 Members of the Senate on this list, 4 of us come from Missouri. These men have been singled out and marked for defeat by the CIO-PAC for two principal reasons.

First, we have steadfastly refused to vote for measures that would fritter away to the four winds of the world the wealth and resources of the United States. By tremendous propaganda campaigns and the use of huge slush funds, the giving away and dissipation of our wealth has been popularized in certain quarters. It appears to me that those of us who have voted to conserve American resources thus assuring us of strength and prosperity among our own people have voted truly American. Our people are big-hearted and are ready and willing to help others to a certain degree but to give and loan our resources to such an extent as advocated by the New Deal Communists would mean a weakened America. Surely we love our neighbors but after all, does not charity begin at home?

The second big reason why a few of us have been singled out as special targets by the CIO-PAC-New Deal crowd is that we have consistently voted against attempts to regiment out people; we have blocked measures tending toward state socialism and we have fought for an economy of abundance rather than scarcity. We have opposed the controlled, planned economy under which we now struggle for existence and which creates one shortage after another, which is retarding reconversion and beating us down to less and less of material goods. We have voted for free enterprise in business, for a restoration of competition and the free market. We have upheld democratic capitalism as against communistic totalitarianism. We have objected to administration policies favoring big cities as against the farmers and producers of the Midwest, a glaring example being the $2,000,000,000 per year food subsidies now included in the OPA bill.

The subversive, left-wing elements are fighting us with all their might because we insist upon retaining our traditional, representative American form of government. We have voted for the kind of an America our forefathers dreamed of when they revolted from the oppressive tyranny of the king, for the kind of an America that was visualized by George Washington and Thomas Jefferson, as set forth in the Declaration of Independence and the Constitution of the United States—an America where opportunity would abound, where individual initiative would flourish, and where freedom and liberty of the individual would never be crushed.

The CIO has brazenly announced that it would spend $90,000 in four congressional districts in Missouri this time. One of the four districts is represented by a Democrat, ROGER SLAUGHTER, who does not want to see his party permanently held as the kept thing of the CIO and longer used by the PAC to complete its program of sovietizing America. But one wonders whether it is safe for a member of the Democratic Party to speak his mind. With the CIO in the saddle and complete control of the so-called Democratic Party the reward for a show of independent statesmanship as exhibited by Mr. SLAUGHTER is political extinction.

Mr. Speaker, I consider it an honor and distinction to be singled out as one of those four. If the time has come when I as a Member of the United States Congress must bow to the dictates of the radical CIO-PAC rather than do the bidding of the people of the Second Congressional District of Missouri whom I represent and to whom I am responsible, then I am ready and willing to be defeated; for if the people of Missouri are so passive as to let them get away with this, representative government is at an end—it is good-by America.

It is difficult to distinguish between the New Deal and communism. It is hard to tell where one begins and the other leaves off. The American people have been hoodwinked and caught napping. Under the Democratic Party label, subversive elements have flourished and are wrecking our republican form of government. Our one big hope is that the Republican Party can meet this challenge; that it can prove to be the strong, effective agency to which we may turn in confidence in this hour of crisis. Inasmuch as the Republican Party has not yet become tainted by left-wing influence, it represents our one big hope of keeping America American.

Mr. Speaker, Congress is the last remaining bulwark assuring our people against the loss of their freedom. America will be as strong as the collective strength and integrity of the men we send to Congress. If the people's representatives compromise with their consciences and become political opportunists, selling their souls, so to speak, for a few votes; if our citizens are willing to put up with moral weaklings, ever ready to bow down to the dictates of a left-wing racketeer element, then continual decay and a backward march to medieval times can be expected. Only by independent thinking and voting can the future independence and integrity of Congress as an institution be maintained.

Abolish the Drones

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. WILLIAM LEMKE
OF NORTH DAKOTA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, August 2, 1946

Mr. LEMKE. Mr. Speaker, the time has come for America to get back to full production. The public demands goods rather than ceilings—ceilings fixed by a bureaucracy that does not know where it came from, or where it is going.

We know that the drones expect the producers and distributors to house, feed, clothe and serve them for less than cost. But intelligent and industrious people know that, that is not possible. They know and do not expect the farmer to continue to produce below cost. The manufacturer cannot continue to manufacture below cost. The distributor and retailer cannot continue to distribute and serve below cost. We must live and let live. The drones must not be permitted to sponge upon society, nor to interfere with production.

The truth is that the high cost of living and high wages and high prices are the result, not the cause, of inflation. We have inflation. We got it when we printed $28,050,000,000 paper money where we never had over $6,000,000,000 before. In addition, we have the bottlenecking of production by various bureaucratic set-ups.

J. E. McDonald, Commissioner of Agriculture of the State of Texas, sets forth the effect of a ceiling on cotton in a short statement made to the public, and also in a letter addressed to the President. The statement and letter are not only worth reading, but worth considering, and better still acting upon. Let us get America back on its feet. Below is Commissioner McDonald's statement and letter:

The OPA threat to place a ceiling on the price of 1946 cotton is unjustified, and the idea that the present cotton prices are responsible for the high cost of finished cotton goods is ridiculous.

A floor price or assurance of not less than 30 cents per pound for that portion of the 1946 cotton crop domestically consumed is necessary to encourage and enable the farmer to plant the acreage and produce adequate supplies of cotton fiber, cottonseed oil, and cottonseed protein feed for livestock, dairy, and poultry.

The statement or charge that speculation is responsible for the advance in cotton prices is untrue as is evidenced by the fact that the cotton market has advanced only 2 cents per pound since the Government's first estimate of 12,000,000 bales published in August and their final estimate of 9,000,000 bales published in December. The stocks of cotton owned and controlled by the Government contain very little desirable cotton, although the world demand for the better grades and staple is the greatest in a generation, and the merchant's stock of cotton goods is at an uncomfortably low level.

As to who gets the major portion of the consumer's dollar spent for cotton goods, it might be well to remember that 1 pound of cotton, currently selling at around 24 cents, makes two men's shirts—now selling at around $3 each, and that 1 pound of cotton makes 9½ yards of high quality percale or dress gingham—currently selling at about 60 cents per yard when available. It might also be well to remember that 1 pound of cotton makes 4 pairs of men's shorts—presently selling at around $1 per pair.

J. E. McDONALD,
Commissioner.

AUSTIN, TEX.

President HARRY S. TRUMAN,
The White House,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. PRESIDENT: I commend your Christian and humanitarian desire to feed the starving and clothe the naked of the world and I believe it a duty to present the following for your consideration and action:

First. The existing shortage of commodities and food is due to the policies of former administrations and principally to the Agriculture Department's program under the direction of former Secretary of Agriculture, Henry Wallace, a program that destroyed crops, hogs, and cattle and then attempted to regiment and control the American farmer by holding commodity prices below the cost of production and attempting to pacify the farmer by giving him subsidies.

Second. The unrestricted OPA program, under the direction of impractical administrators who imposed fallacious and uneconomic regulations, has confused, handicapped, and made it impossible for agriculture, industry, business, and labor to produce adequately.

Third. Mr. President, you have been a farmer and you must know that it is economically impossible for the farmer to produce adequately, not only for our domestic needs but for the starving and destitute of other nations as long as he is handicapped by such uneconomic and destructive price fixing.

Lastly, Mr. President, I know you are not responsible for the existing situation because you inherited it. However, the solution is not too complicated. It is simple if handled with courage and fortitude. We know that in order to pay sufficient taxes to liquidate the stupendous Government debt, we must have high-priced commodities and high-wage levels which will apply not only to agricultural and industrial workers but also to what is known as the "white collar" group. Money is merely a medium of exchange and prices and wages adjusted at higher levels is the only way we can avoid runaway inflation and finally restore a sound economy. As the founder of the Democratic Party, Thomas Jefferson, said in effect, "When the Government attempts to control agricultural production, then the people will go hungry."

Therefore, I urge removal or liberal adjustments upward of the present destructive OPA price-ceiling fixing and other destructive regulations and once again give the American farmer, labor, industry, and business the opportunity to produce and distribute adequately. This is the only way we will produce for our domestic needs and carry out your plan to feed and clothe the destitute of foreign nations. May God bless you and inspire you, our Congress, and our judiciary and give our people the trio leadership so essential to the preservation of our American heritage and a peaceful world civilization.

J. E. McDONALD,
Texas Commissioner of Agriculture.

Controlled Economy Russian, Not American Way

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. MAX SCHWABE
OF MISSOURI
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, July 26, 1946

Mr. SCHWABE of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, on election day our people will have a choice between a free market in which there will be a liberal supply of goods at prices that will warrant production, or a return to a regulated market in which supplies for the legitimate trade will again dry up while the black markets flourish once more. We must have prices that will stimulate production and legitimate trade.

Competition will force prices to level off on a plateau determined by costs of production. Can consumers ever hope for a better deal than this? Our economy must be in the interests of all segments of society. Equal opportunity and justice to everyone can best be assured if we are free of controls. If all production and trading are in the open and above-board, there is no opportunity to gouge in special deals. Black markets exist only when there are laws, rules, or regulations to be evaded.

If we continue to go European in our thinking and acting is not it likely that we shall be burdened by the same economic results? Will not the specialized mass-production economy, from which so many economic blessings flow, if subjected to controls, run down, wither up, gasp, and actually, literally die? In its stead will we not get a degenerated economy, one of the primitive, self-contained types, one with some carry-over embellishments of the mechanical era, no doubt, but one, nevertheless, quite like those which have damned most of the nations of this earth for most of the time controls of one sort or another have prevailed?

Automobiles cannot be mass produced except in a free market. In the absence of a market there can be nothing but a bureaucratic barter system in which such exchange as there is, is determined by politics and favoritism. This latter system is what the American people are being asked to accept in the place of a market economy.

Why has Russia not mass-produced automobiles? Why has Russia only one-sixth of the standard of living of America? She has the raw materials—more than we do. She has fertile soils and friendly climates and her people are not lazy or afraid of work. The answer is, Russian citizens live under controls. Individual energies are not released. Decisions for daily, personal living rest with cops and councils. Authority for discharge of responsibility does not reside in the person burdened with the responsibility. The Russians move as a herd—only as their shepherd directs. They do not act as persons exercising initiative. Self-direction, self-determination, self-reliance are concepts their powerful masters reject.

Russia has as much as one-sixth of our standard of living because her controls are only five-sixths effective. She has a one-sixth leakage of free human energy—energy that has not been stamped out by cops and councils, and this is why more Russians do not starve.

Over in Russia, says former Congressman Pettengill, where they have a perpetual OPA, enforced by the Russian Gestapo, a suit of clothes costs $248. How does Mr. Bowles explain that? Curious, is it not, that we once jailed men under NRA for selling too cheap, and now under OPA for selling too dear? This is what Henry Wallace calls planned economy.

It has been the practice of OPA to subsidize production of consumer goods the public is demanding. In other words, if we want butter and raise a howl about its nonproduction, Mr. Bowles and his boys step in with a pocketful of tax money and give it to the creamery operators so that they can afford to produce butter. This they do instead of allowing a raise in prices. This they do in spite of the fact that they are contributing to the inflationary movement of the Nation's economy. By paying out borrowed money from the Federal Treasury they are stimulating inflation by increasing the amount of money in circulation, increasing the debt that our children must pay in the form of taxes and they are only postponing the day of reckoning. It is a fallacy to believe that inflation can be avoided by increasing the supply of money, and that is exactly what Federal subsidies do.

During the past 4 years OPA and its food subsidies have cost the American people at least $6,207,168,000 in direct Government expenditures. This would be enough $20 bills to reach from coast to coast 10 times. It also means an average of $171 added to the bill of each income taxpayer.

This figure includes only direct expenditures from the United States Treasury. It does not include indirect expenditures such as interest or cost of administering subsidies. Nor does it include the billions of dollars paid by consumers for inferior quality merchandise at ceiling prices, black-market overcharges, and cost of higher-priced alternatives after standard brands had been driven off the market.

The total includes: Total losses and direct subsidies paid by Reconstruction Finance Corporation, $3,369,643,000; losses on price support programs and subsidies paid by the Commodity Credit Corporation, $2,186,950,000; administrative expenditures by the Office of Price Administration, $650,575,884; making a total OPA cost of $6,207,168,884.

The controlled economy under which we struggle is particularly hard on farmers who must plan their operations many months ahead. Who can tell what regulations may be forthcoming? Also the farmer casts fewer votes than his city cousins and the vote-crazy politicians will under a controlled economy cater to that segment of our populace who can deliver the most votes. The farmer can never compete in the labor market with industry except in a free economy. We continue to draft farm youths into the Army and Navy while at the same time we spend $25,000,000 per year to import agricultural workers.

To regain normal peacetime production we must eliminate price fixing by untrained politicians and reinstall price administration by normal economic processes based upon good sound American competitive enterprise.

National and International Issues

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF

HON. WILLIAM LEMKE

OF NORTH DAKOTA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, August 2, 1946

Mr. LEMKE. Mr. Speaker, I wish to state that I know there is confusion and bewilderment, not only on State, but on national and international issues. I also know that some of these issues are based upon assumed and not real facts. Our Nation is rumbling along on a strange highway in an international vehicle. Our people are sitting carefree in the rumble seat—in a "What do I care" attitude.

There is no crystallized public opinion because 90 percent of all our avenues of publicity are in the hands of a little international clique—international gangsters and horse traders that are out to fleece America—to sell America short. These control the radio, the metropolitan press, and the theater. They are ably assisted by the bureaucracy in Washington that has fastened its poisonous tentacles on the throat of America. These use the taxpayers' money to spread and disseminate false propaganda.

The American people tolerate this because they are not aware of the facts. But we are beginning to find ourselves—to put two and two together. I have confidence in the average intelligence, justice, and common sense of the people. I have confidence in the coming younger generation.

During the coming campaign, we should give to the voters all the facts and all the issues as we have witnessed and experienced them on and off the floor of Congress. Yes, as we have experienced and witnessed them in talking to farmers, laborers, and small business and professional men throughout the Nation.

We should find no fault with anyone who differs with us. He has as much right to differ with us as we have with him. All we should ask is that he be honest, that he do his own thinking. I am not interested in individuals who take their orders from New York, whether it be from the PAC or from the international banking or manufacturing group.

Neither am I interested in those who send threatening telegrams to Congressmen, claiming that they control the voters of their State. I know such an assertion is an insult to the electorate. The people of my State, and I am sure of all States, know how to do their own voting. Neither you, I, or anyone else carries their votes in his pocket. They are not voting machines for any individual, especially not for those with foreign ideologies—those who would give the farmer's and laborer's domestic market to foreign nations, those who would give away and deplete our natural resources that belong to unborn generations.

As Members of Congress, it is our duty and our responsibility to do the voting for the people of our States and Nation on national and international issues. The people of our States expect us to base that vote not on the orders of any hybrid or hyphenated American. They expect us to base that vote, not upon false propaganda or assumed facts but upon the facts as they are developed before congressional committees and on the floor in open debate.

They expect us to vote on every issue for what we believe to be for the best interest of our State and Nation. I know that 95 percent of the people of my State expect me to do just that. After the election, they expect me to vote as a citizen and not as a partisan. They expect me to vote for the best interest of my State and Nation.

I am talking today on behalf of Americans—on behalf of the men and women who made our Nation truly great. I am not talking on behalf of any foreign element. I am not interested in any person who thinks more of other nations than of his own. I am not interested in anyone who would substitute a mongrel flag for the Stars and Stripes. I am for America first, last, and all the time. Let that sink deep into your conscience.

As long as I am a Member of Congress, I shall never forget that my first duty is to the men and women of my State and of my Nation. I have never found it necessary to ride two horses at the same time. You never had to guess where I stood on public issues. You may not always agree with me, neither do I always agree with you. That is as it should be in a democracy. We all grow by an honest difference of opinion. If we all agreed on everything, we would soon decay both mentally and physically. I always have, and always shall, welcome honest difference of opinion.

We all agree that there are some things going on here in Washington that are not healthy for democracy. We are just beginning to realize that we have been sleeping at the switch. We have allowed a large part of our form of Government to slip away from us. We asked our

Uncle Sam for donations, relief, and aid for all kinds of projects for our States. These our Uncle has given us, but the price he exacted—government by bureaucracy—has come too high. In our desire to get something for nothing, for our States, we forgot that "the price of liberty is eternal vigilance."

Now we realize that there are men in key positions here in Washington that are stifling the Nation's activities. These have arrogantly made themselves the bottlenecks through which the Nation's energy must flow. They have substituted their own egotistical ignorance for law. In recent years, they have not only dictated, but, actually wrote some of the laws that Congress passed. An aggressive Executive demanded this, an unalert public opinion approved it, a majority of Congress submitted to it.

But now Members of Congress of all parties are aware of this. They sense something that is un-American—that is foreign. There is a suspicion that bureaucracy has interfered with commercial and agricultural production. This could not be otherwise. There have been too many blunders—too much waste of public funds—too much favoritism—too many secret sessions—too much "the public be damned" attitude—too many stooges and "yes" men surrounding the Executive.

What our Nation needs most just now is a high standard of public morals and honesty. The Mead committee is uncovering unparalleled fraud and corruption in connection with war contracts. Some of the cost-plussers were not satisfied with padding cost items, but hoarded labor and paid it for idleness in order to increase the plus. They again manufactured defective shells that exploded and killed some of our GI's.

All of the blame cannot be put upon the cost-plussers. Some of it must be shared by the Executive and by the heads of the Army and the Navy. Some of it must be shared by Congress, and more of it by the people. To have elected one man President four times, in itself was an invitation to graft and waste. It prevented a house cleaning, which a new administration always brings about. We must blame ourselves. It was our responsibility—not the candidates.

Three years ago, I stated that as a result of a third and fourth term, there would be more graft to the square inch than there was to the square mile under the Harding administration. I stated that the White House was being turned into a commercial institution. The office of the President was used as a profit-producing racket.

While the President was busy giving birth to the Atlantic Charter and later to the war efforts, the White House occupants and hangers-on began to feel that they owned the Nation rather than that they were the servants of the Nation. A third and fourth term was more than they could stand.

Recently there has developed a new and most dangerous evil here in Washington. An evil that is not for the best interest of our people—an evil that is not compatible with our form of government. There is developing a new set of lobbyists—the lobbying of foreign ambassadors and agents. These, on occasions, entertain Members of Congress and heads of the Government at parties and dinners, with plenty of food and liquor—liquor diplomacy.

Members are invited to dine with generals and whatnots of another government. The Churchills, the Lady Astors and all the rest of the "give me" Jimmies have come or are coming to town. In addition to these foreign lobbyists, the international manufacturing and banking clique were all busy selling the British loan to the American people.

Here is the agreement that our State Department entered into with Great Britain and that a majority of Congress approved. We loaned Great Britain $4,400,000,000 at about 1½ percent interest. She is to make no payment for 5 years. After that she is to pay $50,000,000 a year when and if she feels like it. If she does make a payment, we agreed to spend it in Great Britain for buildings, installations and education. Not a cent to come back to the United States.

In addition, we canceled the $34,000,000,000 Great Britain already owed us, for $650,000,000. That is less than 2 cents on the dollar. This $650,000,000 was deducted from the $4,400,000,000 loan. In other words, we settled the $34,000,000,000 that Great Britain owed us with $650,000,000 of our own taxpayers' money.

If that was not financially highjacking us by our State Department, then I do not know the meaning of that word. It was a fraud and a deception upon America. On top of this we made Britain a gift of about four or five billion dollars' worth of surplus property and installations, that we owned and built in the United Kingdom and that belonged to us. In addition, the Mead Committee revealed recently that we sold Great Britain $6,000,000,000 worth of war surplus at less than 10 cents on the dollar.

If we are to judge Great Britain by the past, she will not pay back one penny. She will again call us Uncle Shylock instead. She may still have some virtues left, but she possesses neither shame, modesty, nor common honesty when she is dealing with Uncle Sam.

Of course, our international bankers and manufacturers wanted us to give Great Britain a credit for $4,400,000,000. Over the radio a short time ago, Senator BROOKS asked multimillionaire Philip D. Reede, chairman of the board of directors of General Electric, if he would loan some of his own and General Electric's millions to Great Britain on the same terms that he asked Uncle Sam to loan the taxpayers' money.

Mr. Reede first turned pink and then purple, sputtered and said that that was different. Yes; it would be quite different because then he would have lost his millions, in place of getting the taxpayers' millions through his clever scheme by which he would sell us down the river. He would then not be able to sell General Electric equipment above ceiling prices to Great Britain, and get paid for it with the taxpayers' dollars—equipment that our own people want and need.

By this method Great Britain gets the things that we need, and that belong to future generations, and Mr. Reede and his other international cronies get most of the taxpayers' $3,750,000,000. In the meantime, our Uncle Sam calls upon us to buy more and more bonds to furnish the credit to Great Britain so she can turn it over to the General Electric and other international manufacturers and bankers.

I do not blame Britain. I blame our own stupidity. The British Government and its citizens have billions and billions invested in the United States—billions more in Argentina and other Latin-American nations. They own and control many of our insurance companies. They made $8,000,000,000 out of lend-lease, by selling products we gave them for war purposes, to civilians, and then forgot to turn over the cash.

This gift to Great Britain is just a forerunner. It is a bad precedent. It will be looked upon as a pattern by 50 other nations. They will demand similar gifts, and if refused, will consider it an unfriendly act. Already we have made a loan—gift of $1,300,000,000 to France and $50,000,000 to Poland. Russia, while still liquidating other nations' people, and stealing their territory and goods, asks for at least a billion. It is about time that Congress halt the foreign ideologies in the State Department.

With the proceeds of these loans—with the taxpayers' money—and with what they have made out of lend-lease, these nations will continue to buy the things that American people want and need. They will continue the international black market—continue to buy American goods above the ceiling price.

Do you know that many foreign nations still have purchasing commissions here? These commissions were authorized to purchase whatever they needed during the war. Their needs have grown ever since the war ended, so that much of America's needed goods are on the ocean.

There is no Government official who can tell you or who knows the amount of building material, lumber, farm machinery, and wearing apparel, that is being shipped out of this country. All they know is that there is a scarcity of goods—empty shelves. Some will frankly tell you that they cannot understand this blind policy of wrecking our own Nation in trying to play Santa Claus to all the world.

Is our State Department inviting disaster? There is a feeling that it represents other nations rather than our own. There must be a house cleaning. We are not going to continue to buy bonds to make gifts to foreign nations—nations that are in better financial condition than we are.

In place of begging for more, Great Britain should offer to pay the $34,000,000,000 she owed us. The $34,000,000,000 that we canceled by counting out $650,000,000 of our own money. If she paid that, then we could give to every GI of World War II a check for $3,600. We could give to every voter in the United States a check for $666.

Let us clear away the wreckage, and help to build the world anew, but, all the time let us keep in mind that "charity begins at home." America will not continue to sell its domestic markets in order to bribe good neighbors. Neighbors you have to bribe are not neighbors, but enemies. We will not mingle our standard of living with the poverty of other nations, but we will assist them in bringing their standards up to ours.

Universal peace has been the desire of mankind throughout the ages. It is our desire. No sane person wants another world war or any war. Universal understanding and brotherhood is the teaching of Christ. But the solution of how to end all wars has not yet been discovered. It cannot be brought about by selling America down the river. In our desire for universal peace, let us be on guard, lest we follow false prophets and plunge civilization into World War III.

In the United Nations Charter there is a nucleus out of which may come lasting peace, but it will not come merely because there is a charter. If it comes, it will come because we are alert—because we will not again fall asleep at the switch. It will come because a great majority of the people of all nations, in spite of their governments, are getting tired of hating and destroying the people of other nations. "Live and let live" must be our policy in the future. We must not again be misled by the venom of the unthinking, but be guided by the calm level of American opinion.

Under these conditions, do you not agree that it is about time that we call a halt to our Government wrecking our Nation by acting as an international Santa Claus? Do you not agree with me that our first duty is to our own people with full cooperation and collaboration with all the other nations for a just and lasting peace?

Hon. Jed Johnson of Oklahoma

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. JOE HENDRICKS
OF FLORIDA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Friday, August 2, 1946

Mr. HENDRICKS. Mr. Speaker, I want to take just a few moments to say what I am sure is inadequate about my friend and colleague, the Honorable JED JOHNSON of Oklahoma.

I have had the pleasure of serving in the Congress of the United States for 10 years and for over 5 years I have served on the Appropriations Committee, of which Congressman JOHNSON is a member. I have had the pleasure of knowing JED JOHNSON intimately for these many years. I found him to be a man of sound judgment, sterling character, and great sincerity. We all deeply regret that JED will end his service in the Congress of the United States in January 1947. I am sure that all Members join me in wishing him much success and happiness in the future.

Farm Legislation of Interest to Farmers

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. CHARLES A. WOLVERTON
OF NEW JERSEY
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Friday, August 2, 1946

Mr. WOLVERTON of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, during the last session there were several bills passed by Congress affecting the welfare of farmers which are entitled to some mention:

PRODUCTION AND MARKETING RESEARCH, H. R. 6932

This bill, known as the agricultural research bill, if properly and intelligently administered, can prove of great service in promoting the future welfare of American farmers. The optimist thinks that this bill can supply the answer to most of our agricultural problems. Although I cannot be equally optimistic about it, yet I do feel that eventually—if properly administered—it can perform a real beneficial service. It purports to conduct research studies in the fields of production, utilization, and marketing. In other words, the scope of its studies and surveys will extend through the whole field of agriculture from production until the products finally reach the table of the consumer. It also calls for research into new and more profitable uses of the products of the soil.

Farm marketing is given special consideration in the bill. We will all agree that farm marketing, more than any other element affecting the welfare of the farmer, has been sadly neglected in the past, and, none deserves more careful study, or, presents a better opportunity of worth-while results. This will not be an easy study to make, but if the proper kind of personnel is placed in charge, it can prove successful and helpful. Altogether, I think, we can look with assurance that something beneficial will result from the over-all provisions of the bill.

2. FARMERS HOME CORPORATION, H. R. 5991

The purpose of this bill is to gather into one bill the best provisions of Executive orders, appropriation bills, and the Bankhead-Jones Act under which Farm Security Administration has functioned, and discard the half-baked crackpot projects and undertakings heretofore carried on by the old Farm Administration. It seeks to provide basic law for a well considered and coordinated rehabilitation and farm-tenant program.

I desire to call particular attention to the provision in the bill making possible insured loans to farm tenants similar to loans that have been made by the Federal Housing Administration. In other words, this provision will enable farm tenants to be treated in as favorable manner as city tenants have been for many years. Under the terms of this provision local banks, financial institutions, and individuals can now safely make loans to tenants purchasing farms, as such loans will be insured by the Federal Government. This should go a long way in financing farm purchases. Qualified veterans are given preference under the tenant program. While it may be expected that the Government will suffer some losses, yet, every reasonable precaution has been thrown around the program. Consequently it is not anticipated that such losses, if any, will ever be great. But even if some losses might occur the great benefits gained by changing tenants into land owners is considerable. Farm ownership is one of the best guaranties to the perpetuation of this Nation, the ideals for which it stands, and the American way of life.

3. AGRICULTURAL EXTENSION WORK, H. R. 1690–S. 383

This bill increased the authorization of funds so that there might be an expansion of services in the interest of those who live and work on the farm. This bill for the first time gives recognition to the work of the 4–H Clubs, and provides help in the work they seek to do.

The boys and girls associated with the activities of the 4–H Clubs are recognized as making a great contribution to real Americanism as well as making a worth while contribution to agriculture. These clubs are training schools in Americanism.

Our Nation needs the type of men and women that will come from the membership of our 4–H Clubs.

The bill also provides for the expansion of the work done by county agriculture agents, home demonstration agents, county extension agents, State field agents in marketing, rural housing, nutrition, and rural youth farm management. All of these services have justified their existence by the fine work each has done in its respective field of activity.

4. AMENDMENT OF THE FARM LOAN ACT H. R. 2113

This bill increases the loan value on farms up to 65 percent of the normal earning capacity, clarifies certain provisions of the law, sets up a more efficient farm-mortgage-credit system for farmers, and simplifies procedure so farmers may obtain agricultural credit in accordance with normal business practices and efficiency.

The Federal Land Bank System has been of great service, not only to the American farmer, but to our whole economy. The system has stood the test. The report shows that 11 out of 12 banks in the system have paid back every cent of Government capital and are today farmer-owned and controlled. The other bank will be able to retire all Government capital in a short while, then, the entire system will be farmer owned and controlled.

5. EXTENDING SOIL CONSERVATION ACT, H. R. 6459

This bill extends for a period of 2 years from January 1, 1947, within which the Secretary of Agriculture may carry out the purposes of the Soil Conservation and Domestic Allotment Act by making payments to agricultural producers. This is done to afford States an opportunity to take legislative action which would enable them to carry out the programs through grants made by the Federal Government.

The protection, rebuilding, and improvement of our soil is of prime importance, not only to the farmers, but to the Nation as a whole. This is one of our greatest agricultural programs. Its importance entitles it to be protected and strengthened in every reasonable way.

6. CONTINUING FARM LABOR SUPPLY, H. R. 6828

This bill provides for the continuance of the farm labor supply program to June 30, 1947, and authorizes an appropriation of such funds as are necessary for such program. I think everyone will agree that if it had not been for this program our war food effort would have been badly crippled.

7. HOBBS ANTIRACKETEERING BILL, H. R. 32

My speech in favor of this bill appears in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of Wednesday, December 12, 1945. I said, in part:

Mr. Speaker, the so-called antiracketeering bill before the House is designed to protect trade and commerce moving between States against interference by violence, threats, coercion, or intimidation.

The hearings conducted by the Committee on the Judiciary of the House during April and May of 1942 left no doubt in the mind of any fair-minded person that in different places in the Nation illegal and unconscionable practices were being pursued that prevented farmers from bringing their produce into large cities unless and until they met demands of certain members of local teamsters unions for payment of tribute.

Certainly no law-abiding citizen would countenance for even a moment the acts of extortion that have been shown to be practiced against farmers in their honest endeavor to take their produce into legitimate markets for the benefit of the consuming public.

I had hoped that local and State law enforcement officers in our large cities, where the violations usually occur, would measure up to a complete fulfillment of their duties as such officers and enforce the laws against extortion and violence in cases affecting our farmers. But unfortunately in many instances they have not done so. This failure makes it reasonable and necessary for the Federal Government to step in and do this all-important job of protecting law-abiding citizens from acts of extortion and violence.

For the above reasons I shall vote for the pending bill.

8. RAILROAD AND COAL STRIKE LEGISLATION

The welfare of farmers, as well as citizens generally, was greatly endangered by the threat of a general railroad strike. Already great inconvenience had been caused by a continued coal strike which if continued would paralyze industry throughout the Nation, close down public utilities and bring unparalleled distress to all our people whether on farm or in city.

With this situation facing the country, legislation to prevent the catastrophe was introduced. I voted for the bill. In my speech in support of the bill, I said:

Mr. Speaker, the most outstanding and important issue facing our Nation today is whether any group, representative of industry or labor, can strike against the Government. There can be but one answer. There is no right to strike against America. As the President has so well and forcibly said, "The welfare of the country must come first."

The issue in the railroad and coal mining disputes is no longer solely between management and men. Failure of representatives of the railroad and coal mining industries to agree between themselves required the President in the public interest to take over for Government operation these two great industries.

The operation of these industries is unquestionably vital to the welfare of our people. Without the operation of either, the health, progress, and well-being of our people would be seriously threatened. Without both, the result would be disastrous. Cessation of operation is unthinkable. It cannot be tolerated.

The bill presented on behalf of the President is the result of an emergency that cannot continue without bringing distress to our people, ruin to the industry, and chaos to our economic structure. It would threaten the very structure of government. The final result could be one that no patriotic American would wish to contemplate.

Maintenance of the sovereignty of our Government is at stake. In such a case can there be any duty we owe to our country of greater magnitude than to preserve, by whatever means necessary, the sovereignty of our Government? It is the source of all the freedoms we hold dear and the means by which they are made secure.

However, the underlying purpose of the bill is to establish in the President of the United States, as representative of all the people, the necessary authority to assert the sovereign power of the Government to protect the welfare of the people and their Government. To the maintenance of this principle I unqualifiedly give my support.

FUTURE LEGISLATION

The legislation to which I have referred consists of only some of the important pieces of farm legislation passed by Congress during the session of Congress just closed. They do not by any means begin to cover all that was done. Furthermore, it may be properly said that all legislation acted upon by Congress, numerous and varied though it is, affects the farmer in some way or other. Today, the life and activity of this Nation is so complex that all of us whether on farm or in the city, whether we live in the North, South, East, or West section of this great country, are so integrated and bound together that what affects one affects the other. Therefore, when the man who labors in the city is prosperous it creates prosperity for the farmer. Similarly, when the farmer is prosperous the man who labors in industry is prosperous. It therefore behooves each of us to think in terms of our brother. It can be truthfully said, "No man liveth unto himself alone." What we need in America today, and, and what we need in the world today, is more of the spirit of brotherhood, that will enable us to understand each other and more fully appreciate our responsibility and duty toward each other.

And, now just a word or two with reference to some things that should be considered when the next Congress convenes:

1. CONSOLIDATION AND COORDINATION OF AGRICULTURAL LENDING AGENCIES

All Federal agricultural lending agencies should be consolidated. It would tend to greater efficiency, be more businesslike, and create an agricultural credit system that would invite confidence and give strength. By so doing the Agricultural Lending System could enjoy the same confidence and respect as the Federal Reserve System enjoys in the field of business and finance.

2. PARITY PRICE FOR FARM PRODUCTS

Unfortunately, the farmer cannot regulate his price as does industry, nor can he turn on or shut off production as does industry. Because of this there is created one of the most difficult problems that the farmer is called upon to deal with. However, it is a problem that must be solved if we are ever to have any degree of stabilization in agriculture or a sound business basis for its operation. We speak of parity as a means to reach this result. However, few will agree upon the exact formula to be applied. But in the final analysis parity is nothing more or less than an effort to fix a relationship between those things the farmer sells and those things the farmer buys. In other words, it seeks to give the farmer's dollar the same purchasing power as the consumer's dollar, and conversely it seeks to give the consumer's dollar the same purchasing power as the farmer's dollar. The purpose is to keep the industrial dollar, the labor dollar, and the farm dollar on a parity—on an equality. However, inasmuch as farm wages are not figured in determining parity, the present parity formula does not maintain a correct price relationship. The parity formula should be revised so as to bring about a better and fairer price relationship, and when this is done farm wages should be written into the formula. On two occasions the House has passed such legislation. The Senate in each instance failed to act.

3. FARM SUBSIDIES

If I correctly interpret the letters I receive from the farmers in the First Congressional District it would seem that the majority of them are opposed to subsidies and desire their elimination. What these farmers do want, and are entitled to have, is a fair price for their products in the market place. They would rather look to the market place than to the Government for their pay.

CONCLUSION

There are many other questions which I am sure will occur to the thoughtful mind as important enough to be the subject of legislation. I have not attempted to enumerate all of the questions, but, only those most outstanding, and most likely to receive consideration in the new Congress. Of course, during the time that intervenes there are many new conditions that may arise growing out of world conditions that will vitally affect the farmers and require attention. And, then there are our continuing domestic problems, that cry aloud for relief, such as reduction of cost of government, reduction of taxes, less controls and less of other forms of regimentation, greater production to meet shortages and all the numerous and varied problems growing out of the change from a war economy to a peace time economy.

In the solution of the many questions of an agricultural nature, as well as otherwise, that have come before Congress it has been most helpful to have the views and opinions of National, State, and local farm leaders, and, likewise of the farmers themselves.

In the fulfillment of my duties in the future the necessity of having the benefit of all such views is just as great as it has been in the past. It is always helpful in the performance of my congressional duties to have expressions of views from the farmers that I have the privilege to represent. Their views are always thoughtful, sound, and truly American. They believe in the American system of government and the American way of life in preference to any of the foreign isms. There is nothing more necessary in America today.

Tribute to World War II Heroes

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. JAMES G. FULTON

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, August 2, 1946

Mr. FULTON. Mr. Speaker, there have been given to me by public-spirited citizens of several communities in the southern part of Allegheny County, Pa.—suburbs of Pittsburgh, Pa.—the names of the fine boys of these towns who laid down their lives in World War II.

These boys are the ones who are represented by the gold stars on the service flags, but they should be enshrined in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD for future generations to know the willing sacrifice they have each made. The families of these boys know their loss full well, and the country should know its deep obligation to these boys who gave everything that their fellow men should know freedom under the United States flag.

I am submitting for public memory the names of the following boys:

Brentwood: Thomas E. Britt, Jack Ewald Eckhardt, Owen U. Fox, Malcolm J. Gerlach, Jr., Robert W. Heintze, Richard L. Herpich, Robert Knobloch, Ernest F. Nash, Franklin G. Osterman, Robert E. Parkins, Karl F. Scrable, Robert S. Spieth, Warren K. Taylor, Robert J. Thomas, Edward P. Vickless, George Voynick, Jr.

Carnegie: Jack Adragna, Frank L. Baker, Francis L. Barr, Robert F. Bigham, Thomas Blair, George Brose, Peter Chiodo, John W. Cole, Frank J. Cyprowski, George Davidson, Wayne G. Davies, Joseph Davis, J. G. Donovan, Frank J. Dubiel, Michael Dudicz, John Dudish, William J. Erb, Joseph Fallick, Larry Fallick, Thomas M. Gannon, John D. Haudenshield, Jack Haywood, William James Hines, Anthony Kish, Andrew Kolonsky, Michael Koss, Eugene Peter Kuc, Metro Kuncho, Ben Kunsman, Andrew Lober, Carl Marchese, John A. McWilliams, Louis A. Nagy, William Thomas Phillips, Frank E. Pollock, George Popivchak, Charles W. Prescott, J. J. Roach, Albert Salvato, Joseph Saracena, George E. Seyerle, Frank Solominsky, William H. Telthorster, John A. Timcheck, Harry C. Walls, Charles W. Weiss, Metro Wengryn, John E. Wilson, Alphonse E. Witwicki, John Yarmeak, Edward J. Zawilla, Michael Zue.

Crafton: Frank P. Alamovich, John Bilque, Frank F. Brand, Charles C. Cerar, James M. Clark, Edward J. Cox, Arthur L. Davis, John Dzurichko, William C. Fitch, James Hilliard, Russell Kernoll, Jr., Walter G. Loos, Jr., J. Regis McConaghey, Roy C. McKenna, James Picard, Vincent Scafoglio, Joseph Shema, Jr., John O. Spear, James D. Toney, Charles E. Voelker, Almon L. Voye, John D. Weaver, Calvin Welker, Leonard Wood.

Dormont: Louis Abraham, Bert Ainsworth, Donald A. Anthony, George E. Bair, John F. Baney, John Blehi, David A. Boxell, Jr., Earl F. Cannon, Jr., Charles A. Dimmock, Kenneth Finsness, Albert Gough, William H. Harshbarger, Jack Heberling, James H. Homer, Cadwick B. Jarrett, William P. Joyce, Wesley A. Keating, W. R. Kimball, Howard L. Kirschner, Allan D. Klinzing, Richard H. Knecht, Evan M. Lewis, Howard A. Macher, Clayton J. Mansfield, Richard J. Morris, William R. Pankuch, William J. Rennick, Anthony Rocco, Peter Rocco, William E. Stakeley, George J. Vandergrift, Earl F. Weaver, Robert J. Will, Edward A. Yochum.

Mt. Lebanon: George E. Abbott, William C. Arthur, Thomas Herbert Aston, John D. Atwood, Wallace Baker, Robert W. Bamford, Stephen Bleecker, Richard W. Blumenstine, John B. Bowden, John A. Boyd, Arthur B. Cahall, Jr., Robert D. Campbell, Jr., Roy R. Cappe, Charles E. Casper, L. Richard Cope, John Corsa, Richard Leslie Cranston, Robert J. Creps, Paul Dean, Elmer E. Deiss, Jr., Norman Elliott, Joseph Gurecky, Robert R. Hainline, Thomas J. Herkey, James W. Hendon, Burtis Hogsett, William Ibrie Hood, Paul A. Hughes, Jr., Charles Joseph Hugus, Bailey R. Krek, Frank T. Lewis, Robert S. Lewis, Richard H. Mager, Charles Markle, Jack L. Marshall, Robert C. Mayfield, Robert E. McElroy, James C. McGinnis, John Richard McNally, Thomas W. McSteen, James M. McVay, Thomas D. Meyers, Rolla W. Miller, Jr., James B. Mossman, William Murchison, Paul A. Mullen, Thomas Earl Murphy, George Robert Orr, William J. Parr, William Z. Price, Jr., Robert E. Quaid, Charles V. Rentschler, George D. Shields, Jr., E. Ralph Sherrick, Jr., Ugo Siconolfi, Phillip M. Smith, John M. Stewart, Jr., Charles H. Stoutt, William W. Sumner, Charles B. Swartz, Jr., William Harvey Thomas, Jr., Thomas Vollbrecht, E. George Vom Hofe, James T. Weir, Wesley R. Weldon, William Weseman, and Ralph Wolf.

Several families of our congressional district, the Thirty-first District of Pennsylvania, have made outstanding contributions to the war effort; among these are the McCool family and the Farenzena family from the southern part of Allegheny County.

It is a pleasure as their friend to introduce for public memory, on the recommendation of Dr. Dante Pigossi, of Bridgeville, Pa., the following examples of patriotic devotion by these fine families:

In the McCool family, two out of five who served their country, made the supreme sacrifice. Louis Albert McCool, who enlisted in the Army on December 10, 1942, was made a second lieutenant a year later, and was to receive his wings in the Air Corps on January 4, 1944, lost his life in flight that same day in Marianna, Fla., at the age of 22. Lawrence Robert McCool, who enlisted in the Air Corps in 1943, was commissioned a second lieutenant prior to his plane crash in southern Italy in 1944, received the Purple Heart, the Distinguished Flying Cross, and other air medals, and had completed all but two missions before losing his life. The other members of the McCool family in the service were Vincent John McCool, who has reenlisted in the Army and is now serving in Manila; Christopher D. McCool, who served 4 years in the Army and was a first lieutenant with the Air Corps Engineers; and William Edward McCool, who served 3 years in the Army Air Corps and was discharged as a first lieutenant.

The Farenzena family gave six members to the service, one of whom John Farenzena, the holder of the Silver Star and the Purple Heart, made the supreme sacrifice on June 6, 1944, in France after 2 years with the Army engineers. Louis Joseph Farenzena served 3 years in the Army Air Corps and was discharged as a sergeant in 1945. Adele Farenzena, who enlisted in the Women's Army Corps in 1942, has now been commissioned a first lieutenant. Vincent Farenzena served 7 years with the Air Corps and was awarded the Purple Heart before his discharge with the rank of sergeant. Margaret Farenzena served 2 years in the Women's Marine Corps Reserve from 1944 to 1946 and was discharged as a corporal. Ernest Farenzena enlisted in the Navy in March 1945 and is still serving as a seaman, first class.

Jewish Rights in Palestine

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. CHARLES A. WOLVERTON

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, August 2, 1946

Mr. WOLVERTON of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, I can understand and deeply sympathize with the Jewish people in their desire to have a national homeland. Naturally, Palestine, with its historic background in the life of the Jewish people, must be considered as a desirable place for such a homeland.

It is my earnest hope that we may, through proper and peaceful measures, work out a plan to keep Palestine open as a place of refuge and of national settlement for all Jewish people who may wish to make it their place of abode. There is a responsibility upon our Nation, and it is its duty, to do everything in its power to accomplish this objective. The principles of the Atlantic Charter, for which we sacrificed and our heroic men died, create the responsibility, and impel the duty, for this Nation to demand recognition by all nations of these principles in their application to making Palestine a Jewish homeland.

As a result of the Allied victory in World War I the Arabs received sovereignty over more than 1,200,000 square miles. This territory is more than one-third the area of the continental United States. It includes six large Arab states: Saudi Arabia, the huge oil-rich territory that is the ancestral home of the Arab; Yemen, the most fertile part of the Arabian Peninsula; Iraq, site of the Mosul oil fields, a large, well-watered land which in ancient days was the seat of the empires of Assyria and Babylon, supporting a population believed to have been between 17,000,000 and 25,000,000; Trans-Jordan, three times the size of western Palestine, with far better soil and water resources; Syria and Lebanon, temperate in climate; in Hellenic and Roman times the home of a large and highly civilized population.

The Jews received only a promise. It involved Palestine, their never-forgotten historic homeland. Its small area of 10,500 square miles, west of the Jordan can be the salvation of the Jewish people. Jewish achievements in Palestine during the last 2 decades have proved this. At the beginning of the Christian era Palestine had a population of 4,000,000. With the aid of modern technology it can support far larger numbers. Dr. Walter Lowdermilk, the noted American agricultural expert, in his recent book Palestine, Land of Promise, proves that in the Jordan Valley alone room can be made for at least 4,000,000 new immigrants, without in any way disturbing Palestine's present total population of 1,500,000.

The promise issued to the Jews by the British War Cabinet with the approval of President Wilson incorporated in the League of Nations Mandate for Palestine, confirmed by the joint resolution of the Sixty-seventh Congress of the United States was as follows:

NOVEMBER 2, 1917.

DEAR LORD ROTHSCHILD: I have much pleasure in conveying to you on behalf of His Majesty's Government the following declaration of sympathy with Jewish Zionist aspirations, which has been submitted to and approved by the Cabinet:

His Majesty's Government view with favor the establishment in Palestine of a national home for the Jewish people, and will use their best endeavors to facilitate the achievements of this object, it being clearly understood that nothing shall be done which may prejudice the civil and religious rights of existing non-Jewish communities in Palestine or the rights and political status enjoyed by Jews in any other country.

I should be grateful if you would bring this declaration to the knowledge of the Zionist Federation.

Yours sincerely,

ARTHUR JAMES BALFOUR.

To make the promise come true, the Chamberlain white paper of 1939 must be made null and void. The doors of Palestine must be opened for free immigration of Jews. There must be full opportunity for land purchase, colonization and industrial development so that the Jewish people may ultimately reconstitute Palestine as a free and democratic Jewish commonwealth.

The crucial days through which we are passing may determine the position Jews are to occupy in organized society for generations to come. The relentless war that was waged against them by Nazi Germany and its allies has not only brought ruin and death to countless Jews, but it has wrecked the whole structure of rights in which Jews have lived since the beginning of the period of emancipation.

The hopes of the whole democratic world are turned at this time toward the United Nations and the Peace Conference, in the effort that is being made to establish freedom of the individual man, equality for all peoples and faiths, and for international justice.

In common with all men, Jews have a vital stake in the world peace that it is hoped will be established. The right of Jews to freedom, equality and justice should find place in the new world that is planned to emerge as a result of our victory. The economic rehabilitation of Jewish life should be made a part of the plans for world reconstruction. And the rights of the Jewish people with respect to Palestine should be fully protected and guaranteed.

The United Nations must at all times recognize that a Jewish problem has been created in Europe and the Near East, including Palestine, and the surrounding countries. It imposes an inescapable moral obligation on all nations, particularly on the democracies. This moral obligation should find expression in special practical measures which will be commensurate with the gravity and urgency of the situation, and definitely fix and determine the right to a Jewish commonwealth in Palestine. And in this connection there should also be public acknowledgment upon the part of all nations represented in the United Nations, or at the peace table, of the right of every Jewish refugee who can reach Palestine not only to find a haven there but to establish his permanent home in that country.

While it is true that all the victims of oppression, irrespective of race or faith, are entitled to aid and succor from the United Nations, yet, the situation of the Jews in Europe is unique in its tragedy. They have not only been more deeply wounded than any other people, but alone among all the subject communities they were doomed to total destruction by aggressor states.

In the First World War, the civilized nations pointed to a solution of the Jewish problem through the reconstruction of the Jewish Homeland in Palestine with which the Jewish people have been bound up historically and religiously throughout the centuries. This was expressed as I have already stated in the Balfour Declaration issued by the British Government, after consultation between the Allied and Associated Powers, on November 2, 1917, and in the Mandate for Palestine accorded to Great Britain in 1922, with the consent of the 51 member nations of the League of Nations and with the unanimous approval of the Congress of the United States.

On the basis of this international covenant, the Jewish people set itself to the task of recreating its historic homeland in Palestine. In the course of 25 years, it has demonstrated a constructive capacity which has already had a profound effect both on the hopes and outlook of the Jewish people, and on a country which had for centuries been regarded as one of the derelict areas of the world. The progress of all sections of Palestine, Arab as well as Jewish, under the stimulus of the developing Jewish Homeland is one of the most notable phenomena of our time. Furthermore, the contribution of democratic Jewish Palestine to the victories of the armies of the United Nations in the Near East has been a significant vindication of the policy initiated by world opinion and carried out in the labors and sacrifices of the Jewish people.

This period of reconstruction, however, has coincided with a general deterioration of word order and international morality. Chief among the victims of this deterioration have been the millions of Jews in Europe. Yet, despite the fact that the conditions which made imperative the reestablishment of the Jewish homeland a quarter of a century ago have been intensified beyond the darkest forebodings, the rights internationally guaranteed to the Jewish people with respect to Palestine have been progressively whittled down on grounds of administrative and political expediency until, with the promulgation of the white paper of May 1939, the solemn promise made to the Jewish people was virtually nullified and the last hope of millions of homeless Jews threatened with extinction.

Jewish people have an unquestioned right at this time when the policies of the peace are in the making to call for the loyal and faithful fulfillment of the covenant entered into between the nations of the world and the Jewish people. The plain intent of the Balfour Declaration, and of the mandate for Palestine, whose intent and underlying purpose, based on the "historical connection of the Jewish people with Palestine," was to reconstitute Palestine as a Jewish commonwealth.

The Jewish people, likewise, have an undisputed right to demand withdrawal in its entirety of the Palestine white paper of May 1939, issued by Great Britian, with its unwarranted restrictions on Jewish immigration and land settlement. The white paper is a violation of the rights accorded to the Jewish people under the mandate for Palestine. It was characterized by Mr. Winston Churchill in the House of Commons as a "breach and a repudiation of the Balfour Declaration." The Permanent Mandates Commission of the League of Nations refused to recognize its legality or its moral validity.

It is also plain that the Jewish people have a right to demand that the gates of Palestine be opened to Jewish immigration and that duly selected or appointed recognized representatives of the Jewish people be vested with authority to direct and regulate immigration into Palestine, to develop to the maximum the agricultural and industrial possibilities and the natural resources of the country and to utilize its uncultivated and unoccupied lands for Jewish colonization and for the benefit of the country as a whole. All of this to lead to and make possible the creation of a Jewish commonwealth in Palestine.

What is the duty of America? It is the duty of America, as the leading exponent of liberty and justice, to assert its leadership and demand from those who are responsible for the injustices now being laid upon the shoulders of the stricken Jewish people of Europe, a recognition of the principles of freedom and democracy for which we as allies fought. It is an empty victory for these distressed people unless and until their right to enter Palestine as a homeland is made possible, together with the right to establish there a commonwealth of their own. In the future, as in the past, I give assurance of my desire to be of every possible help in the attainment of these objectives.

Federal Aid for the Aged—Federal Aid for the Blind—Federal Aid for Dependent Children

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF

HON. THOMAS A. JENKINS

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Saturday, July 27, 1946

Mr. JENKINS. Mr. Speaker, today, the House of Representatives and the Senate concurring passed some amendments to the social-security laws of the country. These amendments are of great interest to millions of our people. They provide additional payments to the several States for the benefit of the aged, to the blind, and to dependent children. I took a very active interest in the preparation and passing of these amendments and voted for them.

I should like to make a brief analysis of these amendments.

AID FOR THE AGED

At the present time, the Federal Government will reimburse the States up to one-half the cost, or $20 per case per month, whichever is less, on benefits paid by the States to aged persons deserving of an old-age pension. Many of the Members of Congress, including myself, were anxious to increase the maximum Federal share to $25 a month with the idea that if a State would raise its share to $25 a month the deserving aged might then get as much as $50 a month. It must not be forgotten that there are some States that do not pay as high as $40 a month at this time and, consequently, this offer on the part of the Government to match $5 additional State expenditures does not mean much to those States.

Because of this fact there developed a sentiment in the House that we should abandon the principle of 50–50 matching, which has heretofore been the cardinal principle in the law providing for old age pensions. Those who advanced this sentiment maintained that the States in which wages were low should not be compelled to pay as great a proportion of the pensions as the States that paid higher wages. This policy known as Variable grants, if adopted would mean that some States would pay in $2 and get out $1; while others would pay in $1 and get out $2. I opposed this principle vigorously because I felt that the progam of requiring the States to match what the Federal Government contributed was fair and should be continued. I maintain that if any State does not want to pay its old age pensioners the maximum, that should be a matter for the local authorities in that State to decide. If Ohio pays up to $20 per month and is willing to match the Government increases that is Ohio's privileges. But if Arkansas or some other State will only pay $10 then there is no reason for the Government to increase its share above $5.

After a severe struggle in the Ways and Means Committee and in the Rules Committee of the House those favoring the principle of Variable grants gave up the contest and agreed to support the measure that would carry an increase of $5 to all eligible and blind aged people providing that the States would come forward and match this amount. If the States had done so, that would have meant a $10 general increase to many old age pensioners. The House passed this bill but the Senate reinserted the Variable grants provision.

After the bill came back to the House from the Senate it was evident that the House wanted to stand by its former action and when the bill went to a conference of Members from the House and the Senate, it was the general impression that the House conferees would insist on the House position. The conferees agreed on a modified proposition and recommended that the same be adopted by the Senate and the House. This modified proposition was adopted and the bill went to the President.

The new plan does not include the principle of "variable grants" based on State per capita income, but on the contrary it maintains the principal of equal matching for all States. The new plan is quite a departure from the present plan. The new plan provides that for the period October 1, 1946 to January 1, 1948, in computing pensions for the aged the first $15 will be paid in the proportion of $10 from the Federal Government and $5 from the State government. In other words the Federal Government will pay 66⅔ percent of the first $15 and the State will pay 33⅓ percent. The remainder of the payments over $15 would be matched on a 50–50 basis. It is likely that in those States whose law limits the amount they can pay a month, that it will be necessary for those States to pass some additional legislation in order that those who receive old age pensions might get the benefit of the increased grants from the Federal Government.

Let me give an example: Suppose an old-age pensioner in Ohio is now drawing $40 a month, the maximum pension payable under Ohio law. Under the present matching system this would cost $20 a month to the Federal Government and $20 to the State. The bill which Congress just passed authorizes the Federal Government to pay $22.50 instead of $20 on a $40 claim. If the State chooses to continue paying $20 it can afford to authorize a $5 per month increase in the $40 benefit without additional cost to the State, because under the new system a $40 claim would cost the Federal Government $22.50 and the State only $17.50 and the $2.50 saved by the State could be applied in payment of a $45 claim. In other words the State could continue paying its $20, in which case it could pay a claim of $45 per month without increasing the $20 it now pays on a $40 claim. But it would have to change its State law to increase its present $40 ceiling.

Let us see how this new law will work in Ohio in the case of a person who is drawing $27 per month. In that case the Federal Government is now paying $13.50 and the State is paying $13.50. If the State desires to continue paying $13.50 one of two things can happen—first, the State may grant a $5 increase in the total amount payable to a beneficiary without increasing the cost to the State; second, the State may add new claimants to the rolls and receive two-thirds of the first $15 paid these new claimants. In order for the State of Ohio to make all the additional payments possible under the liberalized Federal law, it will be necessary for the State legislature to meet and pass appropriate legislation.

What I have heretofore said with reference to payments to the aged will apply exactly the same to payments to the blind where all the conditions are the same. In the State of Ohio, however, the State's portion of the blind pension is not made up in the same way as the State's portion of the old-age pension. In the case of the blind, the county pays two-thirds of the State's share of the cost while the State pays the other third. Benefits under this system are not as favorable to the blind in Ohio as benefits paid to the aged. The average payments to the blind are around $28 in Ohio while the aged receive an average of around $31.50 per month.

I think the State legislature in Ohio should change this law and provide that the blind pensions shall be paid on the State-wide basis just the same as the payments for the aged. I hope the legislature will give careful consideration to this matter of adequate matching legislation so that the blind in Ohio may be given the benefit of the increase which the Federal Government is ready to pay them.

Pensions for the blind were not provided in the original social-security bill as it passed the House in 1935. I am glad to say that I made a vigorous fight at that time to have the blind included and offered an amendment to that effect. To the credit of the membership of the House, which was then overwhelmingly Democratic, they responded to my appeals most generously, but my amendment failed by a very few votes. When the bill went to the Senate, however, my amendment was incorporated in the bill in the Senate and became a part of the social-security law. For this reason I have always had a personal interest in legislation for the benefit of the blind.

This legislation which Congress has recently passed also provides for very substantial increases in grants for aid to dependent children.

I sincerely hope that the State Legislature of Ohio will enact such legislation as is necessary to give all these classes of deserving people the increases which they so sadly need.

The legislation which the House passed on August 2 carried several other provisions which I shall not discuss at this time. I am glad to say that I support all these provisions and give my most hearty support to the legislation as a whole.

Veterans' Legislation

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. THOMAS A. JENKINS
OF OHIO
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Saturday, July 27, 1946

Mr. JENKINS. Mr. Speaker, the Seventy-ninth Congress will go down in history as a Congress that passed as much and probably more legislation in the interest of the veteran than any other Congress in the history of the Nation. It was during the Seventy-seventh and Seventy-eighth Congresses that most of the great World War was waged, but to the Seventy-ninth Congress was given the responsibility of making the transition from war to peace.

The problems of war are more tragic than the problems of peace, but the problems of peace are also tremendously serious.

How well the country has progressed in the solution of these great problems of peace is a question that admits of some difference of opinion. Let us hope that what Congress and the country has done in reference to our international affairs has been for the best interest of our country, and of the world at large. It is not given to all of us to be able to properly appraise international developments because we are not as familiar with them as we are with domestic matters.

The progress that Congress and the country has made in the solution of domestic problems likewise is measured differently by different persons. I think, however, that it will be agreed by reasonable persons that the domestic problems have been serious and that although we may have made considerable progress up to this time still there yet remains much to do.

VETERANS' LEGISLATION

The Seventy-ninth Congress has passed a great deal of veterans' legislation, most of which has been greatly to the advantage of the veteran. I am glad to say that during the war and following the war, it has been my purpose to advocate and to support all legislation that has been for the best interest of the veteran and consistent with the best interest of the Republic. The servicemen of all the various services conducted themselves with a courage that has been the tradition of America from the days of George Washington. It was not necessary to educate Congress to the importance of the efforts of the Army and the Navy and Congress has tried to be fair and to give veterans fair recognition for their valiant services. It shall not be my purpose to enter into a long discussion of all the various measures considered and passed by the Seventy-ninth Congress which were for the benefit of the veterans. I shall enumerate a few. The RECORD will show that I gave my support to all of these measures.

VETERANS' BILL OF RIGHTS

This legislation is very comprehensive and is looked to by the veterans as being a real charter of commercial and economic rights. Already many thousands of the veterans have taken advantage of the provisions for an education in this legislation and likewise many thousands have taken advantage of the opportunity to secure training in technical schools. While the strong and vigorous were availing themselves of these advantages the wounded and those who have lost their health have taken advantage of the tremendous hospital resources that the country has set up for the relief of disabled veterans.

MUSTERING-OUT PAY

I think it is generally conceded that Congress deserves credit for having acted quickly in these matters and while it is true that there was considerable delay in the return of veterans to their homes, some of which no doubt could have been avoided, it must be said that generally the return of the veterans was successful considering the magnitude of the undertaking. I think it can be safely said that Congress provided adequately for mustering out expense and has provided adequately for pensions to those who have been disabled.

REEMPLOYMENT

Congress has, I think, done a praiseworthy job in its effort to handle the matter of readjusting the veterans to their former positions. While there has been much dissatisfaction, still it must not be overlooked that this, too, is a very difficult task.

TERMINAL LEAVE PAY

One of the last official acts of the Seventy-ninth Congress was to provide adequate terminal pay for noncommissioned personnel of the Army and Navy. This will call for the payment of a tremendous sum of money. It is estimated the amount will be well over $2,000,000,000. However, under all the circumstances it seems to have been the fair and equitable thing to do and I gave it my support.

HOUSING FOR VETERANS

Probably no movement since the beginning of the war has been so completely devoid of results for veterans as the so-called housing program. Although Congress has been urged by the administration most persistently to enact legislation of this kind and although Congress has under the urge of the administration and propaganda carried on in the name of the veterans passed much legislation and provided for tremendous sums of money, still from the best information I can get practically nothing has been done in the direction of furnishing veterans with houses. The propaganda that has been carried on under the guise of being favorable to the best interest of the veterans has been very unfortunate to say the least.

I think that every reasonable American feels that every reasonable effort should be made to provide housing for veterans. At the same time I think it can be safely said that because of this unreasonable and unfair propaganda, the best interest of the veterans so far as housing is concerned has suffered. I think a more sensible and honest approach to this problem would have brought much greater results than the program that has been so widely proclaimed.

It is my hope that the Eightieth Congress will take a more realistic view of the matter of veterans' housing as well as national housing and will permit those in the country who know how to build houses to proceed with the work.

There are many other items of legislation enacted by the Seventy-ninth Congress that are and will be of great interest to the veterans. I shall not take the time to enumerate them.

It is sufficient for me to say that speaking generally the Seventy-ninth Congress has given to the cause of the veterans a great deal of consideration and has accomplished much.

Necessity for Antilynching Law

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. CHARLES A. WOLVERTON
OF NEW JERSEY
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Friday, August 2, 1946

Mr. WOLVERTON of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, the recent outrages committed on four innocent Negroes in the State of Georgia, resulting in their cold-blooded murder, arouses resentment in the heart of every decent citizen. Why are such happenings permitted in a civilized country? There is not, nor can there be, any justification for such a dastardly act.

Will the perpetrators of this crime be brought to justice? I hope so. Too frequently they have not been in similar cases. It is this failure of State authorities, in some sections of our country, to bring justice down upon those guilty of such crimes that has inspired the demand for a Federal antilynching law. Time and again the effort has been made. Time and again the House has passed such legislation only to have it fail of passage in the other body of Congress by means of filibustering and similar tactics.

My vote has been cast in favor of such legislation every time a bill of that character has come before the House for action, during my service in the House. It is my sincere hope that the time will come, and at no distant day, when legislation of this character will be passed and become a part of the law of our land. We owe it to ourselves as a Nation, that holds itself out before the world as a leader in the cause of justice and democracy, to make plain that our allegiance to the cause of justice and democracy finds expression in behalf of the weak as well as of the strong.

The Farmer—"The Forgotten Man"

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. MAX SCHWABE
OF MISSOURI
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Friday, July 26, 1946

Mr. SCHWABE of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, the New Deal propaganda machine is running full blast telling the farmer how much better off he is than in former years. They show him how much money he has in his pocket. They neglect to point out that the Government has run the printing presses until there are about three times as many dollars in existence as there were a few years ago and that as long as the budget remains unbalanced the volume of money will continue to grow.

It has been said that money is the root of all evil. The solution for all problems these days is to borrow more from future taxpayers and vote more money—another layer of bureaucracy on top of others that have failed. We have 1,200 bureaus now as compared to 68 when the New Deal came into power. One law has been piled on another until we do not know whether we are afoot or horseback.

The farmer has more money than formerly but he cannot buy farm machinery or hire a hand at a reasonable figure. It is said he has paid off his mortgage. That may be true at the county courthouse but it shows up a plenty in Washington. If the situation continues, the farmer may refuse to sell his produce for money that has lost its value.

"Food prices hit all-time high," scream big city newspaper headlines and proponents of price control. What do we expect food prices to be when everything else in the country is at an all-time high. The fact is the high prices reached on food are still proportionately far below the "all-time highs" hit on other commodities.

For example: If food prices had increased as much since 1939 as weekly wages, milk would be selling today for 22 cents a quart, pork chops for 57 cents a pound. If food prices had increased as much as the national income, bread would be 17 cents a loaf and round steak 82 cents a pound. If livestock prices had kept pace with the increase in farm wages since 1939 cattle would be selling today for $45.64 per 100 and hogs for $30.64.

Now farmers face a Government roll-back in prices—not their first experience in roll-backs—yet no Government bureaucrat has ever suggested a roll-back for industrial wages. Factory wages hit an all-time high of $1.08 per hour for the month of June. A little more money for farm produce is inflationary but Chester Bowles and other Government officials think a raise in their own salary plus time-and-a-half for overtime not inflationary. In fact, the President himself encouraged labor to ask for more wages, inferring that we could have as high as a 30-percent increase in wages but it would mean no higher prices to the consumer.

Indeed the farmer is the "forgotten man" of this administration. The wheat farmer was told last year that the price of wheat would not go up so the little grower, relying on the integrity of the Government, sold his wheat but the big grower held it and received 48 cents per bushel more. Uncertainty characterizes the whole picture.

The administration has favored the CIO and big city populations in every decision that has been made. The OPA is a curse to the American farmer in every order or directive that they have made, either directly or indirectly. When OPA placed price ceilings on farm machinery and repair parts, they curtailed production of farm commodities by making it impossible for the farmer to replace or repair his equipment. The OPA would not raise the ceilings on farm produce in proportion to labor in industry and this robbed the farm of the extra help needed as he could not compete in labor costs.

The OPA gave the farmer a ceiling and not a floor and this caused him to be paid below his ceiling so the processor and distributor could widen their margin of profit at ceiling prices in order to stay in business.

OPA has maintained ceiling prices on farm produce but allowed ceiling prices to rise out of all proportion after they were processed and went back to the farm for feed as concentrates and made it unprofitable to produce beef, lambs, hogs, poultry, eggs, and dairy products.

The OPA and Agriculture Department lost the respect of the farmer when they paid 30 cents a bushel bonus on wheat which put the Government agency in the black market. Every decision makes for scarcity rather than an economy of abundance. Ask yourself: If an increase per bushel will bring grain out of storage, would it not bring more from the ground in time and allow all farmers to be benefited by it, if offered at planting time?

Yes, OPA contends that farm ceiling prices are adequate and all farmers are making money as never before. Then why $2,000,000,000 per year subsidies and a Presidential recommendation of $150,000,000 increase next year? By subsidy payment then, the Government is admitting that farm prices are inadequate. This is controlled economy, which is not a child of a democratic form of government but a direct enemy of the producer and consumer and has the earmarks of a communistic parent who plays both ends against the middle by enslaving the producer and robbing the consumer.

The American farmer is discouraged, disgusted, and embittered. If he is to be relieved from a state of fear and produce bountifully, OPA must be abolished. With a controlled economy the farmer becomes only a peasant. Through subsidies his earnings are definitely limited and no matter how high the general price level may go, the farmer will never get his just dessert. The system of subsidies means absolute control of his earnings—it represents a form of serfdom right here in America. The subsidies will never be enough to allow free competition and an incentive to produce. We had practically no carry-over of foodstuffs this year—only enough left on farms for seed. All that saved us is the heavy crop season. Nature and luck were with us last year and this year, but we may not always be that fortunate.

I have actually heard farmers accused of being greedy and selfish. As long as the big-city machines are in political control and we live under a planned economy, laws may be expected to discriminate in favor of those who control the most votes—consumers outnumber producers. The farmer's only hope of parity and his chance to protect himself against serfdom is in a restoration of a free economy.

The British Loan Deal

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. MAX SCHWABE
OF MISSOURI
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Friday, August 2, 1946

Mr. SCHWABE of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, in addition to the $3,750,000,000 loan or gift to England there are now approximately $17,000,000,000 in applications for loans to other foreign countries. France, China, Russia, Czechoslovakia, and others. Are we following the right policy in financing the world?

Jesse Jones, the former Secretary of Commerce said:

> We cannot stay strong if we continue to print dollars and scatter them to the four winds. We have fought two mean wars at the expense of millions of our best men and most of our stores and twice have saved the British Empire. Now we are called upon, in addition to sacrifices already made, including some $25,000,000,000 of lend-lease labor and materials, again to save their empire.

This vast gift-loan to England, supposedly to stimulate trade, in reality only finances a competitor. It will stimulate trade only until it is spent. What will it profit us to loan money to a customer to buy our goods when to judge from past experience, and the terms of this loan itself, we will lose both our money and our goods? If we have the money to give away why not give it to our own citizens either in higher wages or lower prices, veterans' bonuses, old-age pensions?

The chief danger in making this loan to England is that it destroys all effective restraints on spending schemes at home. Second, it constitutes a foolhardy strain on the confidence of the American people in the management of the United States Treasury. In my opinion, and I hope I am wrong, the British loan deal has blasted the last dikes that protect our solvency. The entire valuation of property in the State of Missouri is about $4,000,000,000.

Without understanding the technical aspects, the people sense the folly of the present gigantic inflationary handouts abroad. Strikes and other social disturbances reflect both their protests and their excited efforts to protect themselves. Farmers withhold crops and workers strike for the same reason. Each is trying to protect himself from the Government's headlong spending course.

The total public debt of the United States today, Federal, State, and municipal, is $441,000,000,000. That debt load is more than a billion dollars for every congressional district. Broken down to county or town units I ask the question, does Boone County, Mo., want to go on increasing her proportionate debt burdens of $131,000,000 or does Moberly, Mo., with a debt of $43,000,000, want to loan money to foreign countries enough to borrow additional money from future taxpayers? It would be well if our people could visualize the existing financial burdens their spendthrift Congress has voted upon them—burdens so heavy no Congress has had the courage to levy sufficient taxes to meet them in 16 long years.

Now President Truman blames the soldiers terminal leave pay for the unbalanced condition of the budget, but he advocated and pushed through the loan to England. Most veterans and all good citizens want a free and solvent nation for themselves and their children. But, if they see this land being stripped of its resources for foreign imperialisms, they may scramble to empty the Treasury in self-defense. And who should censure them? The blame will lie with those in this Administration and Congress who have allowed foreign nations to refinance themselves from our Treasury, before we have even calculated our obligations to our war victims.

One thing is certain. If this Administration continues to inflate by foreign loans and reckless spending, these claims will be partially or totally repudiated. Like a check against a busted bank, the veteran's claim would become a doubtful value. The GI bill could hit the ash can—unless a halt is called now.

More than two centuries ago, a Professor Tytler, of Edinburgh University, made the following observation:

> A true democracy cannot exist as a permanent form of government. It can only exist until the electorate discovers it can vote itself largess out of the public treasury. From then on the majority always votes for the representative who promises the most out of the public treasury, and soon the democracy collapses because of its loose fiscal policy, always to be followed by a dictatorship.

Mr. Speaker, I am proud that all six of our Republican Representatives in Congress from Missouri voted against the British loan deal. No Congressman who voted for the loan scheme should ever complain about inflation, because this loan is inflation. No Congressman who voted for this loan should ever tell the widow, orphan, or wounded veteran of his district that he did everything he could to prevent inflation. He cannot look them in the eye and truthfully say he did all in his power to keep their pension checks at full value, or that he has done his utmost to protect the buying power of those on low fixed salaries. No Congressman who voted for this loan can tell his people that he made an all-out fight for lower taxes and economy because the loan opens wide the spending flood gates at home and abroad. And surely he should not tell holders of war bonds, or life-insurance policies that he has done everything possible to protect their savings.

In a discussion of the implications of the British loan we only touch on one of the many avenues made available for the channeling of the American taxpayer's money and goods to foreign governments. There is the Export-Import Bank, Bretton Woods, UNRRA, lend-lease, and others in addition to direct loans and gifts. We have built up a credit abroad of about $40,000,000,000 and are continuing to add to it. Fourteen thousand five hundred tractors are to be shipped out of this country during the next 6 months. What may our boys and girls look forward to as a result of these raids on the public purse—only one end—inflation and collapse of the public credit. As custodians of a sound-money heritage we have only played and squandered.

Necessity for Continuance of Merchant Marine, Navy, and Shipbuilding and Ship Repair Industry

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF

HON. CHARLES A. WOLVERTON

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, July 31, 1946

Mr. WOLVERTON of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, the Industrial Union of Marine and Shipbuilding Workers of America, over a period of years has diligently and intelligently studied the fundamental factors underlying an efficient and prosperous shipbuilding industry. These studies have been presented, by the officers of the union from time to time, before committees of Congress and to Department heads. Subsequent events have justified, time and again, the conclusions that were reached. The merit of the recommendations that have been made has often been recognized, adopted, and put into effect. The results have been beneficial to both the industry and the workers whose welfare has been promoted thereby.

It is with this thought in mind that I include in these remarks, within the consent of the House granted upon my request, the following letter addressed to me by John Green, international president of the union. Mr. Green is one of the progressive thinking labor leaders of the country. His standing as such is not only established in the shipbuilding industry, with which he has been so intimately connected for many years, but, also throughout the entire labor movement. He is looked upon as a thoughtful student of all the problems that vitally affect the welfare of workers in industrial activities.

I am sure that the letter contained in these remarks will justify the statements I have made as to the soundness and worth-while character of the views of Mr. Green with respect to the shipbuilding industry. It reads as follows:

INDUSTRIAL UNION OF MARINE AND SHIPBUILDING WORKERS OF AMERICA,
Camden, N. J., June 7, 1946.

Congressman CHARLES WOLVERTON,
House Office Building,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR CONGRESSMAN WOLVERTON: In view of the present interest in the continuance of the United States merchant marine, and in view of the established position of this union with regard to the need for a properly manned and well equipped merchant marine and Navy, I am taking this opportunity of writing you with regard to the need of this country for the continuance of an established, equipped and competent merchant marine, Navy, and shipbuilding and ship repair industry.

Congress is already well aware of the position of this union with regard to the above problem. In 1944, we sent every Congressman and Senator a copy of the postwar planning program adopted by the Tenth National Convention of the Industrial Union of Marine and Shipbuilding Workers of America, called "After the war, a world of plenty." This program, a copy of which is herewith enclosed, includes a section on the postwar prospects of the shipbuilding industry; the role of Government in shipbuilding; expansion in shipbuilding; the role of labor in shipbuilding; the returning veteran; and our postwar plan.

In 1945, we sent to Congress our little booklet on Stabilization of Shipbuilding. This booklet discussed the question of ships for victory; ships for piece; wage equalization; and some facts for America's future.

I, myself, have testified before the Special House Committee on postwar planning in July of 1945, as to the need for the continuance of a sound and stable shipbuilding industry. I have reported to Robert Nathan in 1945 (at that time assistant director in charge of reconversion of the Office of War Mobilization and Reconversion) on the need for a sound and stable shipbuilding and ship repair industry.

Naturally, as time goes on, we tend perhaps to lose sight (unless reminded) of statements which have been made years before. It is unfortunate that the press of work upon our public representatives makes them sometimes unable to keep abreast of all the work done before. The report of the Colmer committee (the House Special Committee on Postwar Planning, sixth report to Congress on Foreign Trade), the report of Harvard University to the Navy and Maritime Commission on disposition of surplus shipbuilding facilities, the extensive further research done by the Colmer committee—all these are so voluminous that no one representative of the people can be expected to keep abreast of everything.

My testimony before the Colmer committee is self-explanatory. I wish here to deal with two specific points which are occasionally overlooked. I am not going into the matter of the importance of foreign trade to our national economy, that is recognized by every thinking American citizen, such as the need for the free flow of investment funds abroad and in this country, the relaxation of trade values, the changes in administrative procedure necessary in exports and imports. All these have been dealt with by House and Senate committees and by recognized experts in the field as being essential to the preservation of the high degree of prosperity which we now enjoy. I am enclosing my report to Robert Nathan on this subject, which is not included in my testimony before the Colmer committee.

In this short analysis, I wish to deal with, (1) subsidies to the American Merchant Marine, the problem of construction and operation differential payments, and (2) planning for the shipbuilding industry.

On the question of subsidies to the American merchant marine, I want to add this thought, subsidies are paid in order to reduce the difference in labor costs that exist between American and foreign shipping operations. We are all in favor of the eventual elimination of subsidies, as International agreements on the working conditions of the men in the maritime industry are consumated

However, the question of the amount of present subsidies is important. The Maritime Commission has estimated that the total operating differential payments from 1937-42 under the Bland Merchant Marine Act of 1936, amounted to $51,000,000 of which it is thought that $31,000,000 will be recaptured. This means that about $21,000,000 will have been spent in these 5 years for operating subsidies, or about $4,000,000 a year after recapture.

Assuming that we have a yearly export trade of $10,000,000,000 (the highest possible under full employment, as estimated by the U. S. Department of Commerce) as compared with the yearly average export trade of $4,000,000,000 during 1937 to 1942, and no recapture provisions; the operating subsidies would be about 2½ times a year what they were from 1937 to 1942 before recapture, or $25,000,000 a year. Figuring the same percentage of recapture through 1937 to 1942, our operating subsidies would not be more than $16,333,000 a year. Mr. John E. Otterson, chairman of the American Maritime Council, in an article in the Journal of Commerce April 3, 1945, estimated that total operating differential payments for a merchant fleet of 20,000,000 tons would be between $20,000,000 and $30,000,000 a year, before recapture. He further estimated that total operating and construction differential payments would be between $50,000,000 and $70,000,000 a year, before recapture for this same fleet. It is unlikely that construction and operating differential payments after recapture would be more than from $25,000,000 to $35,000,000 a year. Also these subsidies can be, and are being, steadily reduced.

I am not here holding out a brief for any of the past practices or defects of the operation of the subsidies or any of the provisions of the Bland bill, by the United States Maritime Commission, as evidence in the testimony on the sale and resale of the merchant fleet before and during the war. I do wish to stress that this bugaboo of subsidies is vastly over rated. Also, as a line is built up into a going concern, the necessity for subsidies diminishes.

The new labor agreement which England has just consummated for their shipbuilding workers would mean also that the differential in conditions in the shipyards between the two countries will be greatly reduced. English workers for the first time are obtaining some of the benefits that our shipyard workers have had for the last 6 or 7 years—such as paid vacations, etc. They have also given their shipyard workers some benefits which our workers do not yet have, such as pay for unworked holidays, vacation pay figured on total earnings, etc.

As far as the necessity for planning for the shipbuilding industry is concerned, we all recognize that what happened to this industry after the First World War cannot be allowed to happen again. Our industry after the First World War went down to 49,000 workers in April of 1933. Most of the shipyards in existence in 1915 were closed. The largest corporate shipbuilding corporation, the Bethlehem Steel Corp., was forced to close two of its yards, abandon most of the ways in another yard, and turn the rest of its yards into intermittent repair yards.

The number of merchant vessels completed between 1920 and 1928 declined from 447 in 1920 to 9 in 1928. If it had not been for the operation of the Bland bill and for the insistence of President Roosevelt under the NIRA in 1933 upon the construction of the naval fleet, we would have been in a much worse situation before Pearl Harbor than we were.

In 1941, under the leadership of F. D. R., the first experiment in the stabilization of an industry was started by the Shipbuilding Stabilization Committee. This experiment was given the fullest cooperation and unqualified support of our union. We now believe that the time has come for this committee not only to consider the stabilization of this industry but the future of the industry as well. From the very beginning of the war effort, our industry was characterized by a series of crises. First, it was a cargo crisis, then an antisubmarine crisis, then an aircraft-carrier crisis, and finally a ship-repair crisis. In 1942 we warned the Government procurement agencies that there would be a crisis in repair work on the west coast. We told the Government that the nucleus of highly skilled shipyard workers who were essential to ship repair and also to new-ship construction was being displaced because of substandard conditions in southern California, and within the navy yards on the west coast.

We have reiterated again and again that shipping and shipbuilding must be planned. Ships are long-range propositions that take time to build. Shipyard workers cannot be made overnight. They, too, require extensive apprenticeship and training as well as experience on the job. Shipyard facilities are huge plants which require a vast amount of capital over a long period of time before they can work on an efficient functioning basis. We must keep these facilities, and the workers who work in them, up to date.

The highly trained skills and managerial productivity of the Nation's shipyards and employees, which we acquired so painfully and through such bitter experience, in meeting the demands for wartime transport, must not be passed into the discard.

We have learned out of the war that labor, Government, and industry can sit down together and plan. We did this in the shipbuilding stabilization program. The national defense is reliant on shipping; and, therefore, tripartite planning for the industry becomes part of our problem of survival.

Very truly yours,

JOHN GREEN,
President.

Tribute to Henrik Shipstead by Senator Langer

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. WILLIAM LANGER
OF NORTH DAKOTA
IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES

Friday, August 2 (legislative day of Monday, July 29), 1946

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the Appendix of the RECORD an article written by me entitled "Tribute to HENRIK SHIPSTEAD."

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

TRIBUTE TO HENRIK SHIPSTEAD

Mr. President, during the years that the Senate of the United States has functioned many great men have taken part in its deliberations on this floor. Other men have been eulogized and praised as outstanding statesmen. Some who have advocated temporarily unpopular causes have been crucified on the cross of public opinion by press, columnists, and radio. Nowhere is the fiber, the true character of a man so tested any where in this country than here upon this floor.

For 24 years, the distinguished Senator from Minnesota, HENRIK SHIPSTEAD, has unfalteringly, bravely, sometimes almost alone, fought the battle of the man on the farm, the worker in the factory, the poor unorganized laborers, and the workers in the department stores. Everyone who has needed a friend has had one in HENRIK SHIPSTEAD. In addition to that, he has been a true supporter of organized labor, the postal clerks, the railroad brotherhoods, the Federal employees. All know him because of his untiring fight in their behalf.

Monopolies and cartels, owned by the rich, both here and abroad, have hated him and they have hated him with good reason, because he has been their everlasting enemy. Others—like those who would overthrow our form of government—have feared him, and they fear him still. But, every true American loves him and they love him because of the enemies he has made.

This man embodies in his heart and soul, more, I believe, than any man upon this floor, the fundamental concepts for which President Abraham Lincoln fought and died. His greatest crime, apparently, has been that he loves his country.

As HENRIK SHIPSTEAD leaves this chamber today, he can leave it with his head up and his chest out—proud in the knowledge that the humblest, poorest man or woman, black or white or red or yellow, has never appealed to him in vain. He can walk out knowing that 24 years he has been in the forefront of the fight for justice to everyone. He can walk out secure in the knowledge that his every vote has been one cast according to his conscience and that he has never betrayed that conscience or Him who guides us all.

This man, representing not Minnesota alone; not the Northwest alone, but the Nation and the country as a whole, has fought an honorable, desperate fight, fearlessly, bravely, and courageously. He has fought that fight often against overwhelming odds and with a serenity that has caused his colleagues to marvel at the cool, calm, dispassionate qualities of his character.

Mr. President, I am proud that for 6 years I have been able to be associated with him, that for 6 years I have had beside me this magnificent example of what a real man does in the face of overwhelming odds and unbridled crucifixion.

Every citizen of this country—yea, citizens all over this globe—who treasure honesty, good faith, hard work, and untiring devotion to high ideals in their public servants know that this strong Viking has symbolized upon this floor the magnificent qualities of the Norwegian people and that in this great country, which is the melting pot of the world, that he has brought credit to the land of his ancestors while spurning any hyphenated nationalities.

And so, Mr. President, as HENRIK SHIPSTEAD leaves this body today, I feel, and I know that I am expressing the sentiments of many of his colleagues in wishing for him, and for his charming wife, the very best—the very finest—of all the great things in life in whatever he may do, wherever he may be. Everyone who believes in honor, in morality, virtue, and in a fine public-service record, must in all truth say, "There walks HENRIK SHIPSTEAD—a true, Christian gentleman."

The Battle for Sufficient Federal Aid To Win the War Against Cancer

REMARKS

HON. MATTHEW M. NEELY

OF WEST VIRGINIA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Thursday, August 1, 1946

Mr. NEELY. Mr. Speaker, the immortal Dante, with great consternation, saw above the portal to the inferno the melancholy inscription: "Abandon hope all ye who enter here."

Last Saturday, when 104 Republican Members of this body, with the aid of 35 Democrats, killed House bill 4502 to authorize the appropriation of $100,000,000 to finance the finding of a cure for cancer they, in effect, wrote a similar legend of despair over every entrance to the horror chambers in which 175,000 of the people of the United States will die of this frightful scourge during the next 12 months.

The bill was the only one which proposed the launching of a campaign of extermination against cancer that had been favorably reported to the House by any of its committees. Therefore, it was the only measure that offered a ray of hope to the victims of this dire disease that the House had a chance to pass during the closing days of this session of the Congress. Everyone who voted against the bill did so with the knowledge that he was rejecting the last opportunity of the year to throw out the governmental life line to this country's agonized victims of cancer, who are dying at the shocking rate of 20 every hour.

If the foes of the bill rendered a public service by slaughtering it, their constituents should be fully informed of the accomplishment so that they may reward their Congressmen by reelecting them in November with increased majorities. On the other hand, if the killing of the bill were a disservice to the Nation and the world, the constituents of the executioners should be informed of that fact so that they may take appropriate steps to prevent future disservice in matters pertaining to governmental action against the cancer scourge.

In order that the people may judge for themselves whether their Congressmen satisfactorily represented them last Saturday by voting for or against the appropriation of Federal funds with which to combat the world's most dreaded affliction, I proceed to identify those who loyally supported the bill and also those who enthusiastically put it to death. The following, whose names—except my own—appear to me to constitute a roll of honor, vigorously and faithfully supported this important measure:

Andrews of Alabama, Andrews of New York, Biemiller, Bloom, Bolton, Brown of Georgia, Buchanan, Byrne of New York, Camp, Canfield, Cannon of Missouri, Carnahan, Chelf, Chiperfield, Clason, Cox, Crosser, Cunningham, D'Alesandro, De Lacy, D'Ewart, Dingell, Dirksen, Douglas of California, Douglas of Illinois, Doyle, Eberharter, Elliott, Engle of California, Fallon, Feighan, Fernandez, Flannagan, Flood, Folger, Forand, Fulton, Gamble, Gardner, Gearhart, Geelan, Gerlach, Gordon, Gore, Gorski, Granger, Grant of Alabama, Hagen, Hall, Leonard W., Harless of Arizona, Havenner, Hays, Healy, Hedrick, Henry, Hoch, Hook, Huber, Hull, Jackson, Jarman, Johnson of Indiana, Jonkman, Kearney, Kee, Kelley of Pennsylvania, King, Kirwan, Kopplemann, LaFollette, Lesinski, Link, McCormack, Madden, Manasco, Monroney, Morrison, Mundt, Murdock, Murray of Wisconsin, Neely, O'Brien of Illinois, O'Brien of Michigan, O'Neal, Outland, Pace, Patman, Peterson f Florida, Pittenger, Poage, Price of Florida, Price of Illinois, Rabaut, Rains, Randolph, Rankin, Resa, Riley, Roe of Maryland, Rogers of Massachusetts, Rowan, Sabath, Sadowski, Sasscer, Savage, Sheppard, Sikes, Simpson of Pennsylvania, Spence, Starkey, Stevenson, Stigler, Sullivan, Sundstrom, Thomas of Texas, Thomason, Trimble, Voorhis of California, Wadsworth, Walter, Weaver, White, Wolcott, Woodhouse, Worley, Zimmerman.

Of those just named, the following earnestly and eloquently appealed to the House to pass the bill: The lady from California, Mrs. DOUGLAS; the lady from Massachusetts, Mrs. ROGERS; the gentleman from Illinois, Mr. DIRKSEN; the gentleman from Minnesota, Mr. PITTENGER; the gentleman from New Jersey, Mr. CANFIELD; and the gentleman from Oklahoma, Mr. MONRONEY.

Your attention is now invited to the names of those who defeated the proposal to invest in an extraordinary undertaking to solve the cancer problem and rescue mankind from cancer's frightful curse the sum of $100,000,000—less than half the cost of our participation for a single day in the Second World War—the war in which all our enemies in 3 years of fighting killed only half as many of our people as were killed by cancer during the same time:

Abernethy, Allen of Illinois, H. Carl Anderson, August H. Andresen, Angell, Arends, Arnold, Auchincloss, Barden, Barrett of Wyoming, Bell, Bennett of Missouri, Bishop, Bonner, Brehm, Brown of Ohio, Buck, Bulwinkle, Byrnes of Wisconsin, Campbell, Case of New Jersey, Chapman, Chenoweth, Church, Clark, Clevenger, Cole of Missouri, Colmer, Cooley, Corbett, Curtis, Davis, Dondero, Doughton of North Carolina, Drewry, Durham, Dworshak, Ellis, Ellsworth, Ervin, Fenton, Fisher, Gavin, Gibson, Gifford, Gillette, Gillie, Goodwin, Graham, Grant of Indiana, Gregory, Griffiths, Gross, Gwynne of Iowa, Hale, Hancock, Hand, Harness of Indiana, Harris, Herter, Heselton, Hinshaw, Hobbs, Hoeven, Hoffman of Michigan, Holmes of Massachusetts, Holmes of Washington, Hope, Horan, Howell, Jenkins, Jensen, Johnson of Illinois, Jones, Kelly of Illinois, Knutson, Kunkel, Lanham, Larcade, Lea, LeCompte, LeFevre, Lemke, Lewis, Lyle, McConnell, McDonough, McGregor, McMillen of Illinois, Martin of Iowa, Martin of Massachusetts, Mason, Mathews, Michener, Miller of Nebraska, Mills, Norblad, Norrell, O'Hara, Phillips, Pickett, Plumley, Pratt, Ramey, Reed of Illinois, Reed of New York, Rich, Rizley, Robertson of North Dakota, Rodgers of Pennsylvania, Rogers of Florida, Schwabe of Missouri, Schwabe of Oklahoma, Scrivner, Sharp, Simpson of Illinois, Smith of Ohio, Smith of Virginia, Smith of Wisconsin, Springer, Stefan, Stockman, Sumner of Illinois, Sumners of Texas, Taber, Talbot, Talle, Thom, Tibbott, Vorys of Ohio, Vursell, Weichel, Whitten, Whittington, Wigglesworth, Wilson, Winstead, Wolverton of New Jersey, Woodruff.

Of the foregoing, the honorable Republican doctor, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SMITH] and another honorable Republican doctor, the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. JUDD] who failed to vote but was paired against the bill, and the honorable gentleman from North Carolina, Major BULWINKLE, constituted a trio of oratorical bombardiers who, with the zeal of the famous Three Musketeers, attacked the bill with every oral weapon at their command.

The bill and a few excerpts from the stirring, logical argumentation of these honorable and zealous Republican doctors and the honorable and gallant major from North Carolina appear to be relevant for inclusion at this point:

The bill is as follows:

Be it enacted * * * That the President is hereby authorized and requested to undertake * * * to mobilize at some convenient places in the United States an adequate number of the world's outstanding experts, and coordinate and utilize their services through an independent group appointed by him in a supreme endeavor to discover means of curing and preventing cancer; and to take any additional action that he may consider necessary or proper to achieve the desired result.

* * * The sum of $100,000,000 is hereby authorized to be appropriated to enable the President to carry out the provisions of this act.

The honorable gentleman and medicine man from Minnesota, Mr. JUDD, in his fervent appeal to the House to kill the cancer cure and prevention bill, said, among many other things:

Look at the text of the bill. * * * Just what does "adequate" mean?

Any 6-year-old American child with a 10-cent dictionary could have enlightened the honorable gentleman on this point by explaining that "adequate number" in this case obviously meant a number sufficient to effectuate the purposes of the bill.

Again the honorable gentleman said:

In my judgment, everything that can or will be done under this bill can be done a great deal better under the cancer-research program that is already well established and functioning.

The program to which the gentleman refers is the one under the execution of which tortured cancer victims are dying in the United States at the rate of one every 3 minutes of every day in the year. Sad indeed is the realization that this death rate is constantly increasing in this and every other land.

Again the honorable doctor from Minnesota says:

Now, in this bill we propose to * * * set up a new outfit to be controlled and operated by God only knows whom and in what manner nobody can predict.

Those who read the simple language of the measure will have no difficulty in understanding that those who would have originated and directed the action against cancer, if members like the distinguished doctor had not defeated the bill, would have been the world's outstanding medical experts and other scientists whom the President would have mobilized, and the efforts of whom he would have coordinated for the sole purpose of finding a cure and preventive of cancer.

The honorable doctor, Mr. JUDD, further said:

Here we do not have the slightest idea what we are doing. I beg of you, my colleagues, that you do not * * * vote for a bill which, in my judgment, is more likely to harm than to help.

Apparently the sum total of the meaning of the language just quoted is that the gentleman from Minnesota would rather cancer to continue its merciless destruction than for the Government to expend $100,000,000 in a bold undertaking to save the lives of the 500,000 in the United States who now have cancer and the lives of 17,000,000 who, if present methods of treatment alone prevail, are doomed to die of this hideous disease in days to come.

The honorable doctor and gentleman from Ohio, Mr. SMITH, in the course of his withering verbal assault, said:

I have made a special study of cancer, and studied under some of the masters in the field of cancer research * * * I cannot understand why a bill like this was written in the first place.

Let us not legislate in this emotional atmosphere. I am afraid if the Congress stays in session a little while longer somebody is going to have a bill up here to prevent sin.

Let the innumerable sufferers from cancer—particularly those in the honorable doctor's district—determine how much they owe the distinguished gentleman from Ohio for his amazingly constructive criticism of the bill designed to speed the discovery of a cure and preventive of the world's most terrifying affliction.

The honorable doctor and gentleman, Mr. SMITH, on a later occasion, said in an address to the House concerning the appropriation which the bill proposed:

My judgment is that if the $100,000,000 had been voted it would have been spent for boondoggling, just as so much of the money which Congress appropriates is spent. The Treasury of the United States has become a veritable haven for almost every conceivable kind of racketeer.

Thus the gentleman adds to what he had previously said in opposition to the bill the unmistakable implication, if not the direct assertion, that he considers anyone a racketeer who endeavors to obtain from the Government financial aid for those who are desperately striving to conquer cancer. I appeal from the honorable doctor who uttered this astounding implication to his cancer-scourged constituents, who probably prefer at least a hope of relief from their agony to meaningless vaporings about boondoggling and racketeers.

After hearing the honorable Republican medicine man from Minnesota and the equally honorable medicine man from Ohio deliver their philippics against the bill, I was able to appreciate more than ever before the following scripture, which appears in the sixteenth chapter of II Chronicles:

And Asa in the thirty and ninth year of his reign was diseased in his feet, until his disease was exceeding great; yet in his disease he sought not to the Lord, but to the physicians.

And Asa slept with his fathers * * *.

And they buried him in his own sepulcher, which he had made for himself in the city of David.

The remarks of these distinguished doctors also enabled me better to understand why one of the most famous Americans who ever practiced their profession sounded the following warning against certain rare types of medicine men. Said the eminent Dr. Oliver Wendell Homes:

Medicine learned from a Jesuit how to cure ague, from a friar how to cut for the stone, from a soldier how to treat gout, from a sailor how to keep off scurvy, from a postmaster how to sound the eustachian tube, from a dairymaid how to prevent smallpox, and from an old market woman how to catch the itch insect.

My sentiment is long life, green old age, and innumerable blessings for all the profound, proficient, and progressive of the great medical profession, for which I have unlimited respect. And may a merciful Providence protect suffering humanity from the few of that profession who are as blind as bats, as deaf as adders, and as dumb as dead dinosaurs to the crying necessity for discovering better means than their grandmothers knew of alleviating the afflictions of mankind.

Let us next note the contribution made by the honorable gentleman and gallant major from North Carolina [Mr. BULWINKLE] to the proposal that the Federal Government devote $100,000,000 to the undertaking to find a cancer preventive and cure. He said, among other things:

I am speaking to you about a subject which is dear to my heart. One of my relatives died of cancer. * * * But Heaven knows, I am not getting to the point of dumping $100,000,000 into somebody's lap and raising false hopes among the people of this Nation.

* * * I say to you that you have everything under existing law that is necessary for research in connection with this dread disease.

The untold thousands of cancer victims who know that there is no institution, agency, or doctor on earth capable of healing them are thus assured by the distinguished major that they "have everything under existing law that is necessary for research in connection with this dread disease."

The honorable major concluded his constructive remarks against the bill, which is as vital as life to an innumerable throng of sufferers from cancer, with the following appeal:

I ask you to vote down the motion to suspend the rules.

And the "voting down" of this motion, for which the gallant major and 138 other Members of the House are exclusively responsible, sounded the death knell for this session of the Congress for the measure which, if enacted, would have provided $100,000,000 with which to fight the deadliest foe to man that stalks the world today.

Against the oratorical opposition of the two honorable doctors and the honorable major mentioned and also against the entire 139 votes with which the Members of the House killed the bill, I gratefully array the following renowned ones, many of whom are among the leading cancer experts of the world. It should be noted that practically all those whose names follow, vigorously endorsed the bill or its identical companion, which the famous Senator CLAUDE PEPPER introduced in the Senate:

We are strongly for this appropriation. (Mr. Albert D. Lasker, New York Member, Executive Committee, American Cancer Society.)

I strongly favor the proposed bill, S. 1875—

Which, as before noted, is identical with the House bill under consideration—and urge you gentlemen to report it favorably * * * and not to put in any amendment. (Dr. Daniel Laszlo, division of neoplastic diseases, Montefiore Hospital, New York.)

I am unequivocally in favor of the $100,000,000 appropriation as an absolute and unrestricted minimum fund for this purpose to be set aside until spent. (Mr. Julius J. Perlmutter, chairman, Sponsors of Government Action Against Cancer, New York.)

I suggest that the bill as proposed by yourself, Senator PEPPER, and Senator NEELY be passed in its present form. (Dr. Harold P. Rusch, director, McArdle Medical Laboratory, University of Wisconsin, Madison, Wis.)

I wish to congratulate you, Senator PEPPER, on the bill. * * * I endorse it wholeheartedly. (Dr. George Miley, Gotham Hospital, New York.)

I am heartily in favor of the legislation. I feel that it will be the means by which thousands and possibly millions of people will be saved from suffering and untimely death. (Dr. Carl Beck, Chicago. Ill.)

I speak with great feeling in behalf of the officers and board of directors of the Cancer Research Foundation of California. They have authorized me and requested me to state unequivocally that they are behind this bill and desire its passage at this session of Congress. (Dr. Harry B. Friedgood, president and director of research, Cancer Research Foundation of California, Los Angeles.)

I wholeheartedly endorse Governor NEELY'S bill, H. R. 4502. (Dr. Sherwood Moore, Barnes Hospital, and professor of radiology at Washington University Medical School, St. Louis.)

The principles incorporated in S. 1875 which makes available Federal funds for cancer research should be endorsed. (Dr. C. P. Rhoads, Memorial Hospital, New York.)

I welcome the opportunity to appear in support of the cancer research bill, S. 1875. * * * The present bill has my fullest recommendation. (Dr. Halsey J. Bagg, director, Bagg Research Laboratory, Yorktown Heights, N. Y.)

I am in favor of a bill such as the Neely-Pepper cancer bill. * * * I favor the appointment by the President of a new and independent commission representative of all interested groups and individuals to plan such an undertaking and to its completion. I also favor that the bill be reported out quickly and favorably. (Dr. Maurice Bernstein, Beverly Hills, Calif.)

The Pepper-Neely bill should be considered virtually in the light of a flood-control measure for the preservation of national life and property. * * * My own recommendation is that as great latitude as possible be placed in the hands of the President himself. (Dr. Simon L. Ruskin, New York.)

I favor the enactment of the bill in its present form without complicating amendments. (Dr. Anna Goldfeder, New York University.)

I am heart and soul behind your bill and wish to do everything possible to encourage its passage. (Dr. Louis H. Seagrave, director, Cancer Research Foundation of California, Los Angeles.)

The bill should be reported as quickly as possible because cancer does not defer its deadly effects. (Dr. Henry K. Wachtel, Fordham University.)

This bill should be reported out quickly, favorably and unanimously, if possible without complicating amendments, so that adequate support for research on cancer throughout the country will become available soon. (Dr. John H. Lawrence, University of California.)

Immediate favorable action is a must. (Dr. Joseph A. Smigel, New York.)

I favor the Pepper-Neely cancer research bill. (Dr. Bertram V. A. Law Beer, Associate Professor of Radiology, University of California Medical School, San Francisco, Calif.)

Two hundred thousand Catholic Daughters of America are heartily in accord with the Pepper-Neely bill. (Mary C. Duffy, supreme regent, Catholic Daughters of America, National Convention Headquarters, St. Louis, Mo.)

This bill presents a challenge. * * * We owe it to ourselves and to all other human beings to meet our obligation in the premises. (James B. Carey, secretary-treasurer, CIO.)

I cannot see how anyone can conscientiously oppose this bill. (Hon. Fiorello H. LaGuardia, former mayor of New York.)

We request that your committee report out the bill favorably as quickly as possible without any complicating amendments. (John L. Lewis, president, United Mine Workers of America.)

Please put me on record as urging adoption of Pepper-Neely bill. (Hon. James A. Farley, former Postmaster General.)

The National Association for the Advancement of Colored People heartily endorse * * * the Pepper-Neely cancer control bill, and urges its speedy enactment into law. (Leslie S. Perry, National Association for the Advancement of Colored People.)

If the analysis I have presented * * * is even roughly correct, one is compelled by simple logic to look for its (the cancer problem's) solution in the direction indicated by the Neely-Pepper bill. (Dr. John Rehner, Jr., chemist, research on high polymer molecules for the Standard Oil Development Co.)

I * * * go on record as being strongly in favor of Government action against cancer, believing that an increase in cancer research will hasten the discovery of a cure. (Dr. Howard Curtis, professor of physiology, College of Physicians and Surgeons, Columbia University.)

I think this bill, is one of the most encouraging expressions of intelligent democracy. I hope that it gets the full approval of Congress. (Raymond Gram Swing, internationally known radio news commentator.)

We urge favorable consideration of the Pepper-Neely bill. (A. E. Stevenson, secretary, Cleveland Industrial Union Council.)

I favor the enactment of the bill in its present simple form without complicating amendments. (Lady Margaret Armstrong, president, Ladies of Catholic Charities, New York.)

It is my hope that the bill will be reported out quickly, favorably, and unanimously. Every day we waste we kill half a thousand of our citizens. (Dr. Arthur B. Pardee, California Institute of Technology, Pasadena, Calif.)

The impropriety of further prolonging this address admonishes me to refrain from inserting enthusiastic endorsements of the bill from a cloud of other nationally famous men and women. Nevertheless, attention is invited to the fact that the Committee on Foreign Affairs, the membership of which includes some of the ablest Members of the House, favorably reported this measure without a single dissenting vote. It should also be noted that according to a recent Gallup poll 87 percent of the people of the United States favor the passage of the bill; and 72 percent of them would favor its enactment even if it called for double the appropriation of $100,000,000 which it was designed to obtain.

Manifestly, the American people, in their thinking about the horrifying cancer curse and their desire for prompt and effectual governmental action against it, are far in advance of the 139 Members of the House who killed the cancer cure and prevention bill. They are also far ahead of these Members of the Congress in their realization that Federal aid to the war against this scourge must not be administered by some existing agency that is already overburdened with duties pertaining to every physical and mental disability known to the medical profession.

The people generally are so thoroughly informed of the fact that no agency or institution of any kind in this or any other country has been able even to check the persistent, progressive increase in the death rate from cancer that they are not likely to be misled by the clamor of the comparatively few but exceedingly aggressive enemies of the bill in favor of having some department or agency that has long and completely failed to find a cancer cure entrusted with the expenditure of any unusual appropriations that may be made for the purpose of exterminating the king of all the frightful killers of men.

The people realize that the insatiate cancer monster is extending its horrifying encroachment upon the human race not only every day, and every hour but with every beat of the human heart. It is not losing. It is winning in every battle on earth that man is fighting against it. In the 5-year period from 1940 to 1945 there was an increase of 17,000 in the death rate from cancer in the United States. The deaths due to this increase alone exceeded the total number of deaths caused in this country in 1943 by any of the following afflictions: Diseases of the blood, intestinal ulcers, senility, influenza, syphilis, or cirrhosis of the liver.

The present world-wide death rate from cancer is so terrifying that it should impel all thoughtful human beings to take up arms immediately and fight to the finish the fiendish cancer foe. It devours some living human being every 12 seconds; it devours 5 every minute; 300 every hour, 7,200 every day in the year.

In the circumstances how can anyone doubt the necessity for setting up some new agency to solve the perplexing, staggering problem of cancer extermination? Our Government had thousands of instrumentalities planning and conducting its activity during the Second World War. But it found it absolutely necessary to establish the entirely new agency, known as the Manhattan Project, in order to solve the problem of utilizing atomic energy and making the two atomic bombs which in a matter of hours compelled Japan to surrender unconditionally to the United States.

Let us exercise our common sense and learn a lesson from this thrilling chapter which our country has contributed to the history of the world. Let us emulate the example set by the immortal Franklin Roosevelt and the eminent Winston Churchill in mobilizing the experts of two hemispheres and through their united efforts solving the problem of making the atomic bombs which cost us $2,000,000,000. Let us similarly mobilize the experts of the world for united, concentrated action on the single problem of finding a cure for cancer. And let us place at the disposal of these assembled experts an initial appropriation of at least $100,000,000 with which to destroy a foe that has proved itself to be twice as deadly and dangerous as all the bloodthirsty minions who, at the commands of the infamous Hitler and Hirohito, waged war against the world.

Let me most deferentially and earnestly urge the people of the United States to make the question of providing adequate Federal aid with which to exterminate cancer a paramount issue in the approaching campaign. Let me with equal deference and earnestness appeal to the voters to endeavor to obtain from their candidates for Congress pledges that, in the event of their election, they will support the granting of adequate Federal aid to make this Nation cancer free. It is my heartfelt hope that any congressional candidate of any political party who evades this issue or refuses to commit himself or herself to the support of such Federal aid will, for the sake of suffering humanity, be defeated by an overwhelming majority.

Ladies and gentlemen of the House who supported the cancer bill, we have lost our first battle. But let us not be discouraged. Our cause is as holy as the Master's command to heal the sick and cast out devils. It may be necessary for us to do the second of these in order to accomplish the first. But, regardless of difficulties, we shall eventually win, because—

However the battle is ended,
Though proudly the victor comes
With fluttering flags and prancing nags
And echoing roll of drums,
Still truth proclaims this motto
In letters of living light—
No question is ever settled
Until it is settled right.

With emaciated hands, distracted minds, tortured bodies, and heartrending voices, millions of the world's cancer victims are frantically and pathetically crying out to the Members of the Congress, "Save us or we perish."

Merciful providence, help us to respond to this appeal in a manner that will deserve Thy blessing and free from the most frightful curse that has ever descended upon the world millions of those who were made in Thy image and whose agony was never exceeded, except by that of Thy sinless Son who died upon the cross.

Mrs. Helen Harrison Tells of Terror She Endured as Soviet Captive

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. GEORGE H. FALLON OF MARYLAND
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Thursday, July 25, 1946

Mr. FALLON. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following newspaper article by Judy Barden from the New York Sun:

MRS. HARRISON TELLS OF TERROR SHE ENDURED AS SOVIET CAPTIVE

(By Judy Barden)

BERLIN, July 17.—In an exclusive interview with Mrs. Helen Harrison, of San Antonio, Tex., I learned today some of the terrors and horrors she suffered during her captivity in the Russian zone. She is a sweet little slip of a thing, more like 17 than 27 years old. More composed than yesterday, but still nervous, she told me her story.

And here it is in her own words:

"You know how we started out to buy a dog with two German women, and you know how we had no idea we were in the Russian zone until we were picked up by Russians on motorcycles, but you don't know how scared to death we all were.

"The German girls beseeched us not to follow the Russians, who had torn off ahead, but I knew they would soon spot it if we did not follow. At first my husband was inclined to think the same way as the Germans—that we should try to escape—but I begged him not to, feeling sure they would shoot us when they eventually caught up, as they certainly would have done on motorbikes. My husband decided to take my advice."

SUSPECTS GERMAN GIRLS

"At last we arrived at a large building where we were taken in for questioning. It was then that I began to suspect the two German girls. One of them, whom we called Blondie, pestered me for hours.

"She would come up in front of the Russians and tell me not to tell the Russians anything, not to answer any questions, not to admit I was an American, and to take off my watch and give it to my husband. I asked her to leave me alone, as I could see the Russians were regarding us both suspiciously because of our whispered conversations, but it was useless. If she wasn't giving me bad advice she was asking me to give all the Russians cigarettes. That, she said, would make them treat us better.

"I was so afraid, that by the time the questioning period was over, I had only five cigarettes left. Those five had to last me 15 days."

HER JEWELRY TAKEN

"The German woman also asked my husband to hide his papers and I was pretty sure that the Russians understood a lot more than they pretended.

"Eventually they separated me from my husband, taking me to a tiny room at the top of a house where they relieved me of all my jewelry. When they insisted on taking my wedding ring, I got mad. 'Are you a German,' I asked one man. 'I am a Russian officer,' he replied with great dignity. But he took the ring.

"Then I was stripped to the skin by a Russian woman. Imagine how I felt. I am an only girl with three brothers who have sheltered me all my life, and here I was being pawed over by a dirty Russian woman, and Russian men kept poking their heads in the door all through the ordeal. Eventually the woman left and I got dressed."

TOLD TO MARRY OFFICER

"Within 2 seconds of my getting my clothes on again, I was joined by a Russian officer and an interpreter. The interpreter began by saying that the officer thought all American women were tops and that he thought that I had pretty hair and beautiful legs and was much too young to be married to my husband. He wanted to marry me, he said. I told him that I was not interested in marrying him, being happily married to my husband for 9 years.

"Then he began to tell me how unfaithful my husband had been while I was in the States. He said: 'Your husband and the German blonde have admitted that they have been intimate with each other. You should not be married to such a man, you should be married to me.'

"My nerves were so shattered that I was on the verge of tears. I did not know at that moment or for 2 days after where my husband was, and here was this wretched Russian trying to poison my mind. * * * I know my husband. He has been brought up by a good family who respect and protect their women. Nobody could make me believe anything against him.

"For 2 days I pleaded with them to let me see him. I didn't eat, I didn't sleep, and I didn't dare take my clothes off as a Russian guard sat opposite me all the time, just staring at me and saying nothing. I thought I would go mad."

PINNED PRAYER ON WALL

"Eventually they put us together in another building. That day we were happy. My husband wrote out the Lord's Prayer, which we pinned on the wall of the room and in which we also pinned our faith. He also made a calendar on which we marked off the days.

"Daily we prayed together that the Americans would come and get us. The Lord answered our prayers. One night when my husband had undressed for the first time because constant wearing of his clothes had irritated his skin a drunken Russian lurched into the room.

"It was obvious what he wanted. My husband went white and started to shake and I began to scream, whereupon a woman came into the room and said, 'You are wanted upstairs.' Somehow I knew she was lying and that if I ever left the side of my husband I would never get back again. I yelled again. A Russian officer came into the room and cleared the others out."

FEAR OF TORTURE

"By now we were both genuinely afraid they had not believed our dog story, and I thought they would probably torture my husband in front of me in an effort to find out more about our visit. They knew he would not talk because he was in the Army, but they knew I would if they hurt him.

"We were taken from place to place, always in a closed car with blankets over the windows and always at night. Never could we see where we were going, and strict orders were given to the guards for nobody to see us. We weren't even allowed to look out the window of our room.

"Daily we asked when we were going home and never were we told the truth. They promised my husband he could telephone his commanding officer, but of course we were never allowed near a telephone."

SAW KEATING'S CAR

"The day we were eventually taken back to the American zone, we could not believe it. There was a small peephole where the blanket over the window had not quite caught. I peeped out of this and thought my husband was nearly having a nervous break-down. 'There are hundreds of cars' I said as we passed through huge iron gates, 'but they are all bearing red flags.'

" 'There's General Keating's car,' my husband said as he looked out. But that also was carrying a red flag and I lost heart again and began to cry. I felt sure that this would be a trial where we would have the chance to be shot or left in prison to rot.

"I was blinking away the tears when I looked out and came face to face with the four Allied flags. Do you know how I felt? And there was General Keating. It was too good to be true. I laughed and cried and grabbed his hand. That man is wonderful. Had it not been for him we would still probably be in the Russian zone.

"Our only worry now is what will happen to my husband. He lost so much weight while we were prisoners of the Russians, I dread to think what more can happen to him."

At this moment the radio announced that Warrant Officer Harrison was just about to give his experiences in the Russian zone.

"And listen," his wife said. "He's so wonderful. You know, I know it sounds silly, but he's my only ambition."

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. CHARLES A. WOLVERTON
OF NEW JERSEY
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Friday, August 2, 1946

Mr. WOLVERTON of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, it is with a deep and sincere feeling of regret that I learn that our distinguished colleague, CLARENCE E. HANCOCK, has decided to leave Congress and return to private life.

It has been a rare privilege for me to have had the opportunity of associating with one possessing such sterling qualities as characterizes CLARENCE E. HANCOCK. For 20 years we have served together in the work of the Congress. We both entered Congress in its seventieth session. From the beginning until now, at the conclusion of his service, he has shown an attentive and intelligent interest in all legislation that had for its objective the welfare of the Nation and its people. He has been a close student of all the problems that have confronted the Nation during his long service. He has brought to bear in their solution a keen analytical mind, sound and conservative judgment, and never overlooked or failed to give full recognition to the human elements involved. Consequently, he is acknowledged by all of his colleagues, Democrats as well as Republicans, to be a wise and faithful legislator with no interest to serve other than his country and its people.

As I express these few thoughts I realize how inadequate they are to pay the tribute that CLARENCE E. HANCOCK so richly deserves. Kind in manner, genial in disposition, thoughtful and sound in judgment, considerate of the rights of the weak, fearless of the power of the strong, and ever modest in manner and speech, he has left an indelible and lasting impression for good upon all who have had the privilege of knowing him as a Member of Congress from the Thirty-sixth Congressional District of New York.

I am certain that I echo the sentiment that is in the heart of every colleague when I extend to him upon his departure best wishes for a long and happy life.
